a thoroughly successful book becoming a small remainder. Biographies and books of reminiscences often become remainders. They are usually bulky and expensive; they are bought readily at first, but the gap a man leaves in society soon closes, and every day the public will give less and less money for the facts of his career. Books of reminiscences, however, are often well worth picking up as remainders. Such a book as Letters and Leaves from the Journals of Edmond and Jules Goncourt should be secured. Published in two volumes at 32s., this budget of literary anecdote and biography can now be had for 3s. 9d. An excellent companion volume, the Literary Recollections of Maxime du Camp, is offered at 3s., a tenth of its published price! Costly illustrated books become remainders in large numbers. Victor Hugo's Laughing Man, illustrated by Daniel Vierge, and published at 25s., is now a remainder at 9s.; and other books enriched with Vierge's incomparable pen-and-ink drawings have experienced a similar fall in price. Books full of scholarship, and bearing on every page evidence of the plodding industry of their writers, may become remainders simply because they miss distinction, they do not give delight; they are sound, but they are dull. As a rule, it is not hard to guess why a given book has become a remainder; but the reason is more often honourable to the book than is supposed.

Here is a short list of books which are now remainders, with their original and reduced prices:

BIOGRAPHY.

	Original Price.	Present "Remainder" Price.
Life of Marie Bashkirtseff, 2 vols. ...	24s. 0d.	6s. 0d.
Life and Times of Right Hon. John Bright, by W. Robertson, 2 vols. ...	45s. 0d.	8s. 0d.
Life of Sir Richard Burton, by Lady Isabel Burton, 2 vols. ...	42s. 0d.	12s. 6d.
Life of Cervantes, by James F. Kelly ...	16s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
Memoirs of Alexandre Dumas, Père ...	12s. 0d.	4s. 0d.
Memoirs of Eminent Etonians, by Sir Edward Creasy ...	7s. 6d.	2s. 6d.
Life of Gustave Doré, by Blanchard Jerrold ...	21s. 0d.	5s. 0d.
Life and Times of W. E. Gladstone, by J. Ewing Ritchie, 2 vols. ...	25s. 0d.	8s. 6d.
Letters, &c., of Edmond and Jules de Goncourt	32s. 0d.	3s. 9d.
Miss Jewsbury's Letters to Mrs. Carlyle ...	16s. 0d.	3s. 6d.
Letters of F. Liszt, 2 vols. ...	28s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Life and Letters of Joseph Severn, by W. Sharp ...	21s. 0d.	4s. 9d.
Life of Sir Richard Steele, by G. A. Aitken, 2 vols. ...	32s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
Biography of M. Zola, by R. H. Sherard ...	12s. 0d.	3s. 6d.

LITERATURE, HISTORY, ETC.

The Library of Old English Authors, 53 vols. ...	£13 5s. 0d.	£5 6s. 0d.
Great French Writers: Montesquieu, Victor Cousin, George Sand, Turgot the Financier	2s. 6d. ea.	1s. 0d. ea.

ART.

THE TATE GALLERY.

II.

THE visitor ought not to overlook the inscription which records the motive of the generous gift Mr. Tate has made to the nation—"For the encouragement of British art and as a thankoffering for a prosperous business career of sixty years." If a word of comment upon the terms of this presentation may be permitted, it is worth noting that a phrase which would have had a banal sound some few years ago, is now so fresh as to be a surprise. The thing that is now stale and tedious is the well-known irony ready to burlesque "British art" and "thankoffering" and "a prosperous business career."

To continue our revision of the Chantrey pictures, which a very great number of us have not properly seen since they were bought (for an hour at South Kensington was apt to be generally, and rightly, devoted to other things than pictures), and which are here in their right place and in excellent light, Mr. Swan's "Prodigal Son" is salient for the dramatic design and the noble colour. The very high horizon line has a grandeur of effect in the sparing touches of light, and the blue atmosphere that colours this picture of dusk is in rich contrast with one intense local colour—the radiant red of the poppies seen near. The weeping Prodigal sits in the scene of primitive poverty—the poverty of a barren land. Modern poverty is an indoor condition—a condition of empty cupboards and a hearth without fuel; and to English feeling this is the extreme of destitution, and poverty in the sun and on the soil does not seem so complete. Nevertheless, it is more complete; the empty cupboard is within reach of something, but poverty among the rocks, in spite of radiant days and dewy nights, is made perfect. Since Mr. Waterhouse sold his "Magic Circle" to the trustees of the Chantrey Bequest he has achieved far more interesting pictures; nevertheless, this Oriental enchantress is painted and lighted with noticeable skill. "Consulting the Oracle," in another section of the Gallery, is singularly undramatic; the actions of the women are impotent and inexpressive. Mr. Waterhouse has done well to paint rest, sleep, dreams, spells, enchanted attitudes, and peace in many forms. The recumbent figure of the dead St. Eulalia (also here) is admirably drawn, and still more admirably valued and lighted, so that the planes of the picture are quite exquisitely placed. The legend is that a shower of snow fell to veil the nude body of the martyr as it lay under the irreverent eyes of the crowd; but Mr. Waterhouse has sprinkled everything with snow except the body; his St. Eulalia (we quote the name from memory of the Academy in which it was exhibited—there is as yet no catalogue or naming of the Tate collection) has no benefit of the miracle. Close by hangs that Chantrey purchase which filled so many minds with amazement—Mr. Calderon's picture of "The Renunciation of St. Elizabeth of Hungary."

It is no more than neatly painted, and the conception of the mediæval subject is enough to make the Middle Ages turn in their grave. The Saint, it will be remembered, makes her religious profession kneeling absolutely nude before a church altar, in the near presence of two friars and as many nuns.

The Chantrey Leighton is the somewhat insipid "Bath of Psyche," in which the grace of the figure is conventional and lacking in distinction. The beauty of the picture is in the space of sky in the upper part—a blue and white sky which is gorgeous in colour and light. Sir Frederick Leighton must have studied the Venetian masters in Venice to good purpose in order to get this peculiar quality, which is all theirs, and infinitely beautiful. How a blue and white sky can be painted without quality may be seen in Mr. Leader's large landscape in another room. The Chantrey Herkomer is the rather coarse mountain landscape—"Found." Rather paltry and trivial, notwithstanding a resolute originality de parti pris, is Mr. Arthur Hacker's "Annunciation." The dreaminess of the eyes, and the folding of the hands upon the breast, are conventional in the painter's despite; and because it is in his despite, convention lacks the dignity which it sometimes keeps under happier conditions. Needless to say, the execution is accomplished. Almost fine is the colour of the golden flesh against the gold door in the "Love Locked Out" of Mrs. Merritt. It is richly painted, and all but the work of a very good colourist. In "Toil, Glitter, Grime, and Wealth on a Flowing Tide," Mr. Wyllie has done perhaps his very best work; it is remarkably good in the variations of three kinds of vapour—cloud, smoke, and steam, all three floating buoyant, mingled with air, and all three pierced with light. The flatness of stream and barge is so well managed by means of light and surface that our eyes are as it were convinced of the absolute dead level of the world. The beautifully painted calves by Mr. W. Hunt in the stable interior, "A Dog in the Manger," are a sign of Chantrey vigilance; but it is not easy to understand why two of Mr. Clarke's pictures were made the nation's under that responsible bequest. The Chantrey Watts is the "Psyche," a figure full of a curious self-consciousness and of a kind of feigned simplicity, but very beautiful in form. The picture that represents Sir E. J. Poynter in the same collection is that singularly dull nude work, "A Visit to Æsculapius." With Mr. Frank Dicksee's "Harmony" even a sentimental public must long ago have been sated. Not so with Mr. Bramley's "Hopeless Dawn," a work of really great emotion and of masterly technique; nor with "The Health of the Bride" of Mr. Stanhope Forbes, in another section, which looks admirable here with its brilliant work—hardly the less brilliant for a touch of blackness in the colour—its excellent character and fine illumination; nor has the sentence of popularity ever been pronounced against the Chantrey Clausen, another of the glories of the collection. This very distinguished picture of a country girl at her cottage garden gate is a pure picture of daylight.

	Original Price.	Present "Remainder" Price.
The Livery Companies of the City of London, by W. C. Hazlitt ...	25s. 0d.	7s. 6d.
Long's Decline of the Roman Republic, 5 vols. ...	70s. 0d.	12s. 6d.
Longfellow's Complete Works, Riverside Ed. ...	38s. 6d.	20s. 0d.
Ormerod's History of the County Palatine of Cheshire, 3 vols. ...	£30 0s. 0d.	£4 10s. 0s.
Petit's History of Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, 2 vols. ...	£3 3s. 0d.	9s. 0d.
ART BOOKS.
Capitals of the World, edited by H. D. Traill ...	63s. 0d.	25s. 0d.
Bastien-Lepage and His Art, by André Theuriot ...	10s. 6d.	4s. 0d.
Velasquez and His Times, by Carl Justi, Trans. Prof. A. H. Keane ...	36s. 0d.	12s. 6d.
Carter's Ancient Architecture of England ...	£12 12s. 0d.	40s. 0d.
Arabian Nights' Entertainment (Dalziel's Edition), illustrated by Millais, Tenniel, Watson, Pinwell, and others ...	21s. 0d.	8s. 0d.
Our National Cathedrals, 3 vols. ...	31s. 6d.	15s. 0d.
The Book of the Thames, by Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Hall, profusely illustrated ...	21s. 0d.	7s. 0d.
EDITIONS DE LUXE.
Don Quixote, illustrated by M. A. Lalauze, 4 vols. ...	£3 12s. 0d.	25s. 0d.
The Three Musketeers, with 250 illustrations by M. Leloir, 2 vols. ...	42s. 0d.	15s. 0d.
Thomas Hood's Complete Works, 11 vols. ...	82s. 6d.	22s. 6d.
Victor Hugo's The Laughing Man, illustrated by Vierge ...	25s. 0d.	9s. 0d.
Library Edition of Swift, with Sir W. Scott's Life, 8 vols. ...	£11 8s. 0d.	£4 10s. 0d.
Sheridan's "The Rivals" ...	52s. 6d.	8s. 6d.
TRAVEL.
Wanderings in West Africa, by Sir Richard F. Burton, 2 vols. ...	21s. 0d.	4s. 6d.
Cattin's Travels and Adventures among the American Indians, 2 vols. ...	£6 6s. 0d.	26s. 0d.
In Darkest Africa, by Henry M. Stanley, 2 vols. ...	42s. 0d.	12s. 6d.
A Personal Narrative of the Euphrates Expedition, by W. F. Ainsworth, 2 vols. ...	32s. 0d.	8s. 0d.
MISCELLANEOUS.
Words of Truth and Wisdom, by Very Rev. Dean Farrar ...	5s. 0d.	1s. 6d.
The Town, by Leigh Hunt, illustrated edition ...	12s. 6d.	5s. 0d.
The Wages of Sin, by Lucas Malet ...	6s. 0d.	2s. 0d.
The New Party, edited by Andrew Reid ...	14s. 0d.	2s. 0d.
English Newspapers: Chapters in the History of Journalism, by H. R. Fox ...	25s. 0d.	6s. 0d.
Fragments of Earth Lore, by Prof. James Geikie ...	12s. 6d.	5s. 6d.
Diary of the Salisbury Parliament, 1886-92, illustrated by Harry Furniss ...	21s. 0d.	5s. 0d.

Daylight is the subject. Daylight is the whole beauty of the blue dress; it moulds the forehead with its slight protuberances, fashions the face, and the unshadowed eyes are full of it.

The Vernon collection, brought hither from South Kensington, gives us, among other things, that deplorable picture by Sir Charles Eastlake, "Christ Lamenting over Jerusalem," weak, lifeless, and undramatic beyond description. Of William Müller's striking talent, once neglected, then over-valued, there is a fine specimen in the "Street in Cairo," a very conflagration of sunset: here, indeed, is not light enough for so much fire. It is unlucky that Sir David Wilkie should be represented by that wretched picture, "The First Earring," and by the no less decadent and trashy "Knox Preaching," of the Peel collection. The real Wilkie is, of course, to be seen in all his pearly completeness, freshness, and delicacy elsewhere; but these lamentable attempts at dash might well be sent to some darker and remoter storage-place for national possessions, reconsidered in the course of the education of national taste. Such a place becomes necessary in time. The best of Ford Madox Brown's pictures is here—"Christ Washing St. Peter's Feet," and one of the best of Fred Walker's, "The Harbour of Refuge." "The Bathers" was, perhaps, his truest success of all, but the sentiment of the other gives it its representative place. It is an obvious sentiment, to give no weaker name to the symbolism of the mower sweeping his scythe at work within the almshouse enclosure, set about with the aged figures of the poor. The colour with its crimsons is a very beautiful convention, somewhat lacking in life, but full of resolute art; the figures have a grace, elegance, and outlook peculiar to this painter; but there are surely some questions to ask as to the setting of the younger woman's leg and the anatomy of her walk generally. The other picture—of tramps encamped about their fire—fails disagreeably in sincerity and expression—a failure due to weakness. A beautiful little Mason is "The Cast Shoe"—water, moor, and a white horse. Rossetti is represented by the fine and altogether worthy "Beata Beatrix," by the "Annunciation," both of which must be much missed at the National Gallery, and by a dark lady, the name of whose subject we must be pardoned for forgetting; she is unlabelled, and exceedingly like a great number of others. The topographic record of Gethsemane and the Mount of Olives, painted in the pre-Raphaelite middle of the century by Seddon, and full of value for its care and for its really good impression of Oriental barrenness and sunshine, has been placed here. The Albert Moore is a good example of the work of a painter overlooked by many and overpraised by some. It is absolutely spiritless and without freshness; the decorative aim is single-hearted enough; but whether we are to think that aim has been indeed compassed must depend on the value we set upon the type of figure, the quality of light, and the choice (as well as the treatment) of colour. To our own eyes the colour is peculiarly unlovely, and there is no illumination worthy the name. The large equestrian portrait of a young woman, by Millais and Landseer together, is remarkable for little except the freshness of the flesh-painting.

The Watts collection here is very important: a "Love and Death," the three Eve pictures, of which the "Eve Tempted" is the finest and, in a noble sense, the most natural; the lovely "Hope," with the "Faith," the "Charity," "Love and Life," the "Spirit of Christianity," "Mammon," the "Minotaur," "Jonah," the great "Cart-horses"; and these are only a part of the most generous gift of a master who has preferred to fortune the happiness of painting freely, and of giving as freely to his country.

A. M.

DRAMA.

NEW THEATRES AND LONG RUNS.

WHILE the critics amuse themselves by discussing the occurrence of this or that literary epoch in the drama, there is an epoch of another kind silently evolving which may have consequences of a far-reaching character in the theatrical world. I refer to the time near at hand when London will be surrounded by a belt of active local theatres capable of intercepting and absorbing most of the suburban patronage that now flows to the West-end, or, strictly speaking, to the small theatrical area immediately surrounding Charing Cross. Hardly a month passes without our hearing of a new local London theatre being opened, and the coming winter will see in operation a dozen such houses which have sprung up with almost mushroom-like rapidity. Of course, no radical change in the habits of the play-going public can be made at once. The new managements must feel their feet, mould their clientèle, discover a policy; which will take time. But enough is already known and seen of the new order of things to enable one to judge that profound changes are at work in our theatrical system—changes of equal importance to those which have taken place during the past half century. The past half century has seen the rise of the long run which has enabled managers to devote so much more attention to the mounting of plays. That a good deal of nonsense is talked about the costliness of present-day mise-en-scène is very true. One hears of the expenditure upon a single play running into £10,000 and £15,000. All allowance being made for exaggeration, however, the mounting of a first-class West-end drama is not to be done under some thousands of pounds, a sum at which a manager of the Kemble period would have stood aghast. Charles Kean's productions were beautiful for their period, but they would not have compared in costliness with the solid interiors that managers now affect. Some years ago an eminent dramatic author set up in management for himself. The experiment was a failure, but he was able to transport one of his drawing-room sets from the boards to his own private residence, so little was there of theatrical tinsel in its composition.

WHAT has tended to bring about the long run? Not, as the modern author might suggest, the superior quality of the plays; for Shakespeare remains a useful standard in this connexion, and the genius of Edmund Kean and David Garrick failed to produce runs of one-tenth the length that the appearance of Sir Henry Irving or Mr. Tree in a Shakespearean part commands. Clearly the long run in the West-end theatres—and it exists nowhere else—is due to the enormous development of travelling facilities within the bounds of Greater London in the shape of railways and bus and tram routes. The most distant suburbs are brought practically to the doors of the West-end theatre, which thus obtains the support of a huge area of population. In Paris the means of locomotion are less developed than here, and the best plays fail to obtain the length of run that is characteristic of the London theatres. Not only so, but in the art, or at least as regards the costliness of mise-en-scène, Paris admittedly lags behind London.

Now supposing the conditions that have given rise to the long run in London are destined to be profoundly modified! In its bearing upon dramatic art the importance of such a change is manifest—it is difficult, indeed, to set limits to it. But nothing less is threatened by the extraordinary extension of suburban theatres during the past twelve months; and it is amazing to note with what indifference the West-end managers, as a body, regard this novel situation. Sir Henry Irving, indeed, patronises the suburban movement to the extent of consenting to appear with his company within the next few weeks at new theatres at Stratford and Camberwell. We may dismiss the supposition that the suburban theatres are likely to enter into direct rivalry with the West-end houses in the production of new plays. That, of course, is an ultimate possibility, which would involve to some extent the revival of the old stock-company system. For the present, however, the suburban theatres are to be worked on the touring system, as the provincial theatres are. That is to say, as soon as a piece makes "a hit" at a West-end theatre a tour will be booked for it; and as far as appearances go at present, there is no reason why a Haymarket or a Criterion "success" should not within a few weeks be careering round the suburbs through the agency of Companies 1, 2, or 3. Will the suburban play-goer in these circumstances exert himself to visit the West-end theatres as hitherto? It is hardly likely, because he will feel that if he only waits long enough all the best West-end pieces will be brought to his door. Nay, more, if managers follow Sir Henry Irving's example, the West-end companies themselves will visit him. How the long run under such conditions is to be maintained is the problem. It is evident that the West-end theatre will no longer enjoy its command over the vast area of population that constitutes suburban London; its clientèle must be reduced to pretty much the same proportions as in the days anterior to the great development of travelling facilities.

POSSIBLY this is an alarmist view; but it is hard to believe that a dozen theatres can spring up within a twelvemonth in all quarters of suburban London without profoundly affecting the handful of central theatres which have so long had a monopoly of London business. The audiences that fill a West-end theatre night after night for many months are clearly not drawn from the immediate locality. If, as seems probable, they are drawn largely from the suburbs, then we may fairly suppose that all or most of the patronage accorded to the local theatres will be deducted from the West-end ones. Apparently no attempt has ever been made to ascertain how the audiences of West-end theatres are composed. In view of the impending crisis in theatrical affairs, it would be particularly interesting to see what proportion of the audiences came from Islington; for in Islington for many years past there has been an excellent theatre, the Grand, worked on the touring system, and therefore receiving all the West-end novelties in the same manner as the belt of new suburban theatres will do. If the Islingtonians do not find it worth while to come Westward in any great numbers in quest of theatrical entertainment, we may conclude that the denizens of other suburbs will in due time, with new theatres on every hand, follow their example.

So far I have been discussing this subject from the point of view of the West-end manager. There remains the more important question as to how the interests of dramatic art are likely to be affected. Perhaps the change will not be disadvantageous; it may even be beneficial. Admittedly, the long run is not good for the actor, whom it leads into groovy and mechanical methods. With a frequent change of bill he will have greater scope for the cultivation of his art. Costly mounting, no doubt, will be discouraged; but it may be doubted whether we have not too much of that. Immense pains are taken, for example, first to discover an historical period for a play like "Much Ado About Nothing" (written, evidently, without an eye to period at all), and next to dress and mount it scrupulously in accordance with the prescriptions of the archaeologists. Much virtue is understood to attach to such "correctness," but probably there are not a dozen persons in the house who can verify the propriety of every strap or button worn by the dramatis personæ; to a great extent, indeed, the superfine judgment of the stage-manager is lost upon the house. Among the French, it may be noted, who have the dramatic instinct more highly developed than ourselves, there is no demand for the amazing archaeological exactitude that is deemed essential on the London stage. With regard to short runs, moreover, there is this to be said, that they would probably lead to an increased demand for new plays, and that the "unacted dramatist" would oftener have his chance than at present.

J. F. N.

SCIENCE.

SELDOM, I suppose, has a more remarkable communication greeted the eyes of the Englishman, as he turns over his Times, than that in which the veteran Lord Armstrong made his final confession of faith on the subject of motion as matter. How many readers of the Times are sufficiently up-to-date on the subject of molecules, ether, and the atomic theory to have gleaned even a passing conception of what it was all about, one need not pause to inquire. The pronouncement is sufficiently interesting in itself.

In the first place, the letter was the outcome of an attack by the Spectator, and by a Times reviewer, on a harmless-looking paragraph in Lord Armstrong's recent electrical paper, in which the suggestion was thrown out that molecules, after all, might be only "modes of motion," dispensing apparently with the idea of anything moved (except energy) or of a medium for the motion. This suggestion Lord Armstrong's recent letter expands. He now confesses himself a transcendentalist of the most advanced type—rather a curious position, at first sight, for an engineer of such practical tendencies. The popular notion of matter as an aggregation of solid particles in close contact he rejects as incompatible with the facts of radiation and compressibility. He admits that the numerical relations manifested in chemical science require that there should be atoms composed of groups of units, but he sees no reason why the units should consist of anything but force. Force is essential, and force will fit the facts; therefore, he argues, anything further is superfluous and contrary to the principle of unity in nature. On this theory all solid apparitions are in a way illusory and due to our personal sensations. "Nature," he says, "apart from sensation, is dark, silent, and colourless, though not the less wonderful when intellectually considered. It is an additional marvel that sensation should regard it in a glorified form. Nevertheless, sensation is in these cases illusory; and so may all our perceptions be as conveyed to consciousness through the medium of sensation."

In discarding the idea of a medium, as well as of solid units, Lord Armstrong might be considered generally as going even further than Lord Kelvin, whose conceptions of ether and matter are sufficiently rarified for most people. He quotes a passage, however, from Lord Kelvin, in which the latter speculates upon a theory of matter containing no attributes other than properties of motion. A continuous ethereal medium is not specified in this definition, but neither is it specifically omitted. "Even if it had been included," said Lord Armstrong, valiant in his apostasy, "I should still have felt at liberty to suggest the sufficiency of energy alone as the basis of operative motion; motion alone in conjunction with energy is a fact, while ether is only a hypothesis."

I HAVE once or twice mentioned the admirable work done by the publishing departments of the U.S. geographical and biological surveys. Recently, by the courtesy of Mr. T. S. Palmer, acting chief of the latter survey, we received a parcel of reports illustrating the wide extent and useful character of the work it does. This survey is a branch of the Department of Agriculture, and used to be known as the "Division of Ornithology and Mammalogy." Its objects are to work out all over the United States the distribution of birds and mammals, and to study the food habits of species which are of economic importance. For example, there are monographs on the common crow and the woodpecker, showing the distribution, and tracing by means of the examination of an enormous number of stomachs, their relative harmfulness or beneficiality to the farming and fruit-growing industries. It is pleasant to note in connexion with these reports a strong desire on the part of the Washington officials to preserve and protect the wild species with which they are concerned. They have practically abandoned all hope of legislation as a protection, and are trying instead to inculcate a respect for natural objects by instituting such ceremonies as "Arbor Day," when children are made to plant trees, and "Bird Day," when the usefulness of birds is made a theme for discussion. These two movements have been very successful in America, and it is a pity that we have not some equivalent in our English schools. H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. BORLASE ON IRISH ARCHÆOLOGY.

In reply to Mr. Alfred Nutt's remarks (ACADEMY, August 14) on the period assigned by Mr. Borlase and his reviewer to the great body of legendary Irish literature, I may state that Mr. Borlase refers primarily to the whole of that literature, but deals specially only with the Lebor Gabala (Leabhar Gabhala), or "Book of Immigrations." He speaks of the "Ancient Irish Books" generally, remarking that "as to their date, with the single exception of the Book of Armagh . . . they belong to the period known to philologists as the 'Middle Irish' period, dating from the beginning of the twelfth to the fifteenth century" (p. 1053). Thinking this somewhat too absolute and even misleading, I referred to those texts as "in their present form composed or recomposed mainly between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries"; nor can I understand why Mr. Nutt should object to the statement as thus modified. He himself allows that "texts of this cycle continued to be copied, with alteration of language and occasional amplification [italics mine] down to the fifteenth century," which is precisely what I meant by saying that in their present form they were recomposed, &c. Or does Mr. Nutt suppose that texts could be recomposed in the twelfth without having existed in earlier centuries?

With the rest of Mr. Nutt's remarks I fully agree, but would venture a mild protest against his apparent assumption that I in any way "endorse" Mr. Borlase's views.

THE REVIEWER.

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL

is in use (in preference to cedar pencils) at

THE WAR OFFICE
BANK OF ENGLAND
NEW ZEALAND GOVERNMENT OFFICE
BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE
UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT OFFICES
OXFORD UNIVERSITY
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY
ETON COLLEGE
UNITED STATES ARSENAL
UNITED STATES NAVY
PENNSYLVANIA AND OTHER
AMERICAN RAILWAY COMPANIES
THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE
NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE AND OTHER INSURANCE OFFICES

LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK,
CITY BANK, LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN BANK, AND OTHER
LONDON AND PROVINCIAL BANKS
IN THE OFFICES OF THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY,
MIDLAND RAILWAY, GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY, GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY, LONDON,
BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST
RAILWAY, SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY, LONDON AND SOUTH - WESTERN RAILWAY,
LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE
RAILWAY, CALEDONIAN RAIL-WAY, AND OTHER RAILWAY COMPANIES.

HOW USED.

Start the paper with a pin or any pointed instrument—a slight pull—off it comes, and the lead pencil is sharpened. Thirty Fresh Points to every Pencil. The only wear is from use, not from whittling away or breaking the lead.

No wood chips are left on the floor, nor any dirty marking-stuff on your fingers.

What the Newspapers say of the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL Truth.

"There is no limit to the ingenuity of the Americans in improving upon the ordinary paraphernalia of daily life. The other day I found my office table provided with a set of new editorial pencils—red, blue, and black. Being struck by something unusual in their appearance, I made inquiries, and discovered that they represented the latest Yankee notion in lead pencils, the lead being mounted in a stick of tightly-packed paper instead of wood. The paper is laid on in layers, and the advantage of the arrangement is that when the point is broken or worn down, you tear off one layer of paper, and a new and perfectly symmetrical point is instantly produced without any further process of sharpening. This is called the 'Blaisdell' pencil, and if Blaisdell is the inventor, I hope he may make a fortune out of it."

The Queen.

"What an improvement this is upon the old laborious process of pencil sharpening, and how much less extravagant with regard to the consumption of the lead, which cannot snap off when thus treated!"

Westminster Gazette.

"It is decidedly an ingenious idea."

Black and White.

"The 'Blaisdell self-sharpening paper pencil' is a remarkably smart contrivance. The lead is encased in paper, which can easily be unrolled when a fresh point is required."

The Lady.

"A self-sharpening paper pencil does not sound a very promising invention, but anyone who becomes possessed of one of the Blaisdell variety will acknowledge at once that it is a very ingenious little article. These pencils need no knife to sharpen them, as, by simply tearing off a little roll of paper at the end, a new point appears. They are made in black, red, or blue, for office work, and are well worthy of a trial."

Evening News and Post.

"One of the latest inventions that tend to make literary life better worth living is the Blaisdell Paper Pencil. Penknives, blackened thumbs and unparliamentary language when the point snaps short at an important moment are now at a discount. All that the writer or reporter has to do is to insert a pin in a spot indicated on the pencil-stem, and, lo! a little roll of paper unfolds like a diminutive shaving, or a released curl, and a fresh already sharpened point appears to gladden his eyes and stimulate his harassed brain."

HOW SOLD.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H.; B.; H.H.; B.B.; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

If your stationer does not sell them, send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

Fountain Pens and Stylos:

The objections to them, and how they have been met.

Cæteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."

Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1323.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1897.

Price 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 116, for AUGUST), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.

Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating subjects required.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.

CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.

CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and EXPORTERS,
3, Creed Lane, London, E.C.

Calcutta: THACKER, SPIKE & Co.
MSB. considered for Publication. (Established 1819.)

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, BELL & RAYTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.

Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

HIGH-CLASS PUBLISHING BUSINESS.—FOR SALE, a well-established and High-Class PUBLISHING BUSINESS, holding some Valuable Plant and Copyrights. Whole or part Stock may be taken, and part of purchase-money can remain under sufficient guarantee. Full particulars of Messrs. G. LARSEN & Co., Expert Copyright Valuers, 48, Paternoster Row, E.C.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs Steadman & Van Fraugh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

A LINGUIST, connected with several Learned Societies abroad, seeks SECRETARIAL WORK. Translations; Research Notes; Foreign Correspondence; Articles supplied to Magazines, &c.—Write E. GARLIS, 43, Southampton Row, London, W.C.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMKIN, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER—PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. 6 Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.

ARTS and SCIENCE DEPARTMENT.

SESSION 1897-8.

Full Curriculum for VICTORIA UNIVERSITY and LONDON UNIVERSITY DEGREES in ARTS and SCIENCE. Students also prepared for Civil Service, Cambridge Higher Local and other Examinations.

SPECIAL CURRICULA are PROVIDED for STUDENTS PREPARING for BUSINESS LIFE, for TECHNOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY, for ENGINEERING, ELECTRO-TECHNICS, and ARCHITECTURE.

Physical, Engineering, Biological, and Chemical Laboratories. Practical Laboratory Work for Professional and other Students. All Classes open to Male and Female Students of sixteen and upwards. Students admitted in their sixteenth year subject to Preliminary Examination.

PROFESSORS and LECTURERS.

Greek—Professor Rendall, M.A., D.Litt.
Latin—Professor Strong, M.A., LL.D.
French—Victor H. Friedel, B.Sc., LL.D., Ph.D.
Teutonic Languages—Professor Kuno Meyer, Ph.D., M.A.
Italian—Chevalier Landoni, D.C.L.
English Language and Anglo-Saxon—R. Priebe, Ph.D.
Modern Literature—Professor Raleigh, M.A.
English History—Professor Mackay, M.A.
Philosophy—Professor MacCunn, M.A.
Art of Education—W. H. Woodward, B.A.
Political Economy and Commercial Science—Professor Gonner, M.A.
Architecture—Professor Simpson.
Law—Professor Emmott.
Mathematics—Professor Carey, M.A.
Physics—Professor Oliver Lodge, LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.
Electrotechnics—A. Hay, B.Sc.
Engineering—Professor Hele Shaw, LL.D., Mem Inst. C.E.
Chemistry—Professor Campbell Brown, D.Sc.
Physiology—Professor C. S. Sherrington, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.
Biology—Professor Herdman, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.L.S.
Botany—Professor R. J. Harvey Gibson, M.A., F.L.S.
Physiography—J. L. Howard, D.Sc.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION for intending Students in their sixteenth year will be held on OCTOBER 1st and 2nd. SESSION commences OCTOBER 4th. Registration of Students, 11 to 1 and 2 to 4, September 30th; 10 to 1 and 2 to 4 p.m., October 1st; and 10 to 1 on October 2nd.

EVENING CLASSES commence OCTOBER 11th. Full Prospectus on application to the COLLEGE REGISTRAR.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The 24th SESSION of the DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS will begin on OCTOBER 5, and the 5th SESSION of the SCHOOL of MEDICINE on OCTOBER 1, 1897.

The Classes prepare for the following professions:—Chemistry, Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Sanitary Engineering, Coal Mining, Textile Industries, Dyeing, Leather Manufacture, Agriculture, School Teaching, Medicine, and Surgery. University Degrees are also conferred in the Faculties of Arts, Science, Medicine, and Surgery. Lyddon Hall has been established for Students' Residence. Prospectus of any of the above may be had from the REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of WALES.

ABERYSTWYTH.

APPLICATIONS are invited for the post of Temporary ASSISTANT LECTURER in the DEPARTMENT of GREEK. The Lecturer will be required to undertake part of the work of the Department during the Session 1897-8, being the term of office of the Principal—who is also Professor of Greek—as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Wales. Applications, with Testimonials, should be sent not later than Wednesday, September 16th, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

T. MORTIMER GREEN, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

THE GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 1 p.m.

These Lectures are suited to the requirements of Students preparing for the Examinations of the London University, as well as to those of Students wishing to study Zoology for its own sake. Notice of other Courses of Lectures, to be delivered during the Session, will be given later.

J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of DURHAM.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR WOMEN, OCTOBER, 1897.

£70 in SCHOLARSHIPS will be OFFERED for COMPETITION by WOMEN STUDENTS who commence Residence at Durham in October, 1897. The EXAMINATION begins on OCTOBER 15th. Notice of intention to Reside should be sent, not later than September 30th, to Professor SAMMON, The Castle, Durham, from whom all information as to cost of Residence, &c., may also be obtained.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE,

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

PRINCIPAL—REV. H. P. GURNEY, M.A., D.C.L.

The College forms part of the University of Durham, and the University Degrees in Science and Letters are open to Students of both sexes.

In addition to the Departments of Mathematics and Natural Science, complete Courses are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, Mining, Literature, History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c. Residential Hostels for Men and for Women Students are attached to the College.

The 27th SESSION begins SEPTEMBER 27th, 1897. Full particulars of the University Curricula in Science and Letters will be found in the CALENDAR (price 1s. 4d.). Prospectuses on application to the SECRETARY.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1897.

TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, AND FRIDAY,
OCTOBER 5, 6, 7, AND 8, 1897.

PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.—Madame ALBANI, Miss EVANGELINE FLORENCE, Miss HILDA POSTER, and Miss ANNA WILLIAMS (her Farewell appearances in Birmingham); Miss MARIE BREMA and Miss ADA CROSBY; Mr. GEORGE MAY, Mr. EDWARD LLOYD, and Mr. BEN DAVIES; Mr. ANDREW BLACK, Mr. PLUNKET GREENE, and Mr. BISPHAM.

TUESDAY MORNING—"ELIJAH."

TUESDAY EVENING.
BRAHMS' "SONG OF DESTINY."
MR. EDWARD GERMAN'S SYMPHONIC POEM, "HAMLET"
(Composed expressly for this Festival).
BEETHOVEN'S C MINOR SYMPHONY, No. 5,
AND MISCELLANEOUS.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

PROFESSOR STANFORD'S NEW "REQUIEM"
(First time of Performance).
BACH'S CANTATA, "O LIGHT EVERLASTING."
BRAHMS' SYMPHONY, No. 1.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.
PURCELL'S "KING ARTHUR" MUSIC
(As specially edited by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland for this Festival).
AND MISCELLANEOUS.

THURSDAY MORNING—"MESSIAH."

THURSDAY EVENING.
ARTHUR SOMERVELL'S "ODE TO THE SEA"
(Composed expressly for this Festival).
MOZART'S G MINOR SYMPHONY, AND MISCELLANEOUS.

FRIDAY MORNING.
SCHUBERT'S "MASS IN E FLAT."
TSCHAIKOWSKI'S SYMPHONY (PATHEIQUE).
DR. HUBERT PARREY'S "JOB."

FRIDAY EVENING—BERLIOZ' "FAUST."

CONDUCTOR.....DR. HANS RIETTER.

Detailed Programmes may be obtained post free on application to WALTER CHARLTON, Secretary,
85, Colmore Row, Birmingham.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC CLASS.

SYSTEMATIC COURSES of LECTURES and LABORATORY WORK in the subjects of the Preliminary Scientific and Intermediate B.Sc. Examinations of the University of London will commence on OCTOBER 1st, and continue till July, 1898. Fee for the Whole Course, £21, or £18 18s. to Students of the Hospital; or Single Subjects may be taken. There is a special Class for the January Examination. For further particulars apply to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, E.C. A Handbook forwarded on application.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—An EXAMINATION for FILLING UP about TWENTY VACANCIES on the Foundation will be held on the 14th, 15th, 16th, and 17th of SEPTEMBER NEXT.—For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

SCHOOL for GIRLS, Coombe Hill House,

East Grinstead, Sussex.

PRINCIPAL—MISS CLARK.

Moral Training is substituted for Religious Teaching, and an all-round development of the individual for mere lesson-learning. Physical Training and Hand-work form a definite part of the School Course.

The AUTUMN TERM begins SEPTEMBER 15th.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of
HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

W. & R. CHAMBERS'S NEW EDUCATIONAL BOOKS.

PHYSICS An Elementary Text-Book for University Classes. By C. G. KNOTT, D.Sc. (Edin.), F.R.S.E., Lecturer on Applied Mathematics and Physics (Medical) in the University of Edinburgh.

"One of the best of recent elementary treatises."—Athenaeum.

WILSON'S INORGANIC CHEMISTRY. Revised to Date. By H. G. MADAN, M.A., F.C.S., Fellow of Queen's College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth, 554 pp., price 4s.

ELEMENTARY MECHANICS, including Hydrostatics and Pneumatics. By OLIVER J. LODGE, D.Sc., Professor of Physics in University College, Liverpool, and ALFRED LODGE, M.A., Professor of Pure Mathematics, Royal Indian Engineering College, Cooper's Hill. New Edition. With numerous Examples. 308 pp., 4s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY HUMAN PHYSIOLOGY. Adapted to the Syllabus of the South Kensington Science Department. By J. G. MCKENDRICK, M.D., F.R.S., Professor of Physiology in the University of Glasgow. Illustrated with 164 Woodcuts. 2s. 6d.

THE ELEMENTS OF EUCLID. Books I.-VI. and Parts of Books XI, XII. With numerous Deductions, Appendices, and Historical Notes. By J. S. MACKAY, LL.D., Mathematical Master in the Edinburgh Academy. 412 pp., 392 Diagrams. Price 3s. 6d.

KEY to MACKAY'S EUCLID. By J. S. MACKAY, M.A., LL.D. Price 3s. 6d.

PHYSIOGRAPHY, ELEMENTARY. Adapted to the Syllabus of the South Kensington Science Department. New Edition, by DAVID FORSYTH, M.A., D.Sc. With Diagrams, Questions, and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.

ORGANIC CHEMISTRY. By W. W. PERKIN, Jun., Ph.D., F.R.S., and F. STANLEY KIPPING, Ph.D., D.Sc. (Lond.). With Diagrams. Part I., 3s. 6d., Part II., 3s. 6d., cloth, 6s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS for SCHOOLS. With Introduction, Copious Notes, Examination Papers, and Plan of Preparation. Hamlet, cloth, 1s. 6d. King Lear, cloth, 1s. 3d. As You Like It, Coriolanus, Henry V., Henry VIII., Julius Caesar, King John, Macbeth, Merchant of Venice, Midsummer Night's Dream, Richard II., Richard III., The Tempest, Twelfth Night, cloth, 1s. each.

CHAUCEER.—THE CANTERBURY TALES. With Glossary and Examination Papers. The Prologue, The Squire's Tale, The Clerk's Tale, The Man of Lawes Tale, 1s. 6d. each. The Knights Tale, 2s.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED,
47, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON; AND EDINBURGH.

Now ready for September, price 6d.
THE EXPOSITORY TIMES.
Editor—Rev. JAS. HASTINGS, D.D.
Contents include: Prof. A. B. WILSON: His Work and Influence. By Prof. Salmon, D.D. Editor's Notes of Recent Exposition. The Oxyrhynchus Fragment. By Prof. H. B. Swete, D.D. Recent Foreign Theology. By Prof. Margoliouth. Contributions by Prof. Swete, Prof. Hommel, and others.
Volume 8 (October, 1896, to September, 1897), in cloth, With new Portrait of Prof. A. B. Davidson.
Now Ready, 7s. 6d.
Edinburgh: T. & T. CLARK, 28, George Street.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.
COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

Now Offered at

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.;
49, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

OLIPHANT'S NEW SEASON BOOKS.

Just published, crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN AND RECUSANT.

By Rev. T. CARTER. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

"On the whole, we believe that Mr. Carter makes out his case."—Daily Chronicle.

"Mr. Carter has accomplished his task with accuracy and scholarship."—Academy.

The Following will be published NEXT WEEK:—

THE GIST OF JAPAN;

The Islands, their People, and Missions.

By Rev. R. B. PERRY, A.M., Ph.D., of the Lutheran Mission, Saga, Japan. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, price 6s.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND SOCIAL PROGRESS:

A Sociological Study of Foreign Missions.

By the Rev. JAMES S. DENNIS, D.D., Author of "Foreign Missions after a Century." In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with upwards of 100 Full-Page Reproductions of Original Photographs, price 21s., cloth extra.

A NEW STORY BY A NEW WRITER.

THE PLAGIARIST.

By WILLIAM MYRTLE. Post 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

A NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF DR. MILLER'S POPULAR WORK.

WEEK-DAY RELIGION.

By J. R. MILLER, D.D., Author of "A Help for the Common Days," "In His Steps," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

Post 8vo, strongly bound, price 7s.
CAREY'S "GRADUS ad PARNASSUM," with the English Meanings. Revised, Corrected, and Augmented by a Member of the University of Cambridge.
London: Published by the STATIONERS' COMPANY, Stationers' Hall, Ludgate Hill.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON,

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT PHOTOGRAPHIC REPRODUCTIONS
OF
FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

AUTOTYPES of the OLD MASTERS in the GREAT CONTINENTAL GALLERIES.

Embracing almost the whole of the Masterpieces of the Great Artistic of the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Centuries, and rich in examples of the Italian, Flemish, Dutch, German, French, and Spanish Schools of Painting.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA.

Through the courtesy of the owners, the Autotype Company are enabled to publish Autotype Reproductions of several important works lately exhibited at the Corporation of London Art Gallery, Guildhall. The Series includes notable examples of:
J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. D. G. ROSSSETTI.
DAVID COX. F. SANDYS.
FRED WALKER, A.R.A. J. PATTIE, R.A.
S. COOPER, B.A. Etc.
The Reproductions, printed on permanent sepia pigments, measure about 18 inches longest line, and are sold at the uniform price of 12s. each.

SELECTED PICTURES from the PARIS SALONS.

A NEW SERIES of REPRODUCTIONS of FAMOUS WORKS in the NATIONAL GALLERY, LONDON.

THE ENGLISH SCHOOL of LANDSCAPE PAINTING.

Autotypes after TURNER, CONSTABLE, GIRTIN, COTMAN, CROMBIE, DAVID COX, CLARKSON STANFIELD, CECIL LAWSON, etc., etc. Those interested in Art, and in the recent developments of the Photographic Reproductions of Pictures, are invited to inspect the Company's extensive Collection of Autotypes and Autogravures of all Schools now on view at their Gallery, 74, New Oxford Street, where may also be seen a series of framed examples of specially designed patterns made in oak, walnut, and other hard woods.

Catalogues and Price Lists post free on application to
THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY OFFICE, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

UNIFORM WITH THE LIBRARY EDITION OF THE FIRST FOUR VOLUMES.

Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s.

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES

From 1880 to 1897.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P.

"In every respect a worthy sequel, both in matter and in manner, to its four companions. It has all the eloquence, all the clearness and precision, all the admirable impartiality, and all the vigour which have been so much admired in the earlier volumes of this comprehensive work."—Daily Mail.

"This up-to-date appendix to a brilliant and deservedly popular work is wholly admirable, and lacks none of the high qualities which have been so universally applauded in the preceding volumes. The volume is worthy of its predecessors, and forms an invaluable contribution to later Victorian history."—World.

"Mr. McCarthy is his own and only rival. The historian has kept his very best wine till the last. The volume is marked by those fine literary qualities, that rare power of condensation without loss of colour, that established the enduring fame of the earlier volumes. Some of the characterisations of public men are marvels of accuracy, models of style."—Punch.

BRET HARTE'S NEW NOVEL.

THREE PARTNERS; or, the Big Strike on Heavy Tree Hill. By BRET HARTE. With 8 Illustrations by J. Gulich. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. (September 1st.)

JETSAM. By Owen Hall, Author of "The Track of a Storm." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE SUICIDE CLUB; and The Rajah's
Diamond. By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations by W. J. Hennessy. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ALL SORTS and CONDITIONS of MEN.

By Sir WALTER BESANT, Author of "Children of Gibson." With a New Preface by the AUTHOR. Cheap Popular Edition, medium 8vo, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

CYNTHIA: a Daughter of the Philistines.

By LEONARD MERRICK, Author of "This Stage of Fools," &c. Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Let such of our readers as desire to be refreshed by fiction of a high standard hasten to procure a copy of Mr. Merrick's really valuable addition to the short list of talented novelists published during the year just completed."—Literary World.

Crown 8vo, decorated cover, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

"GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!" a Tale of '37.

By ALLEN UPWARD, Author of "The Prince of Balkistan," &c. "Full of exciting and perilous adventures. An ingenious piece of work, cleverly put together and eminently readable."—Academy.

POPULAR EDITION OF MARK TWAIN'S WORKS.

In uniform style, many illustrated, crown 8vo, blue cloth, 3s. 6d. each.

MARK TWAIN'S CHOICE THE PRINCE and the PAUPER.

MARK TWAIN'S LIBRARY THE STOLEN WHITE ELEPHANT.

THE INNOCENTS ABROAD LIFE on the MISSISSIPPI.

ROUGHING IT; and THE THE ADVENTURES OF

THE ADVENTURES OF TOM TOM SAWYER.

TOM SAWYER ABROAD TOM SAWYER, DETECTIVE.

A TRAMP ABROAD. THE $1,000,000 BANK-NOTE PUDD'HEAD WILSON.

MY CONTEMPORARIES in FICTION. By

D. CHRISTIE MURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.

Contents: I. First the Critic; and then a word on Dickens—II.

Charles Reade—III. Robert Louis Stevenson—IV. Irving Masters—

Meredith and Hall Caine—V. Rudyard Kipling—VI. Under French

Encouragement—Thomas Hardy—VII. George Moore—VIII. Mr.

S. R. Crockett—IX. Ian Maclaren—X. Dr. Mae Donald and Mr. J. M.

Barrie—XI. The Book Seekers—See Captain and Land-Captain—

XI. Miss Marie Corelli—XII. The Americans—XIII. The Young

Romancers.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY VIGNETTES.

FIRST SERIES. By AUSTIN DOBSON. Revised and Enlarged. With Photogravure Frontispiece and 2 Plates. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

CHARLES LAMB'S COMPLETE WORKS,

including "Poetry for Children" and "Prince Dorus." With 2

Portraits and a Facsimile. Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

FLAMMARION'S POPULAR ASTRONOMY:

a General Description of the Heavens. Translated and Edited by

J. ELLARD GORE, F.R.A.S. With 3 Plates and 238 Illustrations.

Cheaper Issue, medium 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

WAR and a WHEEL: the Græco-Turkish

War as Seen from a Bicycle. By WILFRED POLLOCK. With a

Map. Crown 8vo, picture cover, 1s.

"Altogether 'War and a Wheel' is a charming little book of stirring experiences, and is well worth the shilling it costs; it has, moreover, its modesty and its literary skill to recommend it."—Academy.

SHAKESPEARE the BOY. By William J.

ROLFE, Litt.D. With 42 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ENGLAND and INDIA: a Record of Progress

during a Hundred Years. By ROMESH C. DUTT, C.I.E.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.

ONE SHILLING MONTHLY, or 14s. a Year, post free.

Contents for SEPTEMBER.

COLONEL PARCETER'S LAMP. By W. B. Wallace. A LITTLE

ISLAND BAY. By George Radford. WHAT IS "THE SCENE?"

By Percy Fitzgerald. M.A. PRENTICE AND THE HUNS. By H. M.

By Percy Fitzgerald. M.A. PRENTICE AND THE HUNS. By H. M.

By Percy Fitzgerald. M.A. PRENTICE AND THE HUNS. By H. M.

By Percy Fitzgerald. M.A. PRENTICE AND THE HUNS. By H. M.

By Percy Fitzgerald. M.A. PRENTICE AND THE HUNS. By H. M.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

READY THIS WEEK.

SIR WALTER RALEGH

By MARTIN A. S. HUME,
Author of "The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth,"
"The Year After the Armada," &c.
With Maps and Photogravure Frontispiece.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

(Being the FIRST VOLUME of a NEW SERIES, in 10 volumes, entitled "BUILDERS OF GREATER BRITAIN," edited by H. F. WILSON, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.)

A GEORGIAN ROMANCE.

THE TEMPLE of FOLLY: a Novel.

By PAUL CRESWICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW VOLUME of THE CHILDREN'S STUDY.

OLD TALES from GREECE. By ALICE ZIMMERN. Long 8vo, cloth, gilt top, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.

A STORY OF RUSTIC LOVE BY A NEW WRITER.

THE PEOPLE of CLOPTON. By

GEORGE BARTHAM. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.)
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE LAST WORK of A GREAT MAN.

JOURNEYS THROUGH FRANCE. By

H. TAINE. Being the Authorised Translation of "Carnets de Voyage." 8 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"The notes derive a peculiar interest and charm from the fact that they were made in the places described, and therefore convey impressions still fresh and vivid."—Daily News.

PASSION AND POVERTY.

LIZA of LAMBETH. By W. Somerset

MAUGHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. A Story of the South London Slums, by a New Writer.

The following Book will be published next week:—

A NEW NOVEL BY AMELIA E. BARR.

PRISONERS of CONSCIENCE. By

AMELIA E. BARR. 12 Illustrations. In Unwin's
Green Cloth Library. 6s.

NEW EDITION.

THE GODS, SOME MORTALS, and

LORD WICKENHAM. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.
In Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.

THE INVENTION OF PRINTING.

THE PRINTERS of BASLE in the

FIFTEENTH and SIXTEENTH CENTURIES: their Biographies, Printed Books and Devices. By CHARLES WILLIAM HECKETHORN, Author of "Secret Societies," &c. Folio, illustrated, buckram, gilt, 21s. net.

A CYCLOPÆDIA OF NOTEWORTHY FACTS.

THE DAY-BOOK of WONDERS. By

DAVID MORGAN THOMAS, of the Inner Temple,
Barrister-at-Law. Nearly 700 pp., cloth, 10s. 6d.

MRS. BRIGHTWEN'S NEW BOOK.

GLIMPSES into PLANT LIFE. By

Mrs. BRIGHTWEN, Author of "Wild Nature Won by Kindness," &c. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

A MANUAL FOR MOTHERS.

MOTHER, BABY, and NURSERY.

By GENEVIÈVE TUCKER. Profusely Illustrated.
Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

A SELECTION FROM MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

A New and Thoroughly Revised Edition of

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S PRINCIPIA LATINA. Part I.

Containing Grammar, Delectus, Exercise Book, Vocabularies, &c. A New Edition, the Thirty-seventh, thoroughly
Revised, so as to meet the Requirements of Modern Teachers and Scholars. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

Practical experience has proved that this is one of the best, if not the best, Latin Grammar and Exercise Book for Beginners now in existence.

SIR WILLIAM SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES. New

Editions, thoroughly Revised and in a great part Re-written. 3s. 6d. each.

I. A SMALLER HISTORY of ENGLAND: from the Earliest Times to 1887

Revised by RICHARD LODGE, Professor of Modern History in the University of Glasgow, formerly Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford. With Four Coloured Maps, Fourteen Plans, and Sixty-eight Woodcuts.

II. A SMALLER HISTORY of GREECE: from the Earliest Times to the Roman

Conquest. Revised by E. E. MARINDIN, M.A., sometime Assistant Master at Eton College. With Two Coloured Maps, Twelve Plans, and Five Illustrations. Crown 8vo.

III. A SMALLER HISTORY of ROME: from the Earliest Times to the Establishment of the Empire. Revised by A. H. J. GREENIDGE, M.A., Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford. With Coloured Map, Six Plans, and Sixty-six Illustrations.

An Entirely New Book on a New Plan.

FRENCH STUMBLING-BLOCKS and ENGLISH STEPPING-

STONES. By FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., late Senior French Master at Eton College. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Mr. Francis Tarver's skill as a teacher of French to Englishmen is well known. His thorough knowledge of both languages, and his thirty years' experience as a master at Eton, have afforded him exceptional opportunities of judging what are the difficulties, pitfalls, and stumbling-blocks which beset the path of an Englishman in his study of French. As an example of the difficulties of correct translation, the following uses of "to put" may be cited. In no two cases is the English verb rendered by the same word in French:—To put to silence—to put to—to put one in mind of—to put away—to put by—to put forth—to put off—to put on—to put a person out—to put out—to put a person's nose out of joint—to put up a guest—to put up with—to be put upon.

TRANSLATION at SIGHT; or, Aids to Facility in the Translation of Latin. Passages of Graduated Difficulty carefully Selected from Latin Authors, with Explanations, Notes, &c. An entirely New and Original Work. By Professor T. D. HALL, Author of "The Students' English Grammar," &c. Crown 8vo, 2s.

"The passages—some three hundred and fifty in number—are remarkably well graduated from the very simplest of simple sentences up to chapters from Livy and Tacitus, and by no means easy extracts from the Latin poets."

Glasgow Herald.
"Such a book as this makes one wish that it were possible to have one's schooldays again."—Birmingham Post.

The STORY of the PERSIAN WARS as TOLD by HERODOTUS.

In English. Selected, Arranged, and Edited, so as to form a History Reading Book for Schools. By the Rev.
C. C. TANOOK, sometime Head Master of Rossall School. With Map and Plans. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

HERODOTUS. The Text of Canon Rawlinson's Translation.

With the Notes Abridged for the Use of Students. By A. J. GRANT, M.A., of King's College, Cambridge;
Professor of History, Yorkshire College, Leeds. Author of "Greece in the Age of Pericles." With Map and Plans.
2 vols., crown 8vo, 12s. (Uniform with GEOTE'S "Greece.")

"The delightful pages of the old Greek, whose flavour has been so admirably presented by Canon Rawlinson, will thus be made accessible to a far wider circle than heretofore. There is no better introduction to Greek history and literature than Herodotus, and the English reader gets him here under the best possible conditions."—Literary World.

LATIN LITERATURE. By J. W. Mackail, formerly Fellow

of Balliol College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"It seems at first sight extravagant and paradoxical to describe a 'University Extension Manual' as a work of genius; but Mr. J. W. Mackail's 'Latin Literature' possesses such excellences as render it not unworthy of the title."

Pall Mall Gazette.

GREECE in the AGE of PERICLES. By A. J. Grant, King's

College, Cambridge, and Staff Lecturer in History to the University of Cambridge. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Contents:—The Essentials of Greek Civilisation—The Religion of the Greeks—Sparta, Argos, Corinth, Thebes—The Earlier History of Athens—The Rivalry of Athens and Sparta—Civil Wars in Greece—The Athenian Democracy—
Pericles: His Policy and His Friends—Society in Greece—From the Outbreak of the Peloponnesian War to the Death of Pericles—The Peloponnesian War.

"We cordially commend the book to all classes of readers."—Speaker.

The HEAD MASTER of a large Public School writes: "That he has found this work of the greatest value in teaching his Sixth Form, as an accompaniment of the Greek classical writers."

LYELL'S STUDENT'S ELEMENTS of GEOLOGY. A New

Edition, thoroughly Revised and in great part Re-written by Professor J. W. JUDD, C.B., F.R.S., of the Royal School of Mines. With upwards of 800 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 9s.

"It was a happy thought to entrust the preparation of so important a manual to one of the most intimate, and certainly not the least eminent, of the surviving friends of Sir Charles Lyell. It is hardly too much to say that Lyell's 'Principles of Geology' is not unworthy to stand side by side with Darwin's 'Origin of Species' as an epoch-making book in modern science."—Standard.

A detailed List of Mr. MURRAY'S School Publications will be sent on application.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S LIST.

WORKS BY A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A.

Initial Latin: Elementary Lessons in Latin Accidence. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s.

First Latin Lessons. Fourth Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, 2s.

First Latin Reader. With Notes adapted to the Shorter Latin Primer and Vocabulary. Third Edition, 18mo, 1s. 6d.

Cæsar.—The Helvetian War. With Notes and Vocabulary. 18mo, 1s.

Livy.—The Kings of Rome. With Notes and Vocabulary. Illustrated. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

Easy Latin Passages for Unseen Translation. Fifth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Exempla Latina: First Exercises on Latin Accidence. With Vocabulary. Crown 8vo, 1s.

Easy Latin Exercises on the Syntax of the Shorter and Revised Latin Primer. With Vocabulary. Sixth Edition. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. Issued with the consent of Dr. KENNEDY.

The Latin Compound Sentence: Rules and Exercises. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. With Vocabulary, 2s.

Notanda Quædam: Miscellaneous Latin Exercises on Common Rules and Idioms. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d. With Vocabulary, 2s.

Latin Vocabulary for Repetition. Arranged according to Subjects. Sixth Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

A Vocabulary of Latin Idioms and Phrases. 18mo, 1s.

Steps to Greek. 18mo, 1s.

Easy Greek Passages for Unseen Translation. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Greek Vocabulary for Repetition. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Greek Testament Selections. With Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary. Third Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Steps to French. Second Edition. 18mo, 8d.

First French Lessons. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 1s.

Easy French Passages for Unseen Translation. Second Edition. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Easy French Exercises on Elementary Syntax. With Vocabulary. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

French Vocabulary for Repetition. Fifth Edition. 1s.

SCHOOL EXAMINATION SERIES.

Edited by A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

French Examination Papers in Miscellaneous Grammar and Idioms. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Eighth Edition.

A Key, issued to Tutors and Private Students only, to be had on application to the Publishers. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

Latin Examination Papers in Miscellaneous Grammar and Idioms. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Seventh Edition.

Key (issued as above). 6s. net.

Greek Examination Papers in Miscellaneous Grammar and Idioms. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Fifth Edition, Enlarged.

Key (issued as above). 6s. net.

German Examination Papers in Miscellaneous Grammar and Idioms. By R. J. MORICH, Manchester Grammar School. Fourth Edition.

Key (issued as above). 6s. net.

History and Geography Examination Papers. Second Edition. By C. H. SPENCE, M.A., Clifton College.

Science Examination Papers. By R. E. STEEL, M.A., F.C.S., Chief Natural Science Master, Bradford Grammar School. In Three Vols. Part I., Chemistry. Part II., Physics.

General Knowledge Examination Papers. By A. M. M. STEDMAN, M.A. Third Edition.

Key (issued as above). 7s. net.

CLASSICAL TRANSLATIONS.

EDITED BY H. F. FOX, M.A.

Fellow and Tutor of Brasenose College, Oxford.

Cicero.—De Natura Deorum. F. BROOKS, M.A., late Scholar of Balliol College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Cicero.—De Oratore I. E. N. P. MOOR, M.A., late Assistant-Master at Clifton. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Cicero.—Pro Milone, Pro Murena, Philippic II. in Catilinam. H. D. BALKISTON, Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Sophocles.—Electra and Ajax. E. D. A. MORSHAM, M.A., Assistant-Master at Winchester. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Aeschylus.—Agamemnon, Choephoree, Eumenides. LEWIS CAMPBELL, M.A., LL.D., late Professor of Greek at St. Andrews. Crown 8vo, 5s.

Lucian.—Six Dialogues (Nigrinus, Icaro Menippus, Cock, Ship, Parasite, Lover of Falsehood). S. T. IRWIN, M.A., Assistant-Master at Clifton. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Tacitus.—Agricola and Germania. R. B. TOWNSEND, M.A., late Scholar of Trinity College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

METHUEN'S COMMERCIAL SERIES.

EDITED BY H. DE B. GIBBINS, D.Litt., M.A.

British Commerce and Colonies from Elizabeth to Victoria. By H. DE B. GIBBINS, D.Litt., M.A., Author of "The Illustrated History of England," &c. 2s.

Commercial Examination Papers. By H. DE B. GIBBINS, D.Litt., M.A. 1s. 6d.

The Economics of Commerce. By H. DE B. GIBBINS, D.Litt., M.A. 1s. 6d.

A Primer of Business. By S. JACKSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.

A Manual of French Commercial Correspondence. By S. E. BALLY, Modern Language Master at the Manchester Grammar School. 2s.

A French Commercial Reader. By S. E. BALLY. 2s.

Commercial Geography, with special reference to Trade Routes, New Markets, and Manufacturing Districts. By L. D. LYDE, M.A., of the Academy, Glasgow. 2s.

Commercial Arithmetic. By F. G. TAYLOR, M.A. 1s. 6d.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By EDWARD GIBBON. A New Edition. Edited, with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin. In Seven Volumes. Demy 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d. each. Crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. IV.

"The time has certainly arrived for a new edition of Gibbon's great work. . . . Professor Bury is the right man to undertake this task. His learning is amazing both in extent and accuracy. The book is issued in a handy form and at a moderate price, and it is admirably printed."—Times.

"Gibbon's immortal work has never been presented in so convenient a shape."—Guardian.

A Short History of Rome. By J. WELLS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Wadham College, Oxford. With Four Maps. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"An original work written on an original plan, and with uncommon freshness and vigour."—Speaker.

A Primer of the Bible. By Prof. W. H. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

A Primer of Wordsworth. By LAURIE MAGNUS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. Uniform with above.

Voces Academicæ. By C. GRANT ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls, Oxford. With a Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

This is a volume of light satirical dialogues, and should be read by all who are interested in the life of Oxford.

How to Make a Dress. By Miss J. A. E. WOOD, Head Teacher of Dress-making, Plain Needlework, &c., Goldsmiths' Institute, New Cross. With numerous illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

Ornamental Design for Woven Fabrics. By C. STEPHENSON, of the Technical College, Bradford, and F. SUDDARDS, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. With 65 Full-Page Plates, and numerous Designs and Diagrams in the Text. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The aim of this book is to supply, in a systematic and practical form, information on the subject of Decorative Design as applied to Woven Fabrics, and is primarily intended to meet the requirements of students in Textile and Art Schools, or of designers actively engaged in the weaving industry. Its wealth of illustrations is a marked feature of the book.

Essentials of Commercial Education. By E. E. WHITFIELD, M.A. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

A guide to Commercial Education and Examinations.

The Odes and Epodes of Horace. Translated by A. D. GODLEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, buckram, 2s.

Passages for Unseen Translation. By E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, and A. M. COCK, M.A., late Scholar of Wadham College, Oxford, Assistant-Masters at St. Paul's School. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This book contains two hundred Latin and two hundred Greek Passages, and has been very carefully compiled to meet the wants of V. and VI. Form boys at Public Schools. It is also well adapted for the use of Honourmen at the Universities.

Exercises in Latin Accidence. By S. E. WINBOLT, Assistant-Master in Christ's Hospital. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

An elementary book adapted for Lower Forms to accompany the shorter Latin Primer.

Notes on Greek and Latin Syntax. By G. BUCKLAND GREEN, M.A., Assistant-Master at Fettes College, late Fellow of St. John's College, Oxon. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

Notes and explanations on the chief difficulties of Greek and Latin Syntax, with numerous passages for exercise.

Test Cards in Euclid and Algebra. By D. S. CALDERWOOD, Headmaster of the Normal School, Edinburgh. In a Packet of 40, with Answers, 1s.

A set of cards for advanced pupils in elementary schools.

A Digest of Deductive Logic. By JOHNSON BARKER. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. A short introduction to logic for students preparing for examinations.

METHUEN'S BYZANTINE TEXTS.

GENERAL EDITOR, J. B. BURY, M.A.,

Fellow and Tutor of Trinity College, Dublin, Professor of Modern History in Dublin University.

The First Volume will be

Evagrius. Edited by Professor LÉON PARMENTIER, of Liège, and M. BIDEZ, of Gand. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW CATALOGUE and BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, ESSEX STREET, STRAND.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Mr. Lang on Ghosts ... ..	193
The Novelist as Critic ... ..	194
The American Explorations in Babylonia ... ..	196
Mr. Traill's Essays ... ..	198
A New Economist ... ..	197
THREE NEGLECTED BOOKS: III. "The Island" ... ..	198
EDUCATIONAL ARTICLES—
I. Florent Ambo ... ..	199
II. The Question of Home-work in the Day-school ... ..	200
CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS ... ..	201
New Books Received... ..	201
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	201
THE APOLOGETICS OF ROMANCE ... ..	203
PARIS LETTER ... ..	203
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	204
DRAMA ... ..	206
SCIENCE ... ..	206
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	207
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	207
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	65-68

REVIEWS.

MR. LANG ON GHOSTS.

The Book of Dreams and Ghosts. By Andrew Lang. (Longmans & Co.)

IT has been known for some time that Mr. Lang had added ghosts to his hobbies. Readers of Longman's Magazine have watched his thoughts turning in that direction to the partial exclusion of the '45, Joan of Arc, and Mr. Howells; members of the Psychical Research Society have been aware that at least one clear, humorous intellect is working among them; and there have been letters in the Times on haunted houses over Mr. Lang's signature. In the volume before us, The Book of Dreams and Ghosts, Mr. Lang offers a large collection of ghost stories, old and new, and his present opinions on "appearances." As far as we can gather Mr. Lang's attitude from these pages—which have much of the vagueness of expression that goes with memoirs on the supernatural—he disbelieves in traditional ghosts, the ghosts that do things—but wishes it were otherwise. Like all persons of poetical or romantic temperament, he would prefer to believe in them. They would make life so much more interesting and exciting.

Mr. Lang, in fact, has reached the position of the saner members of the S. P. R. He subscribes to the modern theory of ghosts. In his own words:

"A ghost, if seen, is undeniably so far a 'hallucination' that it gives the impression of the presence of a real person—in flesh, blood, and usually clothes. No such person in flesh, blood, and clothes is actually there. So far, at least, every ghost is a hallucination, 'that,' in the language of Captain Cuttle, 'you may lay to,' without offending science, religion, or common sense. And that, in brief, is the modern doctrine of ghosts."

Yet there is a ghost in this book which was seen by several distinct persons whose narratives tally. To explain such a phenomenon Mr. Lang offers an ingenious theory of dreams; which is practically his only contribution to the solution of the problem. For the rest he records and passes on, obviously enjoying the rôle of narrator considerably more than that of philosopher.

"Sleeping is as natural as waking, dreams are nearly as frequent as every-day sensations, thoughts, and emotions. But dreams, being familiar, are credible; it is admitted that people do dream; we reach the less credible as we advance to the less familiar. For, if we think for a moment, the alleged events of ghostdom—apparitions of all sorts—are precisely identical with the every-night phenomena of dreaming, except for the avowed element of sleep in dreams.

"In dreams, time and space are annihilated, and two severed lovers may be made happy. In dreams, amidst a grotesque confusion of things remembered and things forgot, we see the events of the past (I have been at Culloden fight and at the siege of Troy); we are present in places remote; we behold the absent; we converse with the dead; and we may even (let us say by chance coincidence) forecast the future. . . . Now, the ghostly is nothing but the experience, when men are awake, or apparently awake, of the every-night phenomena of dreaming. The vision of the absent seen by a waking, or apparently waking, man is called 'a wraith'; the waking, or apparently waking, vision of the dead is called 'a ghost.' Yet, as St. Augustine says, the absent man, or the dead man, may know no more of the vision, and may have no more to do with causing it, than have the absent or the dead whom we are perfectly accustomed to see in our dreams. Moreover, the comparatively rare cases in which two or more waking people are alleged to have seen the same 'ghost,' simultaneously or in succession, have their parallel in sleep, where two or more persons simultaneously dream the same dream."

When we see ghosts, then we are in a waking dream. But the same story to which we have already alluded would of itself deter us from accepting so uninteresting a theory. "Appearances" are against it. The story of The Lady in Black tells of an apparition which appeared constantly to several persons in a house. It had the form of a weeping widow. Strings were stretched across the stairs and it passed through them; the camera was even directed on it, although no result followed; its footsteps were distinctly audible. Six separate signed accounts of this ghost are among the papers of the S.P.R. Were all these six persons enjoying a waking dream? It is impossible to believe so. One, at least, of them, the lady who attempted to take the ghost's photograph, was too wide awake. Either the witnesses have lied, or ghosts are more than hallucinations seen in waking dreams.

Mr. Lang's dream theory will, however, account partially for his own story, quite the best of the modern instances, of Mrs. Claughton (p. 175). This lady recently saw a ghost, and afterwards other ghosts, friends of the first one, who bade her visit a distant village, examine the parish register, compare certain names and dates, and convey the results to a person unknown to her. A dream followed, in which she was given further instructions. She did all that she was bidden to do, and found everything to correspond in fact to the supernatural forecast. Only by charging this lady with conscious and very intricate and unprofitable fraud can these mystifications be explained away. If Mrs. Claughton is honest, the possibility of intercourse between dead and living is proved.

Yet why do we continue to doubt? Partly because man is liable to err, and chiefly because nothing of the kind ever happens to ourselves. Mr. Lang's own visual experience includes nothing more remarkable than a self-opening door. In the matter of ghost-seeing, only our own eyes are evidence, and they are not always to be trusted. The sum of the matter is that to the end of time some will believe and some will not. After all, it matters very little: one may as well believe as not, or one may as well not believe as believe—until one's own supernatural visitor arrives. Unfortunately the experience of the S.P.R. and Mr. Lang proves that to none but the uninterested or unscientific do ghosts appear. To become a member of the S.P.R. is to ensure immunity from spooks for life.

But whatever we may say as to their actuality, there is no doubt that ghosts make good stories. This book is packed with excellent yarns. As a précis writer Mr. Lang has no superior. He can be terse, and yet find room, without irrelevance, for personal charm. Here is a compressed story, which he offers in illustration of his waking-dream argument:

"In 1867, Miss G., aged eighteen, died suddenly of cholera in St. Louis. In 1876, a brother, F. G., who was much attached to her, had done a good day's business in St. Joseph. He was sending in his orders to his employers (he is a commercial traveller), and was smoking a cigar, when he became conscious that someone was sitting on his left with one arm on the table. It was his dead sister. He sprang up to embrace her (for even on meeting a stranger whom we take for a dead friend, we never realise the impossibility in the half moment of surprise), but she was gone. Mr. G. stood there, the ink wet on his pen, the cigar lighted in his hand, the name of his sister on his lips. He had noted her expression, features, dress, the kindness of her eyes, the glow of the complexion, and, what he had never seen before, a bright red scratch on the right side of her face.

"Mr. G. took the next train home to St. Louis and told the story to his parents. His father was inclined to ridicule him, but his mother nearly fainted. When she could control herself, she said that, unknown to anyone, she had accidentally scratched the face of the dead, apparently with the pin of her brooch, while arranging something about the corpse. She had obliterated the scratch with powder, and had kept the fact to herself."

Mr. Lang, we take it, believes this story. To express differently what we suppose his attitude to be, he would not for an instant deny that supernatural messages are conveyed to us, but he believes all appearances to be subjective. Put concisely: ghosts exist for ourselves, not for other people.

Mr. Lang completes his collection by retelling many of the old stories, and extracting others from books. Perhaps the best of them is "The Tyrone Ghost," a tale that has many variants. "Ticonderoga" in the present version has this curious postscript:

"On the very day that these events were happening in far-away America, two ladies—

Miss Campbell, of Ederein, and her sister—were walking from Kilmalien to Inveraray, and had reached the then new bridge over the Aray. One of them happened to look up at the sky. She gave a call to her sister to look also. There both of them saw in the sky what looked like a siege going on. They saw the different regiments with their colours, and recognised many of their friends among the Highlanders. She saw Inverawe and his son fall, and other men whom they knew. When they reached Inveraray they told all their friends of the vision they had just seen. They also took down the names of those they had seen fall, and the time and date of the occurrence.

"The well-known Danish physician, Sir William Hart, was, together with an Englishman, and a servant, walking round the Castle of Inveraray. These men saw the same phenomena, and confirmed the statements made by the two ladies. Weeks after, the Gazette corroborated their statements in its account of the attempt made on Ticonderoga. Every detail was correct in the vision, down to the actual number of the killed and wounded.

"But there was sorrow throughout Argyle long before the Gazette appeared."

This is "steep"; yet why not believe it?

Interesting though it be, this volume is, in our opinion, over-entitled. It would more fittingly be called "A Book of Dreams and Ghosts." "The Book" implies too much. "The Book of Dreams and Ghosts" should be whole-hearted. Its author should believe with his soul, and endeavour to persuade us too. He should set out to make our flesh creep, to curdle our blood. His pages should so hold us that, as we read, a mouse in the wainscot would raise our hair, a creaking door accelerate our pulse, a knock bring us to the verge of syncope. "The Book of Dreams and Ghosts" should be overwhelmingly grim and terrifying. Mr. Lang is not the man to write it. Mr. Lang has a sceptical mind, a light hand, and divided interests. He sees humour in things. In the book before us he does little more than play the judge; we who read are the jury to whom Mr. Lang states the case for the prisoner, the ghost. He gives pros and cons and leaves the matter in our hands. No one can do this more fascinatingly than Mr. Lang, but the method is not ideal for "The Book of Dreams and Ghosts." For "A Book of Dreams and Ghosts" it is admirable.

THE NOVELIST AS CRITIC.

My Contemporaries in Fiction. By David Christie Murray. (Chatto & Windus.)

THERE is an ancient proverb which says that the cobbler should stick to his last; and though the paradox has dethroned most proverbs, this one has proved itself, on the whole, to be sound and reasonable. Mr. David Christie Murray has forgotten or ignored that proverb with somewhat unfortunate results. Leaving the congenial field of fiction in which he has in his day produced not a few agreeable works, he has essayed, in the volume before us, to stand forth as a critic. He is, avowedly, quite convinced that the other critics are for the most part not up to their work; and in this collection of essays he shows them the error of their ways with some sternness. Nay, more than that, he trounces them right vigorously. His book is, in his own expressive words, "in the nature of a crusade against puffery and hysteria." We are always a little inclined to distrust "crusades" however directed, nor do we find in this announcement of the book's purpose any promise of that calm and judicial spirit which should be of the very essence of criticism. But, after all, a crusader is not a critic, and the rôles may very fairly be kept distinct one from the other in the minds of those who read Mr. Murray's book.

As a crusader, then (but not as a critic), we find ourselves very largely in agreement with Mr. Murray. As he very justly says, the critics of to-day are over kind to their authors. They are too apt to acclaim some modest achievement a masterpiece, some not so modest poet a genius. Mr. S. R. Crockett is not on a level with Sir Walter Scott, nor is Mr. Stanley Weyman, and the enthusiastic critic who said they were must have suffered from some temporary obfuscation of the intellect, of which, no doubt, he was heartily ashamed a week or two later. In the same way we agree with Mr. Murray that there should be a limit even to our enthusiasm over the works of Miss Corelli (to the consideration of whom Mr. Murray, possibly in a cynical moment, allotted quite an undue share of his space), and that A Romance of the Nineteenth Century—quaintly placed in immediate juxtaposition with Robert Elsmere—was a rather offensive story, even though our regard for literary English would forbid us to describe its central male character as "a howling bounder." But to all these observations of our author we may fairly cry connu. Miss Corelli is popular, and so is Mr. Crockett. So are many less improving things. But the fact is hardly worth writing about, unless the writer has found some new and startling hypothesis which satisfactorily accounts for such a state of things. It is scarcely a subject for a jeremiad. There is the fact; we accept it, regret it, and turn to something more interesting. We may write about it for hire in the newspapers, but it requires something more than ordinary naïveté to collect what we have written and issue it as a book. And that is what Mr. Murray has done.

Providence and Mr. Murray make strange bedfellows, and thus it is that we find the fourth essay in this singular volume devoted to Mr. Meredith and Mr. Hall Caine—two "living masters," as they are here called. This is probably the first time that The Ordeal of Richard Feverel has found itself unequally yoked with The Manxman on any stage. "From [Mr.] Meredith to [Mr.] Hall Caine is from the study of the analyst to the foundry of the statuary," says our author. We should have supposed the distance even greater. Furthermore, in Mr. Murray's view, "you may draw a triangle and at one of its extremes you may place Meredith, at another Stevenson, and at another Hall Caine." No doubt you may. You may draw a rectangular parallelogram or an irregular hexagon if you please, but it will still leave the judicious reader wondering what Mr. Hall Caine is doing, not in that galley, but in that mathematical figure. But, indeed, Mr. Murray, on the subject of Mr. Caine, exhibits the very same failing which he finds so hard to bear in other, presumably, more practised reviewers, whose superlatives—to quote his own words—"have been used so often to describe, at the best, good, plain, sound work, and, at the worst, frank rubbish, that they have no vocabulary for excellence."

The fact is, Mr. Murray is not a critic at all. He has not the true critical spirit. More than that, he cannot—at least he does not—distinguish between the essential and the incidental in a work of art. Dickens was a great writer. He had a great faculty of observation, a great power of humorous presentment, enormous industry, and a host of other magnificent qualities which the reader may supply for himself. Dickens was also "widely and permanently useful," and "sowed gentleness and mercy with a broad sweep." Nicholas Nickleby, "when all is said and done, killed the Yorkshire schools." But, after all, even a novel must be judged as a work of art. It is as a work of art that it must ultimately stand or fall. And from that standpoint the "sowing of gentleness and mercy with a broad sweep" and the "killing of the Yorkshire schools" is quite irrelevant. We may, and do, admire Dickens as a novelist. We also admire him as a man of wide sympathies and earnest desire to do good to his generation. But the two qualities have, or should have, nothing to do with each other when we are estimating his position in literature. Balzac is neither greater nor less great as a novelist because he never set himself to the task of correcting abuses and exposing the vices of an educational system. Mr. Murray, in fact, writes as the "average reader" would write if the desire came upon him to express his views on modern novelists. And the opinions of the "average reader" even, when one happens to agree with them, are usually too uncritical to be worth anybody's reading.

The best essay in the book is, perhaps, that on Charles Reade. After that we should be inclined to place the one on Robert Louis Stevenson, though the attempt to account for that magnificent character in Treasure Island, Long John Silver, as even in the smallest degree "a blend of Defoe and Dickens," strikes us as somewhat fantastic. It is curious, by the way, that in this essay Stevenson's exquisite work in a lighter vein—The Dynamiter, The Wrong Box, The New Arabian Nights, and the like—is never even alluded to.

The essay on Kipling is, in the main, puerile, but we must quote one naïve remark of Mr. Murray's which it contains: "I do think it rather hard lines on me that I hadn't the simple genius to see what lay in Tommy [Atkins]." Does Mr. Murray really think that it only needed that?

THE AMERICAN EXPLORATIONS IN BABYLONIA.

Nippur. By [the Rev.] John Punnett Peters. Vol. I. (Putnam's Sons.)

MESOPOTAMIA has long been such a surprise packet for archaeologists of all countries that it was safe before long to attract the attention of the nation which, even in matters of learning, strives after "the greatest thing on earth." We had hardly become familiar with Sargon of Accad as the legendary founder of the first Babylonian empire, when Mr. Pinches deciphered the Nabonidus cylinder, and startled us with the news that he was really a historical personage who flourished at the incredible date of 3800 years before Christ. Later, M. de Sarzec's excavations at Telloh made plain the existence of a high civilisation in Babylonia several centuries before Sargon. And during the last year we have learned from the newspapers that an American expedition has traced this civilisation back to the approximate date of 8000 B.C., having actually discovered the earliest writings yet known. It is the history of this Expedition, or, rather, of its early troubles, which is told in Dr. Peters' present volume.

The first year's operations were, indeed, attended by almost uninterrupted misfortune. The University of Pennsylvania undertook the support of the Expedition, and seems to have had no difficulty in collecting the required funds by public subscription, while the Government did their best to obtain a firman from the Sultan. The personnel of the Expedition was also successfully organised by Dr. Peters, but after this the trouble began. The President, after a little pressure from a newspaper editor, agreed to appoint the "photographer and business manager" of the Expedition United States consul at Bagdad; but the senator who should have moved the amendment to the Appropriation Bill annexing a salary to the office "went to the Democratic Convention at St. Louis and forgot all about it." Then a plan to prevent illicit dealing in antiquities which Dr. Peters matured on his arrival in Europe fell through, chiefly, as he avers, because of the bitter feeling of Germany against the English Liberal Government then in power. And when Dr. Peters got to Constantinople, the same ill-luck pursued him. The iradé giving him leave to make excavations was delayed, as he thinks, because the late Mr. Bent's articles in the Contemporary Review had made some reflections upon Hamdi Bey, the director of the Imperial Ottoman Museum. Anyhow, it was three months before he could leave Constantinople, and although, judging from recent experience, this might be held to argue almost indecent haste on the part of the secretaries of the Porte, yet the precious iradé when received turned out to be much less ample than had been expected. That the Expedition should undergo severe hardship on their way to the scene of operations, and should find themselves involved in the tangled factions of the Arabs, means only that they underwent the common lot of explorers in Western Asia; but that the photographer-consul's films should turn out worthless, and all his photographs therefore failures, was an arrow specially barbed by Fate for their annoyance. At length, after they had pitched their camp in the most unsuitable spot possible, and had made extensive excavations with but very little result, one of the saptihs quartered on them by the Porte shot an Arab robber whom he had caught escaping red-handed from one of the tents. In any other country such an act of necessary severity would probably have had a salutary effect on the future security of the Expedition; but in Mesopotamia it caused a vendetta, from which, it was explained to Dr. Peters, he could escape only by giving up to the Arabs the offending policeman. As he very properly refused to hand the man over to his enemies for the simple discharge of his duty, there was nothing for it but to abandon the work for the year, and to smuggle the too-zealous guardian of property out of the country in disguise. The last sight which greeted Dr. Peters' eyes as the Expedition left Nippur was the flames rising from their camp, which had been fired by the Arabs. Had it not been for the timely purchase of two collections of Babylonian antiquities in London, they would have returned almost empty-handed.

Yet it must not be thought that Dr. Peters' book is so far but a dreary record of failure. His account of the journey down the Euphrates is not, indeed, very exciting, and is largely helped out by extracts from the works of earlier explorers, such as Rawlinson, Ainsworth, and Sachau. But when he comes in sight of the buried city whose name gives the title to the book, the narrative brightens up amazingly. A few members of the Expedition had been sent on before to prepare the camp, but were hardly prepared for the alarms and excursions with which their chief and his guards announced their arrival.

"The chiefs rode bareback on mares which they guided with halters only, dashing off every instant in a wild gallop, shaking their lances at imaginary foes, while the footmen fired their pieces in the air, sang, screamed, and danced war-dances. Our stallions reared and plunged in wild excitement; the fun waxed fast and furious, and it was impossible to resist the mad contagion. We dashed through canals, floundered in marshes, splashed across innumerable canals, stumbled and tumbled up and down the intricate ravines of the old ruin mounds, lost ourselves in their mazes, howled, yelled, fired shots in the air, and at last came upon our comrades encamped on top of the mounds, and fearing that the whole Affech nation had risen to attack them."

As the guests that they were expecting were a band of University professors headed by a staid American clergyman, the mistake of those in camp can be excused.

Once in camp, the doctoring which is the pest of every Frankish traveller in the East of course began. Dr. Peters says that the Arab skin is so thick that he could hardly ever find the patient's pulse; yet he did what he could. One lady was so frightened at the ordeal of putting out her tongue, that she fainted away when it was followed up by medicine; but she made a good cure, and rewarded her doctor with four chickens. The men grasped the situation more quickly, and, he says, "followed me everywhere with their tongues lolling out of their mouths and their hands extended." One of his native overseers saved him much trouble by posing as his assistant, looking at the patients' tongues and feeling their pulses, while occasionally pretending to consult an old Saturday Review which he had borrowed for the occasion. As one of his prescriptions was, "Wash yourself in hot water, keep warm, but do not go out in the sun," it is possible that he was as successful a practitioner as his master. The latter certainly had no extreme faith in his own remedies, for he was agreeably surprised when on a visit to a neighbouring village a young man greeted him with many demonstrations of delight. "It turned out," he says, "that he had come to Nippur for medicine, and I had given him something which he thought had cured him. I am thankful that it did not kill him."

Another interesting feature is the view which one who naturally had no European prepossessions on the subject formed of the state of the country. Everywhere on the Euphrates Dr. Peters found the authority of the Porte little more than nominal. The Kurds and Arabs set the Sultan at defiance, levying black-mail on their own account, and sometimes refusing to allow the more peaceful inhabitants to pay taxes. One Arab chief offered, if the Turkish Commissioner attached to the Expedition was at all in the way, to murder him for a small sum, and would no doubt have made good his offer without fear of punishment. Yet Western civilisation is beginning by slow degrees to penetrate even into Mesopotamia. The telegraph wires were working as far as Diwanich, although the camels and buffaloes do much damage to the iron supports by using them as scratching-posts. At Deir it is possible to buy Norwegian beer, and M. de Sarzec has made himself so comfortable at Telloh that he has not only "imported his wife, his ten-year-old son, and a French maid," but was able to give Dr. Peters an excellent European breakfast. Altogether, Dr. Peters considers it a country of wonderful capabilities, and excellent for colonisation.

The book is rather scantily illustrated—perhaps by reason of the failure of the photographs mentioned above. It contains several appendices, among which that on the geography of the Euphrates is the most valuable. Two maps, one of the Expedition's route from Alexandretta to Bagdad; the other of the country from Bagdad to Mugheir, are supplied in a pocket in the cover, and are a great help to the understanding of the text. In the remaining volume—to which we shall look forward with great interest—we are promised an account of the Expedition's return to Babylonia, and of the discoveries that they made, including the collection of nearly 40,000 inscriptions. Some of these have already been published by Prof. Hilprecht, and form a most important contribution to the early history of the world. A translation of all the inscriptions is promised later; but it must, as Dr. Peters confesses, be many years before even the originals are all made accessible to scholars.

MR. TRAILL'S ESSAYS.

The New Fiction, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. By H. D. Traill. (Hurst & Blackett.)

MR. TRAILL'S volume of essays on literary subjects contains much that is interesting and suggestive. Although there is nothing that is absolutely new in the volume, many of the essays have been largely altered since their first appearance in the monthly reviews and magazines, and all of them were worth reprinting. "The New Fiction," "The Political Novel," "The Novel of Manners" are excellent studies of various species of fiction, while the essays on Matthew Arnold, Samuel Richardson, and Pascal's "Provincial Letters" are all of them noteworthy. That one should agree with all Mr. Traill's conclusions is, of course, not to be expected; it is not even to be desired. For the charm of such essays as these is that they stimulate and suggest rather than command a blind acquiescence. They open up paths of thought and present fresh aspects of their subject, and are always valuable even when they do not convince. The essay on Lucian, for example—of whom Mr. Traill is, of course, an enthusiastic admirer—contains an estimate of that writer's humour with which many of us may be unable to agree. In the essay on "The Future of Humour," with which the volume closes, it is pointed out that a joke is a very perishable thing. It will very seldom "keep." The joke which seems exquisite to the men of one age seems imbecile to the men of another. So it is, in the opinion of many, with Lucian himself. The scene from the Auction of Lives, which Mr. Traill quotes with such hearty appreciation of its drollery, in which Democritus and Heraclitus are put up for sale, seems to some of us not very lively fooling, far less mirth-provoking than much of Aristophanes. It lacks subtlety, like so much of ancient humour, and in this year of grace the broader kinds of humour seem to have lost much of their savour. Curiously enough, Mr. Traill makes no mention in his essay of the ΔΟΥΚΙΟΣ Η ΟΝΟΣ, which is one of Lucian's most delightful fantasies—perhaps because its close resemblance to the more popular "Golden Ass" of Apuleius has tended to rob it of the fame it deserves. But these things, after all, are matter of opinion, and it is proverbially difficult for one man to prophesy what will amuse another.

The essay on "The New Fiction" aroused considerable discussion when published in one of the magazines. On the subject of Mr. Arthur Morrison's Tales of Mean Streets, Mr. Traill makes a very pertinent observation which is worth transcribing. After quoting a passage from one of Mr. Morrison's sketches, he writes:

"Yes, it is a picture of infinite melancholy, but whence does its melancholy arise? From the meanness of the mean street and the exceptionally dull and narrow lives of its inhabitants? That the author intends to convey that impression is obvious; but the impression is nine-tenths of it false. Why, if I had Mr. Morrison's fine descriptive gift, I would select a street quite other than mean, a street consisting not of poverty-stricken little houses, but of 'eligible' suburban villas, a street inhabited not by hard-pressed artisans, but by comfortable, even by 'warm' city men; and I would undertake to describe it and the daily lives of its inhabitants—the daily journey of the men to their businesses; the daily resumption by the women of their burden of household duties and household worries; their Sundays; the growth and departures of their children; their old age; their death—I say that had I the pen of Mr. Morrison I would undertake so to describe these things that the heart of the reader should sink and shrink within him at the thought of man's lot upon earth, and, perhaps, burn with anger at the spiritless patience in which man endures it, with the 'quietus' of the 'bare bodkin' always within his reach."

The essay on Samuel Richardson is at once one of the ablest and one of the most convincing in the book; and Mr. Traill's justification of his author's prolixity as a necessary and inevitable part of his method strikes us as eminently just. That on Matthew Arnold is, perhaps, more open to attack, especially for its somewhat cruel depreciation of The Forsaken Merman, "hovering with his fishy offspring about the little watering-place where the faithless wife and mother had taken up her abode." One is always apt to distrust a criticism that is pointed with ridicule, however subtle, and the "watering-place" strikes us as a rather unfeeling description of "The white-walled town

And the little grey church on the windy shore," of the poem. Matthew Arnold, says Mr. Traill,

"interprets the plaints of the forsaken Merman in language which would be appropriate and touching enough in the mouth of Enoch Arden, but which leaves us quite cold as the utterances of an amphibious being in whom we find that the author has no more genuine belief than ourselves."

Now, in the first place, we entirely dissent from the passage we have italicised, and, moreover, the whole criticism strikes us as mistaken. The Forsaken Merman is a fairy tale, and the only way to bring out its pathos was to adopt a Hans-Andersen gravity and simplicity of narration. This Matthew Arnold seems to us to have done with most admirable results. The curious thing is, that though we yield to none in our admiration of Arnold as a poet, there are many more obvious points which Mr. Traill has not seized, in which his poems are indisputably open to unfavourable criticism. But we have not space to pursue the subject further. Nor, as we have already said, is Mr. Traill's book any the worse for the fact that his views are occasionally open to question.

HIGH-PRESSURE TRAVELLING.

A Ride through Western Asia. By Clive Bigham. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. CLIVE, late of the Guards and the Diplomatic Service, appears to have set himself a task, which he has performed with perhaps more satisfaction to himself than profit to his readers. The title of his book inevitably recalls the Ride to Khiva and On Horseback through Asia Minor of that distinguished officer, Capt. F. Burnaby, whose exploits in the same field he may have unconsciously wished to rival. But he would doubtless himself be the first to admit that he has been greatly distanced by his predecessor: at least, in everything but rapidity of movement, which is of the least consequence to the public, but on which Mr. Bigham prides himself not a little. We are reminded more than once of the ground covered in a given time, and at the close the pace is thus registered: "We entered European Russia on June 30 [1896]. I had been in Asia eleven months, in which time I had travelled 8,217 miles, 4,008 of which I had ridden on horseback." This works out exactly 747 miles per month, or about 25 miles a day, which might perhaps claim to establish a "record," had not much of the journey been made on the Trans-Caspian and Siberian railways, both of which are now rapidly approaching completion.

Although considerable sections of Asiatic Turkey, Persia, and West Central Asia were eventually traversed, Mr. Bigham, when starting for the East in June, 1895, had in view nothing beyond a visit to Armenia; nor had any definite plan been formed even for penetrating into that region from which all Europeans were officially excluded, "pending further orders, that is, until the disturbances are over." But by a judicious selection of perhaps the best of several alternative routes, aided by good luck and the display of considerable tact, he managed to reach Erzerum from Constantinople through Angora and Sivas within a month of his departure from London.

It is here that the reader will be most grievously disappointed. In the expectation of getting some trustworthy information about the atrocities, he may have followed the traveller in his rambles across Asia Minor, taking a languid interest, perhaps, in his references to Alexander and the Gordian knot, his strangely out of place quotations from Sir John Mandeville, personal incidents and trivial details of all kinds. But the reader's patience will not be rewarded by a single word that throws any real light on the murky relations between rulers and ruled, between Turk, Kurd, Armenian and Circassian, in Erzerum or any other part of the Sultan's Asiatic dominions. This is all the more irritating, since Mr. Bigham arrived at a most opportune moment, during a lull between the massacres, and soon after the International Commission had concluded its inquiries into the cause of the disorders and the responsibility for the butcheries that had undoubtedly occurred, and were, in fact, still sporadically going on over a wide area. Moreover, he had personal interviews with valis and field-m Marshals, with mushirs and zaptiehs, with Canadian missionaries and Armenian bishops, and others of high and low degree; and he can tell how Mandeville alludes to the "many good waters and wells that come from under the earth from the river of Paradise that is called Euphrates, which is a day's journey from the city." But on the present situation in Armenia he has little to say, and that little rather misleading than otherwise.

Thus the Commission is represented as reporting "that the Armenians had revolted and that no unnecessarily harsh measures had been taken to suppress the insurrection." The Armenian bishop also "did not seem to share the dislike of his fellow Armenians to the Turkish nation," although "the Armenian clergy were living at that time with their lives in their hands."

From the Canadian missionary, who had lived seventeen years in the city, Mr. Bigham is able to glean nothing; and of the mushir, Mahomet Zekki Pasha, who, if we remember, was deeply compromised, he writes:

"It is possible that he possesses that indifference to human suffering and death which is characteristic of the Circassian race, but whether any real responsibility for the events at Sassun can be brought home to him it is impossible for me to say. It is certain, however, that there is much good in his character. He has improved the soldiery, &c."

Mr. Bigham is more instructive than this when he speaks of the failure of the missionaries to convert the infidel, and of their bickerings among themselves over the souls of the Eastern Christians, who, one would suppose, did not stand in need of conversion:

"So the missionaries work on almost hopeless ground, and often fill up the time by quarrelling among themselves. The American Methodists fight with the English Church; the English Church with the Roman Catholic, not for the Mohammedan so much as for the Armenian, professedly a Christian already. The personal character of the missionaries is beyond praise, but their efforts seem to be made in a wrong direction."

The case is mentioned of "an odd old Dutch Catholic priest," whom our traveller met in Kashgar, who had laboured there for eight years without making a single convert, although he was a clever and enthusiastic missionary, and could speak "eight languages fluently." A parallel instance is that of the late Rev. Mr. Gilmour, who spent his life among the Chinese and Mongolian Buddhists with a like negative result.

From Kashgar Mr. Bigham struck north to Siberia over the Thian-Shan in wintry weather, and here, as on one or two other occasions, he displayed remarkable pluck and endurance in surmounting the formidable difficulties of the route:

"The climbing was very steep and difficult. Frequently we had to make our way across snowdrifts, and at 14,000 feet we got into a blizzard. . . . The cold was now intense, and we had only gulcha dung to make fires with at night. Our sole remaining provision was the lamb and some bread which had frozen so hard that it cut our gums. We had to drink snow-water, as our tea had run out. We camped out in deep snow at the foot of the second range of mountains, and all night heard the avalanches falling. The next day we had to make our way through soft snow. At every step the horses went in up to their bellies, and we up to our armpits. We barely covered half a mile in the hour. We had selected the most likely gap in the peaks, but before we had gone far a great mass of snow came down with a noise like thunder on our right, and soon after another in front of us, so I thought it best to turn back."

It should be mentioned that the author had to leave for the war in Thessaly as a correspondent of the Times before revising the proof-sheets. To this may be attributed a number of misprints and erratic spellings, but not several erroneous assumptions, for which the writer alone can be held responsible. Such are the statements that the Oxus "rises just by Kabul," that it takes its name from the Turki Ak-su, "White Water," and that it feeds the irrigation canals of the Samarkand district. Pamir, whatever its origin, is not Persian, nor does it mean "the roof of the world" in any known language, although the Persians call the Pamir Bam-i-Dunya, which has that meaning. Jeddah, at p. 178, must surely be a slip for Kerbela, and Cham (p. 211) for Shams (Damascus), which is not "the country of the Nestorians" (p. 169). The Turks do not call the Persians Kizil Bashi, "Red Heads," but this is the name of a particular sect scattered in small groups over Asia Minor and Irania. Persian is not "the oldest existing Aryan tongue" (p. 87), but a relatively modern development, not much older than Italian, nor is the Shah Nameh written "in Pehlevi, or ancient Persian," but in an early form of Neo-Persian. The "Felli and Mamasenni Laurs," are, no doubt, the Felli, or Luri-Kuchak Laurs and the Mahamad Huseni of Farsistan; but neither the Turcomans nor the Hazaras are "a Manchurian race." The difficult term "Sart" is not properly explained, while it is quite paradoxical to describe the Uzbeks as "a Turki people," yet "the descendants of Jenghis Khan and Baber"! (p. 209). Surely Mr. Bigham should know that Jenghis was not a Turk.

A NEW ECONOMIST.

That Tree of Eden: a Study in the Real Decadence. By Nicholas Christian. (Hutchinson & Co.)

We quote the date given on the title-page of this book (1897) with some misgiving. More readily should we have accepted a suggestion that it was written, say, thirty years ago. It might then have embodied a few anachronisms, and much of it would have had no point; but that would have been better than describing, as it now does, a state of things which is wholly unreal and visionary. Visions are tolerable only when they are optimistic and done with a masterly hand. Mr. Christian has not a masterly hand, and he is a pessimist.

"In this year of grace," he premises, "it is an undertaking of no common hardihood to attempt to throw doubts on the wisdom of that campaign for universal refinement by the avenue of education, believed in so fervently as a means of introducing the millennium by many good and earnest people."

The "campaign for universal refinement" is new to us. We surmise that it may be an euphemism for the Board school, always a favourite subject of attack. We are wrong, however, as the story shows. A certain nouveau-riche baronet, Sir Paul de Meers, inherits a west-country estate on which coal has been found. The conversion of country-side into manufacturing centre is carried out in a vein of pure Ruskinian invective. The pit-head is "an unsightly wooden gallows," blast furnaces loom out like "twin strongholds of some Giant Dreadful," "fierce leaping flames" rise and fall, cogwheels "clank," axles "screech," murky skies reflect back the glow of molten metal, puddled iron is squashed under "relentless" steam-hammers, and for noise—"one felt like Dante listening at the gates of Hell."

This is all very well for sentiment, but it does not bear upon the question of education. That is to follow. Sir Paul de Meers falls into the hands of a self-seeking labour member, an "advanced" specimen of the shrieking sisterhood (both of whose careers are narrated at length), and a shadowy gentleman called "Mr. Unsteady," of whom the author thinks it sufficient to give merely the name. With these promising help-mates the Baronet starts an education campaign which is to regenerate Exford. A magnificent building is erected from designs by "Mr. Liquidhut" (note the pleasantry once more!), and is called — or rather, to give a sample of the author's literary style:

"My friend! It is the PANSOPHON.

"What a barbaric name!" you say.

"Well, that is not my fault. It was necessary to call it something sonorous and, above all, new, and it appeared to De Meers that the choice lay between Pantechnicon and Pansophon — and there were objections to the former word, which was, so to speak, already appropriated to a different order of ideas."

In this building the labour-leader preaches higher politics and something imaginary which is generalised under the term "Intellectualismus." The shrieking sister — most impossible of her kind — conducts a house-to-house campaign in favour of free love. Religion is abolished from the thoughts of the much-abused inhabitants. The logical (?) outcome of this great effort, combined with the working of modern industrial economics, is a riot, in which Exford perishes by conflagration and Sir Paul de Meers is killed.

The moral is, of course, that modern industrial economics are all wrong, that ironworks are an invention of the devil, and that it is a gross mistake to preach "Intellectualismus" stripped of religion to a class which is biologically unfitted to receive such teaching. But who, in the name of Absurdity, ever tried to do such a thing? Where, and on what scale, are our workmen being taught anything which could possibly be regarded from this point of view? We are not aware that even the Kyrle Society did much to undermine the morals of the British race. The fact is, as often happens, that Mr. Christian has invented a wholly imaginary state of affairs which it is his pleasure to demolish. That evil has come of the selfishness and brutality which characterised the great industrial expansion at the beginning of this century, no one doubts. But this is settling itself by degrees, and industrial riots which used to be common are practically things of the past. No one is preaching science to the masses with the object of upsetting religion. If the power of religion is becoming weakened, it is because the minds of men are being opened to look facts in the face, and for our lives we cannot find fault with this. If anything, more religion and more ethics are taught to the children of the masses than to the children of the rich, but we do not hear that the rich are therefore becoming corrupt and devitalised. The book is really a tissue of fallacies. It is a generalised conception, based on an extreme case, and on three characters so extreme in their fatuity as to be almost grotesque.

It is difficult to locate the status of the writer. He betrays a very slight acquaintance with literary style, and his contempt for modern education is emphasised freely by the use of such flowers of speech as "ascendancy," "larvarous," "pæons," "Corderillas" for "Cordilleras," &c. He also indulges in such grammatical peculiarities as "like some do." His fancy for veiling actualities under a flimsy paraphrase has been remarked upon already. It is generally quite pointless and otiose, and occurs on almost every page. As examples we may cite three newspapers, which are dragged in under the names of The Clock, The Daily Notebook, and (horrendum dictu!) The Penny Swell. The Vale of White Horse becomes by inane transition the Vale of Grey Horse, the Reform Club is the Reformation Club, and so ad infinitum.

THREE NEGLECTED BOOKS.

III.—"THE ISLAND."

MR. RICHARD'S WHITEING'S Island is the kind of book which people like very much or not at all. It is a personal book, and, we believe, an only book. Such books are nearly always good. The Island was published in 1888: a few reviewers welcomed it, a certain minute but choice company treasure it, and there its vogue ends. Yet, considering its subject, and the grace and gaiety of Mr. Whiteing's manner, the story should have won more friends. Any book that offers a cure for world-weariness should command attention. Any book entitled The Island should be added at once to a library list—the island idea is hugged so persistently and universally. Every boy of imagination, which is almost the same as saying every boy, has longed to dwell alone on an island, remote, inventive, and, betwixt perils, at peace. The mention of an island renews this early ambition all through life; it calls up recollections of Robinson Crusoe, of the Swiss Family Robinson, of a dozen other books, and expectation is a-tip-toe.

Yet the island idea is two-fold. It fascinates both the romancer and the reformer. The romancer knows that nowhere except on a vessel at sea (which is in a sense also an island) can lawlessness have such play as on an island. To him the island is the perfect theatre of mystery, of daily excitement, of daily surprises. But the island is not less eligible as a building site for Utopians. To the writer who would lightly treat of things as they might be, rather than of things as they are, the island idea is also supremely fascinating. There primitive customs can quite reasonably still prevail, men and women still be natural. Mr. Whiteing, although privately he may entertain the profoundest respect for the island idea of the romancer, numbers himself in this book among the reformers. He employs the island didactically.

His hero, who himself tells his experiences, is a Person of Quality—an English lord—wary of civilisation, of highly specialised society, of insincerities, of selfishnesses, in short, weary of life. He leaves London for Paris, hoping at that distance to bring things into focus again. Paris is no help. He embarks on a voyage, and is stranded, by a happy accident, on an island in the Pacific. Up to this moment the reader valiantly expects adventures. There have been premonitions of something more serious and penetrating, but the arrival at the island is convincing. Yet precisely at this moment does Mr. Whiteing make his real start upon the expression of those cruel truths which makes what we call satire. Hence the unpopularity of the book, for a reader never forgives the author who promises one thing and offers another. By naming his book The Island; or, the Adventure of a Person of Quality, Mr. Whiteing undertook, at any rate implicitly—so the reader would argue—to give incident for one's money. Instead, what have we?—a satirical socialistic pamphlet!

But however bloodthirsty his nature, the reader should persevere; the mechanism of Mr. Whiteing's satire is so novel, and his treatment so attractive. He does not, after the customary manner of satirists, invent a perfect race and hold them up as a mirror to his countrymen; nor does he depict a people in the sway of our worst passions and ask us to look on them, repent, and mend our ways. He is more subtle than that: he takes a remote island of the Pacific where dwell in amity a little settlement of English—descendants of the mutineers of the Bounty—who have fallen behind the motherland in sophistication, and are just simple, God-fearing, unambitious, merry folk; making (all unknown to themselves) perhaps the most perfect human community that can be expected by the most sanguine dreamers. To invent such a community is in itself not remarkable. The strength and novelty of Mr. Whiteing's plot is, that the one extravagant wish of this little Pitcairn colony is to see England, the perfect country; its one continual desire is to be like England (whence come its Bibles) in zealous cheery practice of all the virtues. Conscious, with unconquerable humility, of their own shortcomings, these islanders are for ever striving to bring their lives up to the English ideal. This is poignant enough—it is at once so credible and so pathetic! Take, for example, this conversation between Victoria and the Person of Quality. Victoria is the girl of the island (she was named after our Queen), who finds the visitor fainting on the beach, and becomes his especial intimate.

"'Civilise us,' she exclaims. 'Make us like England. Give us larger things to live for. Tell us what we must do. There must be something wanting, but I cannot tell what it is. It all seems so beautiful here—the shining sun, friends to love, peace, the singing, the sea, the very wind in the wood! Yet I know there must be something. . . . We are like children, perhaps.'

"'Keep so.'

"'No, no; we want to be like you. This is babyland. Make us great and good. You know the secret; you have lived there.'"

Under Victoria's importunity the Person of Quality reluctantly promises to try. His method will be to expound the advantages of English customs to the Ancient, the Governor of the island, who is Victoria's father, and recommend their adoption in the island. Thus:

"'Then, excuse the remark, my friend, but your Church puzzles me a little. I see no hierarchy, to use the proper expression; no grade upon grade, each, as aforesaid, enjoying more pudding than the one below, until, with the highest, we reach a tableland covered with acres of this delicacy. To tell the honest truth about it, the Church began in a very small way, and it will not do to ignore the fact that the old stable has become a prosperous house of business, with a frontage in the best thoroughfares. Some of the Apostles, respectable as they undoubtedly were, must have smelt strongly of fish—though modern research has, I believe, discovered that they were not mere hands before the mast, but owners of smacks. Their successors—this Bishop from York or Canterbury, this Cardinal Prince from Rome—never offend in that way. . . . But where are you in all this? I ask. Where is even your beginning of better things? What note have you of a living Church, when you have not so much as a great doctrinal contest to settle the metaphysical reasons for goodness, before you begin to be good?'"

But Mr. Whiteing is not always ironical. He has many passages of direct writing that touch a high level. Some of Victoria's speeches are sincerity itself, and the descriptions of nature, the whimsical self-communings of the hero, the bizarre introduction to the adventure, are all delightfully fresh. Victoria is a great creation: to persons who detest irony and abominate satire—and they are not few—Victoria will be the strength of the book. The contrast of the Person of Quality, the blasé but clean and honourable man of fashion, with this child of nature, so entirely made up of true instincts, is in itself interesting. Mr. Whiteing knows the world well; and in the conversations between the two are many shrewd and witty words. But what is better than his knowledge of the world is his belief in human goodness. At heart he is an optimist, and for all the bitterness of the book there is an antidote.

The jest—for, after all, The Island is a jest, although may be a rather sad one—is worked out with delicate art. Mr. Whiteing's style is perfectly bred: it is flowing, debonair, distinguished. Few books are to-day so well written as this. It has many of the virtues of the French—their clearness and lightness, their easy treatment of the first person singular. The Person of Quality is himself a charming companion. He has humour and tact, sentiment and wit. No islanders could entertain a more sympathetic observer.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1897.

NEW NOVELS.

Pretty Michal. By Maurus Jókai. Translated from the Hungarian by R. Nisbet Bain. (Jarrold & Sons.)

One by one, very gradually, we are becoming possessed of Jókai's novels. Timar's Two Worlds, 'Midst the Wild Carpathians, Black Diamonds, Eyes Like the Sea, The Green Book, Dr. Dumany's Wife, In Love with a Czarina—all these, and possibly more, have now an English dress, and Mr. R. Nisbet Bain has earned our gratitude by adding to them Pretty Michal (A szép Mikhál). For one cannot have too much of this vigorous, picturesque, large-hearted writer, so sane and virile is he, so bent upon getting the maximum of interest out of every tale he tells. That, after all, is his chief virtue: his power of extracting the vital essences of a romance. Many modern novelists are so prone to give the story the go-by and fasten rather on character. Jókai drives both along together.

The period of Pretty Michal is the latter half of the seventeenth century, and the scene is laid principally at Kassa, the city for which, as it happens, Jókai sits as a member of the Hungarian Diet. Broadly, the story may be considered true: the novelist, at any rate, found the skeleton of it among the city's archives. The pivot of the book is the old Hungarian marriage laws, which were so strict as often to come into the most poignant conflict with nature. Such is the case in the present work. Pretty Michal, a girl who has been brought up by her father, remote from women, on a system not altogether unlike that of Sir Austen Feverel, loves Valentin Kalondai, but is made to marry Henry Catsrider. Both are students. Henry Catsrider is a young Lutheran clergyman who has given himself out to be the son of a Roman Catholic. Actually, he is the son of the Vihodar or headsman of Zeb, from whose dark stronghold he ran away years before. His first action on being married is to seek his father and ask forgiveness, in order to legalise the union. After a journey beset with peril from robbers Henry and Michal reach the headsman's house. Michal is put to bed, and a terrible scene takes place between father and son, recalling a somewhat similar situation in Weir of Hermiston, but going far beyond it in grimness. The father is enraged at his son's desertion and condemnation of him; and, accusing him of obtaining his wife by illicit means, sentences Henry to instant death. This is part of the old man's speech:

"Then you think it belongs to the eternal fitness of things that your father should be a headsman, while you are a curer of souls; that when you are dispensing the Lord's Supper all the people should look with fear and loathing at your hand to see whether you have not inherited some blood mark from your father; that the children in your parish should come into the world with red blotches instead of moles; that the rabble, when we sit side by side in the felon's car, should cry out, 'There goes the headsman and his son the parson; the old 'un flays the sinners, and the youngster patches 'em up again!' Perhaps, however, you think nothing of the sort. Perhaps you will prefer to go on denying your father. Perhaps you will prefer to live a lie six days in the week, and then ascend the pulpit to preach eternal truth on the seventh day. But then would not the words 'Our Father' stick in your throat? Would you not hear the devil whispering in your ear every time you repeat the fifth commandment? But enough of this. Keep steady! Stretch out your head, and let us make an end of it!'"

One cannot but recall Weir of Hermiston upholding capital punishment. Only in subject is there, however, any similarity. Stevenson's aim was to give us life: Jókai is a born exaggerator.

As it turns out, Henry is pardoned on condition that he becomes his father's assistant on the scaffold. He does so, and is lost to all self-respect. Michal, horrified at the change and at her husband's employment, escapes with Valentine. They retire to Kassa: and there Valentine, with the aid of his wife's unusual knowledge and wit, in time becomes the first citizen. A year later he is called upon to sign the death-warrant of a malefactor, which will bring Henry Catsrider, now the Vihodar of Zeb, on a professional visit to the city. Henry comes; Valentine is denounced to him on the scaffold as the unlawful husband of Michal; Valentine admits the accusation, and he and his wife are condemned to death. Michal dies by the axe.

"When they had got to the top of the scaffold, which was hung with black cloth, Valentine kissed the hands and the cheeks of his Michal.

'Do you forgive me?'

'I have nothing to forgive.'

'For your horrible death?'

'It unites me eternally with you.'

'Do you expect that we shall meet again?'

'I'll wait at the gates of heaven till you come.'

'And if for my sins' sake I go to hell?'

'I'll pray to God till He releases you.'

'Would you like to pray again, now?'

'No, my heart is at peace.'

'Amen.'

Then she sat down on the little stool, and bound up her hair with the white fillet.

An iron coffin was there to hold them both."

There is no need to tell more: enough has been said to show that here are the elements of tragedy in the highest. It is too much to hold that Jókai brings to this tragedy the treatment it merits. Great passion is beyond him; he is no Shakespeare; but he has a fine romantic feeling, and the story goes briskly along to its close. Michal psychologically may not satisfy, nor is Valentine, the man, exactly the child (as Wordsworth's line would have him) of Valentine, the youth; but their adventures are spirited and irresistible. The following passage is from the description of the three robber chiefs who terrorised travellers passing through the mountains—it has the right ring:

"The third chieftain was Janko. His body was small and thin; no one would have taken him for a man of monstrous strength. Yet he could leap from a sitting posture on to the shoulders of the tallest man, and had even been known to mount a galloping horse on a waggon going at full speed at a single bound. In wrestling he could have given odds to Samson himself.

Him, too, Simplex recognised by the hellebore he was munching. For Janko, like the son of Cambyzes, had made a practice of chewing hellebore from his youth upwards, thus securing himself against the chance of being poisoned; though his own mouth thereby became so poisonous that all the women whom he kissed fainted instantly, and all the men whom he bit died. Even now the leaves of a large bunch of hellebore were sticking out of his mouth all the time he talked."

Mr. Nisbet Bain's translation has been made with spirit. We notice a few misplaced "onlys" and some typographical errors, but it is an able piece of work. The volume has for frontispiece an excellent portrait of Maurus Jókai, from a photograph taken last year.

* * * *

Liza of Lambeth. By William Somerset Maugham.
(T. Fisher Unwin.)

The successes of one season may be known by the imitations of the next, and Mr. Arthur Morrison may afford to smile at the sincere flatteries of Liza of Lambeth. The mimicry, indeed, is deliberate and unashamed. The brutal fight between two women, the talk of plumes around a death-bed, are faithfully reproduced. Unfortunately the qualities which touch Mr. Morrison's work with something akin to genius are precisely the qualities which are here omitted; the directness, the restraint, the dominance of artistic purpose. What should have been a tragedy becomes a sordid story of vulgar seduction. The realism, pursued for its own sake, sinks into incurable nastiness. I have seldom read anything more unpleasant than a chapter in which Mr. Maugham borrows the old pastoral convention in order to give piquancy to his description of a Chingford bank holiday. Let me detach a jewel from this carcanet:

"'You 'ave fust pop,' amorously remarked the lovely Phyllis, and he took a long drink and handed the pot to her.

She, with maiden modesty, turned it so as to have a different part to drink from; but he remarked as he saw her:

'You are bloomin' particular.'

Then, unwilling to grieve him, she turned it back again and applied her ruby lips to the place where his had been.

'Now we shan't be long!' she remarked, as she handed him back the pot.

The faithful swain took out of his pocket a short clay pipe, blew through it, filled it, and began to smoke, while Phyllis sighed at the thought of the cool liquid gliding down her throat, and with the pleasing recollection gently stroked her stomach. Then Corydon spat, and immediately his love said—

'I can spit further than that.'

'I bet yer yer can't.'

She tried, and did. He collected himself and spat again, further than before. She followed him, and in this idyllic contest they remained till the tootling horn warned them to take their places."

It is a great pity, for Mr. Maugham is by no means without talent. He knows his slums, not probably as they are, but as they seem to the casual observer, and he can describe vigorously and effectively. Moreover, his principal subject, the factory girl in the clutches of a "magerful man," is quite capable of serious and artistic treatment. But I am afraid that Mr. Maugham is less preoccupied with serious art than with the desire to out-Herod Herod in realistic audacity. And therefore I quit him with no heightened sense of the tragic pity and awe that belong to the faithful record of human life in the meanest dwelling, but with a grimy feeling, as if I had had a mud-bath in all the filth of a London street.

* * * *

The Coming of Chloe. By Mrs. Hungerford.
(F. V. White & Co.)

The hosts of readers who have been faithful to Mrs. Hungerford since the days of Mollie Bawn will have no reason for disappointment with this her last contribution to fiction. I must admit that I have never been among the devoted band. There is something too eternally feminine in the atmosphere of her books. On the other hand, they have this advantage, that one always knows what to expect in them. In this case the scene is laid in an out-of-the-way part of Ireland, where Mrs. Fitzgerald, a widow, has taken up her quarters. She has two very nice daughters, and a very small income; so she decides on taking in a "paying guest" on the recommendation of a relative. The guest is Chloe Jones, and she is a mystery. Major O'Hara, a neighbour and old friend, is against the scheme, and so are Tom and Laurence—"young men."

"'Why not wire to her that you can't have her?' Laurence is still expostulating in a clear and rather angry tone. 'I can tell you that if you let it go further you will repent the day you ever let this adventuress into your house.'

Cissy lifts her voice.

'That is too strong a term!' cries she indignantly, 'when we do not know her—have not even seen her!'

'For all that, adventuress is the word. A girl who comes here refusing to have questions asked about her—how can she be regarded but as an adventuress? Of course there may be arguments, but—'

His arguments, at all events, come at this moment to an untimely end. Something in the stricken air and attitudes of those around him, the knowledge, more than anything else, that they are not listening to him, brings him to a dead stop, and a glance in the direction that all theirs have taken.

He looks towards the western gate that leads into the garden—a garden filled with roses—and looks to his undoing.

Chloe has come!"

Of course, Chloe Jones is not Chloe Jones at all, but somebody much more important and interesting. However, nobody finds this out until quite the end of the story. There is, moreover, ample provision of badinage, love making, and marrying and giving in marriage.

* * * *

Good Mrs. Hypocrite: a Study in Self-Righteousness. By Rita.
(Hutchinson.)

Rita's latest contribution to the circulating library falls, it will hardly be denied by her admirers, considerably below her reputation. Frankly, one closes the volume with the impression of having received a spiteful schoolgirl's confidences with regard to the character of an uncongenial maiden aunt. The unfortunate lady, whose name was Catherine Macpherson, is thus maliciously described:

"With regard to herself, her personal appearance left much to be desired. . . . Even her own favourable opinion led her to distrust that dull-coloured hair, those sharp, hard features, that large, ill-tempered mouth, and the incipient moustache which had given her many an hour's uneasiness. Added to this was a figure totally devoid of any roundness or femininity; tall, thin, angular, and gaining nothing from an inherent want of taste in dress."

Through the phases of useful companion, deaconess, scripture-reading, grotesque matrimonial aspiration, pilfering, and tipping Catherine is remorselessly dragged to the catastrophe of an overturned lamp—redolent of gruesome suggestions as to the future, into which we must not presume to pry. Some relief is furnished by Catherine's encounters with the masterful domestic Tibbie Minch, who, despite her not always convincing Scottish accent, succeeds "whiles" in evoking a smile.

MAURUS JOKAI AT HOME.

THE novelist struck me (says John Foster Frazer in The Young Man) as a man utterly tired out. Perhaps the two hundred volumes he has written within the last fifty years may account for the sad weariness of countenance. Yet the weariness was only apparent, for he showed me a great bundle of proofs he was correcting at the very moment of my arrival, and handed me half-a-dozen sheets of closely written MS., the result of that morning's work. At the age of seventy-two he has reached a time of life when personal adornment is of secondary importance, and, to tell the truth, his attire was rather slovenly. He is a tall, slim, and slightly bent man, and from his throat to his feet he was wearing a long loose-fitting dressing-gown, once black, but now discoloured by age, and with the accumulated dust of at least twenty years in the creases. The sleeves, hanging almost to the finger tips, were ragged-edged, so that when he desired to write he hitched them up. On his head was a round cap, edged with a piece of blue tape. The room in which he worked was about the most dismal and uninspiring place I have ever been in. It must be a rule with the servants never to touch anything. Consequently, there was nothing but litter and dust. It was a very small room, perhaps fifteen feet square, the walls black, the ceiling stained, one window shuttered, and the other shaded with a heavy screen. Jókai invited me to rest on a shabby couch in one corner, while he himself sat on a deal chair at a little table, that was ink-stained, scattered with torn leaves, disused pen-nibs, musty papers, proofs in confusion, and old pages of MS. When he wrote he felt the nib on his thumb as an old farmer might do, and then cautiously dipped the pen in ink, as though to write were unusual with him. Some framed photographs were on the walls, but the dust had crept in between the glass and the pictures, so that they were faded and soiled. In one corner was a great green-glazed earthen stove, and in another stood what was originally intended for a bookcase. But the top was covered with long-emptied and dusty benedictine and cognac bottles, a dirty coffee cup and saucer, a battered hat, and some shrivelled apples. One or two hoary books were tossed about, but the shelves were mostly filled with old newspapers, magazines, and rubbish pushed in anyhow. Some men quarrel with the conditions under which they write, but Maurus Jókai seems to act on the principle that the worst the conditions the better the writing.

PENS AND PENCILS.

A pocket pen—namely, a pen containing nib and automatic ink supply, is a convenience ; but only if one can be quite sure that it will not, on occasion, fill the pocket with ink through the feed-hole. A fountain pen saves the trouble of dipping, enables the user to have his own pen always at hand without the necessity of having recourse to his desk, and saves persons who have to write away from home the disagreeableness of using strange nibs. The objections to a pocket fountain pen are the tendency already mentioned to spill the ink, and the necessity of shaking the ink down on to the nib before the pen can be used.

THE CAW FOUNTAIN PEN dispenses with both these objections. It cannot be put away without being hermetically closed ; it can be carried in any position, and subjected to any amount of shaking, and not one drop of ink can, by any possibility, get out of it. The nib—which is a gold one of fine quality, and can be selected to suit any hand—is carried actually in the ink, and the pen is thus ready for use the moment it touches the paper. The price is 12s. 6d.

From the foregoing remarks it will be seen that the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN has all the advantages of a stylographic pen, with the additional one of having a nib instead of a style point, so that one writes one's own hand with it ; but for people who still prefer a stylograph, the same Company makes the CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN. It is better than any other style of stylographic pen ever made, and is, in fact, a perfect ink pencil. The price is 5s.

And now about Pencils. About half the lead of an ordinary lead pencil is wasted in cutting the cedar, about two-thirds of the lead of an ordinary coloured pencil is wasted in the same way, and by breaking while in use. In either case, the point of a pencil, whether black or coloured, is troublesome to make, and, except in the hands of a few skilful persons, irregular and unsightly. THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL is not made of wood at all ; it is just like an ordinary pencil, but the lead is covered with paper, and by an ingenious device it can be resharpened by simply pulling off a little of the paper. The sharpening is absolutely automatic ; you cannot take off too much or too little of the cover ; it is always just right. The point is easily made perfectly symmetrical, and beautifully tapered. There is no possibility of the lead being broken in sharpening, because the lead has only to be lightly touched. The lead is round instead of being square, as in many lead pencils, so that there are no awkward corners to disfigure the writing.

Nobody who has to use a blue pencil, or any coloured pencil, would ever be content with an ordinary one after using a BLAISDELL pencil ; and the BLAISDELL black lead pencil is also better than any ordinary black lead pencil ever made. Samples of each kind of pencils will be sent post free, on receipt of 1s., to any address in the United Kingdom by the BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C., British Depot for the CAW pens.

BLACKIE & SON'S BOOKS.

Suitable for the Oxford and Cambridge Local and other Examinations.

ENGLISH.

- Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. Warwick Edition. Edited by H. L. WITHERS, B.A. [In October.]
- Shakespeare.—The Merchant of Venice. Junior School Edition. Edited by GEORGE H. ELY, B.A. 8d.
- Shakespeare.—Coriolanus. Warwick Edition. Edited by EDMUND K. CHAMBERS. 1s. 6d. [In October.]
- Shakespeare.—The Tempest. Junior School Edition. Edited by ELIZABETH LEE. 8d.
- Shakespeare.—The Tempest. Warwick Edition. Edited by F. S. BOAS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- Shakespeare.—Hamlet. Junior School Edition. Edited by L. W. LYDE, M.A. 10d.
- Shakespeare.—Hamlet. Warwick Edition. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
- Shakespeare.—Julius Cæsar. Junior School Edition. Edited by W. DENT. 8d.
- Shakespeare.—Julius Cæsar. Warwick Edition. Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A. 1s.
- Milton.—Paradise Lost. BOOKS I., II., and III. Edited by F. GORSE, M.A. 1s. each.
- Milton.—Samson Agonistes. Edited by E. K. CHAMBERS, B.A. 1s. 6d.
- From Shakespeare to Dryden. Being Vol. II. of "A School History of English Literature." By ELIZABETH LEE. [In October.]

ENGLISH HISTORY.

- The Warwick History of England: a Simple and Picturesque Account of the National History from Early Times to 1896. With many Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
- A History of the British Empire. By the Rev. EDGAR SANDERSON, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- The Oxford Manuals of English History. Edited by C. W. C. OMAN, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. 1s. each.
- No. 1. THE MAKING OF THE ENGLISH NATION, B.C. 55—A.D. 1135. By C. G. ROBERTSON, B.A., Fellow of All Souls College.
- No. 2. KING and BARONAGE, A.D., 1135-1328. By W. H. BURTON, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of St. John's College.
- No. 3. THE HUNDRED YEARS' WAR, A.D. 1328-1455. By C. W. C. OMAN, M.A. [In preparation.]
- No. 4. ENGLAND and the REFORMATION, A.D. 1485-1603. By G. W. POWERS, M.A., formerly Scholar of New College.
- No. 5. KING and PARLIAMENT, A.D. 1603-1714. By G. H. WAKELING, M.A., Lecturer in History at Wadham College.
- No. 6. THE MAKING OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE, A.D. 1714-1832. By ARTHUR HANNAH, M.A., Student and Tutor of Christ Church.

GEOGRAPHY.

- Man on the Earth: a Course in Geography. By LIONEL W. LYDE, M.A., Examiner in Geography to the Oxford Local Examination Board and the College of Preceptors. Fully Illustrated. 2s.
- Blackie's Descriptive Geographical MANUALS. By W. G. BAKER, M.A. Illustrated.
- No. 1. REALISTIC ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY. 1s. 6d.
- No. 2. THE BRITISH ISLES. 2s.
- No. 3. THE BRITISH COLONIES and INDIA. 2s.
- No. 4. EUROPE (except the British Isles). 2s.
- No. 5. THE WORLD (except Europe and the British Empire). 2s.
- The Geography of the British Empire. By W. G. BAKER, M.A. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- A Synoptical Geography of the World: a Concise Handbook for Examinations, and for General Reference. With a Complete Series of Maps. 1s.
- The Geography of North America: a Brief Handbook for Students. With Synopses and Sketch Maps. 6d.
- Commercial Geography: a Complete Manual of the Countries of the World. By Professor ZEHDEN. New Edition. 5s.

CLASSICS.

- Cæsar's Gallic War. BOOKS I., II., III., IV., V., and VI. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, Exercises, and Vocabularies, by JOHN BROWN, B.A., Worcester College, Oxford, Assistant to the Professor of Humanity in Glasgow University. With Coloured Map, Pictorial Illustrations, and Plans of Battles. 1s. 6d. each.
- Cæsar's Invasions of Britain. (Parts of BOOKS IV. and V. of the GALLIC WAR.) Edited by JOHN BROWN, B.A. 1s. 6d.
- Xenophon's Anabasis. BOOK I. Edited by C. E. BROWNRIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. With Map and Plans. 1s. 6d.
- Latin Unseens in Prose and Verse. Junior Section, 8d.; Senior Section, 6d.
- Greek Unseens in Prose and Verse. Junior Section, Edited by A. C. LIDDELL, M.A., 6d.; Senior Section, Edited by E. SHARWOOD SMITH, M.A., 8d.
- First Steps in Continuous Latin Prose. By W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. 2s.
- Hints and Helps in Continuous Latin PROSE. By W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. 2s.—KEY, 2s. 6d. net.
- Hints and Helps in Continuous Greek PROSE. By W. C. FLAMSTEAD WALTERS, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- A Classical Compendium. By C. E. BROWNRIGG, M.A., Chief Classical Master in Magdalen College School, Oxford. New Edition. 2s. 6d.

FRENCH.

- A First French Course. By J. J. BEUZEMAKER, B.A., late Examiner to the College of Preceptors, &c. 1s. 6d.
- A Second French Course. By J. J. BEUZEMAKER, B.A. 2s. 6d.
- A Modern French Reader: Interesting Extracts from Contemporary French. With Notes and Vocabulary by J. J. BEUZEMAKER. 1s.
- French Stories. With Notes, Exercises, and Vocabularies. By MARGUERITE NINET. 1s.
- French Tales for Beginners. With Vocabularies. By MARGUERITE NINET. Illustrated. 1s.
- French Unseens for Junior Forms. Passages in Prose and Verse. Selected by D. S. RENNARD, B.A. Paper, 3d.
- French Unseens for Middle Forms. Selected by E. PELLISSIER, M.A. 1s.
- French Unseens for Upper Forms. Selected by E. PELLISSIER, M.A. 1s. 6d.
- A Complete Course of French Composition and Idioms. By HECTOR REY, B.Sc., French Master in the Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow, &c. 3s. 6d. [In September.]
- A Comprehensive French Manual. For Students reading for Army and other Examinations. By OTTO C. NAF, M.A. Lond. 3s. 6d. [In September.]

GERMAN.

- A First German Course. By A. R. LECHNER, Modern Language Master in Bedford Modern School. 1s. 6d.
- A Second German Course. By H. BAUMANN, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- German Stories. By Mrs. DE SAUMAREZ BROCK. 1s. 6d.
- German Unseens. Passages in Prose and Verse. Junior Section. Selected by D. S. RENNARD, B.A. Paper, 4d.

ARITHMETIC.

- Layng's Arithmetic. By A. E. LAYNG, M.A., Head Master of Stafford Grammar School. In Two Parts. Part I. now ready, extending to Decimals and the Unitary Method. 2s. 6d., with or without Answers.
- Layng's Arithmetical Exercises, for Junior and Middle Forms (5,000 Exercises). 1s.; with Answers, 1s. 6d.; Answers alone, 6d.
- Examination Arithmetic. Containing 1,200 Arithmetical Problems and Exercises (with Answers) selected from Oxford and Cambridge Local Examination Papers, &c. By T. S. HARVEY. 2s.—KEY, 4s. 6d.
- Blackie's Complete Arithmetic. With Answers, 234 pages, 1s. 6d.; Exercises only, 192 pages, 1s.; Answers only, in limp cloth, 6d.

MATHEMATICS.

- Layng's Euclid.—Euclid's Elements. With Notes, Examples, and Exercises. Arranged by A. E. LAYNG, M.A. BOOKS I. to VI., with XI., and Appendix; and a wide Selection of Examination Papers. 3s. 6d.
- BOOKS I. to IV., in 1 vol., 2s. 6d.; BOOK I., 1s.; II., 6d.; III., 1s.; IV., 6d.; V. and VI. together, 1s.; XI., 1s. 6d.
- Elementary Mensuration: Lines, Surfaces, and Solids. With numerous Exercises. With or without Answers, 10d.
- Preliminary Algebra. By R. WYKE BAYLISS, B.A. 1s.
- Algebra: Up to and Including Progressions and Scales of Notation. By J. G. KERR, M.A. With Answers, 2s. 6d.; without Answers, 2s.
- Algebraic Factors: How to Find Them and How to Use Them. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. 2s.—KEY, 3s. 6d.
- Elementary Text-Book of Trigonometry. By R. H. PINKERTON, B.A. 2s.
- Mathematical Wrinkles for Matriculation and other Examinations. By Dr. W. T. KNIGHT. 2s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

- A Text-Book of Geology. By W. JEROME HARRISON, F.G.S., Chief Science Demonstrator for the Birmingham School Board. Fourth Edition, much Enlarged. 3s. 6d.
- Elementary Botany. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany at the Birmingham Municipal Technical School. 2s.
- The Student's Introductory Handbook of SYSTEMATIC BOTANY. By JOSEPH W. OLIVER, Lecturer on Botany, Birmingham Municipal Technical School. Illustrated. 4s. 6d.
- Elementary Physiology and Hygiene. By H. ROWLAND WAKEFIELD, Joint Author of "Earth-Knowledge," &c. 2s. 6d.
- Elementary Inorganic Chemistry: Theoretical and Practical. With Examples in Chemical Arithmetic. By A. HUMBOLDT SEXTON, F.R.S.E., F.I.C., F.C.S., Professor of Metallurgy, Glasgow, and West of Scotland Technical College. Fourth Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 2s. 6d.
- Qualitative Chemical Analysis, INORGANIC and ORGANIC. By EDGAR E. HORWILL, F.C.S., Lecturer in Chemistry at the Battersea Pupil Teachers' Centre, &c. New Edition. 2s.
- Deschanel's Natural Philosophy. Translated and Edited by Professor J. D. EVERETT, D.C.L., F.R.S. Thirteenth Edition, thoroughly Revised and much Enlarged. Medium 8vo, cloth, 18s.; also in Paris, limp cloth, 4s. 6d. each.
- Part I.—MECHANICS, HYDROSTATICS, &c.
- Part II.—HEAT.
- Part III.—ELECTRICITY and MAGNETISM.
- Part IV.—SOUND and LIGHT.

BLACKIE & SON'S COMPLETE CATALOGUE of EDUCATIONAL BOOKS post free on application

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, 50, OLD BAILEY.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1897.

No. 1323, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

EDUCATIONAL ARTICLES.

I.—FLOREANT AMBO!

"OPTAT ephippia bos piger, optat aratra caballus." The saying is as true as ever, and spectators of the entertaining drama of Educational Reform have recently had the opportunity of observing an excellent instance of its application. A leader has appeared in the Times, dealing with the notorious athletic problem, and in this leader parents—parents, that is, of the better classes—are seriously exhorted to consider the advisability of sending their sons to day-schools rather than boarding-schools. Almost simultaneously out comes an educational periodical with the communicated discovery that (speaking broadly) real education can be obtained only at a boarding-school, and that consequently the State ought to establish and maintain a number of what we may call "boarding-board-schools," at which the more advanced pupils might pass the last year or so of their school life. This latter proposal has already attracted considerable attention in the columns of provincial newspapers.

If we do not altogether acquiesce in the apprehensions which the Times expresses with regard to athletics, neither can we approve in the least the fantastic "boarding-board-school" suggestion—indeed, we have only mentioned it in order to illustrate how widely opinions differ on these elementary points. What strikes us as really important is the two-fold assumption (so often made, and underlying in part, at least, both the views to which we have referred), first, that there must be a right and a wrong as between boarding-schools and day-schools, and, secondly, that the two systems have actually been existing for a long time side by side, so that we have only to turn to practical experience in order to see which is the better.

It is strange, indeed, that there is not more of the "live and let live" spirit among "educationalists" and schoolmasters. But as, in a general way, the advocate of technical instruction looks askance at classical learning, and as the professor of chemistry, equally with the Attic scholar, is inclined to think that he alone has the secret of education, so from Cratinus downward one can hardly find a writer on education who is not a strong partisan either of the boarding or the home system. Yet surely a little consideration will show that both types of schools are necessary in the community. Boarding-schools, apart from any advantages that they may possess, are rendered absolutely essential by the migratory habits of the socially higher classes. How can a boy attend a day-school when his parents' home is continually shifting from London to Scotland, from Scotland to the Continent, according to the dictates of fashion and the time of the year? Or even if a boy from this class attended a day-school during the London season, what home attention, what encouragement to work could he receive from his parents during that, to them, busiest of busy times? Consequently the fashion has long since been set. The "cream of the cream" engage, perhaps, private tutors, but the bulk of Society send their sons to boarding-schools. Nor is there any reason to complain of the result. But the results are not so much the inducement that leads those lower in the social scale to take the same course with their children: it is rather an instance of the power of fashion, of Mrs. A. copying Lady B. Here, however, also, the results are found to be good; and, in this way, the fashion has taken root and grown so strong, that there must be thousands of middle-class fathers and mothers of families who have come to look on the boarding-school as the one kind of school to which it would be right or decent to send their sons.

Acting on this somewhat crude, but very natural, view, these parents get, as we have said, excellent results; indeed, it would be difficult to praise too highly the typical virtues of manliness and self-reliance, and at the same time the sense of membership of an organised body with all the responsibilities arising in relation to its other members, which are usually produced by life at a good boarding-school. It is, indeed, said, as in the Times' leader to which we have referred, that interest, at such schools, is apt to centre rather round athletics than round head-work. This, no doubt, is true; but perhaps it is not wholly an evil. The idea of giving a mental education lasting till the age of eighteen or nineteen to boys of the social class that fills our chief public schools is comparatively recent. The Elizabethan writers would have advocated the training of such boys in a school of arms or chivalry rather than of Latin and Greek, and the present practice, though not quite consistent, is, after all, a recognition of facts that are as true now as they were three hundred years ago, or when the Just Beast, Chiron, kept a boarding-school on Mount Pelion. In the case of those boarding-schools that provide for the wants of a class to whom the nominal subjects of study are of greater importance, we take leave to say that the schoolmasters have the whole matter in their own hands. Numerous examples show that in schools of this class it is not difficult to secure that a reasonable interest is taken in the school-work, and that the average of attainment is at least respectable.

When we turn to day-schools, we see at once how false to facts it is to represent this system as in competition with the other. Elementary day-schools exist, of course, everywhere; little grammar-schools are scattered up and down the country; but where are the day-schools to which a parent belonging to the class which cares, or can afford to care, for the higher education, may send his sons? Except in London such schools hardly exist. In or near London we have Westminster, St. Paul's, Merchant Taylors', Dulwich, King's College School, and University College School, which are all open without restriction to day-boys (though Westminster, St. Paul's, and Dulwich have also slightly under a hundred boarders apiece), and all give the same type of education to the same class of boy as any but the two or three most expensive of the great boarding-schools. Outside London, the parent who lives in the country is necessarily unable to send his sons to a great day-school. In the large provincial towns one might reasonably expect to find day-schools of the highest type, but till a few years ago it would have been impossible to find concrete instances, except, perhaps, at Manchester and Birmingham. Bristol, however, has now begun to enjoy in this respect the same advantages as London, Clifton College having been converted, to a great extent, into a day-school. The admission of day-boys at such schools as Rugby is a matter of less general importance, as not affecting the larger centres of population. At Bedford, however, there is quite a large population of parents who reside temporarily in the town with the express object of having their sons educated as day-boys at the Grammar School. Much the same may be said of Cheltenham.

It is thus evident that the number of first-class day-schools in England is, though increasing, still extremely limited, and that of the few that exist London possesses an undue proportion. It is difficult, indeed, to see how, under such circumstances as these, day-schools can be said to have been weighed in the balance against boarding-schools and found wanting (except as regards number). Perhaps it might be urged that the paucity of great day-schools is a proof that the public will have none of them. But the fact is, that a successful day-school was in by-gone days always in danger of becoming a boarding-school. Boys flocked to it from a distance, and the masters found it to their advantage to take them as private boarders. Thus the day element was gradually squeezed out. The history of Harrow is an example of this process—a process which in that particular case proved of inestimable advantage to English education, but in others was a more doubtful benefit. It will be interesting to see whether Harrow will have in the near future to reverse the process, when the famous "Hill" has been surrounded by the tide of advancing London.

The question remains, how far the type of character fostered by the great day-school compares favourably with the product of the boarding-school. It is certainly different, but not so different, we think, as many would make out. It must be remembered that a day-school of the class which we have in mind is in a position to bring to bear many of the most potent influences exercised by a boarding-school, though naturally in a less degree. These influences are reinforced by an influence stronger still—that of home. To urge, as some seem to do, that in the majority of cases this influence is harmful to a boy between the ages, let us say, of twelve and eighteen is about as serious an indictment of English parents, of the English home, and of English family life generally as it would be possible to prefer. The pride which Englishmen most properly take in the great boarding-schools of their country should not blind them to the fact that the alternative method of education is at least the more natural, though often, no doubt (owing to the artificial state of our society), the less preferable of the two under given circumstances.

What is really wanted, if it is not too much to hope for, is that the partisans of each system should recognise how much there is that is good in the other—that the man from the boarding-school should realise that the great day-school, if properly administered, can and does turn out English gentlemen remarkably like himself, only, it may be, a little better provided with "sitting breeches" (which is no discredit), and that the advocate of the day-school should cordially admit the immense value of our ancient boarding-schools, not perhaps in every case so much to the education proper, as to the general well-being of the country. It is dangerous work tinkering with either.

II.—THE QUESTION OF HOME-WORK IN THE DAY-SCHOOL.

I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the general aspects of the boarding-school versus day-school problem, but to draw attention to what I consider to be one of the chief drawbacks to a day-school education—one of the grievous blunders of modern education.

I take it that a certain amount of private preparation is needed by every scholar, that "home-work" is a necessary evil. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the system prevailing at most boarding-schools is a rational one, to which little exception can be taken. A reasonable time, very seldom more than three hours, is set aside for this preparation. A master is present to see that there is no idling or shirking, and it is only under very special circumstances that a boy is permitted to continue his work after preparation hours. The boys are thus placed on a fair level, they work under the same circumstances and without special help from any parent or tutor, though, naturally, the amount of work accomplished varies very considerably according to the capacities and earnestness of the scholar. In the day-school the system is very different. Here home-work is gradually becoming the essential part of the school education, work done in school hours a secondary consideration, often mere routine. I have in my mind the case of one of the higher classes in a great and deservedly popular day-school. The class consisted of forty boys; there was a different master for every subject, and each master set his own home-work. The average age of the boys was between fifteen and sixteen, and the boy of ordinary intellect and mental capacities was compelled to spend four, five, sometimes even six hours over his home-work if he wished to take up a good position in the class. Out of the forty boys, perhaps ten slaved thus from morning to night until they worked themselves into a state of collapse. The others were occasionally kept in, or otherwise punished, but as a rule the master contented himself with leaving them severely alone. Practically all the home-work was written, as time would not admit of an oral examination of forty boys, and the greater part of the so called lesson was always taken up in correcting, marking, and setting homework, so that those who for some reason or other had failed to accomplish this work were altogether outside the pale of interest.

Now and then the master would explain, for instance, some abstruse algebraical problem which one of the head boys had failed to solve, but, more usually, he was, from force of circumstances, only a marking machine. He was always quite willing to explain any difficulty raised; but boys are strange creatures, and knowledge has to be thrust upon them. Few questions were asked by any but the head boys, and these were far beyond the understanding of the majority of the class, who had been left hopelessly behind in the great cramming race.

Of course, this is a bad instance, but typical of a system eminently calculated to ruin day-school education. If home-work were less there would be more time for explanation; there would be time, above all, for oral examination, the all-important test of understanding. In the class to which I have referred, all the boys, without exception, were destined for a business career, and there was not even the excuse for cramming which is offered by the awful competition in University and other examinations. The boys were at school, as I understand it, to be taught to think and to reason, to exercise the muscles of their mind. If a boy is compelled by this system to teach himself there is little object in his going to school, and the parents may and do complain that they have to engage private tutors to do in the evening what the master of the school should have done in the day-time. The physical side of the question is very serious and must not be overlooked. The danger to health of this everlasting cramming is at once apparent. Boys should at least have the half-holidays to themselves, but in many schools the home-work is, for some absurd reason, doubled on those days. Even Sunday is not a day of rest, for there is always Scripture to prepare. And above all other considerations it is not right that a boy should work harder at school than at any other period of his life, and yet I know scores of hard-working, successful business men who would tell you that, compared with the work they did at school, business, with all its responsibilities, is a continual holiday.

This same system of home-work is to be found—in a lesser degree, perhaps—in a large number of the High Schools for girls which have met with such deserved success throughout the kingdom. Here it is more difficult to bring home the responsibility to the guilty parties, for at the commencement of each term the parents sign a document in which they promise to write to the head mistress should the home-work given to their daughter be excessive, or the time spent on it exceed certain specified and very moderate limits. There is, moreover, no regular school during the afternoon, which is supposed to be given over to preparation. Now both these seemingly excellent rules are to all intents and purposes valueless. The parent knows well enough that should any complaint be made the mistress's displeasure at the interference will very likely be vented on the girl, or, at any rate, she will in future be looked upon as one of those pupils it is not worth while to trouble about. With regard to the afternoon preparation there are always innumerable so called "extra" lessons held during that part of the day, and the inevitable "music-practice" occupies every spare moment. And, perhaps, the most ridiculous point of it all is that, in some schools, the marks gained for homework do not count for the position in class, which is decided on the results of a few hours' examination—an examination not held in every subject which has been studied during the term, but only in the pet subjects of a particular head mistress. Such a practice is unfair to both pupil and teacher.

In the Girls' High Schools there is, however, a vast amount of genuine tuition, for all home-work is examined, corrected, and marked by the various teachers after school hours. The drudgery of a mistress's life is bad enough, but it seems altogether too unfair that she should not even have her evenings to herself. If you would know how grievously this burden falls upon the teacher you should read Miss Netta Syrett's Nobody's Fault, which contains a wonderfully accurate account of the existence of a High School mistress—an existence bounded on all sides by dreary wastes of exercise books. The High School teacher in setting home-work is signing a warrant for an evening of monotonous, soul-killing work.

I have tried to draw attention to what I consider a crying evil. The remedy is self-evident.

By J. E. HODDER WILLIAMS.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

THE week has been uneventful. No book of any particular distinction has been published; but in fiction, at any rate, there has been no lack of enterprise among publishers. The novels and stories tot up to the respectable number of eighteen. There are no well-known names among the authors, and one is prompted to ask the question, If the harvest is eighteen before the publishing season has really begun, what will it be at its height?

The other books that lie upon our table range from English Epigrams and Epitaphs to The History of Mankind. This, the second volume of Prof. Ratzel's work, runs into close upon six hundred pages, and is plentifully illustrated with plain and coloured pictures. Mr. George Trumbull Ladd, professor of philosophy in Yale University, dedicates his Philosophy of Knowledge to "those who by serious and prolonged inquiry, however sceptical, aspire to approach the truth." "If I may claim," the author says in his preface, "any peculiar merit for the method followed in discussing the problem of knowledge, it is perhaps chiefly this: I have striven constantly to make epistemology vital—a thing of moment, because indissolubly and most intimately connected with the ethical and religious life of the age." Prof. Ladd takes 609 pages to the task.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- SIR WALTER RALEIGH. By Martin A. S. Hume. T. Fisher Unwin.
 THE HISTORY OF MANKIND. By Prof. Friedrich Ratzel. Translated from the German by A. J. Butler. Vol. II. Macmillan & Co. 12s.
 THE EASTERN QUESTION: A REPRINT OF LETTERS WRITTEN 1853-1856 DEALING WITH THE EVENTS OF THE CRIMEAN WAR. By Karl Marx. Swan Sonnenschein.
 OLD TALES FROM GREECE. By Alice Zimmern. T. Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d.
 IN THE DAYS OF GOOD QUEEN BESS. By R. H. Cave. Burns & Oates. 3s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

- CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES: THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. Scripture. With 124 illustrations. Walter Scott. 6s.
 EVOLUTION AND REVELATION. By G. M. MacDermott. Jarrold & Sons. 2s.
 STEAM BOILERS. By G. Halliday. Edward Arnold. 7s. 6d.

FICTION.

- THE TEMPLE OF FOLLY. By Paul Creswick. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
 THROUGH ANOTHER MAN'S EYES. By Eleanor Holmes. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
 METHODIST IDYLLS. By Harry Lindsay. James Bowden. 6s.
 ON THE KNEES OF THE GODS. By A. F. P. Harcourt. Bentley & Son. 2 vols.
 MRS. WYLD. By Linda Gardiner. Jarrold & Sons. 3s. 6d.
 THE CLAIMS OF ANTHONY LOCKHART. By Adeline Sergeant. Hurst & Blackett. 6s.
 THE PEOPLE OF CLOPPAN. By George Bartram. T. Fisher Unwin. 6s.
 A STUDIO MYSTERY. By Frank Aubrey. Jarrold & Sons. 1s. 6d.
 THE "PARADISE" COAL-BOAT. By Cutcliffe Hyne. James Bowden. 6s.
 FURROWS. By Cosmo Hamilton. Digby, Long & Co. 1s. 6d.
 THE CAPTIVE OF PEKIN. By Charles Haunard. Jarrold & Sons. 6s.
 LADY ROSALIND. By Emma Marshall. James Nisbet & Co. 6s.

- A FIGHT FOR FREEDOM. By Gordon Stables. Nisbet & Co. 6s.
 JETSAM. By Owen Hall. Chatto & Windus. 3s. 6d.
 THE RIP'S REDEMPTION. By E. Livingstone Prescott. James Nisbet & Co. 6s.
 A GIRL'S AWAKENING. By J. H. Crawford. John Macqueen. 6s.

- THE RED PAINTED BOX. By Marie Connor Leighton. John Macqueen. 3s. 6d.
 WHEN PASSIONS RULE. By Frank Hart. Digby, Long & Co.

THEOLOGY.

- THEODORE AND WILFRIE. By G. F. Browne. S.P.C.K. 3s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

- QUESTIONS ON LOGIC. By H. Holman and M. C. W. Irvine. W. B. Clive. 2s. 6d.
 THE SCHOOL CALENDAR AND HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS. Whittaker & Co.

PHILOSOPHY.

- PHILOSOPHY OF KNOWLEDGE: AN INQUIRY INTO THE NATURE, LIMITS, AND VALIDITY OF HUMAN COGNITIVE FACULTY. By G. T. Ladd. Longmans & Co. 18s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

- JOURNEYS THROUGH FRANCE. By Hippolyte Adolphe Taine. Fisher Unwin.

FROM THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY.

- THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD. By S. L. Gulick.
 SUNDAYS ROUND THE WORLD. By F. Hastings.
 MASTERS OF TO-MORROW. By William J. Lacey.
 ELISHA THE MAN OF ABEL-MENOLAN. By Mrs. O. F. Walton.
 THE HOUSE WE LIVE IN. By W. J. Gordon.
 THE RISE AND SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY IN EUROPE. By W. H. Summers.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- GERMAN ORTHOGRAPHY AND PHONOLOGY. By George Hemphill. Ginn & Co.
 EPIGRAMS AND EPIITAPHES. Selected by Aubrey Stewart. Chapman & Hall. 2s.
 SOCIAL SWITZERLAND. By W. H. Dawson. Chapman & Hall. 6s.
 HEALTH IN AFRICA. By D. Kerr Cross. James Nisbet & Co. 3s. 6d.

NEW EDITIONS.

- DON QUIXOTE. Illustrated by W. H. Robinson. Bliss, Sands & Co. 2s.
 THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS. By S. Baring Gould. Vol. VI. 6s.
 THE WEST INDIES. By G. Washington Eves. Fourth Edition. Sampson Low & Co.

NOTES AND NEWS.

ON Tuesday afternoon, in Kelloe Church, Durham, a tablet to the memory of Elizabeth Barrett Browning was unveiled. The inscription runs: "To commemorate the birth in this parish of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, who was born at Coxhoe Hall, March 6th, 1806, and died at Florence, July 29th, 1861. A great poetess, a noble woman, a devoted wife. Erected by public subscription, 1897."

THE poets made the days they lived in palmy, but there were often "palmy days that had no date." The year of Herrick's death—Herrick's even!—has been a doubtful quantity. The birth-year of Thomas Dekker, Thomas Heywood, John Lyly, George Peele, Robert Greene, Thomas Campion, Richard Barnfield, and many another Elizabethan, has no place in biographical dictionaries. The same obscurity has descended, in several instances, to our own times, and it was only narrowly escaped by Mrs. Browning. All the world knows, especially this week, that she was born at Coxhoe Hall, county Durham, on March 6, 1806, where she was privately baptized, a ceremony publicly supplemented two years later at Kelloe Church by some formal reception of her at its font. The procedure was a little out of the common, and it only needed the estrangement of Mrs. Browning from her family from the time of her marriage to involve in hopeless mystery—a mystery which still pervades the newspaper paragraph—the place and circumstance of her entry into the world and into the Church.

MR. J. H. INGRAM, for instance, a zealous biographer, thrust aside the tradition that Hope End, Herefordshire, was Elizabeth Barrett's birthplace. "My researches," he says, "have enabled me to disprove these statements." The "researches" embraced the discovery, in the Lyn Mercury for March 14, 1809, of an announcement, for March 4, "In London, the wife of Edward M. Barrett, Esq., of a daughter." Mrs. Browning, however, in one of her letters to Mr. R. H. Horne, had specifically stated, "I was born in the county of Durham." Mr. Browning knew that much, at any rate; and in the eighties he authorised Mrs. Richmond Ritchie to say that Burn Hall in that county, and March 6, 1809, were the place and date of his wife's birth. He was wrong in both. A little later, Mr. Browning, in summary dismissal of Mr. Ingram's researches, made a restatement by which his wife was "born March 6, 1806, at Carlton Hall, Durham, the residence of her father's brother." He had the date right at last, but was still astray as to the locality. These inaccuracies are repeated again and again, Mr. Browning's first doubly inaccurate version being adopted, for instance, by so careful an editor as Mr. Clement K. Shorter, in the chronology recently prefixed to an edition of Mrs. Browning's poems.

THE ceremony in Kelloe Church this week concludes the controversy; and London, which Mr. Ingram wrongly enriched, cannot grudge the county of Durham the glory of giving birth to the woman whom a contemporary accounts to be "the only great poet given to English literature 'twixt Tees and Tweed."

MR. KIPLING'S nonsense verse about Quebec, which we quoted last week, turns out to be an old production. It appeared in Wee Willie Winkie, the excellent little Scots magazine for children which the Countess of Aberdeen founded, as long ago as 1895. How the rhyme came to be circulated so widely just now, as the last product of Mr. Kipling's muse, we cannot explain. Its bearing upon Mr. Kipling's poem, "Our Lady of Snows," was, of course, too strong for the sharp journalist to resist the temptation of reviving it; but there was no need to change its date.

THE gathering of the clans of science at Toronto, to attend the meeting of the British Association, says the New York Critic in an amusing paragraph, is imposing a tax upon the hospitality of our neighbour's citizens. According to a newspaper despatch, "Mr. Walter Barwick, a prominent barrister, offered to entertain anyone whom the committee would send him, provided the visitor did not wear list slippers and insist on having morning prayers." The scientist sent to Mr. Barwick was Prof. Silvanus P. Thompson.

The cheap edition of Scenes of Clerical Life which Messrs. Blackwood have just issued marks George Eliot's first appearance into thoroughly democratic covers. The price is sixpence, and the print of the double column is, though small, clear and well spaced. The book should have a great sale in this form. "The Sad Fortunes of the Rev. Amos Barton," "Mr. Gilfil's Love Story," and "Janet's Repentance," have in the past few years been much imitated but never equalled.

MR. JOHN LANE, who was the pioneer of the net system of bookselling, has decided in future to issue all his new fiction and new juvenile books at discount prices. Mr. Lane has arrived at this decision in consequence of the recent recommendation of the Publishers' Association that books should be sold at a discount of 2d. in the shilling.

AMERICA seems to be not a little impressed by Mr. S. R. Crockett's physique and capabilities. Major Pond, the lecture agent, on visiting the novelist at St. Andrews, was struck to such an extent with his prowess as a golfer, and his attitude when making up to strike the ball, that he followed Mr. Crockett over the five-mile course with a camera, snap-shooting him all the while; while the Critic prints the following remarks from one of Mr. Crockett's recent visitors:—

"Work rapidly!" he said, "I should think he did. He has two type-writing machines of unusual size and strength that he had made especially for his own use at a cost of 500 dollars each, and he works on these at lightning pace. But that is not all—he will carry on a general conversation with a roomful of people while he is writing out a story on the machine. Now, I have heard compositors talk while sticking type, but they were merely copying, whereas Mr. Crockett was writing out original matter. Usually he works alone, beginning at about five o'clock in the morning, and when he comes down to breakfast at nine he has 5,000 words written out. I never saw such a man; he seems to be inexhaustible and is certainly indefatigable. He is six feet four inches tall, weighs 280 pounds, and is as nimble as a cat."

Mr. Crockett has refused Major Pond's offer for a lecturing tour in the United States.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "In Good Words for August an attack was made on Rossetti in an article by Mr. Sulman. It was stated by Mr. Sulman that Linton had to correct his drawings. I find in the New York Times Mr. Linton's reply, in which he takes Mr. Sulman to task." Mr. Linton writes as follows:

"To the Editor of 'Saturday Review' of the New York Times.

"Mr. Sulman takes occasion to remark with reference to Rossetti's designs for Tennyson's Poems: 'Rossetti was furious with the liberties Linton took with his designs.' On the contrary, my friend distinctly and repeatedly thanked me for my fidelity to them. Mr. Sulman adds: 'Linton answered: "If I had cut them as he drew them!"' Neither sneer nor expression of opinion is true. I valued Rossetti's drawings too much not to at least endeavour at faithfully rendering them, and for such faithfulness rendered he more than once chose me to be his engraver.

"Are Mr. Sulman's other anecdotes of the same quality?"

"W. J. LINTON."

M. ZOLA is staying at Médan, working upon his new novel, Paris, which, we understand, is giving him more trouble than any book he has written. M. Zola hopes to finish Paris early in October.

The Life and Letters of John Arthur Roebuck, edited by Mr. Robert Leader, which is to be published shortly by Mr. Edward Arnold, will form a valuable addition to our store of political biography. Mr. Roebuck was a statesman of peculiar force of character, and of independence of thought and action, and his personality gives vigour and freshness to his autobiography and letters, which cover a good part of the century. He was born in 1802 and died in 1879, and from the year 1832 was a prominent influence, whether in or out of office, upon our national politics. It is the history of the life and opinions of a Radical of the old stamp, an intimate friend of John Stuart Mill, a hard fighter, and strong thinker, and the book has all the charm of political history told by one who helped to make it.

A Memoir of Miss Clough, the late Principal of Newnham College, by her niece, Miss Bertha Clough, is shortly to be published by Mr. Edward Arnold. The editor acted as secretary to her aunt, and is well qualified, therefore, to undertake the task of affording to the public some insight into the character and thoughts of one to whom people most interested in the education of girls and women have regarded as a guide and friend. The work will be furnished with two portraits—the frontispiece, a photograph plate of the portrait painted by Mr. Shannon, R.A., for Newnham College, and the other from a photograph by Mrs. Frederick Myers.

M. SARCEY has said of Voltaire's Candide that, though all the rest of his voluminous works were to be forgotten, "in this nutshell the name of Voltaire would sail towards immortality." During nearly a century and a half this story has not been published in a worthy library edition in English. Two or three translations were issued last century, and two or three since; sometimes with other less notable tales by Voltaire, and sometimes by itself. Mr. George Redway proposes to issue in the autumn, under the editorship of Mr. Walter Jerrold, a handsome limited édition de luxe of Candide, with upwards of sixty illustrations by M. Adrien Moreau. The edition is to consist of six hundred copies, one hundred of which will be printed on Japanese vellum.

In the list of honours distributed on the birthday of the Queen of Holland appears the name of Mr. Louis Couperus, the Dutch novelist, who has been awarded a knighthood in the Order of Orange-Nassau. English versions of all Mr. Couperus' novels have appeared, with the exception of the last—Wereldvrede—which is still awaiting a publisher. Probably Ecstasy is the most popular in this country.

The proprietors of Lean's Royal Navy List will issue in October next, for the first time (in conjunction with above list), a new naval annual entitled The Royal Navy List Diary and Naval Handbook. Tables and other information for the use of officers ashore and afloat have been specially prepared for this work, upwards of 100 pages of such matter being contained in the book, besides the diary portion, making in all a book of some 500 pages. The importance and developments of our Navy have caused the proprietors to feel that there should be a distinct opening for such a work.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co. have in the press a volume entitled The Savage Club Papers, containing contributions by about seventy "Savages."

THE Queen has sanctioned the dedication to herself of the Oxford English Dictionary, the third volume of which was completed on the sixtieth anniversary of her accession. A double section of the dictionary—"Foisty" to "Frankish"—is promised next month.

AMONG the announcements of Messrs. Griffith, Farran, Browne & Co. for the coming season is a book by Miss Beatrice Harraden, entitled A New Book of the Fairies. This work was first issued in 1891 in quarto form, and has now been for some time out of print. The new edition has been revised and corrected, and contains a new preface by the author.

THE two humorists who partly conceal their identity under the initials H. B. and B. T. B. have composed a companion volume to The Bad Child's Book of Beasts, which will shortly be published by Mr. Edward Arnold. The title of the new book is to be More Beasts (for Worse Children).

MESSRS. BLACKIE & SON are about to publish a book under the title of The Irish Difficulty: Shall and Will. The author, Monseigneur Molloy, has gathered together from a wide range of writers and speakers examples of the use of the future auxiliary, and he shows that the English usage itself is very far from being uniform.

MESSRS. SERVICE & PATON will publish this month, in their "Illustrated English Library," Scott's Rob Roy, illustrated by F. H. Townsend, and Thackeray's Vanity Fair, illustrated by Chris. Hammond. The same firm will shortly begin the issue of their new "Whitehall Library." The first two volumes will be Kingsley's Hypatia and Carlyle's Sartor Resartus.

THE APOLOGETICS OF ROMANCE.

EVERY age has its catchwords, as every age has its criticism. For there must be a popular version of the laws which are supposed to govern excellence in art; and such a version is constituted by the sentiments of each age, certain parts being selected for honour and the rest neglected. Hence, by looking at the glib phrases which fly to and fro in the critical game, we can construct a tolerable presentment of the age which nourishes such criticism. We heard much in old days of "consistency," "elegance," "taste"; then, in the age of the Romantics, of "nature" and "passion." Still later, and we had "unity in variety," "a gospel," "a criticism of life"; and now we are everywhere confronted with such pleasant phrases as "a presentment of reality," "real and not trait portraiture," "clearness and breadth of outlook," and a hundred more soul-satisfying words. In the criticism upon one writer—Stevenson—we have the extraordinary spectacle of critics attempting no sane analysis of his work, no inquiry into his own purpose or his artistic growth, but hurling a volley of such catchwords and leaving him with a flippant damnation.

The prevalence of such a habit seems to point to a generally existing feeling in the popular mind, which is worthy of all respect. On the one hand, seriousness in art is revered in an estimable manner as the one thing needful, the sine qua non of merit; and, on the other hand, pure narrative—or, as they love to call it, "objective romance"—is unsparingly attacked as a vicious and scarcely considerable form of creation. From such an attitude there seems no appeal. The miserable romancer cowers under the blow, and is scarcely consoled by many editions; he feels a charlatan, a flippant person, a sort of bagman in letters.

It is impossible to deny that such a feeling is most wholesome. Seriousness has always its value, however mistaken and however absurd; but when such catchwords are used as a final standard for art, it is reasonable to ask whether there be not some confusion in the practice. For what is the romancer's contention? It is probable that the most hardened, the most miserably superficial dabbler of them all, if he were put on his oath would subscribe to much the same articles of excellence. Indeed, the popular criticism of the romancer's position rests on a confusion between the end of art and one of its particular stages. He does not for one moment dream of insisting that a plain narration of incident is the sum total of art. His contention is that it is a necessary part, a useful stage in the artist's development—in fact, the indispensable beginning of true work. If he pleases, he may stay in such a pleasant province and go no further; but that is his own concern. At any rate, he does not claim that further progress is impossible; he only insists upon the value of the halting-place he has reached.

Let us look briefly at the question from another side. What is the ultimate test of all true art but its emotional effect, its appeal to rational and non-rational alike—in short, its moving human quality? This comes first; all else may be added unto it, but the additions are a later matter. Now, such being the actual working end if it is not the abstract aim of art, the education of the artist must show traces of such a purpose. The first postulate is that the writer must see life. He must have the love of action, swift, involved, and dramatic; he must have a perception of the moving quality of bald incident. It is true that such action is at first, to borrow a word from the schools, "non-significant"; it is explained by no theory of life, and is not necessarily linked to character; but the thing demanded is the plain fact of its existence. Life, considered as a mere vivid piece of emotional reality, is the first subject of art, and more, it is its most necessary part. The most profound theorising, the most subtle analysis of character, are of no avail unless we have the romantic foundation, the "moving accident" and the plain bare fundamentals of narrative.

But, one may object, this is practically to identify romance with realism, its supposed opposite. And in a sense it is; and we would ask with Meg Dods, "What for no?" For by romance in this sense we mean incident, action, viewed under one aspect—the cheerful, graceful, and heroic; by realism, the same material viewed under another aspect or series of aspects. The foundations of both are the same, but, as it happens, the latter as a stage in artistic progress is slightly later in time than the former. The centre of gravity in each is the recognition of the immense importance of the dramatic act. Romance in a purely æsthetic sense is an advance on realism as implying a process of selection on the ground of a theory of the beautiful; while realism is philosophically beyond romance, since its view of the world of action is coloured by some ethical or cosmic theory. Both are one-sided, but both have in them the root of the matter, and if viewed in the light of an ideal of art must seem almost identical in value. They represent that recognition of the fundamental fact in all art from which the artist may go on to perfect his education. On this he may build the subtlest and completest characterisation, the most profound teaching; but unless the bed-rock is present, characterisation and teaching are so much building upon the sand.

It is impossible to dogmatise on the psychology of the artist, but we can lay it down that such an account as we have given is at least possible and amply illustrated. Goethe is a case in point. He had his origin in romanticism; his first loves in literature were ballad poetry, Ossian, and Homer. There is a vast difference between Götz von Berlichingen and Faust, but the second is the fruit of the continuous development which began in the first. Let us take another instance on a very different plane, which seems equally applicable. Can we not detect such a development in the case of Stevenson's work, which beginning from naked romantic incident gradually deepened and broadened in the direction of adequate characterisation until we have the sad culmination in the magnificent torso of Weir of Hermiston? I make no preposterous claims for this writer, but he seems clearly to illustrate one type of progress which is wholesome and valuable; and to damn him for his essays in romance is merely to object to him because he once made a rational beginning.

In the other side I can find no hint of future capacity, as there is most assuredly no token of present performance. For note what it represents. An elderly young gentleman with some fragments of a philosophy, some boyish apophthegms and a great reverence for subtlety, essays the art of fiction. He piles reflection upon reflection, paradox upon paradox; he hammers away at his characters till he has made them thin and ghostly; above all, he pours out his soul in impassioned and prophetic exhortation. And the result is a hotch-potch not understood of man. He has no conception of the true beauty of narrative, of the moving power of incident, of the rush and generous excitement of story. Not unto him fall the triumphs of fiction. For mark what such a beginning means. At a time of life and a stage of development when raw narrative is his one possible sphere, he has attempted a shallow analysis and a glib repetition of half-understood theories. He has irremediably falsified his talent for true work. If he proceed in the same path he may eventually come to be a writer of popular novels with a purpose, or a suburban sage; if he reform and set gravely to serious work he may in time take rank as a thinker. But an artist—never.

JOHN BUCHAN.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE last number of the Revue Blanche publishes an extremely interesting inquiry into the value and influence of Taine's work. M. Maurice Barrès opens the list of replies:

"As an educator, and in communicating the entirety of knowledge as far as observation and experimentation had brought it in 1870, M. Taine seems to me incomparable. . . . Taine bore timidity in his blood. . . . With Goethe he might have signed this aphorism: 'Whoever would exercise a happy influence should never blame or be rendered uneasy by what goes wrong, but constantly and solely do good. Our business is not to crush, but to raise something in which humanity may find pure pleasure.' He detested disorder. . . . Taine was no professor of energy. He justified timidity, the coiling up of oneself, and, under the word acceptation, certain servilities."

This is not the most lucid manner of telling us that Taine was orderly and conservative. M. Barrès is much more fortunate in a few skilful and wonderfully vital pages of his dull novel Déracinés, wherein he paints a little scene, with a sketch of Taine as vivid and fresh and true as life.

The illustrious writer, interested in an article written about himself by an obscure young man, obtains his address, and visits him one morning in his poor lodging. We have his picture in a few lines:

"Grey-haired, medium-sized, rather slim, with eyes remarkable for their light, softness, and depth. The dome of the forehead fine; the temples well filled, though somewhat tightened at the approach of the brow; the arch of the eyebrow clear, mobile, and finely finished. From the depth of these soft caverns the glance travelled, at once kept back by knowledge and pressed forward by curiosity. His reserved and impatient regard particularly contributed to the dignity of the whole."

He invites the student to join him in his daily walk, and starts by asking him if he has means.

"I am glad," he says then. "I believe you are fitted for intellectual speculation. Now I regard as a grave danger for the individual and for society the contradiction that there too often is between a cerebral development which needs leisure and means, for high culture is very expensive, and a condition which obliges one to work."

We seize his interest in the youth, so fresh in his freedom, his cynicism, his intellectual activity and pleasing attitude of respect before the Master. But ideas, he maintains, do not suffice. "They are abstract; one only reaches them by effort. However beautiful they may be, they do not fill the heart." He urges him to the notion of sociability. "The quality of gallant man is not, as we are disposed to believe, a refinement of gentleman, an elegance the brand of the privileged; it implies a general morality!" Later he says: "To the end I hope to be able to work." M. Barrés writes: "This fine word, living and strong, work, uttered with simplicity, took upon those lips a grave sound that fascinated the young man. . . . 'To the end I hope to be able to work.' What a superb expression of the unity of a life entirely arranged that the man might dedicate himself to truth." Taine takes the student to look at his favourite plane-tree on the Esplanade of the Invalides, which he speaks of as the friend and counsellor of his declining years. "It speaks to me of all I have loved, Pyrenian rocks, Italian oaks, Venetian painters. It would have reconciled me to life if men did not add to the harsh necessities of their condition so much joy in wickedness." His subsequent biography of the plane is a full and eloquent page of Taine's own life's philosophy, with all the charm and vigour of his style.

But to return to the inquiry of the Roux Blanché. The late Monseigneur d'Hulst qualifies Taine's work as multiple. Of his history he says: "In spite of the exaggeration of colouring, he has rendered reality in immortal flashes." The man himself he describes as one of the grandest souls he ever knew, but his books as having the effect of a withering wind. M. André Lefèvre denies him any influence whatever, while recognising the intensity of colour of the style, the force a little heavy and pedantic. M. Picavet is less grudging of his praise.

"For some time back," he writes, "he is a classic in the precise meaning of the word. La Fontaine et ses Fables, the Essai sur Tite-Live, the admirable articles on Plato's youths and on Xenophon, on Racine and George Sand—in brief his Essais and Histoire de la Littérature Anglaise, will be read by professors and students as long as the authors he treats of. . . . He remains one of those men who characterise a century rather than a country, a true lay-saint by the constant dignity of his life and his ardour in work—a sincere and comprehensive thinker, who has ever sought truth in its multiple aspects—a great and conscientious artist, who has created a style rich and precise, coloured and expressive, supple and energetic."

The most important letter in the collection is M. Gabriel Monod's long testimony:

"By his general tendencies Taine belongs to the sensualist philosophy of the thirteenth century, to French and English positivism; rather to the English—to Mill, Bain, and Spencer—than to Auguste Comte. . . . By the precision and originality of his observation, by the rigour with which he groups facts and attaches them to other groups of facts of a more or less general character, and brings back the notion of fact to that of law, he is one of those who have contributed the most to show the fecundity of the positive method."

Here is a revealing stroke: "His criticism of art awards beauty to work inasmuch as it is characteristic, but adds that to be altogether beautiful it must be beneficent." The logician and the philosopher, M. Monod maintains, injured in him the critic and the historian. Another laments that his adaptation of Condillac and Hegel should have cast him into micrography, insisting that so massive a genius was meant for something higher than mere psycho-physiology. Curious fact brought to light: at the end, Taine writes that the Imitation is the key that opens nearly every lock. He is justly accused of having cast upon the world such regrettable generalities as: "Frenchman, man of court; German, man of laboratory; Latin, analyst; Catholic, man of discipline; Protestant, man of conscience." But all testify to the man's superlative honesty, sincerity, and nobility of nature. His influence, if less general than Renan's, seems from this correspondence to be more intense and deep.

Prof. Lombroso naïvely admits that he admires Taine because Taine was intelligent enough to understand him. He is described as "English and Anglomaniac"—English by his wealth of facts, his humour, his persevering and enterprising tenacity. "Race, surroundings, moment," it was his boast that with these three words he could unravel history, even literary history.

One letter refers to the hero of the Disciple as "a mediocre mind, a bad pupil who did not understand his master." The master in question was Taine, and this harsh novel, written by M. Bourget, his friend and disciple, gave unmeasured pain to Taine. M. de Vogüé's long letter closes the interesting series. He ends:

"I knew Taine so well and so closely, and he seemed to me so great, that I am a bad judge of his real size. . . . This mild infatuated lover of truth is one of the men I have most loved, and of all perhaps the one who most powerfully subjugated my respect."

H. L.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE next few months will be memorable for the enormous number of books that will be issued from the various publishing houses. Not only must the forthcoming season bear its own heavy load, but also the added weight of many volumes which have been withheld from publication owing to the distractions of Jubilee time. Next year the issue of new books will probably be more evenly distributed over the twelve months, as the success of Mr. Hall Caine's "Christian" proves, what many have thought, that the public are as eager to buy and read popular books during the summer months as at any other time. We give below a first list of announcements for the autumn publishing season:

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Belles Lettres.—"The Work of Charles Keene," with introduction and comments by Mr. Joseph Pennell, and a bibliography of etchings and books by Mr. W. H. Chesson, with numerous pictures illustrative of the artist's method; "The Printers of Basle in the XVth and XVIth Centuries: their Biographies, Printed Books and Devices," by Mr. Charles William Heckethorn (illustrated); "Letters of Dante Gabriel Rossetti to William Allingham, 1854-70," edited by Dr. G. Birkbeck Hill (illustrated); "The Story of Marie Antoinette," by Mrs. Anna L. Bicknell (illustrated); "An Artist's Letters from Japan," by Mr. La Farge (illustrated); "Saunterings in Florence," by Signor E. Grifi, a new artistic and practical handbook for English and American tourists, with illustrations and maps.

Biography.—"The Private Papers of William Wilberforce," collected and edited, with a preface, by Mrs. A. M. Wilberforce, with photographs and other illustrations; "The Life and Letters of Mr. Endymion Porter: sometime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to King Charles the First," by Mrs. Dorothea Townshend, with photographs and other illustrations; "Tourguénief and his French Circle," a series of letters to Flaubert, George Sand, Emile Zola, Guy de Maupassant, Gambetta, and others, edited by Mr. H. Halperine-Kaminsky, translated by Miss Ethel Arnold; "Lives of Great Italians," by Mr. Frank Hordridge (illustrated); "My Life in Two Hemispheres," by Sir Charles Gavan Duffy (illustrated); "The Love Affairs of some Famous Men," by the Rev. E. J. Hardy, M.A., the first two volumes of the new series, with photographic frontispieces, entitled "Builders of Greater Britain," viz. "Sir Walter Raleigh," by Major Martin A. S. Hume, and "Sir Thomas Maitland: the Mastery of the Mediterranean," by Mr. Walter Frewen Lord; and the first two volumes of a new series, with photographic frontispieces, entitled "Masters of Medicine," viz. "John Hunter," by Dr. Stephen Paget, with an introduction by Sir James Paget, and "William Harvey," by Mr. D'Arcy Power.

History.—"Communism in Middle Europe in the time of the Reformation," by Karl Kautsky, editor of "Die Neue Zeit," translated by Mr. J. L. and Mrs. E. J. Milliken; "Greece in the Nineteenth Century," by Mr. Lewis Sergeant, with illustrations and a map; "The Gladstone Colony," by J. F. Hogan, M.P., with an introductory letter by the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone; the first volume of a new "Library of Literary History," viz. "A Literary History of India," by Mr. R. W. Frazer, LL.B.; two new volumes of "The Story of the Nations" (illustrated), viz. "Modern France," by M.

André le Bon, and "The Franks," by Mr. Lewis Sergeant; and three new volumes of "The Children's Study," viz. "Old Tales from Greece," by Miss Alice Zimmermann, "France," by Miss Mary C. Rowsell, and "Rome," by Miss Mary Ford, all with frontispieces.

Essays.—"The Scholar and the State," by Bishop Potter, of New York; "America's Contribution to Civilisation," by President Eliot, of Harvard University; "Leisure Hours in the Study," by Dr. James MacKinnon; "Glimpses into Plant Life," by Mrs. Brightwen (illustrated); "Mother, Baby, and Nursery: a Manual for Mothers," by Dr. Geneviève Tucker (illustrated); "Australian Democracy," by Mr. H. de R. Walker; "The Day-Book of Wonders," by Mr. David Morgan Thomas.

Poetry.—"A Selection of the Poems of Mathilde Blind," edited, with an introduction, by Mr. Arthur Symonds; "Songs of Liberty, and Other Poems," by Mr. Robert Underwood Johnson; "Vox Humana," by John Mills, selected and edited by his wife, with a frontispiece portrait of the author; and a new volume of "The New Irish Library," entitled "Lays of the Red Branch," by Sir Samuel Ferguson, edited by Lady Ferguson.

Fiction.—"Hugh Wynne," by Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, with a frontispiece; "The Tormentor," by Mr. Benjamin Swift; "Prisoners of Conscience," by Mrs. Amelia E. Barr (illustrated); "The School for Saints: Part of the History of the Right Honourable Robert Orange, M.P." by John Oliver Hobbes, and a re-issue of "The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham," by the same author; "The Outlaws of the Marches," by Lord Ernest Hamilton (illustrated); "The People of Clopton," by Mr. George Bartram; "Wild Life in Southern Seas," by Mr. Louis Becke; "The Temple of Folly," by Mr. Paul Creswick; "Margaret Forster," by the late Mr. George Augustus Sala, with an introduction by Mrs. Sala; "Brer Mortal," by Ben Marlas (illustrated); "The Twilight Reef, and Other Stories," by Mr. H. C. MacIlwaine; "Those Dreadful Twins: Middy and Bosun," by Themselves (illustrated); "Liza of Lambeth," by Mr. W. Somerset Maugham; "Revelation of a Sprite," by Mr. A. M. Jackson; "Ramji: a Tragedy of the Indian Famine"; and "In Western Wilds," by Miss Teth Quin.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Poetry.—"Shakespeare's Poems," edited, with an introduction and notes, by George Wyndham, M.P.; "English Lyrics," selected and edited by W. E. Henley; "Nursery Rhymes," with many coloured pictures, by F. D. Bedford; "The Odyssey of Homer," a translation by J. G. Cordery.

Travel and Adventure.—"British Central Africa," by Sir H. H. Johnston, K.C.B.; "With the Greeks in Thessaly," by W. Kinraid Rose, Reuter's Correspondent; "The Massacre in Benin," by Captain Boisragon; "From Tonkin to India," by Prince Henri of Orleans, translated by Hamley Bent, M.A.; "Three Years in Savage Africa," by Lionel Decle, with an introduction by H. M. Stanley, M.P.; "With the Mounted Infantry in Mashonaland," by Lieut.-Colonel Alderson; "The Hill of the Graces; or, The Great Stone Temples of Tripoli," by H. S. Cowper, F.S.A.; "Adventure and Exploration in Africa," by Captain A. St. H. Gibbons, F.R.G.S.

History and Biography.—"A History of Egypt, from the Earliest Times to the Present Day," edited by W. M. Flinders Petrie, D.C.L.—vol. v., "Roman Egypt," by J. G. Milne; "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," by Edward Gibbon, a new edition, edited, with notes, appendices, and maps, by J. B. Bury, M.A., in 7 vols.; "The Letters of Victor Hugo," translated from the French by F. Clarke, M.A.; "A History of the Great Northern Railway, 1845-85," by C. H. Grinling; "A History of English Colonial Policy," by H. E. Egerton, M.A.; "A History of Anarchism," by E. V. Zenker, translated by H. de B. Gibbins, M.A.; "The Life of Ernest Renan," by Madame Darmesteter, with portrait; "A Life of Donne," by Augustus Jessop, D.D., with portrait; "Old Harrow Days," by C. H. Minchin.

Theology.—"A Primer of the Bible," by Prof. W. H. Bennett; "Light and Leaven: Historical and Social Sermons," by the Rev. H. Hensley Henson, M.A.; "Devotional Series": "The Confessions of St. Augustine," newly translated, with an introduction, by C. Bigg, D.D.; "The Holy Sacrifice," by F. Weston, M.A.

Naval and Military.—"A History of the Art of War," by C. W. Oman, M.A., vol. ii., "Medieval Warfare"; "A Short History of the Royal Navy, from Early Times to the Present Day," by David Hannay, vol. i.; "The Story of the British Army," by Lieut.-Colonel Cooper King.

General Literature.—"The Old English Home," by S. Baring-Gould; "Oxford and its Colleges," by J. Wells, M.A.; "Voce Academicæ," by C. Grant Robertson, M.A.; "A Primer of Wordsworth," by Laurie Magnus; "Neo-Malthusianism," by R. Ussher, M.A.; "Primæval Scenes," by H. N. Hutchinson, B.A., F.G.S.; "The Wallypug in London," by G. E. Farrow; "Railway Nationalisation," by Clement Edwards.

Sport.—"Sporting and Athletic Records," by H. Morgan Browne; "The Golfing Pilgrim," by Horace G. Hutchinson.

Educational.—"Evagrius," edited by Prof. Léon Parmentier of Liège and M. Bidez of Gand; "The Odes and Epodes of Horace," translated by A. D. Godley, M.A.; "Ornamental Design for Woven Fabrics," by C. Stephenson; "Essentials of Commercial Education," by E. E. Whitfield, M.A.; "Passages for Unseen Translation," by E. C. Marchant, M.A., and A. M. Cook, M.A.; "Exercises on Latin Accidence," by S. E. Winbolt; "Notes on Greek and Latin Syntax," by G. Buckland Green, M.A.; "A Digest of Deductive Logic," by Johnson Barker, B.A.; "Test Cards in Euclid and Algebra," by D. S. Calderwood; "How to Make a Dress," by J. A. E. Wood.

Fiction.—"Lochinvar," by S. R. Crockett; "The Lady's Walk," by Mrs. Oliphant; "Traits and Confidences," by the Hon. Emily Lawless; "Bladys," by S. Baring Gould; "The Pomp of the Lavilletes," by Gilbert Parker; "A Daughter of Strife," by Jane Helen Findlater; "Over the Hills," by Mary Findlater; "A Creel of Irish Tales," by Jane Barlow; "The Clash of Arms," by J. Bloundelle Burton; "A Passionate Pilgrim," by Percy White; "Secretary to Bayne, M.P.," by W. Pett Ridge; "The Builders," by J. S. Fletcher; "Josiah's Wife," by Norma Lorimer; "By Stroke of Sword," by Andrew Balfour; "The Singer of Marly," by Ida Hooper; "Kirkham's Find," by Mary Gaunt; "The Fall of the Sparrow," by M. C. Balfour; "Scottish Border Life," by James C. Dibdin.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON, LTD., will publish in a few days Mr. W. W. Jacob's first long story, "The Skipper's Wooing"; Mr. H. G. Wells's new romance, "The Invisible Man"; and Mr. Max Pemberton's new book of short stories, "Queen of the Jesters."

MR. MACQUEEN will shortly publish "A Girl's Awakening," by Mr. J. H. Crawford; "The Red Painted Box," by Marie Connor Leighton, and "Stories from the Land of the Round Table," by William Henry Frost.

DRAMA.

HAMLETS: OLD AND NEW.

THE autumn season opens with a great show of activity in the West End theatres, where, within a fortnight, nearly a dozen new productions see the light. It is worth while noting that of this extensive programme the dramatic portion far outweighs the musical, so that the frivolous note of the season is likely to be less pronounced than of recent years. Musical comedy of the stamp which has been so immensely successful at the Gaiety and Daly's Theatre is not represented at all. Mr. George Edwardes is left in undisturbed possession of his valuable monopoly. To some extent this may be due to the fact that it is no easy matter producing "Geishas" and "Circus Girls," but there is also a prevalent belief, perhaps not unfounded, that this genre has seen its heyday, and that the public would be glad of a change. What sort of change? In the solution of such a problem lies much of the great art of management—a problem complicated by the fact that managers have to produce not always what they would like, but what they can get. New composers and librettists of ability are few, and unless they possess the rare gift of originality—one hesitates in this connexion to use the word genius—they necessarily travel in familiar grooves. So far there has been nothing offered in the way of musical novelty. "The Wizard of the Nile," given at the Shaftesbury Theatre by Messrs. H. B. Smith and Victor Herbert, is a comic opera of the conventional type. It is called Egyptian, as it might be called Japanese or Babylonian, for the purpose of giving the costumier his chance; but the plot is more or less incomprehensible, and serves mainly as a vehicle for dancing and "variety business." It will be interesting to see what degree of success attends one or two revivals of the Offenbach period which are in contemplation.

LITERARY interest centres in the new version of "Hamlet" proposed to be given at the Lyceum by Mr. Forbes Robertson. Of Hamlets there is no end. As soon as one actor begins to rise in his profession he deems it incumbent upon him to play the melancholy Dane, and the experiment has been repeated so often of late years that one wonders how much inherent interest there remains in the tragedy for the average playgoer, to whom not only the plot and the characters, but even the literary beauties of the text, are familiar. It is certainly no longer safe to rely upon the merits of the play itself. Sir Henry Irving, who was the first to rescue Shakespeare from the stigma of "spelling ruin," makes a point of shoring up the Shakespearean drama with a variety of novel accessories—new music, new scenic and mechanical effects, and a new acting version—in all of which per se the public may be expected to be interested in addition to the acting; and his example in this respect has been extensively followed. The last of the conventional Hamlets, as far as London is concerned, was that of Edwin Booth. Sturdy, dark, and thick-set, Booth was an actor of the Kean school, with a superabundance of gesture, an adroit play of feature, including much raising, lowering, and knitting of the eyebrows, a stage stride which invariably brought him into "the focus," and the art of "rumbling out soliloquies in a deep chest note." When Edwin Booth came to London he was already a mature actor, and looked his years, but there was then no question raised as to Hamlet's age. A Hamlet of fifty in appearance was not thought to be anything unusual, and it was always an actress of great experience and undeniable age who was cast for the part of the Queen.

To the question of the relative ages of the chief dramatis personæ Sir Henry Irving paid no great heed, though he himself made up to look no more than thirty. It was his singularly picturesque, poetic, intellectual reading that won the applause of the Lyceum public. The great innovator in the production of "Hamlet" was Mr. Wilson Barrett, who, about fourteen years ago, gave us a boy Prince, arguing that the hero must be barely out of his teens if his mother was to be a sufficiently attractive woman to inspire the passion of the usurping Claudius. A comparatively youthful Queen, apparently in the late thirties, was an essential feature of this conception; while Claudius was represented as a red-haired sensualist. Nor was this all. The mimic play in "Hamlet" has always been somewhat of a difficulty to stage managers. Despite the nipping and the eager air that we hear of at Elsinore, Mr. Wilson Barrett arranged the play-scene al fresco—namely, in the royal orchard—contending that if the late King was in the habit of taking his afternoon nap there the place was well suited for an open-air performance. This allowed of a more picturesque set than is usually obtained indoors, though the cardinal difficulty of seating the royal and other spectators in such a manner as to be seen by the house at the same time as the players remained. For the rest, Mr. Wilson Barrett indulged in the usual new readings, of which the most striking, perhaps, was a "Siege of Troubles." New readings are the modern manager's safest card. Albeit no permanent emendation of the text ever comes of them: they are as old as Edwin Booth, who adopted the phrase "ennobled queen" instead of "mobled queen." "Ennobled" was at least an intelligible word, which "mobled" is not; but in conjunction with "queen" it seemed tautological and un-Shakspearean. M. Mounet-Sully's "Hamlet," given in conjunction with a French play season in London, was altogether too grotesque to come into line with English conceptions of the character: it looked like a caricature, and, unlike all English "Hamlets," was fairly mad. In the French mise-en-scène nothing novel was attempted. The latest actor to exercise his ingenuity upon "Hamlet" was Mr. Tree, who, as usual, edited the text afresh, and introduced new readings, the best of which, namely, "The dog will have his bay," seems a genuine improvement. In pursuit of novelty, he had the happy thought of tampering with Hamlet's "inky cloak," which to his predecessors from time immemorial had been sacred: he gave it a red lining. Another of his innovations was to introduce browsing sheep into the scene of Ophelia's funeral to the accompaniment of a tinkling of sheep bells.

WHAT remains, then, for Mr. Forbes Robertson to attempt in the way of novelty? It will be seen that to break new ground in "Hamlet" is no easy task. However, the young actor, who has been confiding his intentions to an interviewer, does his best. By a stroke of genius he restores to the text the character of Fortinbras which all other modern actors, I believe, with remarkable unanimity, have cut out, even at the cost of making certain allusions in the text obscure. This, of course, has necessitated excisions in other directions, a circumstance which in itself is calculated to arouse curiosity, so that the latest exponent of "Hamlet" may be congratulated in this instance upon killing two birds with one stone. As "Hamlet," if fully acted under modern conditions, would play for eight hours, it is never more than a fragment of the tragedy that we see on the stage. Mr. Forbes Robertson proposes, the Fortinbras episode notwithstanding, to bring it within the compass of three hours, which itself is a feat of some merit. He has also evolved a new feature of importance in the "business" that occurs between Hamlet and Ophelia in the "Get you to a nunnery" scene. Here it has been the custom for Hamlet to catch sight of the King and Polonius hiding behind the curtain. Mr. Forbes Robertson does not propose to see them. He thinks it a sudden impulse for Hamlet to ask "Where's your father"; and he wants to read the truth in Ophelia's face. Finally, his idea as to age is a Hamlet of five-and-twenty, with a king and queen "young enough to be under the influence of passion." So that a few odds and ends of novelty have, after all, been picked up in a well-gleaned field. One shudders, however, to think of the straits to which the next "Hamlet" will be driven.

J. F. N.

SCIENCE.

IN the new issue of the Geographical Journal there is an interesting discussion as to the date at which the name "America" first came into use. The designation itself was proposed by Martin Waldseemüller (or "Hylacomylus") in his Cosmographie Introductio, published at St. Dié in 1507: but the date at which it made its appearance in maps has always been uncertain. Mr. Thatcher, in his recently published work on the discovery of America, gives 1520 as the date of the first map bearing the name, that being one in a Venetian edition of the Polyhistor; Prof. Elter, of Bonn, however, has just discovered a manuscript map, bearing the name of Henricus Glareanus, and the date 1510, in which the legend "Terra America" appears on the southern portion of the New World. This map is bound into a copy of the 1482 (Ulm) edition of Ptolemy in the library of Bonn University.

PROF. ELTER has published a Latin treatise on his discovery, and on the early use of the word America, together with some interesting particulars as to Glareanus. This geographer was born in 1488, graduated at Cologne, became "poet laureate" under Maximilian in 1512, and in 1529 took a professorship at Friburg. He has left what are probably the earliest circumpolar maps in existence, and these, together with his notes, are useful as an assistance in reconstructing the lost map of Waldseemüller, which probably contained a still earlier mention of America. It is interesting to note that at this date South America alone bore the name, the northern continent being marked as separated by a strait, and as forming part of Asia. The West Indies are represented by colour as a part of Europe.

THE safe return of Mr. Frederick Jackson and the other members of the Harnsworth Expedition is one more proof that Arctic exploration need not necessarily be attended with danger or even with hardship. The party were away for three years, they explored the greater part of the coast of Franz Josef Land, and although they abandoned all ideas of reaching the pole, they were pretty busily engaged in latitudes which have choked off many previous expeditions. It would be rash to say much, on the faith of a Reuter interview, as to the value of the work accomplished by the expedition. Roughly speaking, it appears to have consisted in a revision of the somewhat dubious maps of the district. "Gillis Land" vanishes from existence, at any rate in the longitude assigned to it. King Oscar Land and Petermann's Land have been pretty well blown upon by Nansen, and Jackson's party also failed to find them. The most important point the explorers seem to have settled is the non-existence of land to the north of Franz Josef Land. That country itself appears to consist of a number of islands, rather than of a flat expanse with projecting peaks, and the old theory of its continuation towards the pole seems to have no foundation. On the contrary, Mr. Jackson reports an open sea to the northward, to which he gave the name of Queen Victoria.

It is depressing, but perhaps not unexpected, news that every revival of trade means an increase in the statistics of lunacy. The number of lunatics under the charge of the Metropolitan Asylums Board, and in other licensed and public institutions belonging to London, now amounts to about 20,000, the increase since 1889 being more than proportional to the increase either of population or of pauperism. On the other hand, it has been suggested that the tendency to madness is really not so great now as formerly, the comforts of the asylums having induced many people to certify and to send lunatics there who would otherwise have kept them at home. However the case may be, it is a fact that nearly a fifth of all the lunacy of England is claimed by London, the cost of maintenance thrown upon the community being upwards of £200,000 per annum. Of all the districts of London, Hampstead has the smallest percentage of lunatics, while the Strand has the heaviest, the proportion there being actually greater than one in a hundred. The connexion between trade and lunacy does not seem apparent at first. Over-pressure and increased competition doubtless have something to do with it; but the real connecting link appears to be liquor, which was responsible for 22 per cent. of last year's admissions, and which propagates its effects on the mental stability of even the second and third generations.

H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SHAKESPEARE'S SONNETS.

Highbury: Aug. 21.

While your correspondents are "pegging" away at Mistress Fitton, I would commend to their attention the rival claims of Lady Penelope Devereux. The special charge made against some lady, being defined in Sonnet clii., thus:

"In act thy bed-vows broke."

What this means is made clear by the fact that this lady, better known as Lady Rich or "Pecunia," had a family by Lord Mountjoy while still under coverture. Perhaps the sub-joined sketch pedigree will best illustrate the point by showing how she was connected with the poet and his friend, Lord Southampton:

It will be seen that the Ardens, of which family came the poet's mother, were related to the Devereux, while Lady Southampton was first cousin to the delinquent; all this gives point to the censure conveyed by the Sonnet in question, and, as I submit, justifies the poet's intervention; while it clearly involves the subject-matter in the personal relations of his friend, and, as I maintain, without any moral culpability on his part.

The Ardens had a lengthy pedigree involving a much earlier connexion with the Vernon family, and bringing out many fanciful illustrations of the "Sonnets."

A. HALL.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Christian." "The real strength of Mr. Caine's work," writes the Chronicle, "lies in Gloria Quayle. In all the chequered experience of this hospital-nurse, music-hall singer, and popular actress, she remains a winning, single-hearted creature, infinitely persuasive alike in her buoyant temperament and her moral perception." The story "suffers not a little from unreality, though much of it is written with a power which places it above anything its author has hitherto accomplished." "The note of the theatrical [as a substitute for the dramatic]," says the Daily News, "... is seldom for long unheard in his work, ... but in The Christian Mr. Hall Caine has surpassed all his previous failures in this direction. ... Spurious sentiment, sham satire, 'faked' pathos, cheap morality, caricatured Christianity meet us in every page." Storm (the Christian) is "a gaseous humbug and a self-righteous poseur of the most offensive type. ... All the serious characters play systematically to the gallery, but none of them with so much ardour as the Rev. John Storm. ... It is not the flagrant absurdities of this absurd story that offend, so much as its catchpenny calumnies of classes and institutions which have hitherto been fortunate enough to escape malignant caricature." The effectiveness of the book, the Spectator observes, "has been considerably discounted by the long interview with the author which appeared on the eve of its publication in one of the daily papers." In this, "to put it crudely, Mr. Hall Caine avowed that he was writing of matters of which he knew very little at first hand, and internal evidence corroborates this candid but indiscreet avowal." In a vision, "Glory at Greeba Castle," the Saturday presents the popular author upon the terrace which was haunted by fallen forms. "One there was, lately a dainty little thing, a mighty fashionable atom; ... and the balmy zephyrs of publicity might blow and blow ... they would never awaken again that little brave coy and illiterate being. ... And other forms were there. But all were dead. And Hall Caine was the only Novelist in the World. Proudly modest, shyly confident, with an immense envelope of press-cuttings thrust into his manly bosom, he smiled, and then he sighed, for Empire means Loneliness. ... He thought of the days when he was only a little Manx boy, guddling for sticklebacks in the pond. And suddenly he fancied he was guddling still, guddling for praise, guddling for the worthless plaudits of the millions."

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

	1896.
BEN JONSON ... ..	November	14
JOHN KEATS ... ..	"	21
SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..	"	28
TOM HOOD ... ..	December	5
THOMAS GRAY ... ..	"	12
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..	"	19
SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..	"	26
	1897.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..	January	2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..	"	9
LEIGH HUNT ... ..	"	16
LORD MACAULAY ... ..	"	23
ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..	"	30
S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..	February	6
CHARLES LAMB ... ..	"	13
MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..	"	20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..	"	27
SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..	March	6
EDMUND WALLER ... ..	"	13
WILKIE COLLINS ... ..	"	20
JOHN MILTON ... ..	"	27
WILLIAM COWPER ... ..	April	3
CHARLES DARWIN ... ..	"	10
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..	"	17
HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW ... ..	"	24
ANDREW MARVELL ... ..	May	1
ROBERT BROWNING ... ..	"	8
THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..	"	15
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..	"	22
CHARLES DICKENS ... ..	"	29
JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..	June	5
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY ... ..	"	12
WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..	"	19
SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..	"	26
ALEXANDER POPE ... ..	July	3
DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..	"	10
FRANCIS BACON ... ..	"	17

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S ' S
GRATEFUL—COMFORTING
C O C O A

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S

NEW PUBLICATIONS AND TEXT-BOOKS FOR THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, THE OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATIONS, LONDON UNIVERSITY, AND COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATIONS.

LATIN.

- A LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 3s. 6d.
MACMILLAN'S LATIN COURSE. By A. M. COOK, M.A., and W. E. P. PANTIN, M.A., Assistant Masters in St. Paul's School. FIRST PART, 3s. 6d. SECOND PART, 4s. 6d.
MACMILLAN'S SHORTER LATIN COURSE. Being an Abridgement of Macmillan's Latin Course. FIRST PART, 1s. 6d.; KEY, 4s. 6d. net. SECOND PART, 2s.; KEY, 4s. 6d. net.
CÆSAR—THE INVASION OF BRITAIN. Selections from Books IV. and V., adapted for Beginners. With Exercises. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
GALLIC WAR. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Books II. and III. By Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, LL.D. 1s. 6d.—Book IV. By C. BAYNE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
CIVIL WAR. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By M. MONTGOMERY, M.A. 1s. 6d.
CIERO—PRO MURENA. Edited by J. H. FREER, M.A. 2s. 6d.
DE SENECA. With Notes and Vocabulary. By E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A. 1s. 6d.
EUTROPIUS. Books I. and II. With Notes and Vocabulary. By W. WELCH, M.A., and C. G. DUFFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
HORACE—ODES. Books I., III., and IV. With Notes and Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each. Edited without Vocabulary. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. each.
EPISTLES. Edited by A. S. WILKINS, Litt.D. 5s.
JUVENAL—THIRTEEN SATIRES. Edited by E. G. HARDY, M.A. 5s.
LIVY—Books II. and III. Edited by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 3s. 6d.
Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d. Book XXII. Adapted from Mr. Capes' Edition. With Notes and Vocabulary. By J. E. MELLISH, M.A. 1s. 6d.
PHEDRUS—FABLES. With Notes and Vocabulary. By the Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 1s. 6d.
PLAUTUS—CAPTIVI. Edited by A. B. S. HALLIDAY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
TACITUS—HISTORIES. Books I. and II. Edited by A. D. GODLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
HISTORIES III.—V. Edited by A. D. GODLEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
TERENCE—PHORMIO. Edited by Rev. JOHN BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
VIRGIL—ÆNEID. Books I.—VI. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 6s.
ÆNEID. With Notes and Vocabulary. Book I. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book I. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book II. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book IV. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book V. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book IX. By Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book X. By S. G. OWEN, M.A. 1s. 6d.

GREEK.

- MACMILLAN'S GREEK COURSE. Edited by the Rev. W. GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D., Head Master of Westminster.
FIRST GREEK GRAMMAR. By the Rev. W. GUNION RUTHERFORD, M.A., LL.D. ACCIDENCE. 2s.—SYNTAX. 2s.—Together, 3s. 6d.
EASY EXERCISES IN GREEK ACCIDENCE. By H. G. UNDERHILL, M.A. 2s.
SECOND GREEK EXERCISE BOOK. By the Rev. W. A. HEARD, M.A. 2s. 6d.
EASY EXERCISES ON THE FIRST GREEK SYNTAX. By the Rev. G. H. NALL, M.A. 2s. 6d.
ÆSCHYLUS—SEPTIM CONTRA THEBAS. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D., and Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 2s. 6d.
PERSE. Edited by A. O. PRICKARD, M.A. 2s. 6d.
EURIPIDES—ALCESTIS. Edited by M. L. EARLE, Ph.D. 3s. 6d.
ALCESTIS. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 1s. 6d.
HECUBA. With Notes and Vocabulary. By the Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.
HIPPOLYTUS. Edited by Rev. J. P. MAREFAY, D.D., and J. B. BURY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
MEDEA. Edited by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
HERODOTUS. Book III. Edited by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
PLATO—EUTHYPHERO, APOLOGY, CRITO, and PHEDRO. Translated by F. J. CURCHIE, 2s. 6d. net.
LAGES. Edited by M. T. TATAM, M.A. 2s. 6d.
PHEDRO. By R. D. ARCHER-HIND, M.A. 3s. 6d.
THUCYDIDES. Book II. Edited by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. 3s. 6d.
XENOPHON—ANABASIS. Book I. With Notes and Vocabulary. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d. With Exercises. By E. A. WELLS, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book II. By Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.—Book IV. By Rev. E. D. BROWN, M.A. 1s. 6d.
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. LUKE. Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.
THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO ST. MATTHEW. The Greek Text. With Introduction and Notes. By Rev. A. SLOAN, 2s. 6d.
THE ACTS OF THE APOSTLES. The Greek Text. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 2s. 6d.
The Authorised Version. With Notes. By T. E. PAGE, M.A. 2s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

- BACON—ESSAYS. With Introduction and Notes. By F. G. SELBY, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
DRYDEN—SELECT SATIRES. With Introduction and Notes, by J. CHEYTON COLLINS, M.A. 1s. 6d.
JOHNSON—LIVES OF THE POETS. The Six Chief Lives (Milton, Dryden, Swift, Addison, Pope, Gray). Edited by MATTHEW ARNOLD. 4s. 6d.
LAMB—THE ESSAYS OF ELIA. First Series. With Introduction and Notes. By N. L. HALLWARD, M.A., and S. C. HILL, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
MILTON. With Introduction and Notes. COMUS. By W. BELL, M.A. 1s. 3d.
L'ALLEGRO IL PENSEROSO, LYCIDAS, ARCADES, SONNETS. By W. B. BELL, M.A. 1s. 3d.
PARADISE LOST. Books I. and II. With Introduction and Notes. By M. MACMILLAN, B.A. 1s. 6d.
ROMAN AGRICULTURE. With Introduction and Notes. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 2s.
POPE—ESSAY ON MAN. Epistles I.—IV. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by Prof. R. E. MORRIS. 1s. 6d.
SCOTT—THE LADY OF THE LAKE. With Introduction and Notes. By G. H. STUART, M.A. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s. Canto I. 6d.
MÆLION. With Introduction and Notes. By MICHAEL MACMILLAN, B.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d.
SHAKESPEARE. With Introduction and Notes. HAMLET. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s. JULIUS CÆSAR. 1s. 6d. KING JOHN. 1s. 6d. KING LEAR. 1s. 6d. THE MERCHANT OF VENICE. 1s. 6d. THE TEMPEST. 1s. 6d. CORIOLANUS. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.
SPENSER. With Introduction and Notes. THE FAIRIE QUEENE. Book I. By H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. 3s.; sewed, 2s. 6d. THE SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR. By C. H. HERFORD, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.
CIVIL SERVICE ESSAY WRITER. By T. EVAN JACOB. 1s.
COMPANION TO CIVIL SERVICE ESSAY WRITER. 1s. 6d.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

- MOLIERE—LES PRÉCIEUSES RIDICULES. Edited by G. E. FARNWORTH. 1s.
LAVARE. With Notes by L. M. MORIARTY, B.A. 1s.
MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE FRENCH COURSE. By G. E. FARNWORTH. FIRST YEAR, 1s. Supplementary Exercises to First Year, 1s. SECOND YEAR, 2s. THIRD YEAR, 2s. 6d.—KEYS, 4s. 6d. net each.
MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE FRENCH READERS. By the Same. FIRST YEAR, 2s. 6d. SECOND YEAR, 2s. 6d.
MACMILLAN'S FRENCH COMPOSITION. By the Same. Part I., 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d. net. Part II., 4s.—KEY, 5s. net.
MACMILLAN'S SELECTION OF FRENCH IDIOMS. Compiled by Madame P. PLAN. With a Preface by F. F. ROGET. 3s. 6d.
A FRENCH GRAMMAR FOR SCHOOLS. By G. E. FARNWORTH. 2s. 6d.
A COMPENDIOUS DICTIONARY OF THE FRENCH LANGUAGE. By Prof. ALFRED ELWALL and GUSTAVE MASON. 3s. 6d.
THE STUDY OF FRENCH ACCORDING TO THE BEST AND NEWEST SYSTEM. By Professor ALFRED E. EUGENE and H. E. DUBIAUX. 3s. 6d. Also in 8 Parts, 6d. each.
HAUFF—DIE KARAVANE. Edited by H. HAGES, Ph.D. 3s.
LESSING—MINNA VON BARNHEIM. Edited by Rev. O. MEER. 2s. 6d.
SCHILLER—MARIA STUART. Edited by C. SHELTON, D.Litt. 2s. 6d.
WILHELM TELL. Edited by G. E. FARNWORTH. 2s. 6d.
WALLENSTEIN, DAS LAGER. Edited by H. B. COTTERILL, M.A. 2s.
A GERMAN PRIMER. By OTTO STEINWART. 3s. 6d.
MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE GERMAN COURSE. By G. E. FARNWORTH. FIRST YEAR, 1s. 6d. SECOND YEAR, 2s. 6d.—KEYS, 4s. 6d. net each.
MACMILLAN'S PROGRESSIVE GERMAN READERS. By the Same. FIRST YEAR, 2s. 6d. SECOND YEAR, 2s. 6d.
MACMILLAN'S GERMAN COMPOSITION. By the Same. Part I., 2s. 6d.—KEY, 4s. 6d. net.
A COMPENDIOUS GERMAN AND ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Prof. WHITNEY and A. H. EBERHART. 5s.—GERMAN-ENGLISH. 3s. 6d.
COMMERCIAL GERMAN. By F. C. SMITH. 3s. 6d.

GEOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

- MAN AND HIS MARKETS. A Course in Geography. By L. W. LYDE. 2s.
COMMERCIAL GEOGRAPHY. By E. C. K. GORRIN, M.A. 3s.
A SHORT GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH ISLANDS. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, LL.D., and A. S. GREEN. With Maps. 3s. 6d.
GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH ISLES. By Sir A. GEIKIE. 1s.
THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOL ATLAS. By J. BARTHOLOMEW. 1s.
CLASS-BOOK OF GEOGRAPHY. By C. B. CLARKE. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.
CLASS-BOOK OF GENERAL GEOGRAPHY. By H. R. MILL. 3s. 6d.
GEOGRAPHY OF EUROPE. By J. SIMS, M.A. Illustrated. 2s.
ELEMENTARY GEOGRAPHY OF THE BRITISH COLONIES. By GEORGE M. DAWSON, LL.D., and A. SUTHERLAND, M.A. 2s.
SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE. By JOHN RICHARD GREEN, M.A., LL.D. With Coloured Maps. Genealogical Tables and Chronological Annals. 2s. 6d.
Also the Same in Four Parts. With Analysis. 3s. each. Part I. 607-1365. Part II. 1365-1540. Part III. 1540-1688. Part IV. 1688-1815.
A HISTORY OF ENGLAND FOR BEGINNERS. By A. B. BUCKLEY. 3s.
HISTORY OF ENGLAND. By EDITH THOMPSON. 2s. 6d.
EDWARD I. By Prof. T. F. TOUT, M.A. 3s. 6d.
A PRIMER OF THE HISTORY OF GREECE. By C. A. FYFE, M.A. 1s.
A PRIMER OF THE HISTORY OF ROME. By Bishop CAMERON, D.D. 1s.
A HISTORY OF ROME FOR BEGINNERS. By E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A. 2s. 6d. (Immediately.)
A HISTORY OF ROME TO THE BATTLE OF ACTIUM. By E. S. SHUCKENBURY, M.A. 3s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE.

- ARITHMETIC FOR SCHOOLS. By Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A. New Edition, Revised and Enlarged. 4s. 6d. KEY, 10s. 6d.
ARITHMETIC IN THEORY AND PRACTICE. By J. BROOKSMITH, M.A., 4s. 6d. KEY, 10s. 6d.
A TEXT-BOOK OF EUCLID'S ELEMENTS. By H. S. HALL, M.A., and F. H. STEVENS, M.A. Masters of the Military School, Clifton College. BOOKS I.—VI. and XI., 4s. 6d.; BOOK I., 1s.; BOOKS I. and II., 1s. 6d.; BOOKS I.—III., 2s. 6d.; BOOKS I.—IV., 3s.; BOOKS II. and III., 2s.; BOOKS III. and IV., 2s.; BOOKS III.—VI., 3s.; BOOKS V. and VI., 2s. 6d.; BOOK XI., 1s.; KEY to I.—VI. and XI., 2s. 6d.; KEY to I.—IV., 4s. 6d.; KEY to V. and VI., 2s. 6d.
THE ELEMENTS OF EUCLID. By I. TODDINGTON, F.R.S. 3s. 6d. BOOKS I. and II., 1s. 6d.—KEY, 6s. 6d.
ALGEBRA FOR BEGINNERS. By I. TODDINGTON. New Edition, thoroughly revised by S. L. LONEY, M.A. 3s. 6d. With Answers, 4s. 6d. (KEY in preparation.)
ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA. By CHARLES SMITH, M.A., Master of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. Second Edition, Revised. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
ALGEBRAIC FACTORS. By J. ABOTT JARMAN. 2s.; with Answers, 2s. 6d.
By H. S. HALL, M.A., and S. R. KNIGHT, B.A., M.B.
ALGEBRA FOR BEGINNERS. 2s.; with Answers, 2s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY ALGEBRA FOR SCHOOLS. Seventh Edition (1897), 3s. 6d.; with Answers, 4s. 6d. Answers, 1s.—KEY, 5s. 6d.
ALGEBRAICAL EXERCISES AND EXAMINATION PAPERS. To accompany Elementary Algebra. Revised. 2s. 6d.
HIGHER ALGEBRA. Fourth Edition. 7s. 6d.—KEY, 10s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
By the Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A.
TRIGONOMETRY FOR BEGINNERS, as far as the Solution of Triangles. Third Edition. 2s. 6d.—KEY, 5s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY TRIGONOMETRY. Sixth Edition. 4s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
HIGHER TRIGONOMETRY. Fifth Edition. 4s. 6d. Both Parts complete in One Vol., 7s. 6d.
MECHANICS FOR BEGINNERS. Part I.—MECHANICS OF SOLIDS. 2s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY STATICS. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.—KEY, 8s. 6d.
ELEMENTARY DYNAMICS AND STATICS. 6s. 6d.
MECHANICS FOR BEGINNERS. By W. GALLATLY, M.A. 2s. 6d.
AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY OF CHEMISTRY (INORGANIC CHEMISTRY). By Prof. I. RANKIN. 6s. 6d.
DIVINITY.
A CLASS-BOOK OF THE CATECHISM OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAN, D.D. 1s. 6d.
A FIRST CLASS-BOOK OF THE CATECHISM OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAN, D.D. 6d.
AN ELEMENTARY INTRODUCTION TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER. By Rev. F. PROCTOR and Rev. G. F. MACLEAN, D.D. 2s. 6d.
AN INTRODUCTION TO THE CREEDS. By Rev. G. F. MACLEAN, D.D. 3s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 48, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1324.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT OF LITERATURE, No. 367, for SEPTEMBER, just published, contains a good collection of BOOKS FOR THE LIBRARY AND GENERAL READER, including numerous important sets.—Post free from H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C., and 37, Piccadilly, W.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

H. GREVEL & CO., PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS, 33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating subjects required.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS and EXPORTERS, 3, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
Catalogues: THACKER, SPIKE & Co. MSS. considered for Publication. (Established 1819)

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favorable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.
NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 68121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

RARE Old (Black) OAK FURNITURE, originally came out of the Yorkshire Dales, FOR SALE—viz., Grandfather's Clock (brass face); Dover Chest; Corner Cupboard; Side Table; Pipe Rack; and Tam-o'-Shanter Table—accept 15 Guineas the lot. Bargain. Seen here, or Sketches sent.—"LADY," Oakdene, Richmond, Yorkshire.

A LINGUIST, connected with several Learned Societies abroad, seeks SECRETARIAL WORK. Translations; Research Notes; Foreign Correspondence; Articles supplied to Magazines, &c.—Write E. GENLIS, 43, Southampton Row, London, W.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 8, Fumival Street, London, E.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
[Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.]

WANTED.—COLOURED MALTON'S, or any old COLOURED VIEWS of DUBLIN.—VICKERS, Bagginistown Place, Dublin.

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 48, Chancery Lane, London.

EDUCATIONAL.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY. THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The 34th SESSION of the DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS will begin on OCTOBER 5, and the 67th SESSION of the SCHOOL of MEDICINE on OCTOBER 1, 1897.
The Classes prepare for the following professions:—Chemistry, Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Sanitary Engineering, Coal Mining, Textile Industries, Dyeing, Leather Manufacture, Agriculture, School Teaching, Medicine, and Surgery.
University Degrees are also conferred in the Faculties of Arts, Science, Medicine, and Surgery.
Lyddon Hall has been established for Students' Residence.
Prospectus of any of the above may be had from the REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.
The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES, by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6th, at 1 p.m.
These Lectures are suited to the requirements of Students preparing for the Examinations of the London University, as well as to those of Students wishing to study Zoology for its own sake. Notice of other Courses of Lectures, to be delivered during the Session, will be given later.
J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

UNIVERSITY of DURHAM.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR WOMEN, OCTOBER, 1897.
£70 in SCHOLARSHIPS will be OFFERED for COMPETITION by WOMEN STUDENTS who commence Residence at Durham in October, 1897. The EXAMINATION begins on OCTOBER 13th. Notice of intention to Reside should be sent, not later than September 30th, to Professor SAMSON, The Castle, Durham, from whom all information as to cost of Residence, &c., may also be obtained.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

PRINCIPAL—REV. H. P. GURNEY, M.A., D.C.L.
The College forms part of the University of Durham, and the University Degrees in Science and Letters are open to Students of both sexes.
In addition to the Departments of Mathematics and Natural Science, complete Courses are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, Mining, Literature, History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.
Residential Hostels for Men and for Women Students are attached to the College.
The 27th SESSION begins SEPTEMBER 27th, 1897.
Full particulars of the University Curricula in Science and Letters will be found in the CALENDAR (price 1s. 4d.). Prospectuses on application to the SECRETARY.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S HOSPITAL and COLLEGE.

PRELIMINARY SCIENTIFIC CLASS.
SYSTEMATIC COURSES of LECTURES and LABORATORY WORK in the subjects of the Preliminary Scientific and Intermediate B.Sc. Examinations of the University of London will commence on OCTOBER 1st, and continue till July, 1898.
Fees for the Whole Course, £21, or £18 18s. to Students of the Hospital; or Single Subjects may be taken.
There is a special Class for the JANUARY Examination.
For further particulars apply to the WARDEN of the College, St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London, E.C.
A Handbook forwarded on application.

SCHOOL for GIRLS, Coombe Hill House, East Grinstead, Sussex.

PRINCIPAL—MISS CLARK.
Moral Training is substituted for Religious Teaching, and an all-round development of the individual for mere lesson-learning.
Physical Training and Hand-work form a definite part of the School Course.
The AUTUMN TERM begins SEPTEMBER 15th.

SUPERIOR SCHOOLS for GIRLS.—Miss LOUISA BROUGH can RECOMMEND several Good Schools from personal knowledge. England and Continent.—CENTRAL REGISTRY for TEACHERS, 25, Craven Street, Charing Cross.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PUTS, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

TO AUTHORS and Others.—MSS COPIED (Type-written), 9d. per 1,000 words.—Address Mr. J. G. ROGERS, 9, Buxton Road, Chingford.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.

(THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 60, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.

ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERMANN STAENGL, of Munich.
The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.
PROCES BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.
Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Process as in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS. Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST
ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.	COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	N.B. —Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.
Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT
Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)
Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.
48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.
HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

Th BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS :

The objections to them, and how they have been met.

Cæteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a repute beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

	s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE* ... ..	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE ... ..	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE ... ..	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London :

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

A SELECTION FROM HODDER & STOUGHTON'S AUTUMN LIST.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.
Editor of "The Expositor's Bible," "The Expositor," &c.
Complete in 4 vols. To be published by Subscription.
The First Volume, ready October 1st, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of the GOSPELS of ST. MATTHEW, ST. MARK, and ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D., and the GOSPEL of ST. JOHN by the Rev. Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D.

A full Prospectus of this important Work is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to the Publishers.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER of the WORLD.

By the Rev. Prof. A. B. BRUCE, D.D.
The Gifford Lectures for 1897.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

THE CLERICAL LIFE.

A Series of Letters to Ministers.

By JOHN WATSON, D.D., Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D., Prof. JAMES DENNEY, D.D., Principal T. C. EDWARDS, D.D., W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, LL.D., T. G. SELBY, T. H. DARLOW, M.A., and J. T. STODDART.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

ON the THRESHOLD of CENTRAL AFRICA.

A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering in the Upper Zambesi, among the Bmyai and Barotsi.

By FRANÇOIS COILLARD, Paris Mission.
Translated and Edited by C. W. MACKINTOSH, with Photogravure Portrait and numerous Illustrations from Photographs by the Author.
Imperial 8vo, 16s.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES

Collected from The British Weekly
By W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.
Printed in red and black, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SIDE-LIGHTS from PATMOS.

By GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

LITTLE BOOKS ON RELIGION.

Cloth elegant, 1s. 6d.

NEW VOLUMES.

1. THE RIGHTEOUS FATHER and the LIVING CHRIST.

By the Rev. P. T. FORSYTH, D.D., Cambridge.

2. FROM STRENGTH to STRENGTH.

By the Rev. J. H. JOWETT, M.A., Carr's Lane, Birmingham.

3. A NEW VOLUME.

By Rev. HUGH BLACK, M.A., Free St. George's, Edinburgh.

THE SILENCE of GOD.

By ROBERT ANDERSON, C.B., LL.D., Assistant Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.
8vo, 6s., cloth.

TRUE and FALSE AIMS, and OTHER SERMONS.

By the late Rev. E. HERBER EVANS, D.D., Edited by the Rev. W. JUSTIN EVANS.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE LIFE of F. R. WYNNE, D.D., Bishop of Killaloe.

With a Collection of Sermons and Addresses.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE BOOK of the TWELVE PROPHETS.

By Prof. GEORGE ADAM SMITH, D.D., LL.D.
VOLUME II.
Being the Completion of the Work and of "The Expositor's Bible" Series.
Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. cloth.

PERSONAL FRIENDSHIPS of JESUS.

By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.
The new Volume of "The Silent Times" Series.
Fcap 8vo, white and gold, 8s. 6d.

BY STILL WATERS.

By Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D.
A new booklet, beautifully illustrated. 1s.

THE RITSCHLIAN THEOLOGY and the EVANGELICAL FAITH.

By Rev. Prof. JAMES ORR, M.A., D.D.
A new volume of "The Theological Educator."
Foolscap 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE MUSIC of the SOUL.

Daily Readings for a Year, from the Writings of the Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
Selected and Arranged by the Rev. GEORGE COATES.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE LAST THINGS.

A Study of the Coming of Christ, the Eternal Punishment of Sin, and the Eternal City of God.

By the Rev. J. AGAR BEET, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE GOSPEL in the FIELDS.

By the Rev. R. C. FILLINGHAM, M.A.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

A GUIDE to BIBLICAL STUDY.

By Prof. A. S. PEAKE, M.A.
With an Introduction by the Rev. Principal A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

The MINISTRY of the HOLY GHOST.

By the Rev. JOHN MORGAN, Edinburgh.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE GREATER GOSPEL.

By JOHN M. BAMFORD.
Author of "My Cross and Thine."
24mo, 1s. 6d., cloth.

LIFE'S LOOK-OUT.

The Autobiography of Sydney Watson.
Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

By HESBA STRETTON.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

CHIRRUPEE.

By E. BOYD BAYLY.
Author of "Jonathan Merle."
With numerous Illustrations by Ursula Wood. 1s.

IVY MEREDITH; or, a Season in the South.

A Story by CELIA ARMAGH.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE GENTLEMANLY GIANT,

And other Denizens of the Never Never Forest.
By BEATA FRANCOIS, Author of "Slyboots."
With numerous Illustrations by Geoffrey Strahan.
Fcap. 4to, 3s. 6d., cloth.

ESSAYS and ADDRESSES by HENRY DRUMMOND.

With Introductory Sketches by IAN MACLAREN and W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THE POTTER'S WHEEL.

By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D.
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth.

OTHER PEOPLE'S LIVES.

By ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

MARY QUEEN of SCOTS.

From her Birth to her Flight into England.
Including documents hitherto unpublished.
By D. HAY FLEMING.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

A DOCTOR of the OLD SCHOOL.

By IAN MACLAREN.
With numerous Illustrations by Frederick C. Gordon.
Fcap 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE IAN MACLAREN YEAR-BOOK.

Daily Readings from the Works of IAN MACLAREN.
Royal 32mo, cloth.

OUTLINES of a PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION.

Based on Psychology and History.
By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris.
Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. SEED.
Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d., cloth.

THE MONKEY THAT WOULD NOT KILL

And another Story for Young People.
By the late HENRY DRUMMOND.
With Illustrations by Louis Wain.
Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

JANE EYRE.

By CHARLOTTE BRONTE.
Being the First Volume of THE WORKS OF THE BRONTES.
Edited by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL.
With full Introductions and Copyright material furnished by the family.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

DAVID LYALL'S LOVE STORY.

By the Author of "The Land o' the Leal."
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

THROUGH LATTICE WINDOWS.

By W. J. DAWSON.
Crown 8vo, art linen, 6s.

BY FAR EUPHRATES.

A New Story by the Author of "The Spanish Brothers."
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

TO the ANGEL'S CHAIR.

A Story of Ideals in a Welsh Village.
By the Rev. JOHN THOMAS, M.A., Liverpool.
Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a HIGHLAND MINISTER.

With a Letter of Appreciation by the Rev. ALEX. WHYTE, D.D.
Crown 8vo, cloth.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER Row, E.C.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS'SNew and Forthcoming Books.A New Book on Newfoundland.THE TENTH ISLAND:Being some Account of Newfoundland, its People, its Politics, and its Peculiarities.

By BECKLES WILLSON.

With an Introduction by Sir WILLIAM WHITEWAY,

K.C.M.G., Premier of the Colony,

And an Appendix by Lord CHARLES BERSFORD.

Globe 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d., with Map.

[Ready immediately.]

By Richard Le Gallienne.

THE RUBAIYAT of OMAR KHAYYAM:A Paraphrase from several Literal Translations.*

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

Large fcap. 8vo, parchment, 5s.

[Ready immediately.]

POEMS by A. and L.

By ARABELLA and LOUISA SHORE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. net.

[Ready immediately.]

THE ETHICS OF THE SURFACE SERIES.*I. The RUDENESS of the HONOUR-ABLE MR. LEATHERHEAD.*II. A HOMBURG STORY.*III. CUI BONO?

[Ready shortly.]

By GORDON SEYMOUR.

16mo, buckram, 2s. each.

Idylls of Derbyshire.

A PEAKLAND FAGGOT:Tales Told of Mill n Folk.*

By R. MURRAY GILCHRIST.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

Mr. T. P. O'CONNOR in The Graphic.—"The writer who gives us glimpses into the psychology of the poor and the illiterate ought always to be welcome. The charm of the work is in the freshness of the subject and of the treatment. Mr. Murray Gilchrist has introduced us to a new world of profound human interest."

By Maurice Maeterlinck.

AGLAVAIN and SELYSETTE:A Drama in Five Acts.*

Translated into English by ALFRED SUTRO.

With an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, and a Title-page designed by W. H. MARGETSON.

Globe 8vo, half-buckram, 2s. 6d. net.

By the Author of "A Nile Novel."

LITTLE STORIES*ABOUT WOMEN.

By GEORGE FLEMING.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Grant Allen's New Novel.

AN AFRICAN MILLIONAIRE:Episodes in the Life of the Illustrious Colonel Clay.*

By GRANT ALLEN.

With over 60 Illustrations by Gordon Brown.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Mr. RICHARDS has also in preparation for immediate publication Two New Anthologies:

"THE FLOWER of the MIND: a Choice among the Best Poems," by Mrs. MEYNELL; and

"A BOOK of VERSES for CHILDREN," by E. V. LUCAS. 6s. each.

GRANT RICHARDS, 9, HENRIETTA STREET,
COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.A GIRL'S AWAKENING:A NOVEL.

By J. H. CRAWFORD,

Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland," &amp;c.

Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

First Review.

"In a different vein from the delightful books which the author has provided for those who love to follow in the wake of an observant naturalist. In some respects it reminds one of Pygmalion and Galatea. The story possesses much of the charm which belongs to the writings of an author who lingers lovingly over country surroundings, while the conversations that take place between a venerable astronomer, the heroine, and a literary man are highly amusing." Scotsman.

THE RED PAINTED BOX:A NOVEL.*

By MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON,

Author of "The Harvest of Sin," &amp;c.,

Joint Author of "Convict 99," &amp;c.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

First Review.

"It is only at pretty long intervals that stories so full of baffling mystery and powerful interest as 'The Red Painted Box' issue from the press. With cunning art the author weaves her plot, and the reader follows its windings with absorbed attention, spurred on from point to point by the pleasant but deluded belief that he or she has solved the mystery." Scotsman.

THE COURT of KING ARTHUR:

Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By

WILLIAM HENRY FROST. 20 Illustrations by

Sydney Richmond Burleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Just published.]

POSSESSED of DEVILS. By Mrs.

HAROLD E. GORST. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It would be impossible to convey a better idea of this book than by quoting the few first and very frank lines of its introduction: 'This is the story of a woman for whom I offer no apology, whose character and morals it is impossible to defend, whose sentiments were abominable, whose principles were 'nil'.....but who, nevertheless, was in very truth a woman.' One may not endorse Mrs. Gorst's thesis, and yet acknowledge that she has exposed it with considerable talent. The story ends with an unexpected and thrilling climax." Morning Post.

A DRAWING-ROOM CYNIC. By

LORIN KAYE, Author of "Her Ladyship's Income."

Art canvas, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

"A witty, cynical, whimsical writer is the author of this most captivating story. 'A Drawing-room Cynic' is so much better a novel than the reader is likely to come across for some time, that he will find it advisable to begin it again when he has reached the end, for the book is a gallop from start to finish, and during the race he must miss some of the excellent things of which the story is full." The Queen.

THE WOOING of AVIS GRAYLE.

By CHARLES HANNAN, Author of "Chin Chin Wa,"

"The Captive of Pekin," &amp;c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Since Sir William Brandon on the Bench was confronted by Paul Olliford in the dock by that master of romance, the first Lord Lytton, we have not had so strong a situation in the same order as that of the husband of Avis Grayle and his sworn friend." World.

A RUSSIAN WILD-FLOWER. By

E. A. BRAYLEY HODGETTS, Author of "Round

about Armenia." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Something absolutely new in fiction. This story is charming from every point of view; it makes the reader feel, when he closes the book, that he knows Russia as no other writer has ever enabled him to know the vast dim Empire of the Czar. Princess Olga Obolenski is the most living and gracious heroine of fiction we have met for a dreary length of time, and her story inspires the liveliest sympathy." World.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND.

By the AUTHOR of "THE WILD LIFE of SCOT-LAND," &amp;c. Illustrations by John Williamson. Hand-somerly bound, uniform with Mr. Crawford's other Works. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"Those who shrink from the hard scientific aspect and cacophonous would-be Latinity of many works with titles of this kind need have no fear that these pleasant, gossiping papers will be too severely botanical for them. The reader will be hard to please, be he but a lover of nature, who does not find these pages interesting and full of charm." The Times.

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, W.C.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S
NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. METHUEN announce that they have just published "THE POMP of the LAVILETTES," by GILBERT PARKER, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.; and "BLADYS," by S. BARING-GOULD, illustrated by F. H. Townsend, crown 8vo, 6s.; they will publish shortly "THE LADY'S WALK," by Mrs. OLIPHANT, crown 8vo, 6s.; "THE SINGER of MARLY," by IDA HOOPER, illustrated by W. Cubitt Cooke, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE MUTABLE MANY. By Robert

BARR, Author of "In the Midst of Alarms." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best novel that Mr. Barr has given us. There is much insight in it and much humour." Daily Chronicle.
"An exceedingly interesting book." Westminster Gazette.
"An excellent story filled with life-like pictures." Glasgow Herald.
"A series of pictures of a strike which have rarely been equalled in brilliancy." Star.
"Sympathetic to a rare degree, it has both power and pathos." Globe.

BY STROKE of SWORD. By Andrew

BALFOUR. Illustrated by W. C. Cooke. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s. A Romance of the Time of Elizabeth.

"A banquet of good things." Academy.
"A recital of thrilling interest, told with unflagging vigour." Globe.
"An unusually excellent example of a semi-historical romance. This exciting volume is worthy of a place in the front rank." Star.
"Masculine, healthy, and patriotic." Glasgow Herald.

KIRKHAM'S FIND. By Mary Gaunt,

Author of "The Moving Finger." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A really charming novel." Standard.SCOTTISH BORDER LIFE. By J. C.

DIBBIN. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"Of high literary merit." Pall Mall Gazette.GENERAL LITERATURE.*BRITISH CENTRAL AFRICA. By

Sir H. H. JOHNSTON, K.C.B. With 220 Illustrations and 6 Maps. Crown 4to, 30s. net. A Complete Survey of British Central Africa, its History, Geography, Ethnology, Languages, Fauna, Flora, Scenery, &amp;c.

"Admirably thorough and beautifully illustrated." Globe.
"A delightful book...collecting within the covers of a single volume all that is known of this part of our African domains. The voluminous appendices are of extreme value." Manchester Guardian.
"The book takes front rank as a standard work by the one man competent to write it." Daily Chronicle.

OXFORD and its COLLEGES. By

J. WELLS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Wadham College. Illustrated by E. H. New. Fcap. 8vo, 3s.; leather, 4s.

A Guide—chiefly Historical—to the Colleges of Oxford.
"A pretty, readable, and useful book." Globe.
"Delightfully printed, bound, and illustrated." Daily Graphic.
"Just such a volume as a visitor wishes for." Scotsman.

WITH the GREEKS in THESSALY.

By W. KINNAIRD ROSE. Crown 8vo, 6s. This book contains 23 Illustrations by Mr. W. T. Maud, and several Maps and Plans.

"Mr. Rose's description of the flight from Larissa will go down to history." Daily Chronicle.

HOW to MAKE a DRESS. By Miss

J. A. E. WOOD, Head Teacher of Dressmaking, Goldsmiths' Institute. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

TEXT-BOOK of TECHNOLOGY.*ORNAMENTAL DESIGN for WOVEN

FABRICS. By C. STEPHENSON, of the Technical College, Bradford, and F. SUDARDS, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds. With 66 Full-Page Plates, and numerous Designs and Diagrams in the Text. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The aim of this book is to supply, in a systematic and practical form, information on the subject of Decorative Design as applied to Woven Fabrics, and it is primarily intended to meet the requirements of students in Textile and Art Schools, or of designers actively engaged in the weaving industry. Its wealth of illustration is a marked feature of the book.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW CATALOGUE and BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., ESSEX STREET, W.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
"Bustling, Breathless, Bragging Boswell" ...	213
A Critic's Note-Book ...	214
The Spirit of the Matterhorn ...	215
South African Exploration ...	216
Looking Backward ...	217
Looking Forward ...	217
FROM CROWDED SHELVES ...	218
NOTES AND NEWS ...	219
EXCURSIONS IN CYNICISM: I., DON QUIXOTE ...	220
RICHARD HOLT HUTTON ...	221
WANTED: A PHILANTHROPIST FOR RESEARCH ...	223
CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS ...	223
New Books Received ...	223
THE BOOK MARKET ...	223
DRAMA ...	224
SCIENCE ...	225
MUSIC ...	226
CORRESPONDENCE ...	226
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ...	60-72

REVIEWS.

"BUSTLING, BREATHLESS, BRAGGING BOSWELL."

"FAMOUS SCOTS" SERIES.—James Boswell.
By W. Keith Leask. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

"I WILL be myself!" cried Boswell on his return from Corsica: the cry is the keynote of his whole life and character. He confesses of himself, as an author, or, to adopt his cherished spelling, "author," that "from a certain peculiarly frank, open, and ostentatious disposition which he avows, his history, like that of the old Seigneur Michael de Montaigne, is to be traced in his writings." Elsewhere, in excuse for a flood of irrelevant egotism, he writes: "to pour out all myself as old Montaigne, I wish all this to be known." With Montaigne, Boswell might have declared that, "in favour of the Huguenots, who condemn private confession, I confess myself in public"; or again, "I have no other end in writing than to discover myself." Himself, truly; and to discover others, not otherwise than as he discovered himself, with their "warts," as Cromwell said, their eccentricities and asperities, their public fame and their private peculiarity: he would not "make a tiger a cat to please anybody," nor confine himself to "grave Sam, and great Sam, and solemn Sam, and learned Sam." "For," said he, with absolute conviction, "curiosity is the most prevalent of all our passions"; and curiosity, in more than its limited modern sense. He meant by it an unflagging, incessant, insatiable interest in life; an hatred of dulness and inattention, of waste moments and sluggish hours; a craving to make each act and occupation contribute of its value to his mind or senses; a dramatic instinct of seizing upon the quickest, liveliest, fullest aspect of things; an unconquerable determination to make the most of life, to see and hear and taste and feel, to be unlike "old Mr. Edwards of Pembroke." To this he would sacrifice self-respect, and cast off dignity and court rebuffs; but he knew what he was doing, and why he did it—he was not Gray's or Macaulay's genius by accident, fool by nature. He let nothing escape him—he must ever be enjoying some emotion or sensation. He "cannot resist the serious pleasure of writing to Mr. Johnson from the tomb of Melancthon. My paper rests upon the tomb of that great and good man. . . ." What a picture! Here is another: At the Duke of Argyll's, after his Hebridean adventures, he can "never forget the impression made upon my fancy by some of the ladies' maids tripping about in neat morning dresses. After seeing for a long time little but rusticity, their lively manner and gay inviting appearance pleased me so much that I thought for a moment I could have been a knight-errant for them."

Abroad, and breaking all his father's express conditions of residence and study, he, Jimmy Boswell, finds "borne in upon him" the words of St. Paul, "I must see Rome." Language is inadequate to deal with that. Again, in disregard of his wife's claims and father's wishes, he wants to go a-gadding up to town, because keeping Easter at St. Paul's is like keeping the Passover at Jerusalem. Assuredly he never kept his Passover with bitter herbs. He tells Rousseau that there are points où nos âmes sont unies; he tells Paoli that "with a mind naturally inclined to melancholy and a deep desire of inquiry, I have intensely applied myself to metaphysical researches. . . ." He tells Chatham that his Lordship has "filled many of my best hours with the noble admiration which a disinterested soul can enjoy in the bowers of philosophy. . . . Could your Lordship find time now and then to honour me with a letter?" Always, as he admits, "that favourite subject myself," yet almost heroically so, even when impudently so: an occasional letter from Chatham would be a zest, an excitement, a distinguished pleasure to the youth under thirty, and therefore—he asks for it! It is not mere, pure conceit and ill-breeding: it is an invincible vivacity. You can almost see him reckoning up, as it were, on his plump fingers, his eminent acquaintances, the cities and courts that he has visited, his writings and flirtations and experiences in general: they are his treasures and his triumphs. The acquisition of Johnson was but the greatest of them all, his crowning achievement: all his life was devoted to social coups d'état. To hear service in an Anglican cathedral; to attend an exceptionally choice murderer to the gallows; to contrive a meeting between Johnson and Wilkes; to sing a comic song of his own composition before Mr. Pitt at a City feast; to pray among the ruins of Iona, and to run away for fear of ghosts; to turn Roman Catholic, and immediately to run away with an actress; each and all of these performances were to him sensational, enlivening, vivid. This versatile little Ulysses of Scotland refused

"To rust unburnished, not to shine in use,
As though to breathe were life! Life piled on life
Were all too little. . . ."

Bustling, breathless, bragging, he had endless day-dreams and castles in Spain: there was a piteous kind of courage even in his last years of drunkenness and disappointment, when weakness and absurdity grew upon him, and the world thought him a maudlin bore or buffoon. He would not give up the chase after his ambitions, would not rest upon his laurels, upon the fame of his great biography: he was as full of schemes and projects as when he dared the dangers of Corsica, and talked heroics with Paoli. A very quaint man, a very ludicrous man, but certainly a great man: causes and effects must be commensurable, and the Boswell of Boswell's Johnson, that splendid and unique creation, cannot have been no more than a prying, impertinent, besotted, brainless busy-body, a meddling, mannerless, self-important little chatterer, with a big note-book and a good memory. Men "don't do such things" as write masterpieces without a master's ability. Certain critics, who see the dissimilarities between a great artist's life and his work, are fond of denying to the artist the merit of his art: it "came by chance," half unconsciously. To that we may apply Johnson's wise and reiterated conviction, so often asserted in subtler forms by Newman, and accepted by all experts in human nature, that there may be good principles without good practice: if that be true in religion, the converse is true in art. Johnson's own grave and stately writings are the work of one, upon his own confession, not quite sane all his life; Addison, with his pure and lucid prose, was an habitual tippler; Lamb, that master of fine graces, was to Carlyle a sorry drunkard playing the fool. And Boswell, because of his failings and absurdities, is not to be given the credit of the undoubted work of genius in which he records them! Illogical injustice could surely no farther go: it is assomment. We shall be told that Goldsmith and Steele wrote their exquisite works because they were wild, irresponsible, unmethodical Irishmen, obviously incapable of producing such perfection proprio motu et voluntate sua. Art is not an Indian juggler's trick of producing fruit and flowers out of empty space; and as for the critics, who seem to think so of Boswell, que messieurs les critiques commencent. It is not so. As a man, according to Johnson and St. Paul, may sincerely hold good principles, yet be unable to "wear them out in practice," as Topham Beauclerk said, so a fine writer may show in his writings a thousand virtues of proportion, sobriety, tact, good sense, utterly lacking in his conduct. And curiosity, Boswell's absorbing passion, is a feature in his life and conduct which does go far towards accounting for the excellences of his masterpiece. His instinct of selection, his presentment of choice scenes, his dramatic directness, his infinitely felicitous touch upon trifles, his unrivalled skill in detail, come naturally from a man who cared so supremely for rare and savoursome experiences in life. He does not weary us with descriptions of dull dinners and reports of insipid talk, because he hated such things; he gives us Johnson and the rest in all their lifelike reality, not excluding the odd and the grotesque, because it was just that piquant reality which he loved, sought out, remembered. He gives us information about himself to his own disadvantage, because such personal information, which helps to show the man, he loved to have of others. Johnson "tosses him," turns and rends him, covers him with confusion. What then! It was magnificent, Johnson at his best; and Boswell wants to show Johnson at his best, in all his glory, the "Great Man." He relished his own rebuffs and discomfitures; as for his own weaknesses, well, he wants us to see himself also as he was, exceedingly human, no stiff, bloodless, academic person, but Boswell of the tender conscience, the good intentions, and the frequent fall. So we have Boswell the theological, Boswell the bibulous, Boswell the feudal, Boswell the cosmopolitan—all the Boswells. We miss neither the Boswell who perpetually discussed predestination, nor the Boswell who sometimes adhasit pavimento. But the art of it! Reading Boswell's half-humorous, half-serious apologies or reasons for recording uncouth or ridiculous sayings and doings, his own or others', we cannot deny that he had full right to say of his "Life" what Johnson said of his Dictionary: "Sir, I knew very well what I was undertaking, and very well how to do it; and have done it very well."

"What a pedant," wrote Mr. Matthew Arnold, of Cicero, to Mr. John Morley, "is Mommsen, who runs this charming personage down!" What a pedant, one is inclined to say, must he be who shrinks from an honest admiration and affection for Boswell! In many ways a small, an undignified, a preposterous man, but never a mean, idiotic, vulgar man. He knew all the weak and laughable sides of his own character, and that safeguards him. So abject a fool and vain a toady, as Macaulay imagines him, could have had no sense of humour, no subtlety of perception, no delicacy of characterisation: still more, he could not have had the friendship of Johnson and of the Club. Johnson was the tenderest of mankind, and protected in long-suffering patience many a querulous or unattractive pensioner upon his charity and inmate under his roof; but Johnson enduring, and more, inviting, the companionship of a fool and toady, and that a Scotsman, is unthinkable. Why the world should be so unwilling to take what Thackeray calls "the more kindly and the more profound view" of Boswell's character, is something of a problem. Doubtless he awakes in us no such ardour of love and reverent compassion and caressing gratitude as Goldsmith and Lamb awoke; but he is very much our genial friend, our admired and inestimable "Bozzy." There is, perhaps, a lurking sense that, despite his title to our gratitude, he is too undignified, too ridiculous. Goldsmith and Lamb, that gentle pair, have something pathetic and tragic in their sufferings or sorrows. Boswell is too "fat and well-liking," too self-satisfied and assertive, too canny and conquering: there is nothing sacred unto tears about him. His failings and distempers are beautiful neither in cause nor in effect: we do not get beyond thinking him a good fellow and a prodigious able one. Johnson, thanks to Boswell, we cannot but love: Boswell himself is no more than our excellent shrewd tavern friend or fellow-traveller. We would gladly have been at "Goldy's" deathbed; we hardly think of "Bozzy's." In truth, it is hard to think of him as dead, as master of the dread secrets which he loved to peer into with Johnson. To us he is still a Londoner, strutting off down Fleet-street toward Johnson's quarters, thinking with anticipatory gusto of their supper at the Mitre, and meditating how best he shall put the Great Man through his paces. There, in the kindly, jovial tavern, sedet aeternumque sedebit. St. Dunstan may chime for midnight, but Boswell sits there still over the port or punch, putting questions without end to the hero whose immortality he has doubled and endeared to us.

Mr. Keith Leask is to be congratulated upon an excellent piece of work, well conceived and well executed, full of accurate knowledge and of humorous commonsense. It deserves its dedication to the "Great Cham" among modern Johnsonians, Dr. Birkbeck Hill, that admirable scholar in Dr. Johnson's school, which was distinguished, says Sir Joshua Reynolds, "for a love of truth and accuracy." In short, Mr. Leask's Life of Boswell is in happy contrast to that by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald; we could not say more to recommend it. Three unimportant points may be mentioned, where Mr. Leask's statement or his judgment is at fault; and the three points are the only three, that we have noted. He describes Francis Gentleman, whom Boswell met when he was studying under Adam Smith at Glasgow, as "an old stage-struck officer, who had sold his commission to risk his chances on the boards." By "old officer" Mr. Leask must mean "ex-officer": for Gentleman, once a well-known Irish playwright, was but twenty-one when Boswell met him, and he died aged fifty-six, the author of some fifteen dramatic pieces and of an edition of Shakespeare. Secondly, when Johnson in a letter speaks of Boswell's mother-in-law, meaning step-mother, Mr. Leask regards it as a slip of the pen, a mistake: but the last century used the terms of relationship "step" and "in-law" indifferently; a confusing habit, which Thackeray, if we remember right, has not forgotten in Esmond. Lastly, Mr. Leask finds in the fact that Boswell's marriage and his father's second marriage took place on the same day, but at different places, a "clear indication" of differences between father and son. Surely, 'tis to consider too curiously to consider so." Boswell married at his wife's home: Lord Auchinleck at Edinburgh, where his judicial duties very probably detained him. But, in any case, an old man over sixty might well feel something somewhat ludicrous and distasteful in the solemnisation of the two marriages together. Father and son were seldom on the best of terms, and the son was to blame for it: but here at least we find evidence of good taste on either side, rather than of discord.

A CRITIC'S NOTE-BOOK.

Journeys through France: being Impressions of the Provinces. By H. A. Taine. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

IN 1863 Taine was appointed examiner to the Military School of St. Cyr, and for three years, in the process of his work, he visited a wide circle of provincial towns. It was his habit to jot down his impressions of each place in a number of small note-books, always with an eye to some future recasting and publication. Such was the genesis of his Notes sur Paris and Notes sur l'Angleterre, and but for his sudden immersion in more laborious toil we should probably have had a similar volume from these brief cahiers. Certain passages, indeed, were used in his Voyage en Italie and Notes sur Paris, but the note-books, as a whole, remained as they were, and are now published as they were left.

Such a volume could not fail to be interesting, for the simple reason that, apart from certain dryas dust labours of research, it was impossible for Taine to be dull. It forms a series of acute criticisms on the landscape and life of provincial France; and however much we may value the opinion of an intelligent foreigner on our own land, we must set a still higher worth on his opinion on his own. And in Taine's case the value is more striking, for he had a curious gift of critical aloofness, of holding himself apart from the object of his judgment and appraising it clearly and coldly. Hence he always writes of France with a certain air of foreignness, looking at it with just that air of interested curiosity with which one views an alien people.

The work is professedly an itinerary, but it has none of the picaresque romance and high spirits which commonly characterise this form. There is nothing of the rollicking humour, the eternal outlook for the whimsical and laughter-moving which delight us in Thackeray's Irish Sketch-book, nor, on the other hand, has he the masquerading sentiment of Heine. The purely geographical and historical interest is, of course, absent, such as inspired in the last century a work like Capt. Burt's Letters from the North of Scotland. Still further is he from the delicate sentimentalism of such dainty porcelain work as Stevenson's two little books of travel. He sets out with an interest in great questions—the political and social condition of the people, the extent of clerical supremacy, the difference in race type: and such form the lines of his moralising; but, apart from this, there is a more personal love of fair scenery, and laboriously and conscientiously he sets himself to reproduce his impressions of North and South.

These notes are a sort of epitome of his whole work. When he gives reasons for any fact there is the same air of completeness, the same search for "special tendencies" and "social conditions" which characterise his literary criticism. Nor is there wanting the gay paradox, the hasty generalisation, which are so common in his Notes sur l'Angleterre. Take this for an example:

"When the Englishman has ceased to work he eats and drinks, turns red in the face, becomes gloomy or quarrelsome, takes his pleasures brutally, swears and fights. After that he sleeps till he is sober, and in the morning he washes his face in hot water and his body in cold water, brushes up his whiskers, and goes about his business with a funereal aspect. I think it is only the Frenchman, the Latin, the Southerner, who combines art, poetry, or refinement with his pleasure. The other is either a mere brute or merely virtuous."

Finally, in his short political notes there is something of the genuine Liberalism and as genuine distrust of facile democratic expedients which is the keynote of the great Les Origines de la France Contemporaine.

His journeys start from Picardy in the North, and his first pictures in each year of the Notes are of the grey monotonous Breton land, the place of crude colours sobered by the misty sky. At first the thing distresses him; he is interested in the types of people, but the stolidity of everything, the Flemish heaviness, weighs on his spirits. On his second visit he is better pleased, the restfulness of the level colouring cools and refreshes him after the hot South. The northern character pleases him more and more.

"In the South," he says in his fine way, "you must live sensuously like a painter, love a dainty, well-dressed woman, a merry face under a dark veil of hair, a deep shade beneath a long grey wall that cuts sharp into the living blue, exquisite grapes that melt like honey in the mouth; but you must hide away all that is within you, all meditation, profound or tender."

Of particular people, too, he can draw admirable pictures:

"A man of routine by birth and disposition, with a discreet smile and spiritless eyes; squarely dressed in a good black coat, and standing squarely on his big feet—the most ordinary, serviceable steady-going, commonplace man, as vulgar and clean as a new-swept pavement."

In the South, in Languedoc and on the Mediterranean coast, Taine's sketches become more vivacious and coloured, but he always has the air of protesting against Southern characteristics, himself for the time a stern Northman. The people are "graceful, with the vivacity of a bird—of a delicate twittering tomtit; but there is nothing more in their cackle." For the people of Toulouse he is "without sympathy." "A 'gentleman' is a rarity" there. But the country—this takes him utterly captive. He glories in the extraordinary colours, the wide lines of landscape, the clear, limitless heavens. The description of Certe, on p. 252, and the account of the passage of the Jura, are admirable pieces of ornate prose. Take this, too, of the sea:

"It is the sea which ennobles everything. Between the line and the surf there was but the ancient foreshore, covered with prickly tamarisks and mauve-coloured heath, with yellow sand conspicuous here and there. At the limit of the foreshore, the rugged border line cut clear into a deep and sombre blue. It is She—blue as any grape on this cluster which hangs in the cooling breeze. The azure deepens, filling up a good half of the range of sight; the white sail of a fishing-smack floats alone, like a hollow shell; the eternal monotone of ocean is borne upon the ear. Draw near and see the leaping silver foam. Above the intense blue the sky is transparently, superbly pale, and the stars are hurrying to light their lamps. There is not a living soul, nor a plant, nor any sign of the hand of man. There might be Nereids and Fauns dancing on the strand, as in the days when the world was young."

These pictures of scenery and weather are vivid, effective and careful. Their fault is that they are a little indiscriminate, a little too rhetorical and highly pitched, and every now and then the writer is unhappy in his comparisons. There is too much reference to clothing. "The sky is a beautiful and happy girl, dressed in a new gown of glistening silk." The hills are like mauve velvet; something else is like muslin. Now muslins, silks, and velvet are all very well in their way, but they can be overdone. Again, there are traces of a colourman's use of words, where the names of pigments are scattered about ineffectively, as in an otherwise excellent passage on p. 235. It is this slightly rhetorical note, this desire to write always "a power too high," which is the source of his defects.

In October, 1864, a year after the beginning of these Notes, Taine was appointed Professor of Æsthetics at the École des Beaux Arts. Hence we expect to find here traces of his strong interest in the formative arts, which gave rise subsequently to his dissertations on the Arts, their Philosophy and Ideal. In the account of the Museum at Rennes we find such traces in many shrewd and pregnant criticisms on Flemish and French painters.

"The old school of painting," he says, "seized on fundamental realities and made the most of them; the modern painter seizes on the conspicuous accident, the differentiating mark, and aims at reproducing the effect. Thus the Dutch Landscape of Anastasi is thoroughly true in its unpleasant bluish-green grass and its strange dissolving sky of bluish-black. That strikes us by contrast with our French sky. But Anastasi did not love Holland, and he missed the essential, the lasting, the welcome features which are the discoveries of love."

This is excellent, and not less good are the more general criticisms. "The future in every art is for such as select or meet with subjects which all succeeding generations will approve. Happiness is one of these themes, but nervous disorder and psychological peculiarities are not among them." This is another version of the profound saying that "Art must follow the main march of the human affections"—a searching text for the countrymen of De Maupassant and M. Bourget. Take this, too, on his own preferences:

"In judging a landscape, the whole question is one of more or less moisture in the air. My temperament needs more than a Roman or a Greek would demand. After a brief time, face to face with a Southern literature or art, my sensibility is wounded, and I require an imperceptible humidity in the atmosphere to allay the scorching heat of their sun."

We have scarcely left ourselves space to speak of the political notes, but these are by no means the least interesting. It is of provincial France before the war that Taine writes, a country drilled and disciplined into a respectable mediocrity. He cannot away with the system. "A community is like a large garden," he writes; "it is planned for peaches and oranges, or for carrots and cabbages. Our garden is planned entirely for cabbages and carrots." Again, "France is a democracy of peasants and working-men under a motherly administration, with a restricted town population which lives cheaply and grows rusty, and with needy officials who are on the look-out for promotion and never take root." The power of clericalism gives him acute annoyance, but the most glaring flaw in the national edifice is the barren mechanical socialism under which all men are marshalled. There is no room for a rich civic or national life, no chance for true merit to rise to distinction, no justice in rewards and punishments. Yet "the more I see of France," he says finally, "the more she seems to have the constitution that suits her." Which would imply that Taine had no exaggerated opinion of the merits of his own land.

THE SPIRIT OF THE MATTERHORN.

A Guide to Zermatt and the Matterhorn. By Edward Whymper. With Sixty-five Illustrations and Maps. (John Murray.)

THERE is associated with the very name of Zermatt a majesty which all the desecrating forces of cheap travel and monster hotels cannot destroy. The austere and noble valley cannot be debased even by the vulgar might of organised advertisement. The spectral peak of the Matterhorn rules it still, in spite of the debasing commercialism which is spoiling Switzerland, and which aims at selling scenery and exploiting Alpine solitudes at so much per tripper. At Zermatt man can always learn something of his own insignificance. The little tourist who batters with critical bitterness on the many dishes of a Swiss table d'hôte has never made himself quite at home there. He cannot be quite sure that the stern, legend-haunted peaks that menace his horizon are not plotting for his pigmy overthrow. Might they not leap down from keeping watch and ward in their icy solitudes and stamp out man's imprint there in the haunted valley? "I am the Spirit of the place," mutters the Matterhorn, "and what with me wouldst thou?" Mr. Edward Whymper has answered the question more explicitly than Lord Byron's Manfred in this little volume of singular charm. For the book is not as other guide-books are, but a capital piece of vitalised literary work. The author has drawn liberally from his Scrambles Among the Alps, and tells once more the thrilling story of the long siege which Alpine climbers laid to that inaccessible peak. The virgin mountain held out year after year, but at last sullenly and malignantly yielded. The conflict, on an heroic scale, darkened by a tragedy, represents the most thrilling chapter in Alpine mountaineering exploit.

Mont Blanc was first climbed by Jacques Balmat in 1786. The path he opened is now annually trodden by hundreds of tourists; but it was not until 1865 that the peak of the Matterhorn was stormed. The price paid by the adventurers was terrible; the ghastly tale remains fixed in the memory of all who are acquainted with Alpine literature. Mr. Whymper tells us once more of his own narrow escape and the fate of his comrades who lie in that most touching resting-place of ill-fated climbers, the little burial-ground of the English church at Zermatt. The present year has brought the usual crop of sinister Alpine accidents, and it is well that Mr. Whymper should remind his readers that death walks at the elbow of the unwary or weak mountaineer on dizzy ice-glazed crag and every slippery col. His account of the disaster, of which he was a witness, in which the Rev. Mr. Hudson, Lord Francis Douglas, Mr. Hadow, and the guide lost their lives is an admirable piece of descriptive writing.

"Michel Croz, the guide," wrote Mr. Whymper, "had laid aside his axe, and, in order to give Mr. Hadow greater security, was absolutely taking hold of his legs and putting his feet, one by one, into their proper position."

This, at least, is the author's belief, although he admits that the two men were hidden from his sight by an intervening mass of rock. Mr. Hadow appears to have slipped and to have knocked over the guide in falling. The two men shot down the frozen snowy slope, dragging Mr. Hudson after them; Lord Douglas followed. The two Taugwalders and Mr. Whymper planted themselves

"as firmly as the rocks would permit: the rope was taut between us, and the jerk came on us as on one man. We held, but the rope broke midway between Taugwalder and Lord Francis Douglas. For a few seconds we saw our unfortunate companions sliding downwards on their backs, and spreading out their hands, endeavouring to save themselves. They passed from our sight uninjured, disappeared one by one, and then fell from precipice to precipice to the Matterhorn glacier below, a distance of nearly 4,000 feet."

Whether their lives were sacrificed to the careless use of a rotten rope, or whether, had it not broken, Mr. Whymper and the two Taugwalders would also have perished, is a question on which opinions will differ, but which will never be cleared up. There is no more pathetic story in Alpine climbing. The victims had just planted their flag on the summit, and were descending, the arduous and most dangerous part of their task having been completed. They died in the hour of their triumph. The horror-stricken survivors for a time were helpless. For the space of half an hour they remained on the spot without moving a single step. The two guides, "paralysed by terror, cried like infants, and trembled in such a manner as to threaten us with the fate of the others." The descent was a terrible ordeal. The panic-stricken Taugwalders, father and son, might have slipped at any moment. Their nerve was lost. "Several times old Peter turned with ashy face and faltering limbs, and said, with terrible emphasis, 'I cannot.'" The very face of nature seemed changed by the catastrophe. When the party arrived upon the long slope descending towards Zermatt, and the danger was over,

"lo! a mighty arch appeared rising above Lyskamm, high into the sky. Pale, colourless, and noiseless, but perfectly sharp and defined, except where it was lost in the clouds, this unearthly apparition seemed like a vision from another world. . . . The Taugwalders thought it had some connexion with the accident, and I, after a while, that it might bear some relation to ourselves. But our movements had no effect upon it. The spectral forms remained motionless. It was a fearful and wonderful sight; unique in my experience, and impressive beyond description, coming at such a moment."

The phenomenon, however, seems to have been analogous to the fog-bow; similar atmospheric manifestations are not uncommon in the arctic regions. Thus the Matterhorn, conquered at last, took terrible vengeance. It still exacts, in spite of the rock having been blasted at the most difficult points, an almost yearly victim, and remains the most dangerous and least accessible of Alpine peaks. This is an old story retold; but it must ever be kept in mind as well by the most practised mountaineer as by the novice, since experience has taught that it must be numbered among the disasters which forethought may prevent.

Of the dangers and difficulties of serious mountaineering Mr. Whymper has given us a vivid picture. There are, no doubt, dangers from falling stones and avalanches against which no precautions can prevail, and which can be met only by the most careful study of the local meteorological conditions. The risks of solitary clambering are rendered doubly obvious by Mr. Whymper's own exciting experiences. A rock seven feet high, insurmountable to one climber, becomes possible to two, and quite easy to three men. Every party bent on serious climbing should be well disciplined, carefully equipped, and consist of three at least. No one unaccustomed to mountaineering, however robust, should attempt a difficult summit unaccompanied by the ablest guides. In fact, a man who had never handled a bat is as little likely to make a stand against Richardson's bowling as a novice to ascend even Monte Rosa without incurring tremendous risk. Another danger to which Mr. Whymper alludes is found in the deterioration of the guides. The demand has increased the supply, but not the quality. A perfect acquaintance with the region undertaken is necessary in order to reduce the risks, always considerable, to the minimum. The unwary walk into the track of avalanches with a light heart. The inexperienced climber never knows the danger he is in, and the inexperienced guide only knows enough to lose his head at the critical moment. The recent history of the Zermatt region is thick with accidents, which a closer acquaintance with the laws of Alpine meteorology might have avoided. The famous guide, Jean Antoine Carrel, died at the age of sixty-one in August, 1890, on the lower slopes of the Matterhorn, in consequence of fatigue and exposure in a fruitless attempt to scale the peak in stormy weather.

Mr. Whymper's new guide-book—the companion volume to that upon Chamonix, recently noticed in the ACADEMY—is a masterpiece. The portion of it devoted to the Matterhorn is of fascinating interest to all, climbers or not, who love mountains. No better introduction to the very heart of the Alps is procurable. The dry bones of "Baedeker" may be enough for the mob who study

Alpine peaks from hotel windows, but for the daring and ambitious tourist Mr. Whymper's guidance will be found invaluable. The book is admirably printed and illustrated; the statistical information is all that the most exacting can desire; and from beginning to end it is full of human interest, and coloured with the fearless spirit of adventure.

SOUTH AFRICAN EXPLORATION.

The New Africa: a Journey up the Chobe and down the Okovanga Rivers. A Record of Exploration and Sport. By Aurel Schulz, M.D., and August Hammer, C.E. (Heinemann.)

To this volume there is no preface, but from a foot-note on the first page it may be gathered that its composition should be credited to Dr. Schulz. We should, therefore, like to ask this genial and accomplished writer why he has entitled it The New Africa? By that expression most people would understand the Africa which by the recent partition has virtually become a political dependency of Europe. But the events here recorded took place over twelve years ago, before the "scramble" had well begun, and they, consequently, belong rather to the period of transition between the old and the new orders. Why their publication has been so long delayed is not made quite clear in the same note, where the writer merely tells that their belated appearance

"may be justified by the explanation that since we were the first whites to traverse this partly unknown country, no explorer has followed in our footsteps, and the regions of the central Chobe and the country we traversed from there to the Okovanga still partly remain undescribed territory."

The latter part of this statement is true enough; but our travellers are mistaken in supposing that they were the first whites to visit the region in question, which, in fact, had long before been crossed and recrossed in several directions by Mr. Andrew Anderson, author of that entertaining book Twenty-five Years in a Waggon, &c. (1887). Their farthest point on the Okovanga river had also been reached so far back as 1856 by Green, whose Andara is obviously Dr. Schulz's Debabe, that is, the town of the chief Debabe or Indala, successor of Andara.

Dr. Schulz and his friend, Mr. Hammer, set out from Natal with a small following in March, 1884, on a sporting and exploring expedition to the interior, a primary object being to complete the survey of the Chobe river to its sources, and generally to investigate "this unknown portion of Central South Africa." But so far from being "unknown," this was the very region where Livingstone began his wonderful career by the discovery of Lake Ngami in 1849, followed soon after by his journey up the Chobe to the west coast. Dr. Schulz also had contemplated crossing the continent by a new route, but had to abandon the project par force majeure. After striking the Zambesi at the Victoria Falls, the party made their way under great difficulties up the main stream to the Chobe confluence, and then up the Chobe to a point near 23° E. longitude, where it is joined on the right bank by the Liana, a considerable stream which, they were informed by the natives, came from the Kubango (Okovanga).

Partly in order to settle this point, which is one of the few important problems still awaiting solution in the geography of Africa, Dr. Schulz conducted his people from the Chobe over new ground to the Okovanga at Debabe's. Here he practically ceased to be a free agent, and, instead of continuing his journey up stream to Benguela and the west coast, was fain to return down stream to Lake Ngami and the east coast. After suffering much from the insolence and exactions of Debabe, he suddenly found himself at the mercy of the far more powerful potentate, Moremi, King of the Batowaana (Batwana), a branch of the Bamangwato Bechuanas (King Khama's people), who have been dominant in the Ngami district since the beginning of the present century. In 1883 this district had been invaded by a large body of Matabili marauders, who, although repulsed with great loss, were threatening to return and wipe out the Batwanas, and it was reported that they were being aided by a number of whites, among others the Schulz party, whose movements had been carefully followed ever since their arrival in the Zambesi country. Thus it happened that at Debabe's they received peremptory orders to descend the river to the lake, where for a moment they were in imminent peril of receiving short shrift as spies of the dreaded and detested Matabili. Having escaped this fate by a lucky chance, they had no option but to retrace their steps through Bechuanaland and Transvaal to Natal, which was re-entered in January 1885.

That Dr. Schulz was thus prevented from completing his survey of the exceedingly intricate Zambesi-Kubango hydrographic system is now of little consequence, because Capt. Lugard, late of Uganda, is at present engaged in a thorough investigation of the whole region north and west of Lake Ngami. But if it be asked whether it was worth while issuing, after such a lapse of time, this record of half-accomplished work in the field of African research, the answer must be a decided affirmative. Apart altogether from its geographical importance, the book deals with an immense variety of topics—historical, ethnological, zoological, and botanical; abounds with sporting incidents and personal reminiscences of all kinds; while its character-sketches are so numerous and graphically drawn, the style so pleasant and unpretentious, that "The New Africa" will certainly take a permanent place among the most instructive and best-written works of travel in the English language.

There is much in the book which will not be at all pleasant reading for those English sentimentalists whose sympathies are reserved for the Boers, the Matabili, and other opponents of the paramount power in South Africa.

LOOKING BACKWARD.

The Ancient Stone Implements, Weapons, and Ornaments of Great Britain. Second Edition Revised. By Sir John Evans. (Longmans & Co.)

The Ancient Stone Implements of Great Britain is in this new edition increased by a hundred pages and sixty-eight new woodcuts. New neolithic implements are represented, chiefly examples of extreme beauty and rarity, though on p. 325 a familiar tool of everyday use is welcome. Prof. Boyd Dawkins lends eight woodcuts, the spoil of the northern caves. The horse's head—the earliest effort of pictorial art as yet obtained on English soil—finds here a most fitting place. Lastly are engravings of early implements, chiefly secured by the prescient persistence and figured by the skilful graver of Mr. Worthington Smith. The chief additions to the text are in the second portion of the work where the earlier or palæolithic period is under discussion. This could hardly have been otherwise, for while the products of neolithic handiwork have excited curiosity for two hundred years, it was chiefly the appearance of the first edition of this work, twenty-five years ago, which prompted local inquirers to look for hidden treasure in their several neighbourhoods. Searches were made, often fruitless for years, but finally rewarded. Sir John Evans shows the old quality of thoroughness in the fulness with which he has incorporated in the present edition the most important of these discoveries in our own country, as well as those made abroad which throw additional light on his subject.

In one place only do we find any trace of a new departure. On p. 608 Sir John says that the discoveries of Mr. Harrison, of Ightham, "have done much to revolutionise our ideas as to the age and character of the Drift deposits capping the chalk downs in western Kent." He assents, we understand, to the argument of the late Sir Joseph Prestwich, which proved, as we think, conclusively that the oldest implements are found in situations quite unconnected with our present rivers, and were deposited there by natural agencies long anterior to the existing system of drainage. This, however, is entirely in harmony with the principles laid down in the first edition, where Sir John, then Dr. Evans, repeatedly asserts that he does not profess to have found the handiwork of the earliest man, but is perfectly willing to accept man of an earlier, even of a Tertiary, date—only it must be on sufficient evidence. Sound evidence of an earlier, perhaps the earliest known, stage of the palæolithic period is found in western Kent, and is accepted.

Thus the old lines are very strictly observed; and it may not be amiss to sketch what those lines were, how much they achieved. The object of the original book was to figure every distinct type of stone implement found in Britain, to record the circumstances under which it was found, and to indicate its probable use. The method owed much to the example of such predecessors as Sir Richard Colt Hoare, but the value of the work lay in the thoroughness of the performance. The old reproach still clung to the antiquary that his thoughts were given to isolated facts, if not to trifles; and that his discoveries led nowhere, for like the needy knife-grinder he had no story to tell. With the work of Sir John Evans the English antiquary appeared as the historian of his native country; his pages spoke not of the fights and factions of a few latter centuries, but of the age of mankind; they revealed to our eyes not the mingled grandeur and meanness of individual characters, but vista upon vista of human life struggling upwards and extending backwards through unrecorded time. Such was the story; and it was told so plainly, in such a human sort of way, that, though we continue to differ from the author on several controversial points, his work always calls to our mind the monumental stones which the warrior-judge raised of old upon the plains of Gilgal, to be in present time a removal of reproach and a memorial to future generations.

LOOKING FORWARD.

Posterity. (Williams & Norgate.)

Hope springs eternal in the human breast; and that is why men are so fond of turning from the real world to the building of "Republics," "Cities of God," and "Utopias." But they usually build after the manner of the dramatist who asserted that he had noted all Shakespeare's defects and avoided them, thus attaining perfection. The constructor of the ideal state has only to hit upon the points in which man is a failure as a social animal, and omit them. The anonymous author of this book imagines a man who is rendered unconscious by a friendly doctor and sealed up in a glass receptacle. He awakens in a comfortable bed and the twenty-second century. This occupies three pages, and the remaining 160 are taken up by an exposition of twenty-second century manners delivered by the gentleman who attends the new Rip Van Winkle's bedside. In the interval between now and then a dead set has been made at Great Britain, which has been invaded—unsuccessfully—by France, Germany, and Russia. Germany has deposed the Emperor and adopted Socialism, with the result that all capable men emigrated, and no one could be induced to work. England, warned by this example, has organised a State which gives to everybody the fullest freedom of competition. But the State is very particular as to the health and behaviour of its citizens. Falsehood is punished by imprisonment, and the incorrigible liar is put to death. The exponent of twenty-second century ways explains that a certificate of citizenship is required before the awakened sleeper can take up his quarters, and that a medical examination is necessary.

"Your lungs might be consumptive, and then you would be ordered to a dry, cool climate. Your liver might be disordered, in which case the police must be called in. A diseased liver is certain to result in unsocial conduct; ill-temper, selfishness, arbitraraction, imputations which generate ill-feeling, ungenerous criticism by others, make it desirable to isolate the individual. The sentence pronounced in such cases is usually confined to a few months' hard labour on a strict diet, with frequent bathing and such slight mental exertion as the patient can bear."

The twenty-second century has its own view of crime and punishment.

"A well-known society lady had spread a report that a rival was the daughter of a man who had been convicted of crime. It was true, but the malice was evident, and she was sentenced to three months' hard work as a charwoman at the parish hospital."

But this book suffers from the common defect of all such speculations upon the future. It does not develop human nature upon the lines which it has hitherto followed; it transforms it. If there is one thing more certain than another, it is that man is a selfish animal, and progresses by means of selfishness. For example, a man does not take the trouble to invent a new quick-firing gun because he loves his country, but primarily because he wants to increase his reputation and his income. But this is how the twenty-second century man feels:

"The spirit of the age is expressed in self-effacement for others' good, in gentleness and purity, in courtesy, in charity, and in consideration for the weak and for the poor in spirit. To revel in the knowledge that we have sacrificed our own ease and comfort in order to promote the well-being of our less fortunate, to infuse the lives of the suffering and the poor with something of beauty and of grace; these are objects sufficiently elevating to satisfy the most exalted ambition."

It is obvious enough that a nation of men who took self-effacement for their ideal would never have brought the British nation to the commanding position which the author imagines it to occupy two centuries hence. A book of this kind can be of serious interest only when known tendencies are followed out to their legitimate development. And the only case of such natural development which we have discovered in Posterity is that of the Times. The daily edition of the Times consists of four neatly bound quarto volumes!

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Views of London and Views of the Ancient Priory Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, West Smithfield. Photographed by Freeman Dovaston. (Published by the Author.)

THESE little albums of London views should be extended to a series of some length. They recommend themselves at once by their reasonable size and the refined neatness of their brown-paper covers. Mr. Dovaston has necessarily been compelled to photograph the usual subjects, but this makes it the easier to compare his work with recognised standards, a test which it bears extremely well. We have never seen the Monument treated better than it is here, nor the beautiful line of gables forming the front of Staple Inn, in Holborn. In the second of these albums, that dealing with the Church of St. Bartholomew the Great, the photographs are equally good, having regard to the fact that many of them had to be taken by flash-light or in unfavourable conditions of natural light. We fancy that Mr. Dovaston has spared no pains to secure the purest morning light for every out-door photograph. The photographs are faced by brief notes, which are clear and sufficient without rising above the suitable level of such things. Mr. Dovaston has wisely photographed Trafalgar Square from the south-west corner, thus including St. Martin's Church and excluding the Grand Hotel, whose contour is as dull and round as a Stilton cheese. The style of the following sentence concerning the Bank of England certainly could be improved: "This greatest monetary establishment in the world, and where the interest of the national debt is paid, was first projected by Paterson, a Scotchman, in 1691." But these are trivial matters, and Mr. Dovaston's albums will do.

* * *

The Shakespearean Guide to Stratford-on-Avon. By H. Snowden Ward and Catharine Weld Ward. (Dawbarn & Ward.)

THIS is a very complete and careful guide to Shakespeare's birthplace. The writers have this word to say on accommodation in Stratford:

"As to lodgment in Stratford-on-Avon, our duty is mainly to protest against the old and erroneous idea that prohibitive prices rule in the town. It is an old tradition that Stratford can be better and more cheaply 'done' by staying in Leamington than by staying in Stratford itself. If this had truth at any time it is quite a mistake now, for Stratford has hotel and lodging-house accommodation to suit all tastes and pockets. Residence outside the town is not only a waste of time and money, but, worst of all, it prevents the enjoyment of the evenings and early mornings, which are, in Shakespeare's land, so truly charming."

With this encouragement to the reader the authors proceed to take him "The Tour of the Town," and various wider tours in the neighbourhood. All the objects which are venerated by Shakespearean students are described and commented upon with knowledge. We observe that the authors lay it down that John Shakespeare was a Catholic. It has just been argued strongly, in a book written for the purpose, that the poet's father was a strict Protestant.

* * *

The A B C of the X Rays. By William H. Meadowcroft. (Simpkin, Marshall & Co.)

THERE is no particular merit to be noted about this treatise on "radiography" beyond that it is small. Even so it might advantageously have been made a good deal smaller by omitting a number of chapters on the theory of electricity and manufacture of apparatus, which are either useless or irrelevant. This applies especially to a chapter on frictional machines. Nobody, it is to be presumed, would use a frictional machine for exciting a Crooke's tube if he could get anything else; and to drag in the old, old illustrated chapter on the various methods of producing static electricity, from Volta and the electrophorus downwards, is simply to pad. There are some people, however, who cannot write a line on electricity without going back to the science of the nursery.

As for Mr. Meadowcroft's information on the subject of Röntgen rays, it is not much less, and certainly not more, than has been at the disposal of everybody for months past. It takes no account of recent developments in England or Germany, and tells us absolutely nothing new. The latest and most improved form of tubes—Swinton's graduating ones, for instance, and those of Mr. Herbert Jackson—are not mentioned. This may be due to the fact, surmised by us, that Mr. Meadowcroft resides in America, where his book was printed, and where (as in Judee) they do not know everything. On no other supposition can we account for his holding up Edison either as an authority on the X Ray question, or as the "inventor" of the fluoroscope. Edison's claims in these two respects (if, indeed, he himself makes them) are regarded as jokes in the world of science.

* * *

The Story of the Chemical Elements. By M. M. Pattison Muir, M.A. (George Newnes.)

THE author has handled his unpromising materials so dexterously that his book is extremely interesting. Not only will its perusal give a good general idea of chemical science to the popular reader, but the later chapters may be read with advantage by anyone beginning the study of organic chemistry.

* * *

Hygiene for Beginners. By E. S. Reynolds, M.D. (Macmillan & Co.)

THIS small text-book is designed to aid pupils preparing for the South Kensington examination. Before treating of hygiene, Dr. Reynolds gives a few introductory chapters on anatomy and physiology. The work is carefully and skilfully written, and contains a mass of useful information in a remarkably small compass. The numerous illustrations and diagrams will be found of great use to both teacher and scholar.

* * *

Physics Note-book. By J. C. P. Aldous. (Macmillan & Co.)

IN this note-book numerous typical experiments are briefly described, space being left for the pupil's drawings and remarks. The printed notes will prevent the student from losing sight of the principles which the experiments illustrate. The book should prove of great value to teachers of elementary physics.

* * *

A Junior Course of Practical Chemistry. (Eighth edition.) By Francis Jones. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE present edition of this well-known book has been printed from fresh type, and contains much new matter for the use of students preparing for various examinations. Mr. Jones has also revised the separation tables and has prefixed an explanation to each. The book is greatly enhanced in value by these modifications, and contains all that can be needed by the student of elementary practical chemistry.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION. A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

"THE MARTIAN."

BY GEORGE DU MAURIER.

Mr. Du Maurier's posthumous story follows its two predecessors, Peter Ibbetson and Trilby, in fantastic plot and Bohemian flavour. The main story is of Barty Josselin, artist and novelist, and the secret of his extraordinary magnetic qualities and personal merits. His life is described from infancy to death, his schooldays in Paris having particular notice. There are many illustrations from Mr. Du Maurier's pencil. This book is reviewed on this page. (Harper Brothers. 471 pp. 6s.)

"THE GADFLY."

BY E. L. VOYNICH.

A long novel of Italian political life by an American. This book is being read in America with the keenest interest. The Gadfly is one Felice Rivarez, a conspirator, so called from his sharp tongue and the satirical articles which he wrote in French papers—a stammerer, a cynic, and a figure from whom it is impossible to withhold admiration. (W. Heinemann. 373 pp. 6s.)

"THE INVISIBLE MAN."

BY H. G. WELLS.

Mr. Wells in this story resorts to farce. It is more in the manner of The Wheels of Chance than of his other books, and tells the tale of a man who, like Old Peter in the Bab Ballads, became invisible, while his suit of clothes "did not." Given such an accomplishment as invisibility, there is no one capable of working it out with more ingenuity and humour than Mr. Wells. (C. A. Pearson, Ltd. 3s. 6d.)

"MIDDLE GREYNESS."

BY A. J. DAWSON.

A long novel of life in London and at the Antipodes, by the author of Mere Sentiment. It was at first, says the author, entitled "The Beachcomber." He adds in his prefatory note the wish that his readers will remember that when Horatio spoke half incredulously of the "strange" nature of a certain moving tale, Hamlet replied to him, saying: "And therefore, as a stranger, give it welcome." (John Lane. 458 pp. 4s. 6d.)

"A CHILD IN THE TEMPLE."

BY FRANK MATHEW.

The form of this book is more attractive than that of most stories. Mr. Lane apparently cannot publish a forbidding volume. Mr. Mathew is a young Irish writer whose Wood of the Brambles caused persons who read it to hope for more work from the same hand. A Child in the Temple is slight: an idyll of the "Sweet Lavender" order, with a prologue laid in Ireland, and the rest of the story in London. The Temple is the Temple, E.C. (John Lane. 177 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"THE QUEEN OF THE JESTERS."

BY MAX PEMBERTON.

Mr. Pemberton is the author of a sheaf of romances, to which he is busily adding. Among them are The Iron Pirate, The Sea Wolves, and The Little Huguenot. His new story is a series of episodes in the life of Corinne de Montesson, who in the reign of Louis XV. established herself, says the author, in an old house in the Rue St. Paul, and there, surrounded by a little band of wits, scientists, and adventurers, she made it her ambition to become acquainted with the dens of Paris. The Queen of the Jesters is illustrated. (C. A. Pearson. 332 pp. 6s.)

"A DAY'S TRAGEDY."

BY ALLEN UPWARD.

This is a curious departure in the making of fiction. Prose is a good enough medium for the ordinary story-teller; but Mr. Upward, with the idea, possibly, of being true to his name, soars into verse. A Day's Tragedy is described as a Novel in Rhyme. It begins:

" 'Guilty or not?'

Then a great stir
Quickened the crowded theatre."

The metre is octosyllabic, varied by an occasional line of four beats. The novel has a few illustrations. (Chapman & Hall. 253 pp. 6s.)

"THE CHARMER."

BY SHAN F. BULLOCK.

Mr. Bullock's Awkward Squad proved him to be a writer of humour. The Charmer is in a similar vein. Its sub-title is "A Seaside Comedy," and it is an Irish story of flirtation. The brogue lies thick on every page. It has a few pictures. (James Bowden. 275 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"THE SKIPPER'S WOOING."

BY W. W. JACOBS.

Mr. Jacobs is the new and acceptable humorist who in Many Curgoes gave us the comedy and farce of barge and lugger life on the lower Thames. That book was a collection of short stories. The Skipper's Wooing is practically an expansion of the author's ordinary medium. (C. A. Pearson, Ltd. 3s. 6d.)

"THE DEVIL'S DAUGHTER."

BY VAL NIGHTINGALE.

The name of the Devil's Daughter was Diabline, and she played the fiddle like an angel. A story of hectic life. (Digby, Long & Co. 306 pp. 6s.)

"PRISONERS OF CONSCIENCE."

BY AMELIA E. BARR.

A serious novel, by the authoress of Jan Vedder's Wife and Friend Olivia. Time: Early part of this century. Scene: Lerwick, in the Shetland Islands. The two last chapters are called "The Lowest Hell" and "At last it is Peace." Eleven good illustrations, but the artist's name is omitted. (T. Fisher Unwin. 240 pp. 6s.)

"SYBIL FAIRLEIGH."

BY S. ELIZABETH HALL.

"Tea-visits, letter-writing, church-going," and the usual round of country life, with some unusual happenings, including an attempt at suicide by Sybil—"on the table a phial labelled 'poison,' the glass at her lips. Over its brim she slowly turned on him eyes as of a soul in hell." (Digby, Long & Co. 332 pp. 6s.)

"THE PLAGIARIST."

BY WILLIAM MYRTLE.

Scene: Edinburgh (the author calls the city "Scotland's Romantic Capital"). Has a motive similar to The Giant's Robe. (Oliphant, Anderson & Co. 218 pp. 2s. 6d.)

REVIEWS.

A GREAT AMATEUR.

The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
(Harper & Brothers.)

It is an ungrateful task to criticise Mr. Du Maurier. His books came from him so frankly as a good-will offering, as the best of himself that he could give, that we hate to look them, as it were, in the mouth. Moreover, the brain that devised and remembered so much for our beguilement is now still for ever. It is better to praise where we can and leave the rest; especially as, strictly speaking, George Du Maurier was not a novelist at all: he was a chronicler, a gossip. He wrote for pleasure, and he wished either to be read or let alone. "Criticise my work," he might have said, "my black and white, but leave my play as it is." His books were indeed sheer play. Thackeray certainly was his model, but the pupil went only a short way with the master—falling behind so quickly that, if the charm of individuality were wanting, his books, and particularly The Martian, would often be intolerable. In the hands of a little man, such tricks of digression and button-holing are not to be endured. But Mr. Du Maurier, though not exactly great, was yet not a little man—his point of view was his own, and to many persons it was a fascinating one to occupy, while he added to it perhaps the pleasantest gift of reminiscence that any modern author has possessed, and a measure of weird invention. These qualities, however, do not make for the production of a good novel. On the contrary, they may continually lead their possessor astray from the real issue. Such was the case with Mr. Du Maurier, who was always straying. A less dramatic writer it would be hard to find. His puppets are without power of their own: they themselves do nothing, are nothing: we have only Mr. Du Maurier's testimony that they lived and delighted their fellows. The true novelist, of course, not only alleges but proves. It is when Mr. Du Maurier recollects an unimportant or irrelevant personage, and offers a glimpse of him in half a page, that we are persuaded. Some of those odd wayfarers who, as it were, pass before our window and disappear again, are credible enough; whereas the chief actors—the Peter Ibbetsons, the Barty Josselins, the Svengalis, the Trilbys—are rarely to be taken seriously. What, then, is the reason for the extraordinary popularity of this amateur of fiction? Briefly, it is a pure matter of personality. The style is the man, and the man is among the most agreeable of companions.

Contrasted with the lot of the ordinary professional novelist who writes for a living from his youth upwards, and puts as little as possible rather than as much as possible into each new story, Mr. Du Maurier's career as a writer was almost ideal. The work of his life was done in black and white, which exacted the best energies of his most vigorous years. Then, when fame and fortune were his, and he had earned the right to rest, he turned, with the delight of a child on a holiday, to the making of books. He squandered himself on the joyous task. He wrote primarily for his own amusement, and made his books mirror the life he best loved. His three books (he had time only for three) tell us everything of their author. Fiction and autobiography are inextricably intertwined. Himself and his friends, his boyhood and youth, his preferences and dislikes—these are the framework of all three: the story is mere accessory. "George Du Maurier in three volumes" would be a fair embracive title. The books tell us his favourite artists and authors, his favourite musicians and songs, his ideals of manhood and womanhood, his creed, and a thousand secrets beside. If you care for Mr. Du Maurier's type of mind, you will care for his writings; if you like his writings, you must like his mind: it is a case of "Love me, love my dog," and "Love my dog, love me." No author ever wore his heart on his sleeve as Mr. Du Maurier did, although many have set out to do so with more protestations of frankness.

The result is that Peter Ibbetson, Trilby, and The Martian are very bad art, but very good entertainment. To English readers, and more particularly to Americans, they have been a revelation. Americans, of course, have lost their heads a little, because good Americans, when they die, go to Paris, and in the Parisian background to these stories consists much of their charm. It is the Paris of dreams—the gay, entrancing, careless, vivacious Paris that people want to believe in. It is the Paris of Murger, and his irresponsible, joyous young men, restored to us; to the confusion and rout of M. Zola and the naturalistes, and the evil-smelling, evil-doing Paris of their works. Again, Mr. Du Maurier's Bohemianism is attractive; it never oversteps the bounds; it is never ugly, never out of control. Commonplace readers can as they read almost believe themselves also to be artists! And another charm is the air of wistfulness that pervades the pages. Mr. Du Maurier remembered his youth so gracefully, and with such tender regrets. He was a prince of sentimentalists. People like this. A title-page which, like that of The Martian, bears the quotation:

"Après le plaisir vient la peine; Après la peine, la vertu," is certain to be desired; although, as a matter of fact, many books have deserved the motto more thoroughly than The Martian does. I should say that the interest of Mr. Du Maurier's plots was the least potent of his attractions. His plots were too fantastic, too improbable, for the average man. None the less one would expect an instructive return if a census could be taken of Mr. Du Maurier's readers who have crossed their feet at night in the hope of dreaming as Peter Ibbetson did, or have left writing materials by their bedsides to lure, like Barty Josselin, an astral adviser from the sky.

This brings me to The Martian, the third and last of the trilogy. It may be said at the outset that of the three stories Peter Ibbetson has the best workmanship, Trilby is the most interesting, and The Martian is richest in charm. The Martian strikes me as having been more a labour of love to the author than were even the other two. It reads as though it was his own favourite. It is more Thackerayan in manner than its predecessors—and Thackeray was, of course, the writer's ideal as a novelist—and there is more of Mr. Du Maurier in its pages. Nominally the book is edited by Mr. Du Maurier from the MS. of Sir Robert Maurice, wine merchant and politician; but the wine merchant and politician are quickly forgotten, and whenever one meets with an "I" one thinks first of Mr. Du Maurier. Artistically The Martian would be an infinitely better book were it reduced to the first three parts, or about one hundred and fifty pages, and called "Barty Josselin's Schooldays," or something of the kind. There is no doubt whatever that as it stands the book is too long and too uneventful. Trilby spoiled us for an uneventful story. But the early chapters are sheer delight. They give us Mr. Du Maurier at his best—gay, tender, mercurial, humorous, always a hero worshipper, often whimsically intolerant, often trivial, if you like, but never for an instant dull or unworthy. Most authors enjoy writing about their schooldays; but none can have come to the labour with more enthusiasm than Mr. Du Maurier; the result being that we have in this section of The Martian an addition to the literature of schooldays which has very high merit and unique charm. The story of the Institution Brossard will give delight for many years to come. Later in the book are scenes and figures which will always be recalled with pleasure, but in my opinion Barty Josselin will live by virtue of his boyhood. Here is the account of the beginnings of the only fight that Barty and Bob Maurice (the narrator) ever had. It was the day on which their schoolmaster died, and they were sitting apart reading a story by Chateaubriand together:

"If I remember aright, René, a very sentimental young Frenchman, who had loved the wrong person not wisely, but too well (a very wrong person, indeed, in his case), emigrated to North America, and there he met a beautiful Indian maiden, one Atala, of the Natchez tribe, who had rosy cheeks, and was charming, and whose entire skin was probably a warm dark red, although this was not insisted upon. She also had a brother, whose name was Outogamiz.

Well, René loved Atala, Atala loved René, and they were married; and Outogamiz went through some ceremony besides, which made him blood-brother and bosom friend to René—a bond which involved certain obligatory rites and duties and self-sacrifices.

Atala died and was buried. René died and was buried also; and every day, as in duty bound, poor Outogamiz went and pricked a vein, and bled over René's tomb, till he died himself of exhaustion before he was many weeks older. I quote entirely from memory.

This simple story was told in very touching and beautiful language, by no means telegraphese, and Barty and I were deeply affected by it.

'I say, Bob!' Barty whispered to me with a break in his voice, 'some day I'll marry your sister, and we'll all go off to America together, and she'll die, and I'll die, and you shall bleed yourself to death on my tomb!'

'No,' said I, after a moment's thought. 'No—look here! I'll marry your sister, and I'll die, and you shall bleed over my tomb!'

Then, after a pause—

'I haven't got a sister, as you know quite well—and if I had she wouldn't be for you!' says Barty.

'Why not?'

'Because you're not good-looking enough!' says Barty."

This is admirable. Boys are made just so. Here is another passage:

"In front of me that dishonest little sneak Rapaud, with a tall parapet of books before him to serve as a screen, one hand shading his eyes, and an inkless pen in the other, was scratching his copy-book with noisy earnestness, as if time were too short for all he had to write about the pious Æneas' recitative, while he surreptitiously read the Comte de Monte Cristo, which lay open in his lap—just at the part where the body, sewn up in a sack, was going to be hurled into the Mediterranean. I knew the page well. There was a splash of red ink upon it.

It made my blood boil with virtuous indignation to watch him, and I coughed and hemmed again and again to attract his attention, for his back was nearly towards me. He heard me perfectly, but took no notice whatever, the deceitful little beast. He was to have given up Monte Cristo to me at half-past two, and here it was twenty minutes to three! Besides which, it was my Monte Cristo, bought with my own small savings, and smuggled into school by me at great risk to myself.

'Maurice!' said M. Bonzig.

'Oui, M'sieu!' said I. I will translate—

'You shall conjugate and copy out for me forty times the compound verb "I cough without necessity to distract the attention of my comrade Rapaud from his Latin exercise."'

'Moi, M'sieu?' I ask innocently.
'Oui, vous!'
'Bien, M'sieu!'

It may seem odd that these passages are quoted to the exclusion of any remarks about the main story; but the main story is not as important as it might be. Mr. Du Maurier did less than usual to make it credible. Put briefly, we are confronted with an Admirable Crichton—artist, guardsman, musician, novelist, athlete, fencer, poet, perfect man, perfect lover—in Barty Josselin, and are asked to believe that his fortunes were to some extent controlled by a sympathetic soul in Mars called Martia, who writes him letters of instruction in painfully mundane English. Luckily this idea matters nothing, because the book has better things than Barty in it. As a boy Barty is a delight, but we lose touch with him in later life. Mr. Du Maurier lavished pains to make him a prince of men, and he moves us hardly more than a statue. Perfection is not a good trap for sympathy. On the other hand, he moved among delightful people, such as Père Polyphème and M. Bonzig, and, as I have said before, he had perfect schooldays. Hence all is well with the reader. Here is the description of little Barty's introduction to the Rohans, his guardians—a piece of genuine Du Maurier:

"Lady Archibald was delighted with the child, who was quite beautiful. She fell in love with the little creature at the first sight of him—and fed him, on the evening of his arrival, with crumpets and buttered toast, and in return he danced 'La Dieppoise' for her, and sang her a little ungrammatical ditty in praise of wine and women. It began:

'Beuvons, beuvons, beuvons donc
De ce vin le meilleur du monde . . .
Beuvons, beuvons, beuvons donc
De ce vin, car il est très-bon!
Si je n'en beuvions pas,
J'aurions la pépi-e!
Ce qui me . . .'

I have forgotten the rest—indeed, I am not quite sure that it is fit for the drawing-room.

'Ah, mon Dieu! quel amour d'enfant! Oh, gardons-le!' cried my lady; and they kept him.

I can imagine the scene. Indeed, Lady Archibald has described it to me, and Barty remembered it well. It was his earliest English recollection, and he has loved buttered toast and crumpets ever since—as well as women and wine."

The book is all in this key. The end is abrupt and unconvincing, but en route there is so much entertainment: tender memories and whimsical reflections; beautiful women and grotesque men; and in and between the lines of every page you may see the author—so impatient of tedium, so vigilant for what is comely and interesting, so continually faithful to the old, so bravely boyish, and so incorrigibly and delightfully French.

Scottish Border Life. By James C. Dibdin.
(Methuen & Co.)

Mr. Dibdin is one of the men who bring upon Scotsmen the unjust discredit of not being able to understand a joke. He is ambitious; he is earnest; he is dull. I should be glad to learn that he is young. If he has seen fewer than thirty summers, this book should not be counted against him.

The first of the new tales of the Border concerns Mr. Timothy Monyflower. Mr. Monyflower was the sole survivor of a large family of sons. All the others had died of consumption. Mr. Timothy seemed like to follow suit; but he did not. Much against the wills of his mother and the family physician, he quitted home for Glasgow University with a hacking cough. Instead of dying, he became a scholarlike man of the world. He drank heavily; but he was brilliant. Soon after his return home he fell in love and ceased to drink too much. At the bidding of her father, however, the lady refused to have him; and he took to the flowing bowl again. Then came "the annual County Ball." Mr. Timothy Monyflower was there. He was "in the refreshment-room," of course; and the talk of the bacchanals having "drifted to the subject of women," "some one taunted Monyflower with having been jilted, hinting, even, that no girl would have him." Thereupon Mr. Monyflower, having "dashed his glass to the floor," entered the ball-room, stopped the dance, and made a speech. "I am a man of few words," he said, "and what I have to say concerns the ladies. I have been jilted by one young lady, and I have been told to-night that not a girl in the Borders will have me—there's my hand, and the girl that first grasps it firm I shall marry her." After a long pause, the daughter of a farmer, who had adored the sot from a distance, seized the chance: mainly, I must allow, from chivalrous pity. She went home with him; her father followed the carriage; the sot and the prospective father-in-law spent the night, and a fortnight, in drinking. As the sot had suddenly become rich, the father of his first love and the love herself called at the sot's house, and had called again; but the sot would have none of them. He married the maid who had taken his dirty hand. She died, of course, and he went wrong; and that is the whole story. Mr. Dibdin tells the tale with much unction.

All the other stories are just as prosy as that about the sot. Usually Mr. Dibdin is grammatically correct; but his mincing gentility is abominable. He calls a godfather "god-papa." He says that events "transpire." A man is never a man to him: a man is always an "individual." The physician who did his best for the sot is "the sycophantic knight of pill and poultice." Mr. Dibdin speaks of "the desperation of despair." He has a "Master of Ceremonies" at the County Ball: there is no such person at a county ball. He calls the Free Church of Scotland a "Kirk": the only institution to which that word is applicable is the Church of Scotland. Likewise, seeking to pose as a metaphysician, he speaks about an "objective consciousness of ideas upon religious subjects": that is bosh.

Fortune's Footballs. By G. B. Burgin.
(C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.)

Mr. Burgin is better company when he writes humorously about Four Corners than when he would seriously transfer London life to his pages. A man who describes an elemental community is allowed a certain amount of rope which we cannot grant to the social critic in our midst. Mr. Burgin knows too little of human nature as it is ever to make a good novel, but of a comic variety of human nature as it might be he is an agreeable historian. Fortune's Footballs is a tissue of improbable incidents and impossible persons put forward by its author seriously as a credible story. As, however, he has shown no power of imparting any semblance of reality to his puppets, few readers will be deceived. Not even the following passage, from the description of a first night, is "convincing":

"Davenport Adams smiled benignantly at the beautiful young actress led on by Tregennis; Joseph Knight began to scribble hurried notes; and Clement Scott glided away with that expression on his face which always forewarns people not to speak to him until he has written his critique."

The story itself, to anyone not concerned with literary distinction, will fill an idle hour passably. Villainy is punished, and virtue triumphs, in the old inexorable manner, and the last words are of love. But there are hard things on the way. There is, for example, a man described as "a lineal descendant of Baron Munchausen, not wholly unacquainted with the conversational methods of Ananias."

Tales of the Rock. By Mary Anderson.
(Downey.)

This little volume of short stories has at least one good point: the stories gain a certain coherence of effect from the similarity of scene. They are all tales of Gibraltar; nevertheless, I cannot say that I have much more idea of life on "the Rock" than I had before reading it. I am not conscious of the least desire to visit Gibraltar or avoid it. Only one of the stories, "Dwellers in Linea," contrives to get a picturesque and novel interest with its account of running contraband tobacco by the help of trained dogs, who swim ashore carrying it. The same tale relates a most remarkable instance of Spanish cruelty and callousness which I should hesitate about believing. But, upon the whole, the book is a collection of trivial enough little tales, which, however, are not tedious, and do not sin against either taste or grammar.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of
PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS
 OF
FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL OF PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY OF BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size, 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY
FINE ART GALLERY,
 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natural Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely flavoured powder—"Cocoaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many, beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system. Sold only in labelled Tins.

STANDARD ENGLISH DICTIONARIES.*THE STUDENT'S ENGLISH DIC-

TIONARY. Literary, Scientific, Etymological, and Pronouncing. By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D. New Edition, thoroughly Revised and greatly augmented. Edited by CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D. With Extensive Appendices, comprising List of Names in Fiction, Mythology, &c.; Key to Literary Allusions; List of English Authors, with Dates; Pronouncing List of Classical and Scriptural Names; Foreign Words and Phrases; Moneys, Weights, and Measures of the World; Abbreviations; Mathematical, Astronomical, Chemical, and other Signs, &c. Illustrated by nearly 800 Engravings on Wood. Large fcap. 4to, 873 pages, cloth, red edges, 7s. 6d.; half-persian, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco flexible, 12s. 6d.

"The book is a very handy size, and is issued at a surprisingly low price. The woodcuts are remarkably well executed. Leaving out of account the unwieldy and expensive recent editions of Webster and Worcester, we have no hesitation in saying that this is by far the most useful one-volume English dictionary at present existing." Athenæum.

THE CONCISE ENGLISH DIC-

TIONARY. Literary, Scientific, Etymological, and Pronouncing. Based on Ogilvie's Imperial Dictionary. By CHARLES ANNANDALE, M.A., LL.D. New Edition, Revised and Extended, 864 pages, fcap. 4to, cloth, 6s.; roxburgh, 6s. 6d.; half-morocco, 9s.

"Stands towards other dictionaries of the smaller character in the relation of the 'Imperial' to rival lexicons—in other words, it holds the 'premier' place."—Spectator.

A SMALLER ENGLISH DIC-

TIONARY. Etymological, Pronouncing, and Explanatory. For the Use of Schools. By JOHN OGILVIE, LL.D. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; roxburgh, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED,
 OLD BAILEY.

HARPER & BROTHERS'
NEW PUBLICATIONS.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

THE MARTIAN

BY

GEORGE DU MAURIER,

Author of "Trilby" and "Peter Ibbetson."

ILLUSTRATED THROUGHOUT BY THE AUTHOR

Imperial 16mo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

An EDITION DE LUXE, limited to 250 Copies, Printed on Dickinson's Hand-made Paper, specially manufactured for this Edition, with Frontispiece, Portrait, all the Illustrations by the Author, and Facsimile Reproductions by P. Dujardin, from Six of the Original Pencil Studies for the final Illustrations, imperial 8vo bound in vellum and buckram, £2 2s.

SECOND EDITION OF BARRY PAIN'S SUCCESSFUL NOVEL.*THE OCTAVE OF CLAUDIUS.

By BARRY PAIN.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"In 'The Octave of Claudius' Mr. Barry Pain has achieved a brilliant success. It is a singularly thrilling story, impossible to lay down, but the chief merits and the chief charms of the book lie in its humour, its satire, its subtle studies of character, its vivid descriptions, and its brilliant conversations."—The Sketch.

THE OCTAVE OF CLAUDIUS.

By BARRY PAIN.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [Second Edition.]

"Very absorbing, very powerful, and a very haunting story. Few people will be able to leave the book once they have started reading it; and few who have read it are likely to forget it."—The Graphic.

BLIGHT. By the Hon. Mrs. Walter R.D.

FORBES. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Clever and successful."—Pall Mall Gazette."An excellent novel of society."—Manchester Guardian.OUR WILLS AND FATES.

"Beyond question a strong book."

Manchester Guardian.OUR WILLS AND FATES."Altogether a remarkable novel."—The Times.OUR WILLS AND FATES.

By KATHERINE WYLDE.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

"Natural, bold in conception, full of spirit and delicacy." Athenæum.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK.

TO BE PUBLISHED NEXT WEEK.

WHITE MAN'S AFRICA.

By POULTNEY BIGELOW.

Profusely Illustrated from Drawings by R. Caton Woodville, and from Photographs by the Author.

Demy 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 10s. [September 24.]

NEW NOVEL BY M. E. FRANCIS.*MAIME O' THE CORNER.

By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. FRANCIS BLUNDELL),

Author of "In a North Country Village," &amp;c.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [September 24.]

NEXT WEEK.

A FAIR DECEIVER: a Novel.

By GEORGE PASTON,

Author of "A Modern Amazon," &amp;c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

NOTE.—List of New Books post free on application.

HARPER &amp; BROTHERS, LONDON AND NEW YORK

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SOWERS."

ON SEPTEMBER 24TH, Crown 8vo, 6s.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

AUTHOR OF "THE SOWERS," "WITH EDGED TOOLS," &amp;c.

NEW NOVEL BY OLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY.

ON SEPTEMBER 25TH, Crown 8vo, 6s.

ONE OF THE BROKEN BRIGADE.

By OLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY,

AUTHOR OF "SNAP," "THE QUEENSBERRY CUP," &amp;c.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared this year:—

SAMUEL RICHARDSON...	January	2	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ...	April	17
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ...	"	9	HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-	"	24
LEIGH HUNT ...	"	16	FELLOW ...	"	"
LORD MACAULAY ...	"	23	ANDREW MARVELL ...	May	1
ROBERT SOUTHHEY ...	"	30	ROBERT BROWNING ...	"	8
S. T. COLERIDGE ...	February	6	THOMAS CARLYLE ...	"	15
CHARLES LAMB ...	"	13	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ...	"	22
MICHAEL DRAYTON ...	"	20	CHARLES DICKENS ...	"	29
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ...	"	27	JONATHAN SWIFT ...	June	5
SAMUEL PEYS ...	March	6	WILLIAM MAKEPEACE } THACKERAY ...	"	12
EDMUND WALLER ...	"	13	WILLIAM BLAKE ...	"	19
WILKIE COLLINS ...	"	20	SIR RICHARD STEELE ...	"	26
JOHN MILTON ...	"	27	ALEXANDER POPE ...	July	3
WILLIAM COWPER ...	April	3	DOUGLAS JERROLD ...	"	10
CHARLES DARWIN ...	"	10	FRANCIS BACON ...	"	17

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1897.

No. 1324, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 8	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IT is late in the day for the announcement of a new work by Charles Dickens, but such a one is made by Mr. Redway. The indefatigable Mr. Kitton, who knows Dickens as Mr. Hardy knows Dorsetshire, has discovered in out-of-the-way places enough stories, articles, and essays by the novelist to make up a volume, which will shortly be published under the title To be Read at Dusk. It is probably not of the highest merit, but to some persons anything, however trivial, that a great man writes is of interest. Apparently there is still copyright in some of these pieces, and two editions will therefore be issued, one in England and one in America. The English edition will contain much that the American does not, and contrariwise. Hence, to have the treasure-trove complete, it will be necessary to possess both editions.

BIOGRAPHY by epigram is a dangerous experiment, the epigrammatist's wit being so frequently the enemy of truth. But the writer of the brief account of Mr. Henley which accompanies Mr. Rothenstein's portrait in English Portraits (Grant Richards) hits the nail on the head more than once. For example:

"He is so fine an exponent of philosophic Toryism, and has so fast a grip of its principles, that he would have been a fearful thorn in the Tory side had he gone into the House of Commons. Happily, he chose to adorn literature, and is known to us as the writer of many beautiful verses, and as the most trenchant of all our critics. His style—so wholly his own, with its curt and burnished phrases—is a trap in which several young men have come to most untimely ends: whilst others, still with us, owe much of their success to his influence and his encouragement."

THE estimate continues:

"He is a famous talker, who will listen with the utmost courtesy to anyone who dares interrupt him, and the old tag, ex forti dulcedo seems quite appropriate to 'Burly,' for he is as much loved by all who know him as he is feared by all whom he knows. He has written plays (much admired by every actor-manager) with Robert Louis Stevenson, has edited Burns and the Scots Observer, has ever been of a habit most disputative and polemic, and is supposed to admire the writings of Mr. Andrew Lang. Indeed, it is one of the most startling facts in modern ethnography that Mr. Henley is not a Scotchman."

"Burly," we take it, is derived from Mr. Stevenson's essay on "Talk and Talkers." Mr. Henley's share in London should certainly have been noticed, not the least curious circumstance in his career being the part played by so vigorous a mind in setting the fashion for such saccharine trifles as rondeaux, triolets, and ballades.

IN connexion with the foregoing paragraphs it may be stated that the fourth and concluding volume of Messrs. Henley & Henderson's Centenary Edition of Burns, containing Mr. Henley's essay on the Life, Genius, and Achievements of the poet, which extends to upwards of one hundred pages, will be published on the 25th instant, by Messrs. Jack, of Edinburgh. In Mr. Heinemann's announcements are included a second volume of Mr. Henley's new edition of Byron; "Macaire" and "Admiral Guinea," two of the plays written by Mr. Henley in conjunction with Mr. Stevenson; and a selection of Mr. W. S. Blunt's poems, to which Mr. Henley puts an introduction. Messrs. Methuen also announce Mr. Henley's English Lyrics for October.

WE understand that Mrs. Morris has decided to give up Kelmescott House, Hammersmith, and that the lease has been taken over by Mr. H. C. Marillier. Besides the interest conferred upon Kelmescott House by Mr. Morris, who made it the central scene of his Utopia in News from Nowhere, and erected his presses next door, there is an older legend attached to it. Sir Francis Ronalds, one of the pioneers of electric telegraphy, lived there and built what was practically the first experimental long line, carrying several miles of wire up and down the spacious garden, which is one of the principal charms of the estate. There is a medallion to the memory of Ronalds on the front of the house, put up during Mr. Morris's lifetime. How much interest the post-decorator-socialist took in the erection is not stated—but Mr. Morris was no lover of modern science.

OF the art treasures and personal relics accumulated at Kelmescott House, a very few will be allowed to remain. The handsome Persian carpet which used to hang as a canopy in the dining room has been bought by the South Kensington Museum for £200, and the valuable Rossettis will probably be lent by Mrs. Morris to one or other of the national collections. The Kelmescott Press, as previously announced in the ACADEMY, will be wound-up by the executors as soon as the works now in hand are completed. As for Mr. Morris's magnificent library, that has already been sold at a very high figure to a purchaser whose name is to remain a secret.

IN the Times of Wednesday Mr. de Blowitz gave a short extract from the first chapter of a novel by M. Augustin Filon, just beginning in the Revue de Paris. The novel, which is entitled Babel, contains a description of a birthday celebration of the late Prince Imperial at Chislehurst, shortly after the death of Napoleon III. M. Filon, the author, having been the Prince's tutor, is in a position to give a portrait of the Prince which is interesting as an historical document. This is the passage which Mr. de Blowitz translates:

"In their midst, well in advance, a youth still slim, not very tall, but very straight, pale with the pallor of happy emotion, which his red ribbon accentuated. The glance, pure, broad, and frank, of his blue eye, dilated with enthusiasm, was directed smilingly at the friendly company, dominated it, and embraced it. A gray-haired personage—it was a fine, a venerable head—who they said was the Duke of Padua, read an address in the name of the committees. Then the Prince replied. . . . He had for France and for his family words that were filial and touching and simple. He spoke modestly and confidently of himself, of the future which seemed to him so bright, and which God was hiding behind a veil. And you felt that the rhetoric of the professors of politics went for nothing in this speech, so full of the effusion of youth and of faith. When, apropos of popular sovereignty, which was the dogma of his family, he uttered these words, 'C'est le salut et c'est le droit,' his voice flung out this last word with so manly a vibration and an accent so energetically affirmative that all those present were startled as at the revelation of a character and a destiny. They felt themselves aroused, and a great cry went up, 'Vive l'Empereur.'"

WHEN the time comes for Lockhart's Life of Scott to be added to Messrs. Black's Standard Edition of the Waverley Novels it will be found that the abridgment and not the complete biography has been decided upon. This, in the opinion of many persons, is a pity, although, probably, the majority would vote for the condensation. Mr. Gladstone himself, who, as a rule, is in favour of spacious literature, once expressed a wish for Lockhart in an abridged form; not for himself, it is true, but in order that more people might come to know the book. The same edition will contain also a selection of Scott's poems, edited by Mr. Lang, who has, we believe, already performed a similar task for another firm of publishers; and the Tales of a Grandfather, with an introduction by Dean Farrar.

EVERY few years sees a new edition of the Waverley Novels. This is as it should be, for each generation wants something newer than the editions which former generations were glad to read in. Messrs. Dent & Co. have made their popular series so attractive—the Temple Shakespeare and the Temple Classics, to wit—that we are convinced beforehand that it will be hard to resist the edition of Scott which they are now preparing. In the Temple Classics the rule has been to omit prefaces, but in the case of Scott a reversion will be made to the plan adopted with the Temple Shakespeare, and a short account of each novel will stand as introduction. These will be provided by Mr. Clement K. Shorter.

A GENTLEMAN who has been lecturing on Mr. Barrie and his writings has received an interesting note from the author of Sentimental Tommy touching his sojourn in Nottingham as a member of the staff of the Nottingham Express. Mr. Barrie writes:

"I thank you for your letter, and wish you had a better subject for your lecture. I don't know of any personal article about myself that is not imaginary and largely erroneous. But there is really nothing to tell that would interest anyone. Yes, I was in Nottingham for a year, and liked it well, though I was known to scarce any one. If you ever met an uncouth stranger wandering in the dark round the castle, ten or twelve years ago, his appearance unimpressive, a book in each pocket, and his thoughts 300 miles due north, it might have been the subject of your lecture."

The remark concerning the inaccuracy of the personal articles suggests Mr. Barrie's answer to someone who asked where he lived. "I am always at Thrums," he replied, "except when the papers say I am."

THE following advertisement is taken from an American magazine:—

Mr. Reader:

Ask your Bookseller to show you the new 25c edition of the RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM, published by Dodge Book and Stationery Co.

How would this have struck Edward Fitzgerald in his Suffolk hermitage?

THE title of Mark Twain's new book has again been changed. It began by being The Surviving Innocent Abroad; then it was More Tramps Abroad, and now and finally it is Following the Equator. According to the Critic Mark Twain receives the colossal amount of £8,000 for this work—a sum which he will straightway hand over to his creditors, and thus reduce his debt to £4,000. At this rate we may hope very shortly to see the humorist again free from financial care.

THE Critic contains also the following particulars of Following the Equator. It contains about seventy or eighty chapters, each one of which is headed with a new Pudd'nhead Wilson maxim. One of these reads, 'The best protection of principles is prosperity.' The poster that will be used in advertising Following the Equator represents Mr. Clemens sitting tilted back in a steamer-chair, with a yachting cap pulled well over his eyes. Under the picture, in a facsimile of his autograph, is the line, 'Be good and you will be lonesome.' 'As there is no one in sight,' adds The Lounger, "I take it that Mr. Clemens is good."

THE current Chap Book contains "A Plea," addressed by Mr. John Kendrick Bangs to the gentlemen who criticise books. There are so many of that fraternity in our own country that we may give some publicity to the appeal on this side of the Atlantic too. Mr. Bangs's argument is thus stated:

"When Shakespeare was a novice at the art of writing plays, He'd no such competition as the men of modern days;

For when on paper first he put his pathos and his wit, The plays of William Shakespeare were of course as yet unwrit.

And so it was with Milton, when he sought life's richest pelf, He never had a foeman like his highly honoured self,

Nor was there ever on the shelves in Addison's great day Another gentle essayist to tourney for the bay."

So much being stated, Mr. Bangs puts the case for himself and his brethren of the pen:

"And so, ye critics, gently deal with those poor wights who now Are struggling for the wreath that fame puts on the worthy brow;

For it is true, past question, that the race is harder won, Because of what these giants of the gloried past have done.

Discourage not the running, if it seem not very fast, By flaunting in the runner's eyes the records of the past;

* * * * *

And for those weary souls who fail—whate'er the reason be, Grant them the consolation of your silent sympathy."

The unfortunate circumstance is that silence gives consent; which is the last thing that one wishes to suggest to so many of these failures.

THE Beauties of Marie Corelli are before us. They came here in the waste hours of last Tuesday afternoon—insidiously—in a small green volume, pp. 124. Some are short, some are middling long; and long or short they are all culled by Annie Mackay from the gifted and popular authoress's works. We refrain from criticism, but we cannot refrain from writing down some—a poor six—of the Beauties that leapt at us as we roamed the pages. The first has all the freshness of a spring morning:

"Methinks those who are best beloved of the gods are chosen first to die."—From Ardath.

"The heart-whole appreciation of the million is by no means so 'vulgar' as it is frequently considered."—Ibid.

"We are never grateful enough to the candid persons who wake us from our dreams."—From Vendetta.

"Who can adequately describe the thrilling excitement attending an aristocratic 'crush'?"—From Thelma.

"Genius is a big thing; I do not assume to possess it."—From The Murder of Delicia.

"Great Heavens!"—From Ziska.

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

I.—DON QUIXOTE.

Don Quixote for a paltry two shillings! That is the latest exploit of cheap printing, and Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Co. are responsible for it. I should hope that many, like myself, will be delighted with so easy an opportunity of renewing a delightful acquaintance; and those who have not yet made it have no excuse now for delay. I cannot say I care for the illustrations, which seem to me a peculiarly cheap travesty of the style of Daniel Vierge; but they are few, and need not concern the reader. The translation is the old one of Jarvis. Now, Jarvis was no master of style; but he had the inestimable advantage of living in the eighteenth century, when a fascinating style was in the air, and consequently he is a most pleasant and stimulating change from the featureless style of the average modern novel. I have spent some charming hours with this treasure brought to my gate. Was there ever so strange a book as this Don Quixote? To what class shall we assign it? Solitary, singular, it will not be pigeon-holed; your literary entomologists shall ticket it, genus and sub-genus it, at their peril. It is complex beyond measure. It is a piece of literary duplicity without precedent or succession; nay, duplicity within duplicity, a sword turning all ways, like that which guarded "unpermitted Eden" (to quote a cancelled verse of Rossetti's Love's Nocturn). Let not Swift say that he was born to introduce and refine irony. The irony of Cervantes is refined and dangerous beyond the irony of Swift; Swift's is obvious beside it. All irony is double-tongued; but whether it be the irony of Swift, or Swift's predecessors, or Swift's successors, it has this characteristic: that its duplicity is (so to speak) a one-sided duplicity; if you do not take the inner meaning, you read baffled, without pleasure, without admiration, without comprehension. "Who are you a-getting at?" is the reader's feeling. But this strange irony, this grave irony, this broadly-laughing irony, of the strange, grave, humorous Spaniard, delights even those who have not a touch of the ironic in their composition. They laugh at the comic mask, who cannot see the melancholy face behind it. It is the Knight of the Rueful Countenance in the vizard of Sancho Panza; and all laugh, while some few have tears in their laughter. "Ha! ha" guffaw the many; "well, to be sure, what an ass is this Don Quixote, and how vastly diverting are his absurd doings! Ha! ha!" And they know not that their derision is derided; that they are trapped and cozened into jeers; that Cervantes, from behind his mask, beholds their fat-witted grins with a sardonic smile.

A core of scornful and melancholy protest, set about with a pulp of satire, and outside all a rind of thick burlesque—that is Don Quixote. It never "laughed Spain's chivalry away." Chivalry was no more in a country where it could be written. Where it could be thought an impeachment of idealism, idealism had ceased to be. Against this very state of things its secret but lofty contempt is aimed. Herein lies its curious complexity. Outwardly Cervantes falls in with the waxing materialism of the day, and professes to satirise everything that is chivalrous and ideal. Behind all that, is subtle, suppressed, mordant satire of the material spirit in all its forms: the clownish materialism of the boor; the comfortable materialism of the bourgeois; the pedantic materialism of the scholar and the mundane cleric; the idle, luxurious, arrogant materialism of the noble—all agreeing in derisive conceit of superiority to the poor madman who still believes in grave, exalted, heroic ideas of life and duty. Finally, at the deepest core of the strange and wonderful satire, in which the hidden mockery is so opposite to the seeming mockery, lies a sympathy even to tears with all height and heroism insulated and out of date, mad to the eyes of a purblind world: nay, a bitter confession that such nobility is, indeed, mad and phantasmal, in so much as it imputes its own greatness to a petty and clay-content society. Even Sancho is held up to admiration mixed with smiles, because he has the dim yet tough insight to follow what he does not understand, yet obscurely feels to be worthy of love and following. The author of the heroic Numantia a contemner of the lofty and ideal! It could not be. Surely Don Quixote has much of the writer's self; of his poetic discontent with the earthy and money-seeking society around him. There is no true laughter in literature with such a hidden sadness as that of Cervantes.

Yet it is laughter, and not all sad. The man is a humorist, and feels that if the world be full of mournful humour, yet life would go nigh to madness if there were not some honest laughter as well—laughter from the full lungs. Therefore he gives us Sancho—rich, unctuous, Shakespearean humour to the marrow of him. The mockers of the Don, with their practical jests on him, furnish the understanding reader with but pitying and half-reluctant laughter; but the faithful compost of fat and flesh who cleaves to the meagre visionary allows us mirth unstinted and unqualified. Many a touch in this creation of the great Spaniard reminds us of like touches in the greatest of Englishmen. Sancho's blunt rejection of titles, for example: "Don does not belong to me, nor ever did to any of my family: I am called plain Sancho Panza, my father was a Sancho, and my grandfather a Sancho, and they were all Panzas, without any addition of Dons or Donnas." Who does not remember at once the drunken tinker's "What! am I not Christopher Sly?" &c. The two passages are delightfully kindred in style and humour. How like, too, is Sancho's meandering telling of his story at the Duke's table, and Dame Quickly's narrative style, when she recounts Falstaff's promise of marriage! Unadulterated peasant nature both—the same in Spain as in Eastcheap. What more gloriously characteristic than Sancho's rebutting of the charge that he may prove ungrateful in advancement to high station? "Souls like mine are covered four inches thick with the grease of the old Christian." But enough. With all the inward gravity of his irony, Cervantes has abundantly provided that we need not take his seriousness too seriously: there is laughter in rivers, even for those who enter deepest into that grave core. We do not deny that he laughs himself at his Knight, as an idealist can laugh at his own extravagances; and invites you to laugh too—with the laughter which does homage to what is laughed at. And this many-sided masterpiece of Spain and the world is now at anyone's command for two shillings! "Let those read now who never read before; and those who always read now read the more."

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

RICHARD HOLT HUTTON.

MR. HUTTON was born seventy-one years ago. So much is told in the one or two scant biographies which have accompanied the announcement of his death in the daily press. The inscription on the coffin was not more communicative: "Richard Holt Hutton. Died Sept. 9, 1897. Aged seventy-one years." The only London paper, so far as we have seen, which went further into detail did so in these words: "He was born in London, where his father was minister of Carter-lane Chapel." The truth is, that Richard Holt Hutton was born in Leeds, where his father served the Mill Hill Chapel from 1818 to 1835. The exact date of his birth was June 2, 1826, and it was followed by his baptism on September 12. His father, who himself was the son of the Unitarian minister of Eustace-street Chapel, Dublin, did afterwards move to London, to the pastorate of Carter-lane Chapel. The future journalist was then a boy of nine, whose slightly dreamy—not to say vague—habit of mind and body was occasionally goaded into action, though not permanently quickened, by the "Prompt, Richard, prompt!" of his grandmother. This lady lived to be ninety-nine years of age, instead of a hundred as he hoped: an incompleteness which rather annoyed her grandson, who liked symmetry rather than incident in literature and in life. The youth—who was very short-sighted even then—went to University College, where De Morgan was his best master, and Walter Bagehot his best friend. He used to tell the story of a walk with Bagehot up and down Regent-street for two hours in an attempt to find Oxford-street, so hot had their argument become as to whether the so-called logical principle of identity (A is A) was entitled to rank as a law of thought or only as a postulate of language.

Mr. Hutton took his degree at London University with credit, and after some attendance at German universities he began his career as a teacher of mathematics at Bedford College. But the editor's chair was his destiny, and already he knew it. The organ of the Unitarians, the Inquirer, was then owned by Mr. John Robinson, now the knighted chief of the staff of the Daily News. To the service of that organ he rallied Bagehot, Osler, and Sanford. But Mr. Hutton, for that once, wanted to move too quickly. Instead of reporting sermons he wanted to suppress them altogether; and he had dreams of an official liturgy which should protect the Unitarian laity from the extempore prayers of their ministers. Clearly the Church of England was beckoning to him; and he responded to the summons. When, therefore, Mr. Townsend bought the Spectator, about the year 1861, to run it as a Liberal Church of England paper, he found in Mr. Hutton a man who could attend to the literature while he himself took in hand the politics. How he attended to the literature is too well known to need more than a word here. He loved standard authors, and he was glad to add to their ranks, especially from members of the Athenæum Club. Perhaps the young and moving spirit which spoke through R. L. Stevenson and Mr. Kipling found in him a reluctant listener. "Prompt, Richard, prompt!" readers may sometimes have felt inclined to cry over his notices of early works of authors now assured of name and fame.

The journalism which drew the newer spirits around Mr. Henley Mr. Hutton examined through glasses he took off to rub again and again. He was not prompt enough for that! Mr. Hutton thought the English language an inexpressive one, and had laid his plans accordingly. "Our articles," he wrote to a young contributor, "cannot be much over two columns, say 160 lines or 1,600 words. Now (such is the barrenness of English speech) that in 1,600 words only one or two distinct points can be brought out with any vivacity and crispness, and vivacity and crispness are of the essence of effective newspaper writing."

He stocked his paper with plain facts rather than with rare imaginings or pretty fancies. It lacked by-play. It was prosaic to the elect, but it was useful to a large class, whom it led further on the road to literary and religious and political tolerance than they themselves, unaided, would have reached. The old order changeth, now as ever; and it was a significant fact that the novels of George Meredith, which Mr. Hutton could not understand, were the subject of a really appreciative article at last in the very issue of the Spectator which contained the following affecting announcement of the literary editor's death:

"Our readers," said that announcement, and it said no more, "will be grieved to hear of the death of Mr. R. H. Hutton, so long one of the editors of this journal. After an illness of many months, marked by severe though intermittent sufferings, he passed away quietly in sleep, during the afternoon of Thursday, the 9th inst. His colleagues are forbidden by pledges, which they cannot break, either to write a memoir of him, or, within the range of their influence, to permit any one else to do so. They can, therefore, only record their grief at an event which, in the case of the writer of these lines, terminates an unbroken friendship of thirty-six years, and a literary alliance which, at once in its duration and completeness, is probably without a precedent."

Mr. Hutton, though a most industrious editor and contributor to his own columns, did not publish many books. His Essays Theological and Literary remain as his best monument; but, to do them justice, you must put yourself back into the environment of the days in which they were produced. In his appreciations of poetry, such as his essays on Wordsworth and his Genius, on Browning and Shelley's Poetical Mysticism, he showed us his least perceptive side. His Studies in Parliament had much praise in its time; and there are many who think that his monograph, Cardinal Newman, is a sufficing piece of work as far as it goes. Newman was the greatest admiration of his life, his model in literary style, his pattern and exemplar as a man living in the world, but not of it. "In a century," he said, "in which physical discovery and material well-being have usurped and almost absorbed the admiration of mankind, such a life as that of Cardinal Newman stands out in strange and almost majestic, though singularly graceful and unpretending, contrast to the eager and agitated turmoil of confused passions, hesitating ideals, tentative virtues, and groping philanthropies, amid which it has been lived." That does not sound very much like the voice of a Radical editor, as Hutton was once held to be; nor like the voice of a leader of anti-vivisectionists, for that matter. The Times refers to Newman as "the teacher towards whom, in his later years, he was most attached." The word was probably written attracted; but attached represents the truth; nor did the attachment date from late years only. Cardinal Newman, away in Birmingham, was aware of the homage that Wellington-street offered him and was able to express in bolder and bolder and bolder terms as time and prejudice went by. "I have now for twenty years held him, as a journalist, to be a good friend of mine," wrote Cardinal Newman in a private letter in 1884. Perhaps one link with Newman was to be found in the fact that both alike had broken first ties, and made a change of religious belief. And both alike had kept firm friends in the communions they had left. For Hutton held Dr. Martineau in an esteem which had, from the first, free public expression. Dr. Martineau sometimes used the privilege of an old friend to question the policy of the Spectator; and his remonstrances were more refreshing to Hutton than the praises of most other men.

Mr. Hutton was twice married into the Roscoe family, his second wife, the cousin of his first, being the grand-daughter of Lorenzo de Medici's biographer. Her husband, who had prayed to survive her, so that he might tend her to the last, did so in fact, her illness, which was one of mind as well as body, having carried her hence only a short time before his own day of death. He was buried in Twickenham parish cemetery on Tuesday, and round his grave were grouped Anglicans, Roman Catholics, and Unitarians, in almost equal numbers and in equal grief.

WANTED: A PHILANTHROPIST FOR RESEARCH.

WE are constantly reminded that the Queen rules over more Orientals than any sovereign in the world, and one would, therefore, suppose that the way would be made easy for such of her natural-born subjects as may wish to acquire some knowledge of Oriental languages or Oriental religions. Yet nothing is so persistently cold-shouldered by the British Government as Oriental studies. To the International Congress of Orientalists just held in Paris came delegates not only from the Asiatic States directly interested, but from nearly every European Power. France, Russia, Austria, Italy—even Holland and Sweden—sent representatives, but the name of England does not appear upon the list. Nor was the omission of our rulers corrected, as sometimes happens, by private enterprise. A sprinkling of professors from Oxford and Cambridge, and a few officials from the British Museum and the Asiatic Society made up nearly the whole of England's contribution to the assembly. Of all the countries there represented, the one that should have been the most interested in the discussion made the poorest show.

The reason for this is, of course, that no Englishman can undertake the study of Orientalism or any other abstruse science unless he is prepared to sacrifice money as well as time. In France, beside the magnificent Ecole du Louvre there is the State-supported Ecole des Hautes Etudes, and a whole host of lesser schools, subsidised "on the ground of public utility," at which a student can obtain the best instruction at a trifling expense. In Austria, Italy, and Germany the same work is in part done by the Imperial and Royal Academies. In America, similar institutions, founded by individual generosity, are springing up every year. But in England a few unpaid chairs at the Universities is all that has been done for what we may fitly call advanced studies. The would-be student must teach himself in the best way that he can, and without the hope of obtaining even honour in return for his labour. The most he can look forward to is the chance of reading a paper on his special subject to a learned society—to which, by the way, he must pay entrance fee and subscription before he can even obtain a hearing. Nor is there any means by which he can turn his dearly acquired knowledge to pecuniary account. No publisher will risk the expense of publishing the result of his researches, for they can never appeal to any but a few readers. Except on the very rare occasions when some accidental circumstance brings his subject immediately before the general public, the reviews are closed to him for the same reason. Is it surprising that many students should drop out of the race altogether, and that two Oriental scholars, of whose work any nation in Europe would have been proud, should have died in England during the last decade in actual want of the necessities of life?

The remedy for this state of things is not at first sight very easy to find. No help is to be looked for from Government, for the Treasury will hardly allow the British Museum enough money to bind its books. We have, indeed, the Civil List and the Royal Literary Fund, but both these institutions aim at relieving destitution when it occurs rather than at preventing its occurrence, and the funds at their disposal are miserably small. What is wanted is some means by which those versed in advanced studies can find a steady, if small, market for their wares, such as is provided in France by foundations like the Musée Guimet. When the splendid collection which bears this name of objects illustrative of the Science of Religions, was presented by its munificent collector to the State, the latter, on accepting the gift, placed at the disposal of the Minister of Education an annual credit of 40,000 francs, to be devoted to a series of publications to be called the Annales du Musée Guimet. With this sum is maintained the Revue de l'Histoire des Religions, which appears every two months, and employs a staff of over thirty contributors and reviewers. It also publishes one or two important works on the same subject every year, which are sold at a high and uniform price for the joint benefit of the author and the Museum. And it further provides for the continual issue of a series of popular handbooks published at a price which puts them within the reach of all. Other foundations, such as the Prix Langlois, the Prix Zographos, the Prix Lagrange, and many others, are at the disposal of the Institut de France, and provide for awards of from 1,000 to 10,000 francs being made yearly to the authors of works dealing with different branches of history or linguistics, the particular subject being generally prescribed by the terms of the gift. The richest of these is the great biennial prize of the Institut itself, which provides no less than 20,000 francs every two years for the best work on any branch of advanced study; but there are nearly 100 of the smaller ones. If, therefore, the French student who is proficient in his subject fails to obtain some pecuniary return it is probably because he is deficient in the gifts of tact and expression, the absence of which would probably have insured his failure in any other walk of life.

Here, then, is a way in which some philanthropic lover of learning might do much to take away England's reproach as the most unkind country in the world to scholars. Let him provide a certain sum every year to be given to the author of advanced works dealing with any branch of study that he may affect. A committee to decide on the merits of the works could easily be formed from among our university professors and the members of our learned societies. Such books are written with too much difficulty for the prize to encourage the production of mere trash; nor would the competitors be so numerous as to make the task of judging one of very great difficulty. But the hope of one day obtaining such a reward would go far to put hope into the heart of many a poor student, and the fact that a book had received such a mark of approval would of itself give it a certain pecuniary value. Nor would the cost of printing and publishing the successful studies be excessive. A tiny society like that of Biblical Archaeology manages to use in its proceedings Greek, Coptic, Syriac, and even hieroglyphic and cuneiform text without over-straining its very slender resources, while in these days of photo-zinco-graphy other illustrations could be obtained at a cheap rate. Altogether, the annual sum of £500, which even at the present rate of interest does not demand a larger capital than £20,000, would probably suffice for the production of one large or several smaller works every year, and yet give a handsome reward to the authors. Cannot one of our rich men be persuaded to provide such a sum? By so doing he would found for himself a monument more enduring than brass.

CHRONICLE OF NEW BOOKS.

THE new novels of the week are noticed at length in another column, and, as usual, in number are well ahead of the output of any other department of letters. The handsomest book of the week is The Printers of Basle in the XVth and XVIth Centuries; Mr. Logie Robertson's Outlines of English Literature is the smallest; and the most curious is Mr. Heckethorn's two bulky, flaming red volumes dealing with the secret societies of the world. This is a new edition.

We have also received from Mr. T. Fisher Unwin a new edition of The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham, by John Oliver Hobbes, to which the author contributes the following preface:

"The book, written nearly three years ago, has many shortcomings, of which the author is but the more conscious when she remembers the leniency shown by her critics at the time of its first publication. Her aim in writing the novel was to depict two types of human failure—the failure judged by the standard of worldly success, and the failure judged by every standard. The story is one which might have happened better in many other ways, but which happened, nevertheless, in the way described—a study of a whole society, but of a small circle of individuals."

A popular edition of Fire and Sword in the Sudan has also been issued on the eve of an advance into the Sudan. The author has shortened the book by striking out much of the historical matter, and many details not of general interest, and has confined this volume, as far as possible, to a narrative of his personal experiences.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- THE EARLY LIFE OF WORDSWORTH, 1770-1798. By Emile Legouis. Translated by J. W. Matthews, with a Prefatory Note by Leslie Stephen. J. M. Dent & Co. 7s. 6d.
- THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND BEFORE THE REFORMATION. By Dyson Hague. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.
- ENGLAND AND INDIA: A RECORD OF PROGRESS DURING A HUNDRED YEARS, 1785-1885. By Romesh C. Dutt. Chatto & Windus. 2s.
- THE STORY OF OUR ENGLISH TOWNS. By P. H. Ditchfield. With Introduction by Augustus Jessop. G. Redway. 6s.
- SHAKESPEARE THE BOY. By W. J. Rolfe. Illustrated. Chatto & Windus.

GEOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

- THE GIST OF JAPAN. By the Rev. R. B. Peery. Illustrated. Oliphant, Anderson & Co. 5s.
- THE BATTLEFIELDS OF THESSALY. By Sir Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, M.P. With Portraits and Maps. John Murray. 9s.
- IN JOYFUL RUSSIA. By John A. Logan, Jun. Illustrated. C. Arthur Pearson. 10s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

- HINTS IN GREEK PROSE. By W. C. F. Walters, M.A. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.
- FIRST STEPS IN LATIN PROSE. By W. C. F. Walters, M.A. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d.
- THE STORY OF THE PERSIAN WAR, AS TOLD BY HERODOTUS. By C. C. Tancock, M.A. John Murray. 2s. 6d.
- THE TALISMAN ("Sir Walter Scott" Continuous Readers). A. & J. Black.
- HISTORICAL ORNAMENT. By James Ward. Chapman & Hall. 7s. 6d.
- OUTLINES OF ENGLISH LITERATURE. By J. Logie Robertson. W. Blackwood & Sons. 1s. 6d.

POETRY AND BELLES LETTRES.

- JAMES CLARENCE MAWGAN: HIS SELECTED POEMS. A Study by Louise Imogen Guiney. John Lane. 5s.
- NEW ESSAYS TOWARDS A CRITICAL METHOD. By J. M. Robertson. John Lane. 6s.

SCIENCE.

- GLIMPSES INTO PLANT LIFE. By Mrs. Brightwen. With Illustrations. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
- HUMAN SCIENCE LECTURES. By Various Authors. G. Bell & Sons.
- PROGRAMME OF TECHNOLOGICAL EXAMINATIONS. (City and Guilds of London Institute.) Whittaker & Co.

NATURAL HISTORY.

- CURIOSITIES OF BIRD LIFE. By Charles Dixon. G. Redway. 7s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- THE MAGNA CHARTA OF DEMOCRACY. By H. Thompson. W. Reeves. 6d.
- OUR BOYS: BEING A BOOK FOR SCHOOLBOYS AND OTHERS. By Various Preachers. Edited by the Rev. S. B. James. The Roxburghe Press.
- THE PRINTERS OF BASLE IN THE XV. AND XVI. CENTURIES: THEIR BIOGRAPHIES, PRINTED BOOKS AND DEVICES. By C. W. Heckethorn. Unwin Bros. 21s.
- THE ACTOR'S ART. Edited by J. Hamerton. With Contributions by Leading Actors of the Day. G. Redway. 6s.

FOREIGN.

- DICTIONNAIRE PROPHÉTIQUE DE LA LANGUE FRANÇAISE. By H. Michaëlis and P. Parry. Carl Meyer. Berlin. 5 francs.

NEW EDITIONS.

- THREE YEARS IN WESTERN CHINA. By Alexander Hosie, M.A. G. Philip & Sons. 6s.
- POEMS. By Matthias Bart. Bart & Co.
- THE SECRET SOCIETIES OF ALL AGES AND COUNTRIES: A COMPREHENSIVE ACCOUNT OF UPWARDS OF ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY SECRET ORGANISATIONS. By Charles William Heckethorn. In 3 vols. George Redway. 31s. 6d.
- THE GODS, SOME MORTALS, AND LORD WICKENHAM. By John Oliver Hobbes. T. Fisher Unwin.
- FIRE AND SWORD IN THE SUDAN. By Rudolf C. Slatin Pasha. Translated by Col. F. R. Wingate. With Map and Illustrations. Edward Arnold. 6s.
- (For Fiction see Supplement.)

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE AUTUMN PUBLISHING SEASON.

MR. WILLIAM HEINEMANN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Art.—"The Alphabet," by W. Nicholson, and "The Almanac of Twelve Sports for 1898," by W. Nicholson.

History.—"Unpublished Letters of Napoleon I." translated from the French by Lady Mary Loyd, a selection of the Letters suppressed by the Imperial Commission of 1858-1869; "Catherine Sforza: a Study," by Count Pasolini (illustrated); "A History of Dancing," from the French of Gaston Vuillier, with 25 plates and about 400 text illustrations; "The Life of Nelson," a new school-prize edition, with portraits, by Robert Southey, edited by David Hannay; "The Story of the Greeks," written for children, by H. A. Grueber; "A History of French Literature," by Edw. Dowden, D.C.L., LL.D.; "A History of English Literature," by Edmund Gosse; "A History of Italian Literature," by Richard Garnett, of the British Museum; "A History of Spanish Literature," by J. Fitz-Maurice Kelly; "A History of Japanese Literature," by W. G. Aston; "A History of Modern Scandinavian Literature," by Dr. Georg Brandes; "A History of Sanscrit Literature," by A. A. Macdonnell, M.A.; "A History of Hungarian Literature," by Dr. Zoltan Beöthy; "A History of American Literature," by Moses Coit Tyler; "A History of German Literature," by Dr. C. H. Herford; "A History of Latin Literature," by Dr. A. H. Verrall; "Robert, Earl Nugent: a Memoir," by Claud Nugent; "Sixty Years of Empire: a Symposium," by leading writers, and with portraits; "Women of Homer," by Walter Copland Perry (illustrated).

Philosophy, Science, and Criticism.—"The Non-Religion of the Future," from the French of Marie Jean Guyau; "Lumen," by Camille Flammarion; "William Shakespeare: a Critical Study," by Georg Brandes, translated from the Danish by William Archer and Diana White.

Travel and Adventure.—"Cuba in War Time," by Richard Harding Davis (illustrated); "With the Fighting Japs: Naval Experiences during the late Chino-Japanese War," by J. Chalmers; "My Fourth Tour in Western Australia," by Albert F. Calvert (illustrated); "A History of the Liverpool Privateers," by Gomer Williams.

Belles Lettres, Poetry, Drama.—"Poems from the Divan of Hafiz," translated from the Persian by Gertrude Lowthian Bell; "A Selection from the Poems, with some hitherto unpublished verse, of Wilfred Scawen Blunt," and an introduction by W. E. Henley; "Studies in Frankness," by Charles Whibley; "In Cap and Gown: Three Centuries of Cambridge Wit," selected and arranged by Charles Whibley, a new edition with frontispiece; "The Works of Lord Byron," edited by William Ernest Henley, verse vol. i., being the second volume of the edition containing "Hours of Idleness" and "English Bards and Scotch Reviewers"; the Plays of W. E. Henley and R. L. Stevenson, "Admiral Guinea" and "Macaire"; "The Gentle Art of Making Enemies," a new and enlarged edition, by James McNeill Whistler; the Plays of Arthur W. Pinero, "The Princess and the Butterfly"; the Plays of Gerhart Hauptman, translated, "The Weavers" and "Lonely Folk."

Fiction.—"St. Ives," by R. L. Stevenson; a New Novel by Sarah Grand; "Marietta's Marriage," by W. E. Norris; "What Maisie Knew," by Henry James; "The War of the Worlds," by H. G. Wells; "The Master-Knot," by J. A. Steuart; "The Gadfly," by E. L. Voynich; "The Gods Arrive," by Annie E. Holdsworth; "The Freedom of Henry Meredyth," by M. Hamilton; "The Nigger of 'The Narcissus,'" by Joseph Conrad; "The Drones must Die," by Max Nordau; "The Fourth Napoleon," by Charles Benham; "The Lake of Wine," by B. E. J. Capes; "Ezekiel's Sin," by J. H. Pearce; "Mrs. John Forster," by Charles Granville; "A Champion of the Seventies," by Edith A. Barnett; "A Man with a Maid," by Mrs. Henry Dudeney; "God's Foundling," by Alec John Dawson; "The Londoners," by Robert Hichens; "A Daughter of the Tropics," by T. B. Dibbs; a New Volume by Stephen Crane; a New Novel by Harold Frederic; a New Volume by Edwin Pugh; "Dreamers of the Ghetto," by I. Zangwill; "In the Permanent Way," by Flora Annie Steel; "Last Studies," by Hubert Crackanthorpe, with portrait; "A Romance of the First Consul," from the Swedish of M.

Malling, by Anna Molboe; "The Old Adam and the New Eve," from the German of Richard Goltz; "Niobe," from the Norwegian of Jonas Lie; "The Torrents of Spring," by Ivan Turgenev; "Captain Mansana," and "Mother's Hands," "Absalom's Hair," and "A Painful Memory," by Bjornstjerne Bjornson.

MESSRS. W. & R. CHAMBERS'S
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A new dictionary of universal biography, in 1 vol., entitled "Chambers's Biographical Dictionary," dealing with fifteen thousand celebrities of all nations from the remotest times to the present day, edited by David Patrick and F. H. Groome; a new library dictionary, in 1 vol., entitled "Chambers's English Dictionary," "Meg Langholme," by Mrs. Molesworth; "Vince the Rebel, or the Sanctuary in the Bog," by George Manville Fenn; "Wild Kitty," by L. T. Meade; "Hunted Through Fiji, or Twixt Convict and Cannibal," by Reginald Horsley; "Hoodie," by Mrs. Molesworth; "The Rover's Quest," a story of Foam, Fire, and Fight, by Hugh St. Leger; "Four Hundred Animal Stories," selected and edited by Robert Cochrane; "Elsie's Magician," by Fred Whishaw; Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," with index and prefatory Memoir by the Rev. John Brown; "Bruce's Travels in Abyssinia," "The Half-Caste" and other stories, by the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman"; "Wallace and Bruce," by Mary Cochrane; "William Shakespeare: the Story of his Life and Times," by Evan J. Cuthbertson; "A Fairy Grandmother," by L. E. Tiddeman; "Wonderful Stories for Children," by Hans Christian Andersen, translated by Mary Howitt; "Young King Arthur" and "Twelfth-Night King"; "Alternative Geographical Readers" and "Alternative History," and "National History Readers," Scheme A, for Standards III. to VII., with accompanying manuals.

MESSRS. J. M. DENT & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Waverley Novels of Sir Walter Scott," a new edition in 48 vols.; "The Spectator," a new edition in 8 vols., with an introductory essay by Austin Dobson, the text annotated and edited by G. Gregory Smith, M.A.; Spenser's "Faerie Queene," pictured and decorated by L. Fairfax-Muckley; "Richard Wagner," by Houston Stewart Chamberlain, translated from the German by G. Ainalie Hight and revised by the author; "The Early Life of William Wordsworth, 1770-1798": a Study of the Prelude, by Emile Legouis, translated by J. W. Matthews, with a prefatory note by Leslie Stephen; "The Fall of the Nibelungs," translated from the German by Margaret Armour; "Baboo Jabberjee, B.A.," by F. Anstey, author of "Vice Versa," &c.; "Animal Land where there are no People," by Sybil and Katharine Corbet, with an introduction by Andrew Lang; "Cats," by Mrs. Chance, a series of drawings in pencil, together with essays and quotations; "A Volume of Verse," by E. G. Harman; "Meadow Grass: a Book of New England Stories," by Alice Brown; "American Land and Letters: the 'Mayflower' to 'Rip Van Winkle,'" by Donald S. Mitchell; "Atlas of Classical Portraits," selected and edited, with descriptive commentary for the use of students and schools, by W. H. D. Rouse; "Pictures and Studies of Greek Landscape and Architecture," being a series of photogravures of paintings by John Fulleylove of classical remains in Greece; Balzac's "Comedie Humaine," edited by Prof.

Saintsbury, translated by Miss Marriage, Mrs. Bell, Mrs. R. S. Scott, and James Waring—new volumes, "Cousin Betty," "Cousin Pons," "A Daughter of Eve," "The Unconscious Mummies," and "A Marriage Settlement." "Temple Classics Series," new volumes: Florio's "Montaigne," in 6 vols.; Goldsmith's "Vicar of Wakefield"; Milton's "Paradise Lost"; "The High History of the Holy Graal," translated for the first time from the French, by Sebastian Evans, in 2 vols.; "Boswell's Life of Johnson," in 6 vols. "Temple Dramatists Series": Elizabethan Section—Beaumont's "Philaster," Fletcher's "Faithful Shepherdess," Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy" Modern Section—Sheridan's "The Critic." "Lyric Poets Series," new volume, "The Lyric Poems of Keats."

DRAMA.

THE NEW HAMLET.

THE Hamlet of Mr. Forbes Robertson has been an agreeable surprise. Not but that this scholarly and well-graced actor, with his clear and cadenced delivery, was fully expected to acquit himself cleverly in a part in which, according to the tradition of the stage, "no actor has been known to fail." He has done more than come up to expectation: he has gone some way towards recasting once more the popular conception of the character—for, curiously enough, every dramatic age has its favourite type of Hamlet. The Hamlet of the Kean school—impetuous, impulsive, explosive—lasted well into the present generation. Through the accretion of conventional business it ultimately diverged a good deal from the Hamlet of the student of Shakespeare; it was, to quote a contemporary critic, "essentially a Hamlet of the stage, aiming at theatrical effectiveness, with variations and embroideries of immaterial quality." Sir Henry Irving introduced the psychological Hamlet, who has prevailed until our own time; and now comes Mr. Forbes Robertson with a treatment which from its success, as well as its simplicity, is extremely likely to find imitators, and perhaps—though in matters dramatic it is never safe to prophesy—establish a vogue of its own. In its technical sense Mr. Forbes Robertson has done with "psychology," as likewise with the crack-brained manner of fifty years ago. He does not feel at all with Schlegel that Hamlet is "an enigmatic character resembling those irrational equations in which a fraction of unknown magnitude always remains that will in no wise admit of a solution." At all events, there is no evidence of such a feeling in his embodiment. The Hamlet of the present Lyceum production is one of a wholly novel complexion; and now that we see it done it is as easy in appearance as Columbus's way of making the egg stand on end. He simply discards the insanity theory altogether.

How has the idea grown up that in addition to feigning insanity for his own ends, Hamlet was himself a little off his mental equilibrium? It is difficult to say. All the leading commentators have favoured the insanity view; that is, like Goethe, they maintain that it was the design of the poet to represent his hero as a man whose reason had been disturbed by the shock of too difficult a task. If I might hazard a guess, I would say that Shakespeare had in his eye what modern medical science would call a neuropathic patient. Neuropathy implies a certain instability of mind and character; but though a kindred ailment, it is certainly not to be classed with insanity, otherwise our already crowded asylums would be overflowing. The poetic and artistic nature is often distinctly neuropathic. As a close observer of human nature, Shakespeare, I imagine, treated neuropathy in Hamlet; for the thing existed, though it had not yet found a name; and the commentators in their ignorance of the refinements of modern science jumped to conclusions regarding the Prince's mental condition, which the facts, strictly speaking, did not justify. Dr. Hughlings-Jackson, Dr. Maudsley, or Dr. Ferrier would know exactly how to class Hamlet, though the great literary critics have failed to do so satisfactorily. Such a view seems to me at least highly plausible, and it is worked out by Mr. Forbes Robertson on undeniably convincing lines.

ASSUMING Hamlet's insanity to be mere feigning, certain consequences naturally follow. These need no frenzied or maniacal action, no wild and whirling words, no dis-tempered raving on Hamlet's part; nothing, in short, need be attempted by the actor unbecoming to a scholar and a gentleman, except when he is fooling Polonius and others to the top of their bent. If this strikes old stagers as a flat and unprofitable reading, they may be counselled to see it before passing an adverse judgment. It is an extraordinarily consistent interpretation which Mr. Forbes Robertson gives; the key-note to whatever may appear eccentric in it being given in that line wherein Hamlet engages to "put an antic disposition on." And not only is consistency studied, but the marked absence of those symptoms of a disordered mind which are noticeable even in Mr. Tree's fine performance, seems to bring Mr. Forbes Robertson's "Hamlet" more within the range of human sympathies. When Mr. Tree, for example, writes upon his tablets, he crouches in the red glare of a fire in the attitude of a Bedlamite. In the play-scene again he and other modern Hamlets indulge in the wildest extravagance. This may be theatrically effective, as the saying is, but it is certainly destructive of sympathy with the sorely distraught prince. In order that the springs of sympathy may be touched, the audience must feel that the sufferer is a human being of like nature to themselves, which a maniacal Hamlet is not. Sympathetic, natural, over-wrought, no doubt, but eminently human and lovable—such are the main characteristics of this remarkably fresh and interesting impersonation!

THE innovations in the matter of mise-en-scène, to which reference was made last week, show that where boldness in the treatment of the play seems advantageous, Mr. Forbes Robertson is not found wanting. By some the introduction of Fortinbras and his soldiers at the close is pronounced an anti-climax. It does not so strike me. On the contrary, it is a relief to the gloom of the tragic ending, an agreeable reminder of the truth of Schiller's line, that :

"Die Welt wird alt und wird wieder jung."

It brings before us this curious fact, moreover, that for the few minutes that he survives Claudius and the Queen, Hamlet is King of Denmark, a monarch to whom it is meet that military honours should be paid, which the soldiers of Fortinbras accordingly render him by bearing off his body on their shields. The Ophelia of Mrs. Patrick Campbell is a study in prettiness and daintiness, the actress making a point of toning down all the disagreeable features of the heroine's insanity. This is a reading of debateable propriety, but the effect produced is pleasing and æsthetic.

"In the Days of the Duke," the new melodrama which Messrs. Haddon Chambers and Comyns Carr have provided for the Adelphi, follows the time-honoured formula in this class of piece, that the hero should suffer much undeserved persecution at the hands of a couple of villains before poetic justice is done. But the authors have chosen a more indirect and less effective way of carrying out their purpose than the late Henry Pettitt and their other predecessors. The story opens in India in the year 1800, when General Aylmer is discovered holding a hill fort against an enemy of overwhelming strength. A Colonel Lanson plays the traitor by admitting the enemy at one of the gates, but in the nick Colonel Wellesley, as "the Duke" was then called (the Duke being, of course, Wellington), arrives upon the scene with a relieving force. Colonel Wellesley comes too late, however, to save General Aylmer, who, having discovered the treachery, is shot dead by Lanson. Afterwards, by means of an ambiguous document, Lanson, with whom, as the lawyers say, is O'Mara, an Irish adventurer, seeks to throw the odium of the treachery upon the general himself, and it is the general's son, the hero of the play, who suffers mainly from this action. When young Captain Aylmer would vindicate his father's memory his mouth is closed by the apparent evidence of his father's guilt, until in due time the truth is revealed.

The primary piece of villainy is set forth in a prologue; and its consequences are described in the play proper, which dates fourteen years later. As the vindication of General Aylmer's memory is the sole motive of the play, one unfortunate effect of the dramatic scheme adopted by the authors is that the characters are constantly discussing the events of long ago. This, on the stage, is a tiresome proceeding. It is eminently undramatic. When one person meets another on the stage, sits down, bids his friend take a chair, and begins, "Five-and-twenty years ago," &c., the average playgoer ceases to listen. I do not mean to imply that Messrs. Chambers and Carr do anything quite so tactless as that, but they strangely ignore the principle that the events mainly interesting to a theatrical audience are those which evolve under their eyes. However, the play has been sumptuously mounted, the dresses, military and civil, of the period making a brave show. There is a strong cast, including Terriss, who doubles the parts of General Aylmer and his son; Cartwright and Beveridge as the villains; Miss Marion Terry as the general's wife and also persecuted widow; Miss Millward as the heroine; but it cannot be said that they have occupation worthy of their talents. The Duke himself, played, or rather embodied, by Fulton, is merely a lay figure who reads despatches with knitted eyebrows and gives orders in a peremptory military manner. Despite his nose, which is more than Wellingtonian, the authors do not contrive to make us feel that this is in truth the Iron Duke; nor, in the fourth act, that we are on the eve of the battle of Waterloo. A great impending battle is talked of, but for all the effect produced upon our minds it might be a contemplated picnic. As a spectacle, however, the play will attract. It contains a realistic duel, a bal masqué in Paris, and, above all, a highly coloured representation of the ball given by the Duchess of Richmond in Brussels on the eve of Waterloo.

J. F. N.

SCIENCE.

A WITTY writer once remarked that he liked to see the British public flocking to a thoroughly naughty play; it was so good for them to be shocked. On the same principle we may feel glad that foreign nations should be taking special pains just now to show us how hopelessly hide-bound and insular we are in regard to matters outside our immediate interest. Great Britain has the largest dependencies in the world among savage or alien peoples, a knowledge of whose customs and modes of thought is indispensable for proper government. It is one thing to win their territories; it is quite another to win their hearts. Yet what efforts does Great Britain make to ensure a tolerable acquaintance with native peculiarities among the men she sends out to India and the Colonies? Were it not for an individual spirit of adventure in the race, which gives us men like Burton, Palmer, and Layard, we should be colossal in our ignorance of the East. Mere ignorance, perhaps, does not affect us much. What we dislike is to be told that others know more, and of this kind of information there is plenty to hand. The British Association has been agitating very hard for the formation of an Ethnological Bureau, on the lines of the admirable institutions which exist in America, for studying native races and customs. Perhaps we may see this formed in time. Then we have had the Congress of Orientalists at Paris, where the distinguished English scholars who were present could not help noticing with pain how much more was done towards a study of the East by continental Governments having only a tithe of Great Britain's interest in it. The Times says, and one must re-echo the sentiment :

"It is impossible to close a notice without pointing out the sense among the English members of the great part being taken in the work by foreign scholars. . . . The daily intercourse with the distinguished teachers at the great Oriental school here, and of the splendidly equipped Oriental schools of Berlin, Vienna, and St. Petersburg, have been a constant reminder of the deplorable absence of anything at all comparable in the capital of England, whose Oriental Empire is so large and so important. Now that other Governments are moving so rapidly, is it not time that the English Government should begin to take practical steps towards the adequate provision of an Oriental school?"

SUFFICIENT attention has not yet been drawn to the usefulness of the work which Prof. John Milne and his seismographs are carrying out in the Isle of Wight. To the general public it may seem a somewhat superfluous thing to obtain records of distant earthquakes, and many people, no doubt, regard Prof. Milne as a harmless hobbyist who likes writing to the papers. There are several very practical outlets for his hobby, however, as the lecture he has recently delivered at Toronto shows. One of these is the importance of submarine outbreaks in determining the best position for cables. If outbreaks can be shown to occur in groups or definite lines, a basis is provided for localising the most suitable routes for cables. On the coast of Japan such work has actually been done, and areas have been marked off through which it would be inviting destruction to take a cable. Seismographic records, again, afford a frequent clue to the breaking of cables, and may even save in time to locate them. By the differences in vibration, it is already possible to tell whether the disturbance has travelled 7,000 or 10,000 miles. In countries affected by earthquakes, a systematic survey of the conditions gives a basis for determining both the best methods and the best sites for building. But more important, at first sight, than even its practical potentialities is the promise which seismography seems to give of throwing light on the vexed question of the age and structure of the earth. We live, as Prof. Perry has said, on a huge object 8,000 miles thick, of which we know little more than the bare skin. Lord Kelvin has calculated that the inside must be rigid, owing to the pressure, but yet enormously hot; geologists think it must be liquid; magneticians are in a state of ignorant wonder about it. Prof. Milne has shown that earth tremors 7,000 miles distant are recorded on a seismograph at the Isle of Wight, and that the rate of transmission—calculating the times of occurrence and of record—may reach as much as fifteen kilometres per second. What this means no one can tell. It is far higher than the velocity which one might expect from the known properties of rock—five times as high, in fact. The messages have come, not along the surface, but through the actual body of the earth. So, at least, we must suppose, and if this be so, a more accurate determination of the rate of transit will be a step towards the correct solution of the problem of the earth's rigidity.

H. C. M.

MUSIC.

RIP VAN WINKLE.

EVERYBODY has probably read the story of Rip and his twenty years' sleep on the Kaatskill Mountains, enjoyed its humour, and felt its pathos; and in selecting that story as the basis of an opera Messrs. Akerman and Leoni, librettist and composer of the work recently produced at Her Majesty's Theatre no doubt thought to attract the interest and enlist the sympathy of the public from the very outset; and for an audience to be more or less in possession of the argument of a play before the rise of the curtain is no doubt an advantage. This, however, will be considerably diminished if the alterations and additions made for stage purposes are not suitably managed. Sufficient of the original story must remain so as to keep in touch, as it were, with the train of thought evoked by memory in the audience; and whatever changes are made should grow out of the story, and thus strengthen it. Mr. Akerman, however, does not seem to me to have shown proper tact in this respect. Rip is well drawn, except, perhaps, for certain Hibernicisms, which Mr. Hedmond, the admirable impersonator, curiously intensifies by an Irish brogue, and which seem out of place; yet even here one misses the faithful dog who followed his master in all his rambles.

M. Leoni is known as the composer of some tasteful songs, and of a clever cantata—"Sardanapalus"—performed in London a season or two back. The music of Rip Van Winkle, although not in all respects satisfactory, certainly adds to his reputation. Its principal defect is lack of originality. It reminds us of many composers; of Mr. Leoni himself there seems little trace. Strong influences, of course, interfere with individuality; and in listening to new music the familiar strikes one sooner than the unfamiliar. Yet in the early, in fact the earliest, works of Beethoven, although they are exceedingly Mozartish both in form and spirit, there are flashes which proclaim the coming master. Wagner, again, was at first overshadowed by Weber and over-impressed by Meyerbeer, but his genius, even at the outset, was not completely hidden. It is fairly easy to single out those early forecasts of strong individuality now that the career of those men, from the beginning to the close, has been revealed to us. So that it behoves one to be cautious in judging Mr. Leoni; there may be in him more than one suspects. The influence of Wagner is one from which no musician worthy of the name can escape; yet it often tempts composers beyond their strength. Mr. Leoni is thus tempted. One can feel now and again in his music that the armour of Wagner is too heavy for him.

Moreover, in his music there is a lack of homogeneity. There are certain numbers in it which remind one of the opera of the past, while many pages are in the style of the music-drama of the present; in time there may be a happy fusion. For the subject which Mr. Leoni was illustrating I think simpler treatment throughout would have proved more satisfactory.

Fault-finding, however, is only the half of a critic's duty. The score has its good, nay its strong, points. Of skill there is considerable display, and yet the writing is not dry; and there is at times freshness and charm, especially in the choral numbers.

As regards the performance, Mr. Hedmond as "Rip" claims chief notice. He was in excellent voice, and his acting deserves very high praise. He made the most of his part, yet without exaggeration. Mr. Linwood was very good as Derrick, the lawyer; Miss Attalie Claire was fairly successful as Gretchen; Miss Ada Davies sang her solo in the third act in sympathetic manner; Miss Ross-Selwicke impersonated with effect the "Spirit of the Mountains"; and Miss Nellie Reed was a funny little Gnome. Mr. S. P. Waddington, the conductor, acquitted himself well of his task. The piece was admirably mounted.

J. S. S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHRONOLOGY OF IRISH TEXTS.

Veulettes: Sept. 6.

I object to the statement that the Irish legendary texts "in their present form were composed or recomposed mainly [the italics are mine] between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries—i.e., in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries," simply because it is not accurate. The texts of the older cycles, the so-called mythological and the Ultonian cycles, are mainly preserved in MSS. copied before 1150 from older MSS. Such texts of these cycles as are only extant in thirteenth century or later MSS. can mainly be traced back to an earlier period with absolute certainty.

The point is of some importance. It used to be the fashion in the old uncritical days to antedate Irish romantic legend; it is now the fashion to postdate it by the unwarranted assumption that the date of transcription is equivalent to that of the composition of a text. The former error was, as a rule, so glaring that it could hardly mislead any scholar; the latter has a spurious critical aspect which makes it much more insidiously misleading. In this connexion I would urge writers on Irish literature to give up the detestable practice of referring to the MS. and not to the particular text contained in that MS. from which they are quoting. What would be thought of a writer on Greek literature who never referred to Homer, Plato, Apollodorus, Manetho, or Plutarch, but simply to Didot's Bibliotheca Scriptorum Græcorum? It is quite as absurd to refer only to the Book of Leinster or the Book of Ballymote. The former MS., for instance, contains upwards of two hundred different texts ranging demonstrably over a period of 350 years, and inferentially over a period of 600 years. Yet the common practice is to quote them as if all stood on the same level. The same may be said of the Book of Ballymote, and the Book of Leoni; and as these MSS. were transcribed from 150 to 300 years after the Book of Leinster, texts quoted from them are assigned to the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, even if they correspond exactly with the Book of Leinster version.

As this correspondence arose out of Mr. Borlase's theory that the Irish mythological legends were imported from the Continent in the fifth and sixth centuries, I may be allowed to call attention to the thesis recently sustained at the Sorbonne by M. Ch. Andler, Maître de Conférences at the Ecole Normale. The title runs: "Quid ad fabulas heroicas Germanorum Hiberni contulerint." The author examines the legends of Wieland, of the Nibelungs, of Walter and Hilda. The conclusion he comes to is, that all three have their sources in Irish mythic legend; that from Ireland they passed to the Anglo-Saxons, and from thence to the Continental Germans, while the Scandinavians received them partly direct from the Irish, partly through the medium of the Continental Germans. The various parallels relied upon by Prof. Zimmer to prove the partial dependence of Irish upon Teutonic legend are interpreted by M. Andler in a precisely opposite sense.

If I were the Celtomaniac I have sometimes been called, I should cry up M. Andler (whose thesis is interesting and suggestive) as the latest and chief authority on the subject. As it is, I can only express the same disbelief in the wholesale Irish origin of Teutonic legend that I expressed in Prof. Zimmer's theory of extensive Teutonic influence on Irish legend, or in Mr. Borlase's theory of the origin of Irish mythology.

ALFRED NUTT.

MR. LINTON AND D. G. ROSSETTI.

Finchley: Sept. 13.

Permit me to point out to your correspondent of last week that my article in Good Words for August, so far from being an "attack" upon Dante G. Rossetti, was one of enthusiastic and unqualified praise. Also that I yield to no one in admiration of the genius of Mr. W. J. Linton as an engraver, and congratulate myself in having drawn out his expressions of regard for Rossetti's art. I accept, too, his correction: but that my memory is not at fault as to the dissatisfaction (just or unjust) of Rossetti and his friends with the engravings is shown by Mr. Ruskin's words on these very cuts in his Elements of Drawing, first edition, 1857, p. 343, where he writes: "They are terribly spoiled in the cutting, and generally the best part, the expression of feature, entirely lost."

THOMAS SULMAN.

THE AUTHOR OF "THE ISLAND."

Gunnersbury: Sept. 10.

You do good service by stirring up that somewhat short-winded trumpeter, Fame, on behalf of Mr. Richard Whiteing. The Island is not, you will be glad to hear, "an only" book. Mr. Whiteing produced many years ago an inimitable work of humour entitled Mr. Sprouts and His Opinions. The subject was the costermonger, who, for the singular edification of the ironist, is continually in the best society. The book appeared, alas! when costermongers, though themselves filled with the spirit of exploration, were still undiscovered. Consequently it failed of a "boom." In itself the book was whimsical, droll, tender, farcical, impossible. Its realism was much less distinct than Mr. Phil May's and Mr. Arthur Morrison's. The author had seen things, but seen them very much as he chose. I confess that I have been surprised to observe that no anti-gambler of Mr. Sprout's degree of education has joined him in turning the Oaks into "the Hoax." I would feel ashamed at calling attention to a pun, but I feel sure that no reader of the ACADEMY will recognise it as such.

W. H. CHESSEX.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS' AND LIBRARIES.

H. G. WELLS' NEW ROMANCE,

THE INVISIBLE MAN.

By the AUTHOR of "THE TIME MACHINE." Crown 8vo, cloth, with specially designed cover, price 3s. 6d.

In this latest work of this clever author, he describes how, if a man becomes invisible it does not follow that the clothes he wears becomes invisible also, and on this supposition has woven a story that will hold the reader with breathless interest from start to finish.

FORTUNE'S FOOTBALLS. By G. B. BURGIN, Author of "'Old Man's' Marriage," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

The Scotsman says: "The story is one well worth reading."

Venety Fair.—"The scene between the drunken playwright and the scoundrel Vane is quite a little tour de force."

The Daily Mail says: "One always takes up a novel by Mr. G. B. Burgin with the comfortable self-assurance that his pages are certain to provide one with healthy amusement..... 'Fortune's Footballs' amply fulfils such an expectation."

THE TYPEWRITER GIRL. By OLIVE PRATT RAYNER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Olive P. Rayner's slight but brilliantly clever story..... 'The Typewriter Girl' is the work of a cultured scholar, who can be academic without pedantry, who knows human nature and can interpret it truly, and who can vitalise what appears on the surface a commonplace theme with that deep and earnest heartbeat which is, after all, the one convincing characteristic of good fiction."—Daily Mail.

"There is not a dull page in the book, and it is one that is well suited to take a foremost place in the lists of a firm which has only just undertaken the publishing of library books on a large scale."—Sunday Times.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOING. By W. W. JACOBS, Author of "Many Cargoes." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

This is Mr. W. W. Jacobs's first long story. Hitherto he has confined himself to short stories about riverside captains and the folk who go down to the sea in barges. Now he has written a nautical love-story, the quaint absurdity of which is more than redeemed by its touches of strong sentiment.

"It contains scenes which we shall not be able to recall without a smile for many weeks to come..... It is a good story, well told, and full of humour and drollery." Daily Telegraph.

AN AMERICAN EMPEROR. By LOUIS TRACY, Author of "The Final War." Square crown 8vo, cloth, 16 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

"A bold and lively romance. Its hero is a charming American millionaire, who for the love of a woman seeks to gain the throne of France. He has the wealth of a Croesus, and does not mind spending it. The reader soon gets interested in his campaign, the details of which are not without a certain air of truthfulness despite the essential extravagance of the main idea. The story is cleverly told, and is well illustrated."—Yorkshire Post.

QUEEN OF THE JESTERS. By MAX PEMBERTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, Illustrated, 6s.

Mr. Max Pemberton's new book of short stories is in reality a continuous novel. Its heroine is the lovely Corinne de Montesson, whose wild doings and daring pranks were the talk of Paris and the wonder of the French Court in its most romantic days. The book is illustrated by Caton Woodville and Harold Piffard.

IN JOYFUL RUSSIA. By JOHN A. LOGAN, Jun. Crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt top, with numerous Illustrations, price 10s. 6d.

This is a pleasantly written work dealing more especially with the cheery aspects of Russia. Hitherto it has been the fashion to steep all accounts of Russia in mystery and gloom. Mr. Logan, however, describes his impressions of the country from the brighter and more picturesque point of view.

FORTHCOMING NOVELS.

THE RAID OF THE "DETRIMENTAL." By the EARL OF DESART, Author of "Lord and Lady Piccadilly," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. [Ready September 29.]

In this story the Earl of Desart has made a new departure. The tale deals with the True History of the Great Disappearance of 1862, and is related by several of those implicated and others. The story is so fantastic and novel, the dialogue so brilliant, that it recalls the former successes of the author in the particular field which is almost his own.

JOAN OF STRATHBOURNE. By R. D. CHETWODE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready September 29.]

In this story Mr. Chetwode has fully caught the romantic spirit of the time when "The Thousand Devils" flourished in Old France, and furnishes a very pretty love-story as a set-off to the foibles of the villains whom he depicts. The hero's ride to Paris (he is half dead from a recent wound), when he hears that the King has commanded the heroine to choose a husband on a certain evening, is one of the most exciting chapters in modern fiction; and the contrast between his mud-stained appearance and the gay courtiers of the King in their jewelled dresses admirably wrought out.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS'S LOVE AFFAIR. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN, Author of "The Cure of Souls," "The Red Sultan," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Ready September 29.]

In his new story Mr. Maclaren Cobban makes a hero of a shopman. The shopman in question is of good family, and sells lace for a West-End firm. He first meets the heroine (the Princess) when she is bicycling, and out of the rencontre Mr. Maclaren Cobban spins a very dainty love-story.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, HENRIETTA STREET, W.C.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

PHARISEES. By A. Kevill-Davies, Author of "An American Widow," "Dollars are Trumps," &c.

The plot is strikingly original, and is told with that breezy vigour which secured so much popularity for the author's previous works.

Reviewing "An American Widow,"

The Scotsman said: "The story is cleverly written and ingeniously contrived. The widow is a genius of a high order."

The Standard said: "A most thrilling and interesting story."

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

TEMPTATION. By "Graham Irving."

This story is by a famous novelist, who, however, has adopted a pseudonym whilst making a striking departure in the character of his writing. Those who have read the novel predict that it will create one of the sensations of the season.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

THE CRIME and the CRIMINAL. By Richard MARSH.

An intensely interesting story, told with sensational power.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d., with 4 Full-page Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

FORDHAM'S FEUD. By Bertram Mitford. Third Edition.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d., with 16 Full-page Illustrations by F. S. Wilson.

CAPTAIN SHANNON. By Coulson Kernahan. Second Edition.

JUST PUBLISHED. ON SALE EVERYWHERE.

GUY BOOTHBY'S

THE FASCINATION OF THE KING.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, special design, bevelled boards, 5s.

Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

"A most picturesque romance, noteworthy for its spirited style, chivalrous tone, powerful human interest, and freedom from commonplace in plot and characterisation." Globe.

"A brilliant tale, dramatically and vigorously told."—Daily News.

"Highly ingenious and exciting.....A stirring romance."—World.

THE FASCINATION OF THE KING.

"A tale of much power and sustained interest, narrated with dramatic effect." Scotsman.

"The interest is sustained from first to last, and thrilling incidents crop up at almost every page."—People.

"Bound to be a very popular romance.....Mr. Boothby wipes the very memory of pain and anxiety out."—Sketch.

THE FASCINATION OF THE KING.

"One of the most fascinating stories that has seen the light this season. The scenes are beautiful specimens of word-painting, and the characters are admirably drawn." Public Opinion.

"The author's vigour and brightness never fail him; his facility of invention is well reflected in the felicity of his language."—Bradford Observer.

OTHER NOVELS BY GUY BOOTHBY.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

Profusely Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

DOCTOR NIKOLA. Fourth Edition.

THE BEAUTIFUL WHITE DEVIL. Seventh Edition.

A BID for FORTUNE. Third Edition.

IN STRANGE COMPANY. Fifth Edition.

THE MARRIAGE of ESTHER. Fourth Edition.

Ready Immediately.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

On the Cars and Off.

Being the Journal of a Pilgrimage along the Queen's Highway, from Halifax in Nova Scotia to Victoria in Vancouver's Island.

By DOUGLAS SLADEN, Author of "The Japs at Home," &c.

With New and copiously Illustrated Chapter on KLONDIKE, by P. A. HURD.

Profusely and beautifully Illustrated with 19 Collotype Pictures of Canadian Scenery and over 80 Cuts in the Text. Medium 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

"Will invite and reward attention by the profusion and intrinsic attractiveness of its illustrations, and by the lively and genial tone of the letterpress.....The book is appropriately dedicated to Lord Dufferin, whose recommendation of its merits is at once pertinent and sufficient. Mr. Sladen may well feel that he needs no higher recommendation of his work than that of the popular Governor-General."—Times.

The TIMES says:

"Haydn's Dictionary of Dates' is the most universal Book of Reference in a moderate compass that we know of in the English Language."

TWENTY-FIRST EDITION, in 1 vol., medium 8vo, cloth, price 21s.

Haydn's Dictionary of Dates

And Universal Information.

RELATING TO ALL AGES AND NATIONS.

TWENTY-FIRST EDITION, Enlarged, Corrected, and Revised Throughout.

By BENJAMIN VINCENT,

Hon. Librarian of the Royal Institution of Great Britain.

CONTAINING

THE HISTORY OF THE WORLD.

Comprehending Remarkable Occurrences, both Ancient and Modern—The Foundations, Laws, and Government of all Nations, and particularly of the British Empire; their Progress in Civilisation, Industry, Literature, Arts, and Sciences; their Achievements in Arms; their Civil, Military, Religious, and Philanthropic Institutions, &c.

The comprehensive and exhaustive nature of the Dictionary, and the completeness with which it presents every department of Human Knowledge, appears in the fact that this Edition consists of about 1,250 Pages, 12,000 Articles, and 140,000 Dates and Facts. Revised, Corrected, and Enlarged, with New and Important Matter, and thoroughly brought down to the Autumn of 1895.

The TIMES says of the Seventeenth Edition of this work: "It is certainly no longer now a mere Dictionary of Dates, whatever it might have been on its first appearance, but a comprehensive Dictionary or Cyclopaedia of General Information."

"So altogether indispensable that it is difficult to imagine a period when it was not in existence."—Spectator.

Full Prospectus, with Specimen Page, post free on application.

620TH THOUSAND.—THE BEST COOKERY BOOK IN THE WORLD.

Strongly bound in half-roan, 7s. 6d.; cloth gilt, gilt edges, 8s. 6d.; half-morocco, or half-calf, 12s. 6d.; tree-calf, 18s.

Mrs. Beeton's Book of Household Management.

Enlarged, Recomposed, Revised, Improved. With New Menus, New Modes, New Recipes, New Tables, New Illustrations.

About 1,700 Pages, with Thousands of Recipes and Instructions, Hundreds of Engravings and New Coloured Cookery Plates. With Quantities, Time, Costs, and Seasons, Directions for Carving and Trussing, Management of Children, Economy of the Kitchen, Duties of Servants, the Doctor, Legal Memoranda, and Bills of Fare and Menus of all kinds and for all seasons.

* * As a Wedding Gift, Birthday Book, or Presentation Volume at any period of the year, Mrs. Beeton's HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT is entitled to the very first place. The book will last a lifetime, and save money every day.

Royal 8vo, cloth gilt, bevelled boards, 10s. 6d.

Beeton's Garden Management.

A Compendium of the Theory and Practice of Horticulture, and a Complete Guide to Gardening in all its Branches.

Profusely Illustrated with Coloured Plates and 600 Engravings.

"The work is exceedingly comprehensive.....appears to leave no detail of the subject without adequate treatment."—Daily Telegraph.

London: WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED, Salisbury Square, E.C.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

GENEHA

4 OCT 1897

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1325.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

H. GREVEL & CO.,
PUBLISHERS and IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS,
33, King Street, Covent Garden, W.C.
Daily Importations of all Prominent New Publications.
CATALOGUES of the Foreign Antiquaries can be had by stating subjects required.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS of FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 30, South Frederick Street,
Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
1, Great Lane, London, E.C.
And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla.
MSB. considered for Publication. [Established 1819.
A large Clientele in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and
BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—
KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES
LETTERS.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Stedman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

TYPE-WRITING by CLERGYMAN'S
DAUGHTER and ASSISTANTS.—Authors' MSS. 1s. per 1,000 words. Circulars, &c., by Copying Process.—Miss SIKKA, West Kensington Type-Writing Agency, 15, Weymouth Road, Hammermith, W.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate.
Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LEXNIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL
DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LIVERPOOL.ARTS AND SCIENCE DEPARTMENT.
SESSION 1897-8.

Full Curriculum for VICTORIA UNIVERSITY and LONDON UNIVERSITY DEGREES in ARTS and SCIENCE. Students also prepared for Civil Service, Cambridge Higher Local and other Examinations.

SPECIAL CURRICULA are PROVIDED for STUDENTS PREPARING for BUSINESS LIFE, for TECHNOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY, for ENGINEERING, ELECTROTECHNICS, and ARCHITECTURE.

Physical, Engineering, Biological, and Chemical Laboratories. Practical Laboratory Work for Professional and other Students. All Classes open to Male and Female Students of sixteen and upwards. Students admitted in their sixteenth year subject to Preliminary Examination.

PROFESSORS AND LECTURERS.

Greek—Professor Randall, M.A., D.Litt.
Latin—Professor Strong, M.A., LL.D.
French—Victor H. Friedel, B.Sc., LL.D., Ph.D.
German—Professor Kuno Meyer, Ph.D., M.A.
Italian—Chevalier Lordini, D.C.L.
English Language and Anglo-Saxon—R. Priebech, Ph.D.
Modern Literature—Professor Raleigh, M.A.
English History—Professor Mackay, M.A.
Philosophy—Professor MacCuan, M.A.
Art of Education—W. H. Woodward, B.A.
Political Economy and Commercial Science—Professor Gonner, M.A.
Architecture—Professor Simpson.
Law—Professor Emmott.
Mathematics—Professor Curry, M.A.
Physics—Professor Oliver Lodge, LL.D., D.Sc., F.R.S.
Electrotechnics—A. Hay, B.Sc.
Engineering—Professor Hele Shaw, LL.D., Mem. Inst. C.E.
Chemistry—Professor Campbell Brown, D.Sc.
Physiology—Professor C. S. Sherrington, M.A., M.D., F.R.S.
Biology—Professor Herdman, D.Sc., F.R.S., F.L.S.
Botany—Professor R. J. Harvey Gibson, M.A., F.L.S.
Physiography—J. L. Howard, D.Sc.

An ENTRANCE EXAMINATION for intending Students in their sixteenth year will be held on OCTOBER 1st and 2nd. SESSION commences OCTOBER 4th. Registration of Students, 11 to 1 and 3 to 4, September 30th; 10 to 1 and 3 to 4, October 1st; and 10 to 1 on October 2nd. EVENING CLASSES commence OCTOBER 11th. Full Prospectus on application to the COLLEGE REGISTRAR.

SWINEY LECTURES ON GEOLOGY.
UNDER the DIRECTION of the TRUSTEES of the BRITISH MUSEUM.

A COURSE of TWELVE LECTURES on "THE GEOLOGICAL HISTORY of INVERTEBRATE ANIMALS" will be delivered by R. H. TRAQUAIR, M.D., F.R.S., in the LECTURE THEATRE of the SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM (by permission of the Lords of the Committee of Council on Education), on MONDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, and FRIDAYS, at 5 p.m., beginning MONDAY 4th OCTOBER, and ending Friday, 29th October. Each Lecture will be illustrated by means of Lantern Slides and Limelight. Admission to the Course, Free.

By order of the Trustees,
W. H. FLOWES, Director.British Museum (Natural History),
Cromwell Road, London, S.W.VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.
THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The 24th SESSION of the DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS will begin on OCTOBER 5, and the 27th SESSION of the SCHOOL of MEDICINE on OCTOBER 1, 1897. The Classes prepare for the following professions:—Chemistry, Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Sanitary Engineering, Coal Mining, Textile Industries, Dyestuff Manufacture, Agriculture, School Teaching, Medicine, and Surgery. University Degrees are also conferred in the Faculties of Arts, Science, Medicine, and Surgery. Gifford Hall has been established for Students' Residence. Prospectus of any of the above may be had from the REGISTRAR.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES by Professor W. F. R. WELDON, F.R.S., will commence on WEDNESDAY, October 6th, at 1 p.m.

These Lectures are suited to the requirements of Students preparing for the Examinations of the London University, as well as to those of Students wishing to study Zoology for its own sake. Notice of other Courses of Lectures, to be delivered during the Session, will be given later.

J. M. HORSBURGH, M.A., Secretary.

ROYAL COLLEGE of SCIENCE, LONDON
(With which is incorporated the Royal School of Mines).

Doan: Professor J. W. JUDD, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S.

SESSION 1897-98.

The SESSION OPENS on WEDNESDAY, 8th October, at 10 a.m. There will be a DISTRIBUTION of PRIZES and MEDALS, and an ADDRESS by W. C. ROBERTS-AUSTEN, B.A., F.R.S., in the LECTURE THEATRE of the MUSEUM of SCIENCE and ART, South Kensington, at 2.30 p.m.

SCHOOL for GIRLS, Coombe Hill House,
East Grinstead, Sussex.

PRINCIPAL—MISS CLARK.

Moral Training is substituted for Religious Teaching, and an all-round development of the individual for mere lesson-learning. Physical Training and Hand-work form a definite part of the School Course. The AUTUMN TERM began SEPTEMBER 15th.

SUPERIOR SCHOOLS for GIRLS.—Miss LOUISA BROUGH can RECOMMEND several Good Schools from personal knowledge. England and Continent.—CENTRAL REGISTRY for TEACHERS, 25, Craven Street, Charing Cross.

UNIVERSITY of DURHAM.

SCHOLARSHIPS FOR WOMEN, OCTOBER, 1897.
£70 in SCHOLARSHIPS will be OFFERED for COMPETITION by WOMEN STUDENTS who commence Residence at Durham in October, 1897. The EXAMINATION begins on OCTOBER 13th. Notice of intention to Reside should be sent, not later than September 30th, to Professor SAMMON, The Castle, Durham, from whom all information as to cost of Residence, &c., may also be obtained.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE,
NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

PRINCIPAL—Rev. H. P. GURNEY, M.A., D.C.L.

The College forms part of the University of Durham, and the University Degrees in Science and Letters are open to Students of both sexes. In addition to the Departments of Mathematics and Natural Science, complete Courses are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, Mining, Literature, History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.

Residential Hostels for Men and for Women Students are attached to the College.
The 27th SESSION begins SEPTEMBER 27th, 1897.
Full particulars of the University Curricula in Science and Letters will be found in the CALENDAR (price 1s. 4d.). Prospectuses on application to the SECRETARY.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR
FOR SESSION 1897-8.

London: MACMILLAN &amp; CO. Manchester: JAS. E. CORNISH.

LONDON LIBRARY,
ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VIC-PRÉSIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

Treasurers—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF,

Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £5 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 21s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN
AND SPANISH BOOKS.TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA
per annum.COUNTRY
SUBSCRIPTIONS from
TWO GUINEAS per annum.
N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited.

30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 341, BRIMPTON ROAD S.W.

49, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and
at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.

(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 10, Leadenhall Street London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 1s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS :

The objections to them, and how they have been met.

Cæteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a reputé beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

		s.	d.
FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	...	8	6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	...	4	6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	...	2	6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 6s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages,

whilst the price (6s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London :

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.O.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Pictorial Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Office: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of

PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Cromer, Leman, Loud, Bright, Stark, Vincent, &c.

(Will be ready shortly.)

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size, 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY
FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

E P P S ' S

CRATEFUL—COMFORTING

C O C O A

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared this year:—

SAMUEL RICHARDSON...	January	2	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ...	April	17
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ..	"	9	HENRY WADSWORTH LONG-	"	24
LEIGH HUNT ...	"	16	FELLOW ...	"	24
LORD MACAULAY ...	"	23	ANDREW MARVELL ...	May	1
ROBERT SOUTHEY ..	"	30	ROBERT BROWNING ...	"	8
S. T. COLERIDGE ...	February	6	THOMAS CARLYLE ...	"	15
CHARLES LAMB ...	"	13	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ...	"	22
MICHAEL DRAYTON ...	"	20	CHARLES DICKENS ...	"	29
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ...	"	27	JONATHAN SWIFT ...	June	5
SAMUEL PEPYS ...	March	6	WILLIAM MAKEPEACE	"	12
EDMUND WALLER ...	"	13	THACKERAY ...	"	12
WILKIE COLLINS ...	"	20	WILLIAM BLAKE... ..	"	19
JOHN MILTON ...	"	27	SIR RICHARD STEELE ...	"	26
WILLIAM COWPER ..	April	3	ALEXANDER POPE ...	July	3
CHARLES DARWIN ...	"	10	DOUGLAS JERROLD ...	"	10
			FRANCIS BACON ...	"	17

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., LIMITED.

A GREAT CANADIAN HISTORICAL NOVEL.
THE FORGE in the FOREST. By Prof. CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 8s.
Being the Narrative of the Acadian Ranger, Jean de Mer, Seigneur de Briart, and how he crossed the Black Abbe, and of his adventures in a strange fellowship.
With 7 Full-Page Illustrations by Henry Sandham, R.C.A.

The JOURNAL of COUNTESS FRANCOISE KRASINSKA. Great-Grandmother of Victor Emmanuel. Translated by KASIMIR IZIEKONSKA. The only Authorised Edition. With a Portrait and other Illustrations. 16mo, gilt top, deckel edges, and a special cover design, price 8s.

A WORK UPON THE CURRENCY.
THE GREAT POWER: its Origin, Use, and Influence. By M. de P. WEBB. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.
This work, which pleads the necessity for monetary reform, investigates carefully the inadequacies of our present currency, and points out the possibilities of reformation.

THE PLATITUDES of a PESSIMIST. By the Author of "The Frig," "The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Will cause many a chuckle of quiet amusement."—Times.
"There is not one dull page from beginning to end."
"A witty and brilliant writer."—Daily Graphic.

CREATION with DEVELOPMENT or EVOLUTION. By Capt. J. DUDLEY R. HEWITT, R.N. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"The book is an interesting one."—Irish Ecclesiastical Gazette.

MEMOIRS of MRS. URQUHART. By M. C. BISHOP, Author of "The Prison Life of Marie Antoinette and her Children," "A Memoir of Mrs. Augustus Craven." Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BOOK of TEPHI. By Dr. J. A. Good-CHILD. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"This is in many respects a wonderful book."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE "INTERNATIONAL SCIENTIFIC SERIES."

WHAT is ELECTRICITY? By John TROWBRIDGE, S.D., Harvard University. Crown 8vo, with many Illustrations, 6s.

MEMORY. By F. W. Edridge Green, M.D., Author of "Colour-Blindness." Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 5s.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

B I R K B E C K B A N K,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSBOROUGH, Manager.

W. THACKER & CO.'S LIST.

NOTICE.

"John Company" may be had at the London Libraries and Booksellers' on October 5th, the day of publication.

"Mr. H. G. Keene's new book, 'A Servant of John Company,' will certainly appear at a moment when India engrosses a more than usually large share of public interest. Anything from the pungent pen of the author of 'Sketches in Indian Ink' is sure to be worth reading."

DAILY NEWS.

A SERVANT OF "JOHN COMPANY."

(The Hon. East India Company). Being the Recollections (50 year) of an Indian Official, by H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., Hon. M.A., Author of "Sketches in Indian Ink," &c. With Portrait and 6 Full-Page Illustrations by W. SIMPSON, of the "Illustrated London News," from Sketches by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

CONTENTS: Posting Days in England—Fighting Fitzgerald—Daniel O'Connell—Reminiscences of the Indian Mutiny—Duelling in the Army, and the part the late Prince Consort took in the Abolition of the same—Agra—Lord Canning—Sir Henry Lawrence—Anglo-Indian Society in the Days of the East India Company—Lord Dalhousie—Sir H. M. Elliot—and other well-known Indian Officials; interspersed with Original Stories and Anecdotes of the Times, and Appendix on the Present Troubles in India.

A NEW WORK ON BRITISH STOCK.

THE BEST BREEDS of BRITISH

STOCK: a Practical Guide for Farmers and Owners of Live-Stock in England and the Colonies. By Professors J. F. SHELTON, late Special Commissioner of the Canadian Government, and JAMES LONG, Author of "British Dairy Farming." Edited by JOHN WATSON, F.L.S. Medium 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

A useful and safe guide, written by well-known authorities who are men of science and practical farmers.

A NEW WORK ON TACTICS.

TACTICS: as Applied to Schemes.

By Major J. SHERSTON, D.S.O., P.S.C. (Rifle Brigade), with an Appendix containing "Solutions to some Tactical Schemes," by Capt. L. J. SHADWELL, P.S.C. (Suffolk Regiment), D.A.A.G. for Instruction. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with 7 Maps. Demy 8vo, 6s.

A NEW MEDICAL WORK.

MEDICAL HINTS for HOT CLIMATES

and for Those Out of Reach of Professional Aid. By CHARLES HEATON, M.R.C.S. With Diagrams. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THACKER'S NEW SIX-SHILLING SERIES

OF STANDARD WORKS,

Including History, Biography, Travel, The Belles Lettres and Miscellaneous Literature.

NOW READY.

In crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s. each Volume.

RUDYARD KIPLING.—DEPARTMENTAL

DIETIES and OTHER VERSES. Ninth Edition. Printed on antique wove paper, with Frontispiece and several Full-page and smaller Illustrations from Original Drawings by DUDLEY CLEVER.

"ALIPH CHEEM."—LAYS of IND: Comic, Satirical, and Descriptive Poems, Illustrative of Anglo-Indian Life. Illustrated by the AUTHOR, LIONEL INGLIS, R.A. STERNDALE, and others. Tenth Edition.

E. H. A.—A NATURALIST on the PROWL.

With 80 Illustrations by R. A. STERNDALE, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S., Author of "Mammalia of India." Second Edition.

E. H. A.—THE TRIBES on MY FRONTIER.

An Indian Naturalist's Foreign Policy. With 50 Illustrations by F. C. MACRAE. Sixth Edition.

E. H. A.—BEHIND the BUNGALOW. With

53 Clever Sketches by the Illustrator of "The Tribes." Fifth Edition.

W. THACKER & CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

Demy 4to, half-buckram, 36s. net; half-vellum, 42s. net.

THE CHURCH OF ST. MARY THE VIRGIN, OXFORD.

By T. G. JACKSON, R.A.,
Sometime Fellow and now Honorary Fellow of Wadham College.

With 24 Full-page Illustrations and numerous Cuts in the Text.

TIMES.—"A quarto of very comely appearance.....Mr. Jackson combines a survey of details which all students of architecture will find full of interest, with a lucid and vivid sketch of the history of the Church which will be welcome to every one who cares for Oxford and its seeming academical memories."

Part XI. now ready, price 3s. 6d. net, per Part.

HISTORICAL ATLAS OF MODERN EUROPE,

FROM the DECLINE of the ROMAN EMPIRE.

Comprising also Maps of Parts of Asia and of the New World connected with European History. Edited by R. LANE POOLE, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Diplomatic in the University of Oxford.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH MIRACLE PLAYS, MORALITIES, and INTERLUDES.

Specimens of the Pre-Elizabethan Drama.

Edited, with an Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by ALFRED W. POLLARD, M.A.

ACADEMY.—"The volume contains an extraordinary amount of instructive and interesting material."

8vo, half-bound, 16s.

VILLAINAGE IN ENGLAND:

Essays in English Medieval History.

By PAUL VINOGRADOFF, Professor in the University of Moscow.

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"There is no living English scholar who knows these materials better."

Crown 8vo, 8s. 6d.

THE DEEDS OF BEOWULF:

An English Epic of the Eighth Century done into Modern Prose.

With an Introduction and Notes by JOHN EARLE, M.A.

DAILY NEWS.—"The unlearned world, which cares to understand the life of its fathers, should welcome this interesting picture of the heroic age and the early English epic made into English 'understanding of the people.'"

8vo, cloth, Vols. I. and II., £1 12s. net.

THE OULTS of the GREEK STATES.

By L. R. FARNELL, M.A., With 61 Plates and over 100 Illustrations.

[Vol. III. (completing the Work) in the press.

ATHENÆUM.—"The book before us is one all students should read; it will be a safe guide."

8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d. net.

MODES of ANCIENT GREEK MUSIC.

By D. B. MONRO, M.A., Provost of Oriel College.

SCOTSMAN.—"Mr. D. B. Monro's scholarly and illuminative monograph is so well based in original study, and so well supported by some recent monumental discoveries, that the essay will probably be the chief authority on its theme for some time to come."

8vo, half-bound, 10s. 6d. net.

THE UTOPIA of SIR THOMAS MORE

Edited by J. H. LUPTON, B.D.

TIMES.—"A very complete and scholarly edition of Sir Thomas More's celebrated treatise, in which the editor has attempted, and not unsuccessfully in our judgment, to treat it with something of the exact care that is looked for in editing a classical author."

Full Catalogues sent post free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS
WAREHOUSE AMEN CORNER, E.C.

WM. BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS.

PRINCE RANJITSINHJI on CRICKET

Dedicated to Her Majesty the Queen Empress.

THE FOURTH EDITION of the SIX-SHILLING ISSUE of "THE JUBILEE BOOK of CRICKET," by K. S. RANJITSINHJI, is now ready, and may be obtained AT ALL BOOKSELLERS. With 107 Full-Page Illustrations, large crown 8vo.

THE FOLLOWING EDITIONS ARE ALSO ON SALE:

I. Edition de Luxe.—Limited to 350 Copies, printed on Hand-made Paper, and handsomely bound in buckram. Crown 4to, with 22 Photogravures and 85 Full-page Plates. Each Copy signed by PRINCE RANJITSINHJI. Price £5 5s. net.

II. Fine Paper Edition.—Medium 8vo, with Photogravure Frontispiece and 106 Full-page Plates on Art Paper. 25s. net.

ANNALS of a PUBLISHING HOUSE.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD and HIS SONS: their Magazine and Friends. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. With 4 Portraits. Demy 8vo, Vols. I and II., £3 2s. (12th October.

MR. BLACKMORE'S NEW NOVEL.

DARIEL: a Romance of Surrey. By R. D. BLACKMORE, Author of "Lorna Doone," "The Maid of Sker," &c. With 14 Illustrations by Chris. Hammond. Crown 8vo, 6s. (1st October.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

ELEMENTS of the SCIENCE of RELIGION. Part I. MORPHOLOGICAL. Being the Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1896. By C. P. TIELE, Theol. D., 1st D. (Honon.), Hon. M.R.A.S., &c., Professor of the Science of Religion in the University of Leiden. In 3 vols. Vol. I., post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

WITH the CONQUERING TURK:

Confessions of a Bashli-Bazouk. By G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "The Land of the Dollar," &c. With 4 Maps. In 1 vol., small demy 8vo. (Immediately.

PERIODS of EUROPEAN LITERATURE.

Edited by Professor SAINTSBURY.

THE LATER RENAISSANCE. By

DAVID HANNAY. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

PEACE WITH HONOUR. By Sydney

C. GRIER, Author of "An Uncrowned King," "His Excellency's English Governors," "In Furthest Ind," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s. (Shortly.

WILD TRAITS in TAME ANIMALS.

Being some Familiar Studies in Evolution. By LOUIS ROBINSON, M.D. With Illustrations by Stephen T. Dadd. In 1 vol., demy 8vo. (Shortly.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

AUDREY CRAVEN. By May Sinclair.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

CHRISTMAS STORIES FOR CHILDREN.

ECHOES of OLDEN DAYS. By

BEATRICE HARRADEN. With 40 Illustrations by H. R. Millar. In 1 vol., square crown 8vo.

A SKETCH of the NATURAL HISTORY

(VERTEBRATES) of the BRITISH ISLANDS. By F. G. AFLALO, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S., Author of "A Sketch of the Natural History of Australia," &c. With numerous Illustrations by Lodge and Bennett. In 1 vol., crown 8vo.

NEW LIGHTS on SIBERIA. With an

Account of a Journey on the Great Siberian Iron Road. By J. Y. SIMPSON. With numerous Illustrations. In 1 vol., demy 8vo.

TWO NEW CLASS-BOOKS.

LATIN VERSE UNSEENS. By G.

MIDDLETON, M.A., Lecturer in Latin, Aberdeen University, late Scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge, Joint-Author of "Student's Companion to Latin Authors." Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. (Just published.

OUTLINES of ENGLISH LITERA-

TURE for YOUNG SCHOLARS. With Illustrative Specimens. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College, Author of "A History of English Literature," "English Verse for Junior Classes," &c. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d. (Just published.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE GREECE of TO-DAY.

GREECE in the NINETEENTH CENTURY: a Record of Hellenic Emancipation and Progress, 1821-1897. By LEWIS SERGEANT, Author: "New Greece," &c. Map and 24 Illustrations. Cloth, 10s. 6d.

VOL. I. of "THE BUILDERS of GREATER BRITAIN."

SIR WALTER RALEGH. By Martin A. S. HUME, Author of "The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth," &c. Maps and Photogravure Frontispiece. Cloth, 5s. (Being the FIRST VOLUME of a NEW SERIES, entitled "BUILDERS of GREATER BRITAIN," edited by H. F. WILSON, formerly Fellow of Trin. Coll. Cam.) "Mr. Hume has written an admirable book.... There is not a dull page in it, and with his skillful telling of it, the story of Raleigh's life and of his times reads like a romance."—Pall Mall Gazette.

A TRUE HISTORY of BOYISH FROLIC.

THOSE DREADFUL TWINS: Middy and Bosun. By THEMSELVES. Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE LAST WORK of a GREAT MAN.

JOURNEYS THROUGH FRANCE. By H. TAINE. Being the Authorised Translation of "Carnets de Voyage," 8 Illustrations. Cloth, 7s. 6d. "The notes derive a peculiar interest and charm from the fact that they were made in the places described, and therefore convey impressions still fresh and vivid."—Daily News.

MRS. BRIGHTWEN'S NEW BOOK.

GLIMPSES into PLANT LIFE. By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN. Profusely Illustrated. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

A TREASURY of COMFORT.

"YET." By Rev. F. R. Andrews.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s. "Yet" is the motto of each chapter of this work, taken from the most interesting narratives of the Bible, and illustrated by a rich variety of material gathered from almost infinite sources, and set forth in a style of great force and beauty.

NEW VOLUME of THE CHILDREN'S STUDY.

OLD TALES from GREECE. By ALICE ZIMMERN. Cloth, gilt top, with Frontispiece, 2s. 6d.

"By means of this new issue the old tales can and will be read with increasing interest and profit.... The paper, printing, and binding are a work of art."—Methodist Times.

THE INVENTION of PRINTING.

THE PRINTERS of BASLE in the FIFTEENTH and SIXTEENTH CENTURIES: their Biographies, Printed Books and Devices. By CHARLES WILLIAM HECKETHORN, Author of "Secret Societies," &c. Illustrated. Buckram, gilt, 21s. net.

BY MARK RUTHERFORD.

CLARA HOPGOOD. Third Edition, uniform with MARK RUTHERFORD's other Books. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

A NEW NOVEL BY AMELIA E. BARR.

PRISONERS of CONSCIENCE. By AMELIA E. BARR. 12 Illustrations. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

A GEORGIAN ROMANCE.

THE TEMPLE of FOLLY: a Novel. By PAUL CRESWICK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

A STORY of RUSTIC LOVE BY A NEW WRITER.

THE PEOPLE of CLOPTON. By GEORGE BARTRAM. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

PASSION and POVERTY.

LIZA of LAMBETH. By W. Somerset MAUGHAM. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"There has not been so powerful a story of the lowest class since Mr. Rudyard Kipling wrote 'The History of Bodalia Herodotus.' We are not sure that this story does not beat that one in vividness and knowledge of the class it depicts.... There is more to be learned from 'Liza of Lambeth' than from a score of the usual sentimental stories of the sort to which it belongs, or from a year spent in superficial slumming."—Standard.

AUSTRALIAN STORIES.

THE TWILIGHT REEF, and Other Stories. By H. C. MACILWAINE. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY JOHN OLIVER HOBBS.

THE GODS, SOME MORTALS, and LORD WICKENHAM. By JOHN OLIVER HOBBS. New Edition. (Unwin's Green Cloth Library.) 6s.

LONDON:

T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
France and Wordsworth ... ..	233
Raleigh Again ... ..	233
Hannibal ... ..	234
"Scientific" Criticism ... ..	235
Secrets, Open and Shut ... ..	236
The Making of the Towns ... ..	237
Old America ... ..	237
Shakespeare's Boyhood ... ..	238
FROM CROWDED SHELVES ... ..	238
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	239
PROPER BIOGRAPHY ... ..	240
EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM: II, CLARENCE MANGAN	241
PARIS LETTER ... ..	242
THE WEEK ... ..	243
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	243
ANNOUNCEMENTS ... ..	243
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	244
THE DISCOUNT QUESTION ... ..	244
AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS ... ..	244
DRAMA ... ..	245
SCIENCE ... ..	246
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	247
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	247
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	73-76

REVIEWS.

FRANCE AND WORDSWORTH.

The Early Life of William Wordsworth. By Émile Legouis. Translated by J. W. Matthews. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

THE sub-title of this book is A Study of the Prelude, it is by a professor at the University of Lyons, and is prefaced by a laudatory extract from an article of Mr. Leslie Stephen. The praise is deserved. M. Legouis has made an interesting contribution to Wordsworthian literature. Apart from this the book would be notable. France is the most self-satisfied country in the Europe of letters, and Protection is supreme in its literary economics. There is no need for anything corresponding to our piteous legend: "Support British manufactures." French readers support home manufactures as one man. It is the duty of every Gallic patriot to believe that his country is as matchless in literature as in war, love, acting, and cookery. That he may swear it with a safe conscience, he uses no other literature. And lest he should be tempted from the way of perfection, he learns no other language. This is the great Protective tariff by which the supremacy of French manufactures is assured. All English-made goods have to suffer the tax of translation—practically a prohibitive tax in the case of poetry. The average French littérateur's knowledge of tongues resembles Tommy Atkins's knowledge of "'ow to sling the bat"—with an advantage on the side of Tommy Atkins. Such a littérateur justly considers himself a man of cosmopolitan culture if he can spell villainously in the chief languages of Europe. We remember an important, and fairly recent, study of Voltaire, in which Potsdam was throughout the book consistently spelled Posdam. Under these circumstances we do not expect modern English poetry to make the Channel voyage. Byron is, of course, an exception; because Byron, as Mr. Swinburne remarks, is improved by being put into prose. Least of all does one expect to hear the name of Wordsworth from a French mouth. A few French writers enumerated by M. Legouis have made some partial study of the great Lake poet—including M. Bourget, the most zealous French apostle of our later poetry—but, as M. Legouis remarks, his poems have never been translated in France. They never will be. Heine will sooner be translated into English than Wordsworth into French.

This book, therefore, must seem to Englishmen a veritable tour de force. Those who remember the dense failure of Taine to seize the spirit of Wordsworth will be astonished and pleased by the success of M. Legouis. Yet it is not directly or professedly a study of Wordsworth's poetry. M. Legouis has taken a peculiar and original line. His object is to study the early life of the poet, between 1770 and 1798; not, however, on the ordinary lines of biography, but in order to trace the history of that development by which the ardent Republican, the youth halting and vacillating in his choice of a career, was transformed into the great poet and conservative philosopher. He considers that the inner truth of this change has not been clearly understood and described, owing to the neglect of the materials provided by Wordsworth himself in the "Prelude." It is singular that the way in which that poem has been neglected for the sake of the decidedly inferior "Excursion" should receive a rebuke from a Frenchman. Of late there has been a reaction in favour of the "Prelude." One sign of it is the dainty little volume in which the poem was not long since issued by Mr. Dent, the publisher of this very book. M. Legouis, therefore, brings together the facts which modern research has collected concerning the early life of Wordsworth, and interweaving these biographical details with the autobiographical details of the "Prelude," goes through that poem seriatim; elucidating step by step the account which the poet gives of his own mental growth, crisis, and change. The other poems are freely drawn upon for collateral illustration of this central theme, the "Prelude." The scheme is original, the execution lucid and sympathetic, the result a considerable addition to our understanding of this portion of Wordsworth's life.

The whole of Wordsworth's spiritual crisis centred round the French Revolution; and this connexion with France makes the author's labour doubly a labour of love to him. He shows for the first time the important influence exercised upon Wordsworth by the Republican captain Beaupuy, whom Wordsworth met during his second French tour. Beaupuy it was that awakened the young nature-worshipper's enthusiasm for humanity and belief in human perfectibility, afterwards confirmed by the philosophical lessons of Godwin. With the failure of the Revolution came slow and reluctant reaction, and distrust of Godwin's principles. For a time he was on the brink of pessimism. M. Legouis traces in detail how he was gradually healed by the influence of nature and his sister Dorothy; how the reverence for humanity remained, though the vision of human perfectibility vanished; and how finally the mystical philosophy of Coleridge cemented the two-fold love of man and nature into the coherent edifice which all Wordsworthians know.

The final portion of the book is occupied by a review of Wordsworth's poetic characteristics, singularly understanding to have come from a French mind. His account of the famous distinction between Imagination and Fancy, nevertheless, hardly seems to grasp all that Wordsworth intended by it. With all Wordsworth's want of adequate admiration for his friend's poetry, he would hardly, we think, have denied imagination to Coleridge, or set him down as belonging to the lower order of purely fanciful poets. Yet so M. Legouis does, in the evident belief that he has Wordsworth's authority for the classification. On the other hand, he clearly understands the important part Wordsworth assigns to the senses. He discerningly says that Wordsworth's poetry comes purely through the eye and ear; that scent and taste have no part in it. He concludes that Wordsworth's sense of taste was as deficient as he himself avowed his sense of smell to be. There can be little doubt of it. It is well known that any affection of the sense of smell physiologically involves the sense of taste. But when M. Legouis proceeds to argue from the extreme temperance of Wordsworth's poetry a deficiency in animal sensibility he both shows deficient knowledge of psychology and contradicts the poet's private assertion that he abstained from love-poetry because his poems would be too warm. And some know that he spoke the truth. But these are details. M. Legouis has written a book which must interest the English reader, and may even make a few more French readers learn English.

RALEIGH AGAIN.

Sir Walter Raleigh. By Martin A. S. Hume. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

SOME two or three weeks ago we had occasion to notice Mr. John Buchan's sympathetic and penetrating study of Sir Walter Raleigh. To-day there comes into our hands another monograph on the same fascinating personality, written on a larger scale than Mr. Buchan's, and biographical rather than critical in its intent. It would almost seem as if Raleigh were about to usurp the place so long held in the popular estimation by Sir Philip Sidney as the leading and typical Englishman of "the spacious times." To our own mind, indeed, Sidney is a trifle self-conscious, and, again, perhaps too impeccable to be completely interesting. It is difficult to get him from the pedestal on which his contemporaries placed him to the level of common humanity. And even when you mine beneath the traditionary presentment into the real individuality, you find that Shakespeare has done it all before you in "Hamlet." Raleigh, on the other hand, is full of problems, an unexhausted field for the historian and the psychologist. He is certainly not impeccable, but he is as picturesque as Sidney, and for his very vices and meannesses assuredly the more typical, the more Elizabethan, the more humane.

The volume now before us is by Major Martin Hume, who has already won golden opinions for his book on The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth and for a number of essays and detached studies dealing with the same period of English history. Major Hume has many of the essential qualifications of an historian. The stern discipline of editing State Papers has given him accuracy and the scholar's habit; and to these he adds a capacity for vigorous and effective narrative, without which the most learned treatise can only fail of its aim through sheer tediousness. For the historian, who would catch and keep an audience, must needs be artist as well as scholar: otherwise is he condemned to the collecting of material to serve for the masterpieces of better men. Major Hume is no dry-as-dust pedant. He gives you the impression of large resources and a reserve of learning; but at the same time he can hold your attention and ensure that what he has to say will not be lost upon wandering ears. One almost hopes to find in him the man destined to fill up the gap between Froude and Gardiner, and to write the unwritten history of the last fifteen years of Elizabeth.

Major Hume is interested in the many-faceted Raleigh, primarily as the great navigator and coloniser, and as the first man to form clearly the magnificent vision of a Greater Britain. The biography, indeed, appears as the first volume of a series to be called "Builders of Greater Britain," and to be entrusted to various writers under the general editorship of Mr. H. F. Wilson, of the Colonial Office. Great stress is therefore laid on the details of Raleigh's voyages to Virginia and to Guiana, and by the help of maps and plans Major Hume attempts to make the objects and conduct of these expeditions clearer than before. He brings out very convincingly the point that they were no mere filibustering raids in search of gold or jewels, but deliberate essays after colonisation in pursuance of a settled policy which was Raleigh's darling dream. Where possible, Major Hume quotes from Raleigh's own inimitable narratives of his adventures, and very vivid some of these extracts are. What a happy pastoral note Raleigh touches in his description of the first entry into the Canaan which was Guiana!

"The plains without bush or stubble, all fair green grass, the deer crossing every path, the birds towards evening singing on every tree, with a thousand several tunes; cranes and herons of white crimson and carnation perched on the river-side; the air fresh with a gentle easterly wind, and every stone we stooped to take up promising either gold or silver by his complexion."

Major Hume is not, however, so much absorbed in Raleigh's ideals of empire as to be unable to do justice to other aspects of his chequered career. His accounts of such stirring events as the capture of Cadiz, in 1596, and the abortive rebellion of Essex, in 1601, are admirable examples of descriptive writing. And in the narrative of Raleigh's judicial murder an oft-told tale is retold with sympathy, good feeling, and restraint:

"Most solemnly, and with convincing eloquence, he told his story once again. He called God to witness, with his dying breath, that he was a loyal Englishman, and had had no treaties with the French, that he had had no hand in the death of Essex, and that his action in the Guiana expedition had been throughout honest and sincere. He indignantly refuted the lies of Manourie and Stukeley as to his alleged disloyal expression and his intentions, and then calmly and cheerfully prepared for the end. 'I have a long journey to go,' he said, as he put off his long velvet gown and satin doublet, and then he asked the headsmen to let him see the axe. 'Dost thou think I am afraid of it?' Then, smiling as he handed it back, he said to the Sheriff: 'This is a sharp medicine, but it is a sound cure for all diseases.' When he was asked which way he would lie upon the block, he replied, 'So the heart be right, it is no matter which way the head lies.' Then, at two strokes, the wise white head fell, and one of the brightest geniuses that England ever saw was offered up, a fruitless sacrifice to the cause of an impossible alliance with the power whose arrogance he had dared to withstand."

The last word has not been yet said, and is not likely to be said for some while, upon Raleigh's character and ambitions. The diligence of the earlier biographers, Oldys, Edwardes, and Mr. Stebbing, has pretty well exhausted the sources of personal and historical fact that are open to us. Major Hume has, however, been fortunate enough to come across two unpublished letters from Raleigh to Lord Carew, and also a number of letters from Gondomar, the Spanish ambassador to the court of King James, which are preserved at Simancas and at Madrid. These are of very considerable importance; for they set in a very clear light the intrigues by which Raleigh was permitted to go upon his last and fatal expedition. More than ever it is evident that he was the victim of a deeply laid plot of Gondomar's for the re-establishment of Spanish prestige in South America, and the price paid by a degenerate English King for an unnatural friendship with the hereditary enemy of his country. Major Hume's book is at once a considerable contribution to Raleigh literature, and a rung in the ladder of his own well-deserved reputation as an historian.

THE GREAT CARTHAGINIAN.

Hannibal. By William O'Connor Morris.
(G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

It is the custom of Continental critics to compare modern England with ancient Carthage. Such a resemblance has about it a superficial probability, but on examination cannot be maintained. It is true enough that Carthage was emphatically a sea-power; her ships were in every port, and her citizens had something of that restless enterprise which has characterised the English race. Beyond this, however, the contrast between the ancient and modern city is striking enough. Carthage, indeed, fell before Rome from the very want of those stubborn and vital qualities which have created the British Empire. With no national feeling, a mere conglomeration of petty nationalities, this city had never learnt the art of government. We hold our empire at the present time largely through the nice latitude granted to subject nations; while Carthage was a severe oppressor, and exercised tyranny rather than power. We might almost say that England had happily blended a mighty commerce more than Carthaginian with a patience and stolidity almost Roman. Carthage was never for one moment a match for the young and lusty republic of Rome, and her success in continuing so unequal a struggle for so long a time is due to one man, and one man only, Hannibal. We have no wish to depreciate the sagacity and various qualities of Hamilcar, but it was fated that he should play the part of Philip rather than that of Alexander. Of Hannibal himself it is difficult to speak with any moderation of praise. He easily surpasses, with one possible exception, the greatest captains of the ancient and modern world.

It is frequently objected that in the altered conditions of modern warfare the Punic strategy would have little effect; but such an objection seems to us futile in the extreme. The art of the commander has been, and always will be, to discern certain conditions, and then to act to the best possible advantage. It might even be said that the character of war has not changed in any essential, but that operations are now conducted with far greater rapidity and completeness. In this connexion it may be well to quote the saying of Napoleon himself, an ardent admirer of the Carthaginian: "Si Gustave-Adolphe ou Turenne arrivaient dans un de nos camps à la veille d'une bataille, ils pourraient commander l'armée des le lendemain, mais si Alexandre, César ou Annibal revenaient ainsi des Champs Élysées il leur faudrait au moins un ou deux mois." It may also be remarked that, though new forces have arisen, they are available for both sides, and capable of the same direction and effect.

We have said that Hannibal surpasses all captains with one possible exception; that sole exception is Napoleon. The art of a commander may roughly be divided into strategy and tactics. We are aware that certain military authorities recognise no distinction between the two operations; but to the civilian that distinction is at least convenient. Strategy, then, may be called the conduct of all those manoeuvres necessary to bring an army into given positions before actual conflict. The art of tactics concerns chiefly the movements of a general on the field of battle. It will easily be seen that while the one chiefly demands conception allied with rapidity, the other depends chiefly on intuition and execution. As a strategist, then, Napoleon may be called the more dazzling, but he left more to chance than did Hannibal, and the plans of the latter were more thoroughly thought out. Hannibal was quite incapable of either the Russian campaign or the projected English invasion. And here we may point out a very common error made in the estimation of Hannibal. As the author of this fascinating book points out, it was never the intention of Hannibal to make a single-handed expedition against Rome.

His design was to form a vast league of disaffected peoples, which was to be launched on Rome at the proper moment. That he never succeeded in really detaching a strong force of subject states is a high tribute to the tolerance of Roman government, but the design should be perceived. In the matter of tactics Hannibal was surely the superior of Napoleon. Never swayed by impulse, calm at the most hazardous moment, patient even in pursuit, and moderate in victory, his conduct on the field appears perfect. The great battle of Cannæ would appear to have been won, on a superficial examination, by the cavalry of Hasdrubal, but the whole design and calculation must be ascribed to Hannibal. Nor, as is well pointed out here, has the career of Hannibal taken on any glamour from tradition or history. Indeed, our chief authority on the Punic War, Livy, cannot conceal a certain bitter animosity against the man who so signally worsted the legions. It must be remembered, too, that while Napoleon had the whole resources of France at his back, an obedient government, and enthusiastic nation, Hannibal left at home a numerous party strongly opposed to his policy; had under him a mere medley of different races, and was rarely supplied from Carthage. Though it may be argued that the Corsican fought the whole world, and that his area of conquest was far more extensive, still it is doubtful whether he had ever to face such a foe as the Roman republic. The Austrians were brave but wretchedly led, the Russians were far from being the force they now are, and we ourselves never showed those magnificent qualities which the Romans continually displayed against Hannibal. We have been at some pains to draw out a comparison between Hannibal and Napoleon with the object of proving the real superiority of the former as a captain; but it is not merely as a captain that Hannibal is to be judged. Examine his conduct after Zama, a battle frequently compared with Waterloo! Hannibal has been completely defeated by an altogether inferior general, who had shown even here no strategy of the first class. It was a moment, then, when the greatest of men might be excused for showing some pettiness or rashness. But Hannibal did not scurry from the field with a cry of "Sauvons nous!" but calmly sought an interview with Scipio, and with consummate coolness succeeded in making the best terms possible for his country. This act, even more than the passage of the Alps, the strategy of Cannæ, or the stubborn stay in Bruttium, stamps the man as great among the great. One curious faculty of commanders which has, we think, never been sufficiently illustrated, is a certain intuition which leads them to divine the character of an opposing general. Thus Hannibal appears to have known exactly how to draw Flaminius into an ambush. Wellington so accurately measured the capacity of Soult that on more than one occasion he executed most perilous manoeuvres implicitly relying on a certain over-caution, which was the chief failing in that most scientific soldier. Marlborough, too, by playing on the vanity of Charles XII., succeeded in sending him off to his doom in Russia. That Hannibal was a real patriot cannot, we think, be doubted; but we cannot altogether agree with Mr. Morris's estimate of his statesmanship. He is also inclined to over-praise his hero; but it must be admitted that however high the panegyric, the author supports it with evidence always weighty and often indisputable.

"SCIENTIFIC" CRITICISM.

New Essays Towards a Critical Method. By John Mackinnon Robertson. (John Lane.)

We have, most of us, so entirely made up our minds that criticism is an art and not a science that the suggestion of a "scientific" criticism or a "science" of criticism is apt to arouse a spirit of antagonism. But Mr. Robertson's "science" turns out, on examination, to be by no means so revolutionary a conception as its name might lead us to suppose. He is not striving to apply chemical formulæ or the differential calculus to literary criticism. He merely asks for a more elaborate and comprehensive examination of the grounds of criticism before judgment is pronounced. He would have us examine in a judicial or "scientific" spirit the poet's character and environment with a glance at his hereditary predispositions and, if procurable, an inspection of his "bumps" and his cerebral lesions before proceeding to pronounce upon the works which those predispositions and bumps and cerebral lesions have or have not contributed to produce. We are, in fact, to recognise the "pathological" element (p. 50) in Rossetti, Poe's "cerebral derangement," and the "psycho-physiological" elements, familiar to readers of Dr. Nordau, which help or hinder the production of masterpieces. Quoting a rough definition in the first essay in this book, that on "The Theory and Practice of Criticism," we might describe this critical science as "the science of consistency in appreciation, since the science of that would involve the systematic study of all causes—in ourselves, in a book, in an author—which go to determine our individual judgments." From this it seems to us that what Mr. Robertson is aiming at might be more fairly called "systematic" than "scientific" criticism.

When all is said, honest criticism must resolve itself finally into the expression of the individual critic's honest opinion, guarded by himself as far as possible against errors of prejudice to which he may feel himself liable, but still in the last resort only an individual opinion. This can never possess that finality which we are apt to associate with the word "scientific," though the method of its expression may be made as "systematic" as you please. The critic may, in every case, set forth clearly at the beginning of his criticism an account of his author's life and tendencies, and the life and tendencies of his parents. He may follow this up, also in every case, by an account of what all the other critics of established repute have at various times said about him, with a glance at their lives and tendencies, if necessary, to the third and fourth generation; but, when all this has been done, the important part of the essay will still be the expression of the particular critic's own opinion, and the grounds on which he bases it. Mr. Robertson, in fact, seems to us, in his eagerness to defend his theory, to forget that what we really want in a criticism is a judgment on poems rather than on poets. In his own essay on Edgar Allan Poe he devotes a large portion of his space to the defence of Poe's moral character from the aspersions of Griswold and others, and the defence is a very able and painstaking one; but it has nothing to do with Poe's works either in prose or verse. It is no doubt true that Poe's essays and criticisms suffered from the fact that he was overworked, that he was ill, that he was intoxicated, what you will. But all that is beside the question. Is Poe's work good or bad? That is the interesting question for the reader, and the critic's duty is to estimate its merits and, if necessary, point out its defects. He is not asked, except incidentally, to account for them. Still less is he asked to excuse or palliate them. That belongs to a different branch of inquiry altogether. It has nothing to do with literature. It is a question of biography. The "Life" of Poe and the "Works" of Poe are quite different matters, and should be treated in distinct works. They should probably also be treated by distinct people, as requiring distinct aptitudes for their efficient discussion. Mr. Robertson, in fact, is a sort of amiable Dr. Nordau, though he disapproves highly of many of that writer's conclusions. He, too, has his psycho-physiological inquiries, and the rest of the armoury of scientific terms, but he approaches his subjects in a sympathetic instead of an antipathetic spirit. Dr. Nordau clapped all our geniuses in strait-waistcoats and angrily despatched our Decadents to lunatic asylums. Mr. Robertson's mood is kindlier. He recognises symptoms of Degeneracy, cerebral lesions, and the rest, but only to remark how wonderful it is that these very afflictions which unfit their victim in so many cases for the ordinary struggle of existence should apparently actually assist in the production of great artistic and literary works. In other words, Dr. Nordau, with his real hatred of literature, loves to assign a disreputable origin to the poems which he does not appreciate. Mr. Robertson appreciates the poems, and notes their origin—if it be their origin—with that judicial, sympathetic impartiality with which the ordinary physician notes the origin of the common cold. He writes of Coleridge:

"It may seem an extravagant thing to say, but I cannot doubt that the special quality of this felicitous work (Kubla Khan, The Ancient Mariner, Love, The Ballad of the Dark Ladie) is to be attributed to its being all conceived and composed under the influence of opium in the first stages of the indulgence, the stages, that is, in which he himself felt as if new born, before the new appetite itself proved to be a disease. There is a difficulty about the dating of Kubla Khan, which Coleridge himself attributed to 1797, but which Mr. Campbell thinks may belong to 1798. In any case, the particular opium-eating which produced Kubla Khan, declared by Coleridge to have been his first indulgence, is known not to have been the very first; and the psychological peculiarity of the shorter poem is essentially that of the longer."

And again:

"Opium was for him one more determinant; and in the first stage, before his fibre was sodden or degenerate with it, it might well be the most marvellous of all the influences he underwent. And it ought surely to be rather a comfort than otherwise thus to find a soul of goodness in the evil thing, to see a compensation in his weakness, rather than merely to deplore and denounce it. . . . Nay, a world which at best does but carry from age to age certain saved handfuls of beauty and wisdom to show for an infinity of striving lives cannot pronounce the case of Coleridge to be very much out of the common way."

This is, we agree with Mr. Robertson, not merely a more sympathetic, but also a more scientific method of treating such symptoms of "degeneracy" as Coleridge's opium-eating than Dr. Nordau's vituperative paragraphs. In fact, to use his own words:

"A Degenerate must have some qualities in common with his normal or undegenerate neighbours. The business of psycho-physiological criticism is to ascertain whether special developments of any qualities are, or are not, necessarily phases of degeneration; and even when the point is ascertained we have not reduced the flawed poet, as Dr. Nordau apparently supposes, to the status of the mad-house patient."

Mr. Robertson's own criticisms are, in the main, sound, and free from those eccentricities of judgment against which his "scientific" methods are evidently intended to guard. He marshals his facts with considerable care and ability, and, though he labours under a rather unwieldy style, his essays are generally interesting and readable. Besides the essays on "The Theory and Practice of Criticism," "Poe," and "Coleridge"—above referred to—the volume deals with Shelley, Keats, Burns, and "Stevenson on Burns." There is also a curious appreciation of Clough's verse, which we may deal with on another occasion. To praise a poet's verse for being such admirable prose seems a curiously paradoxical attitude.

SECRETS, OPEN AND SHUT.

The Secret Societies of all Ages and Countries.
By Charles William Heckethorn. (George Redway.)

SECRET societies have their own fascination; but if it is sought for in this book it shall not be found. Mr. Heckethorn has embodied in his unwieldy volumes all the errors which filled Signor de Castro's Il Mondo Secreto, and has furnished a new fund of his own. In a subject where facts are elusive you require at least philosophy; but Mr. Heckethorn is no philosopher. He has yet to learn what a Secret Society really is. A large portion of his space is occupied with records of sects or institutions, to which the name is as little applicable as it is to any family that keeps its own counsel, or to any trade that demands an initiation of apprenticeship, or to any shopkeeper who uses symbols for prices, or, for that matter, to any author who wears a nom de guerre. The author trifles with the time and temper of the reader both in his matter and the manner in which he presents it. The secrets of the societies are in some cases so shut that there is no getting at them, and any bogus story will pass muster, since nobody has the authority to deny what nobody knows. On the other hand, some of the secrets are such very open secrets that they have no sort of relevance to the subject in hand—they are pure, or sometimes rather impure, impertinences.

The style and spirit most affected by Mr. Heckethorn may be judged by a sentence translated by himself from De Castro's book, which he places opposite his own title-page:

"From the extraordinary nature of the effects we may infer the extraordinary nature, grandeur, and permanency of the causes; but their connexion, varying predominance, and mutual attraction, escape all analysis. Mystery surrounds the obscure fecundation. Sects draw vigour from the most opposite sentiments. The most exalted as well as the meanest elements concur in forming this giant, a Cyclopean and black fusion of all that seethes, boils and ferments in the social viscera."

This jargon done with, you come on a preface with another quotation, this time of "the old distich," which the author quotes in this way:

"What is hits [sic] is history,
And what is missed is mystery."

The volumes do not justify the distich; they utterly falsify them. What the author has missed he does not leave in mystery—he gives a false and vulgar version of it. What is hits is not always history either; nor, for that matter, are the "hits," which the author makes in most unruly fashion, if "hits" it is to be. The chapter which occupies pp. 285-291 is one which places the author outside the pale of serious notice. That such garbage should be written passes comprehension. In this instance the facts can be easily ascertained and tested; and if, where documents are forthcoming, the author has given us what is so trumpery and scandalous, we must form our own conclusion of his performances where research is unrewarded, where evidence is obscure, and where the only matter to be collected is of the nature of sand thrown in the eyes of the explorer to baffle and to blind.

The author would have done much better to reprint, as far as the law of copyright allowed, Mr. Stevenson's Suicide Club, which is better both as history and mystery than much that here appears. Or the serious reader can go to Lord Lytton's Zanoni for a far more intelligent and historic treatment of Rosicrucianism than any that Mr. Heckethorn can give him. The modern English Rosicrucians, by the way, had Lord Lytton for their Grand Patron, but in 1871 the society publicly announced that their intentions were merely literary and antiquarian, a frankness of avowal which the dabbler in mystery does not always discover. The Paris of to-day has made the Rosy Cross an emblem of artistic interest; and a society of Rosicrucians has, according to Dr. von Harless, existed in Germany since 1641. The literature of the society has been extensive and certainly peculiar. At the end of the seventeenth century there was published an Echo of the Society of the Holy Cross, while a work published in 1605 on the Restoration of the Decayed Temple of Pallas contained a Rosicrucian constitution. Again, a few years later the writer of the General Reformation of the World traced the history of the order to the East, where a German, one Christian Rosenkreuz, learned it in the fourteenth century, and learned it so well that he lived till he was 150, and then died "only because he was tired of life," a most lamely imagined ending for a seeker after the elixir of life. The legend-maker, the charlatan, the confiding believer went quickly to work. We need not follow the varying versions of the origin of the order's name, which even included its derivation from the device of Martin Luther's seal, a cross-crowned heart rising in the centre of a rose. A great variety of pamphlets and MSS., in most European languages, deal with this and other doubtful matters, and Mr. Waite's Real History of the Rosicrucians proved that interest still survived in a society which an ex-member believed he had slain more than a hundred years by his Rosicrucian in his Nakedness. The society as such can hardly be said to have wholly failed, since it has found for itself an elixir of life—in printer's ink.

The chapters on the French and German workmen's unions—though these are in many cases not Secret Societies at all—are, perhaps, the most interesting of all. The charcoal-burners and hewers of wood have St. Theobald for their patron, and a rite of initiation in the Black Forest and elsewhere which, on paper at any rate, is full of significance. Certainly the catechism of the hewer of wood, when an aspirant for admission, as quoted by Mr. Heckethorn, contains the "passages of pathetic simplicity" he claims for it:

"Q. Whence come ye, cousin of the oak?"

A. From the forest.

Q. Where is your father?

A. Raise your eyes to Heaven.

Q. Where is your mother?

A. Cast your eyes on the earth.

Q. What worship do you pay to your father?

A. Homage and respect.

Q. What things do you bestow on your mother?

A. My care during life, and my body afterwards.

Q. If I want help, what will you give me?

A. I will share with you half my day's earnings and my bread of sorrow. You shall rest in my hut and warm yourself at my fire."

The Druses, to whom Mr. Heckethorn gives a place in his curiously named volume, have speeches that are pretty enough. They question the stranger: "Do people in your part of the country grow balm-seed?" If the answer be "Yes, it is sown in the hearts of the Faithful," the speaker will be known as a co-religionist. When Burckhardt visited them, they had a malediction: "May God put a hat on you!" And we know how well the curse has worked.

THE MAKING OF THE TOWNS.

The Story of our English Towns. Told by P. H. Ditchfield, F.S.A. With an Introduction by Augustus Jessopp, D.D. (George Redway.)

THIS is a pleasant introduction to English municipal history. Mr. Ditchfield has, indeed, been at rather too much pains to be pleasant. His book would have been more useful had he written it throughout with a little less regard to the outward beauty of his subject, and with a little more regard to its bones. To be sure, he was right to present the reader—the unlearned reader—with bright and moving pictures of the old town life of England. But he has carried this so far that we fear many a reader will lay down the book more pleased than instructed, more satisfied than curious. Mr. Ditchfield has evidently studied his subject well. That he could have given his readers plain facts in abundance we are sure, but he has rather chosen to give them atmosphere and general descriptions. Within proper limits this was politic and necessary, but Mr. Ditchfield has overdone the method. He is too general, and has stinted the reader of handy facts and instances and the more commonplace kinds of information. In his chapter on the Roman town of Silchester he does not tell the reader clearly where Silchester is. Again, Mr. Ditchfield does not do the homage which we think was due from him to older and more advanced writers on the evolution of English town life. It seems incredible that he should write about the rise of the English burghs and their mediæval glories without once mentioning Mrs. Green's English Town Life in the Fifteenth Century, or the late Prof. Freeman's English Towns and Districts, and it is hard to understand how he could trace the rise of the Guilds without feeling bound to give the reader—once more the unlearned reader—a hint of the existence of Mr. Cornelius Walford's works on Guilds and Fairs, or of Miss Toulmin Smith's transcripts of the original ordinances of over one hundred English Guilds. Thus the value of the book has been rather needlessly reduced. In his character of a guide Mr. Ditchfield is like a man who, having undertaken to bring a raw youth up to London, should lead him round the town, talking at large of its life and customs, and then take leave of him in the Strand without finding him a lodging or a friend.

But while he talks Mr. Ditchfield is very entertaining. He considers towns under their periods and types thus: "British and Roman Towns," "Saxon Towns," "Church Towns," "Castle Towns," "Mediæval Towns," "Cinque Ports and Harbours," and "University Towns." With these he mingles chapters on "The Guilds," "The Tyranny of the Guilds," "In the Streets," "In Fair and Market," and "The Great Metropolis." In his chapter on Silchester Mr. Ditchfield has the following interesting passage:

"When the corn is growing, you may see where the roads ran, for on the surface of the old roads where the ground is thin the corn is scanty. This was noticed by Leland in the year 1586, who says: 'The inhabitants told me that it had been proved by long observation that, although this is a fertile and fruitful enough spot, yet in certain places, like little lines which intersect one another, the corn does not grow so equally abundantly, but much thinner than elsewhere, and along these lines they think the streets of the city formerly led.' This, of course, was more observable three hundred years ago than it is now, as the soil has become thicker; but even now when the corn is young the course of the street is perceptible."

The chapters on the Guilds are perhaps the best. Referring to the Chester plays composed by the monks and acted by the trade guilds of the city, Mr. Ditchfield quotes a curious programme arranged for a week's festivity; but he might have mentioned the year in which this week fell. Many of his readers will not even know the century. The play-bill runs as follows:

- "1. The Bakers and Tanners bring forth the 'Falling of Lucifer.'
- "2. Drapers and Hosiers—'The Creation of the World.'
- "3. Drawers of Dee and Waterleaders—'Noah and his Ship.'
- "4. Barbers, Waxchandlers, and Leeches—'Abraham and Isaac.'
- "5. Coppers, Wire drawers, and Pinners—'King Balak, Balaam, and Moses.'
- "6. Wrights, Slaters, Tylers, Daubers, and Thatchers—'The Nativity of our Lord.'
- "7. Painters, Brotherers, and Glaziers—'The Shepherds' Offering.'
- "Vintners and Merchants—'King Herod and the Mount Victorial.'
- "Mercers and Spicers—'The Three Kings of Colin.'"

We are glad to note that Mr. Ditchfield quotes FitzStephen's piquant and picturesque description of London in the twelfth century. It can hardly be too well known, and therefore we quote it ourselves:

"The city, like Rome, is divided into wards, has annual sheriffs for its councils, has senatorial and lower magistrates, sewers and aqueducts in streets—its proper places and separate courts for cases of each kind, deliberate, demonstrative, judicial; and has assemblies on appointed days. I do not think there is a city with more commendable customs of church attendance, honour to God's ordinances, keeping sacred festivals, almsgiving, hospitality, confirming betrothals, contracting marriages, celebration of nuptials, preparing feasts, cheering the guests, and also in care for funerals and the interment of the dead. The only pests of London are the immoderate drinking of fools and the frequency of fires. To this may be added that nearly all the bishops, abbots, and magnates of England are, as it were, citizens and freemen of London, having their own splendid houses to which they resort, where they spend largely when summoned to great councils by the king or by their metropolitan, or drawn thither by their own private affairs."

In dealing with "The Tyranny of the Guilds," Mr. Ditchfield gives some particulars of the Guild brethren's high-handed dealings with the "non-society men" of the sixteenth century, which make curious reading in these days of rampant trades unionism. He quotes an instance of this "taken from the annals of an ancient town"—why not have mentioned the town? "In July, 1545, one Robert Hooper, a barber, being a foreigner [the term 'foreigner' was applied, as Mr. Ditchfield explains, to any stranger coming to ply his trade in a town] was this day ordered to be gone out of the town at his peril, with his wife and children." Again he tells us:

"Heavy fines were inflicted on those who dared to disobey the rules of the Guild. At Reading no barber was allowed to shave any one after nine o'clock in winter, or ten o'clock in summer. This curious law was passed in 1443, at the commencement of the dispute between the rival houses of York and Lancaster, and was probably intended to prevent unlawful meetings being held in places so frequented as a barber's shop. The fine exacted for a breach of this rule was 300 tiles to the Guildhall of Reading. The peculiar form of this fine may be accounted for by the fact that thatch was beginning to be superseded by tile roofs, and the barbers had to supply the materials. One, John Bristol, was fined 2,100 tiles for shaving seven persons contrary to the order, but the number of tiles was reduced to 1,200 on account of his poverty."

In his chapter on street life Mr. Ditchfield makes good use of John Lydgate's story of Master Lickpenny's adventures in London, when he came up from Kent to consult a lawyer, and returned wiser, not in law but in experience. The book is supplied with a preface by Dr. Jessopp, whose sketch of the gradual acquirement by the towns of civic rights and immunities from kings and feudal lords is admirable in its lucidity.

OLD AMERICA.

"AMERICAN HISTORY TOLD BY CONTEMPORARIES."—Vol. I.: Era of Colonisation. Edited by Albert Bushnell Hart. (Macmillan & Co.)

IN this volume we have a number of extracts from the writings of men who were concerned with the discovery and early colonial period of North America. The authors just tell what they saw and knew; and the result is a succession of scenes which bring before the eye of the reader in a singularly graphic way the early story of the great Republic of to-day; and the editor hopes, not unreasonably, that the reader may find in these lively, human, brief extracts the real spirit of his countrymen. Of course, there is nothing that is really new in the volume; but the passages from the writers selected have been chosen with care and judgment, and the result is a very vivid impression of the gradual unfolding of the early chapters of American history. At the head of each extract are given the main facts of the writer's career and a brief bibliography. The arrangement of the volume is simple and methodical. First, we have "Discovery and Early Voyages," with supplementary chapters upon the work of the English and French and Dutch adventurers. Then come chapters dealing with the general conditions of the early colonisations, subdivided into sections setting forth the motives which led men to seek the New World, the regulations by which kings and chartered companies sought to control the new plantations, and the classes of men from which the early colonists were drawn. After dealing with the Colonies as a whole, the author takes them in groups, and gives extracts from contemporaries illustrating the life of each. The specialist will see in the aptness of the selections proof of a wide reading and a singular soundness of judgment; but it is not to the specialist that Mr. Hart appeals. His special care is for the general reader, and to him these pages will be a revelation of a whole world of quaint and interesting lore.

Every taste is suited. Does the reader want romance? Then let him read the tale of Pocahontas, and how she won the heart of her white captor, and so brought peace to Virginia. If adventure is asked for, there are tales of Hawkins and Drake and Raleigh to satisfy the most exacting. The following extract from Pretty's account of Drake's "voyage about the whole globe," though not new, is too strange ever to be familiar. Drake, finding himself in the Straits of Magellan, suspected one Thomas Doughtie of mutinous designs, and so tried him by a drumhead court-martial, and had him condemned to death.

"It was concluded that M. Doughtie should receive punishment according to the quality of the offence: and he seeing no remedie but patience for himselfe, desired before his death to receive the Communion, which he did at the hands of M. Flitscher, our Minister, and our generall himselfe accompanied him in that holy action: which being done, and the place of execution made ready, hee having embraced our Generall, and taken his leave of all the companie, with prayer for the Queene's maiestie and our realme, in quiet sort laid his head to the blocke, where he ended his life. . . ."

Interest of another kind attaches to the story of the discovery of the Mississippi and to documents relating to the early French settlements in Canada. A deeper note is touched in the series of extracts which relate to the reasons which led the first colonists to seek freedom over seas. Nor has Mr. Hart, while giving many glimpses of the quiet, simple life of the early settlers, hesitated to recall the ferocious illusions on the subject of witchcraft, which throw such a shadow over the beginnings of the American Commonwealth. Of course, there is a sense of incompleteness about a work of this sort. An extract sometimes breaks off just as the reader's interest is thoroughly aroused; but that drawback is incidental to the plan of the work, and, as careful reference is in every case given to the authority cited, ample opportunity is given to the student to complete his knowledge. We look forward with pleasure to the other volumes which are promised.

SHAKESPEARE'S BOYHOOD.

Shakespeare, the Boy: with Sketches of the Home and School Life, the Games and Sports, the Manners, Customs, and Folklore of the Time. By William James Rolfe, Litt.D. (Chatto & Windus.)

THIS book is professedly a compilation for the use of "young folk," and as such scarcely calls for serious criticism. It is, however, a compilation which shows extremely wide reading, and produces a good many interesting points in its effort to show what sort of life Shakespeare in his boyhood may be supposed to have lived. For instance, Shakespeare certainly went to pageants; and this leads to the curious note that when Falstaff "saw a flea stick on Bardolph's nose" and "thought it was a black soul burning in hell fire," his mind was running upon the most elaborate of all the pageant properties—"hell mouth."

"This was a huge and grotesque head of canvas, with vast gaping mouth armed with fangs and vomiting flames. The jaws were made to open and shut, and through them the Devil made his entrance and the lost souls their exit."

And Dr. Rolfe quotes an item from the books of the Armorer—"Paid for keeping of fyre at hell mouthe iiiiid." Another very instructive point is, that Shakespeare's deer-stealing was not a vulgar transgression. Oxford undergraduates were mightily addicted to it; "and one good man lamented in later life that he had missed the advantages that others had derived from these exploits, which he believed to be an excellent discipline for young men." The bye-law of Stratford Council, which allotted three days and three nights in the stocks to anyone who spoke disrespectfully to any town officer, is a valuable comment on Dogberry; or is Dogberry the comment on the bye-law? Some quotations from Seager's School of Virtue and other books of manners illustrate pleasingly inter alia the slow rise into recognition of the pocket-handkerchief. It seems pretty plain also that Shakespeare never ate with a fork, and upon this delightful subject Mr. Rolfe heaps up quotations. Elizabeth was the first sovereign of Great Britain that owned one, and she, Dr. Rolfe hints, kept it in a museum. The three-pronged, or, as Swift says, "tridential" fork, came into general use about 1730. When the fourth prong was added we know not. Accounts of Elizabethan games do not fill us with any desire to try them. Many of the quotations from Shakespeare himself seem wholly superfluous padding; for instance, a very straightforward description of gardening operations from "Richard II." is strained to prove that he was an enthusiastic horticulturist, though any intelligent man knows roughly the theory of pruning. There are some good references to fowling, but the passage from "Much Ado" does not prove that "William went a-fishing in the Avon."

"The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait."

These are the sentiments of an amateur. The expert dislikes clear water, unless, indeed, we are to take it that "William" used the dry-fly before such refinements were necessary. And why "William"? Why, oh, why, tell us that "little Willie's" voice was the shrillest of all at the festival of St. George? This maudlin pawing over celebrities is disgusting. Dr. Rolfe should know better. His book is hardly light reading enough to catch the "young folks," but it would be of great use to a teacher who did not know much of Elizabethan literature, and wanted to illustrate his lectures on the plays.

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Old Tales from Greece. By Alice Zimmern. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THE aim of Miss Zimmern's volume we take to be mainly educational. Its purpose is to convey instruction in Greek mythology rather than to tell beautiful myths beautifully. From this point of view it is, perhaps, tolerably successful. It goes steadily and systematically through the whole mythological field from the creation of the world downwards. Our only doubt is whether this systematic treatment is either necessary or desirable. Children, for whom this series is apparently designed, will find the book too much cumbered with the long names of less important mythological personages for them to assimilate its contents readily, while adults will glean the knowledge it contains elsewhere. In the matter of artistic ability in story-telling Miss Zimmern is markedly inferior to her unsystematic predecessors, Kingsley and Church. She has not the faculty of seizing the essentials of a story, and passing over its less important details. She is apt to put in all the facts at the expense of leaving out all the beauty. Nor is Miss Zimmern's peculiarly pedestrian style quite fitted for tales of this kind. It is irritating to be told that Nessus "meant to run away with Deianeira." The modern mistress "runs away" with the footman, but the expression does not smack of the heroic ages. It is curious that in the section dealing with the return of Odysseus the story of the revenge taken by him on the suitors in Ithaca should be entirely omitted. Altogether, we cannot congratulate Miss Zimmern on her book.

Dictionnaire Phonétique de la Langue Française.

Par H. Michaelis et P. Passy. (Hanover and Berlin: Carl Meyer.)

ANOTHER attempt to produce a pronouncing dictionary of the French language. The book seems to be as carefully written as possible, the terrible-looking signs of the International Phonetic Association being used, and a valuable preface added by M. Gaston Paris, of the Institut. Yet we fail to see what useful purpose it can serve. Frenchmen do not want to be told how to pronounce their own tongue, while foreigners can get little help from such works. No two nations pronounce their vowels alike. The interjection which we call "Oh!" sounds to a Frenchman like "Aoh," and the Italian seems to him to speak the word fus as if written fous. Nor are consonants much better. A German left to himself would say bersouage for personnage and faide for faite; while a Chinese will turn rue into lue, and rigueur into liqueur. Neither French nor any other spoken language can, in fact, be learned except by ear, and a week in the company of a native is more effective for this purpose than a dozen pronouncing dictionaries.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION. A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

The novels published during the past week number twenty. They are:

"THREE PARTNERS." BY BRET HARTE.

Another story of the three partners of Heavy Tree Hill—Stacy, Barker, and Demorest. Contains something of the old mining camp Bret Harte, but more of Bret Harte in civilisation. Jack Hamlin—the inimitable—reappears. Illustrated by J. Gulich. (Chatto & Windus. 297 pages. 3s. 6d.)

"THE POMP OF THE LAVILETTES." BY GILBERT PARKER.

Mr. Parker is the creator of Pretty Pierre, and the author of half-a-dozen stirring novels, including the Seas of the Mighty and When Valmond came to Pontiac. In this, his new story, a tragedy of passion, he is again true to Canadian soil. The two principal characters are Christine Lavilette, a French Canadian girl, and Tom Ferrol, an Irish ne'er-do-well. (Methuen & Co. 229 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"DERELICTS." BY WILLIAM J. LOCKE.

By the author of At the Gate of Samaria and The Demagogue and Lady Phayre. It tells, among other things, of the degradation of Stephen Chisely, alias Joyce (two years "hard" for misappropriating trust money), and how, after much grief and pain, the touch of somebody's lips "wiped away the stain for ever." (John Lane. 414 pp. 6s.)

"BLADYS OF THE STEWPONEY." BY S. BARING GOULD.

Bladys is a girl. Stewponey is a kind of Inn in Shropshire, and Bladys of the Stewponey is a romance of the last century. So we clear the ground. The root idea of Bladys of the Stewponey is the same as that of Jokai's Pretty Michal—an executioner seeking a wife where he and his profession are not known.

"PERPETUA." BY S. BARING GOULD.

The second novel in a single week by this industrious author. It appeared serially in the Sunday Magazine. Tells of life in Nemausus, and the early Christian Church at the opening of the third century, closing with the martyrdom of Perpetua in the arena. They racked and burnt the child, and the snow fell upon her as on St. Eulalia of Merida. The young bloods in the book talk thus: "By Hercules! or, let me rather swear by Venus and her wayward son, that is a handsome girl yonder." (Isbister & Co. 316 pp. 6s.)

"THE CRIME AND THE CRIMINAL." BY RICHARD MARSH.

A melodramatic novel of some length, told, after the manner of Wilkie Collins, by various actors in the story. The scene is laid principally in Sussex, at Brighton and in retired places in the county. The ending is happy. (Ward, Lock & Co. 346 pp. 6s.)

"THE TWILIGHT REEF." BY HERBERT C. MACILWAINE.

A volume of three short stories by a young Colonial—presumably a first book. The Twilight Reef treats of "gold-seeking and death-finding." Mr. MacIlwaine would be a phrasemaker. "The toothless dogs of newspaper war" is an early attempt. It appears in the fifth line. (T. Fisher Unwin. 215 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"A STRONG NECESSITY." BY ISABEL DON.

A posthumous work, by the author of Only Clärchen. A quiet story, ending happily, of tangled life in a Scotch town. (Jarrold & Sons. 348 pp. 6s.)

"LAWRENCE CLAVERING." BY A. E. W. MASON.

Mr. Mason is the author of The Courtship of Morrice Buckler, that excellent romance, and of The Philanderers. This, his new novel, is also romantic. The period is the '45. Clavering fought for the Chevalier de St. George at Preston, and, as he tells his story in the first person, the reader is assured that the ending is more or less satisfactory. There are some very spirited adventures by the way. (A. D. Innes & Co. 380 pp. 6s.)

"BARBARA, LADY'S MAID AND PEERESS." BY MRS. ALEXANDER.

The title of this story tells enough. We need not add more, except to say that among Mrs. Alexander's previous novels are Mrs. Crichton's Creditor, A Fight with Fate, and For his Sake. (F. V. White & Co. 296 pp. 6s.)

"THE SETTLING OF BERTIE MERIAN." BY NARANJA AMARGA.

A "Ouidaesque" novel. The scene is laid in the Argentine and London. A story of finance and the Upper Ten. (J. W. Arrowsmith. 407 pp. 6s.)

"PHARISEES." BY A. KEVILL-DAVIES.

The Pharisees are chiefly New York people, who come in contact with a friendless girl, the grand-daughter of an English baronet who had disowned her father. She is good, but she is not lonesome. In fact, she marries her arch-deceiver. "A girl," she explains, "does not love a man because he is good, nor because he is bad. She just loves him." (Ward Lock. 415 pp. 6s.)

"DORCAS DENE, DETECTIVE." BY GEORGE R. SIMS.

Detective stories by the popular "Dagonet." Opening it we read: "'You are absolutely certain that the footprints of the man with the wild eyes, who frightened Mrs. Peters at the gate, and the footprints which are mixed up with those of Miss Hargreaves by the side of the lake, are not the same?' I said to Dorcas Dene. 'Absolutely certain.'" The correct thing evidently. (F. V. White & Co. 119 pp. 1s.)

"ANOTHER BURDEN." BY JAMES PAYN.

A new work by this veteran author and therefore sure of a welcome. Somewhat shorter than the usual run of novels. (Downey & Co. 179 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"SHEILAH MCLEOD." BY GUY BOOTHBY.

A novel of adventure, by the author of Dr. Nikola, of poster fame. Written in the first person. "God bless the sex," says the narrator on the last page, "and, above all, the girl, now my wife, who was once Sheila McLeod." (Skeffington & Co. 311 pp. 6s.)

"MENOTAH." BY ERNEST G. HENHAM.

An historical novel, the scene of which is laid in North-west Canada at the time of the Louis Riel rebellion. A glossary is appended. (Skeffington & Son. 368 pp. 6s.)

"EVERYBODY'S FAVOURITE." BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

Another story by the author of Bootle's Baby. The old theme—two brothers grow up, and love one girl. (F. V. White & Co. 298 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"THE DEVIL'S SHILLING." BY CAMPBELL RAE-BROWN.

The autobiography of a shilling, not a "Splendid Shilling," by the author of the popular recitation "Kissing-Cup's Race," so dear to minor entertainers. "There are no adventurers like coins of the realm," says Mr. Barrie, in a quotation on the title page. (Henry J. Drane. 253 pp. 3s. 6d.)

"THOSE DREADFUL TWINS." BY THEMSELVES.

Two Bad Boys' Diaries instead of one. (T. Fisher Unwin. 234 pp.)

"NINETY-EIGHT."

The Recollections of Cormac Cahir O'Connor Faby (late colonel in the French service) of "that awful period." Edited by his grandson Patrick C. Faby. (Downey & Co. 313 pp. 6s.)

AN INTERCEPTED LETTER.

MY DEAR MISS ALBION,—During my brief stay in your delightful village, you told me one afternoon that you would like to read some stories in French. With the curate's eye upon you, and reminiscent of his pulpit denunciation of the author whom he calls "Zoler," you hastened to add, "stories of a kind that one can—er—can leave about." You could not have expressed yourself more happily

I did not forget your commission, and I am forwarding to you by this post a copy of Gyp's La Fée Surprise, a little volume of sketches and stories. I have read it, and I should imagine that I have come through it unscathed. It is a book that one can leave about. It is especially and pre-eminently that. Even if your excellent Mr. Chivers reads French (which, from his sermon on the subject, I have no cause to suspect) you can still leave it about. You will quite understand that I am not sneering at the book on this account. I do not insist upon le mari, la femme, et l'amant, or upon the later improvements on that eternal trio, and I am tired of the line of eloquent asterisks across the page. When I opened the book and found that, so to speak, the mother and her child were there, I was quite content. If I make any objection to the book, it is not because it is an excellent book to leave about, but because it is not (for me) such an excellent book to read. The words in parentheses are important. It is one of my many afflictions that I am not you. You—happy in your youth!—can come to the book fresh, neither collating nor recognising. Your enjoyment of it will be a deserved compliment to your temperament and no insult—at your age—to your culture. But for myself—whom I am taking very seriously just now—you must remember that for many years I have been reading many stories, and have been paid to read them with my eyes open. It would have been dishonest if I had read them in any other way, and so . . .

Let me say it plainly, knowing Gyp's work, I find that this disappoints me grievously. Written under another name, I might have found it more or less promising. As it is, it seems to me a collection of stuff good enough for an ephemeral appearance, but not worth collecting in book form. To take the book more in detail, the title-story and "L'Amie d'Enfance" are flat-footed and obvious in a way that I had hardly thought possible in the French language. "Flirtage" is easily beaten by the "Dolly Dialogues." The social dialogues are not nearly so good as those of Mr. Anstey in the same genre. What, for instance, am I to think of this?

"LE BEL ALFRED: 'Nous n'aurions avec nous qu'un chien . . . et aussi une vache . . . pour avoir du lait, du beurre et des oeufs . . .'
LE GRINCHEUX: 'Des oeufs? . . . avec un chien et une vache? . . .'"

Think? That it was to very little purpose that our grandfathers mourned Joseph Miller. He was not dead. He still speaks. But that he should speak through Gyp, it is that which breaks the heart. As for "Leurs systèmes" an adequate translation of it would not have been inappropriate in last week's Home Chat, and "Chez les vieux jeu" (though it contains one estimable drollery) is not a very new idea or very well worked. It is surprising to find that Gyp has not had more success in a kind of work which the French, as a rule, do far better than the English. Much of the book reads as if it had been written when the author was tired.

Yet read it. You will enjoy the fatuousness of "Le Bel Alfred." You will be amused—as I was—with Nephthali, and the description of how he got his title. You will find here and there the happy phrase, the just observation, the touch of graceful humour. But, above all things, you will be superior to Mr. Chivers. Ask him if he has read anything of Gyp's? If he says he has, ask him if he read it in a translation. And tell him that there is no such thing as a translation—there is only mistranslation, more or less clever. So repay my kindness.

Unquestionably, I am horribly jealous of Mr. Chivers. In humility I will sign myself that which he once styled me,
"AN OPINIONATED JOURNALIST."

REVIEWS.

The Gadfly. By E. L. Voynich.
(W. Heinemann.)

This is a remarkable story by an American writer, which readers who prefer flesh and blood and human emotions to sawdust and adventure should consider as something of a godsend. In order to give an idea of the book the outline of the plot must be told. Arthur Burton, an orphan, a sensitive, affectionate, emotional, enthusiastic youth of eighteen—revolutionary and pietist in one—is arrested on a true charge of conspiring against the Italian Government, and is thrown into prison. He admits nothing, denies all knowledge of his companions, and completely baffles the authorities. On gaining his release he discovers that the information for his arrest was communicated by the priest to whom he had confessed his jealousy of a fellow conspirator. Almost immediately afterwards Gemma, Arthur's ideal of womanhood, believing him to be a traitor to the cause to which she also belongs, strikes him across the face and repulses him for ever; and his guardian's wife, in a fit of rage at the discredit she considers him to have brought upon the family, lets out the secret that he is the son of an illicit union between his mother and Canon Montanelli, a good man and Arthur's dearest friend. These three blows, coming one upon the other with such suddenness, are too much. Arthur's faith in God and man crumbles away. He seizes a hammer and smashes his crucifix, spurns Montanelli, arranges a convincing story of his suicide by drowning, and escapes for South America as a stowaway. That is the prologue.

Thirteen years pass, and Arthur returns as Felice Rivarez, another Monte Cristo bent upon revenge—a cripple and a cynic, gifted with great power of satire, an avowed disbeliever in human fidelity and truth, and the implacable foe of priestcraft and religion. Under the soubriquet of the "Gadfly" he is employed by the Liberal party to carry on a pamphlet war against the Jesuits. Gemma is a member of the committee from whom he receives his instructions; Montanelli, who is now a Cardinal, is the opponent whose influence it is most important to break down. The core of the story is the Gadfly's struggle between his true nature and his imposed nature; between his love for his father, Montanelli, and for Gemma, and his hostility to Christianity. It is unnecessary to follow his career as a conspirator; let it suffice that in the end he is captured and sentenced to death. Cardinal Montanelli alone stands between him and the grave. A terrible scene takes place in the condemned man's cell, resulting in the Gadfly's confession that he is the Arthur of old, the Cardinal's son.

"Montanelli sat like some stone image, or like a dead man set upright. At first, under the fiery torrent of the Gadfly's despair, he had quivered a little, with the automatic shrinking of the flesh, as under the lash of a whip; but now he was quite still. After a long silence he looked up and spoke, lifelessly, patiently:

'Arthur, will you explain to me more clearly? You confuse and terrify me so, I can't understand. What is it you demand of me?'

The Gadfly turned to him a spectral face.

'I demand nothing. Who shall compel love? You are free to choose between us two the one who is most dear to you. If you love Him best, choose Him.'

'I can't understand,' Montanelli repeated wearily. 'What is there I can choose? I cannot undo the past.'

'You have to choose between us. If you love me, take that cross off your neck, and come away with me. My friends are arranging another attempt, and with your help they could manage it easily. Then, when we are safe over the frontier, acknowledge me publicly. But if you don't love me enough for that—if this wooden idol [a crucifix] is more to you than I—then go to the colonel and tell him you consent. And if you go, then go at once, and spare me the misery of seeing you. I have enough without that.'

Montanelli looked up, trembling faintly. He was beginning to understand.

'I will communicate with your friends, of course. But—to go with you—it is impossible. I am a priest.'

'And I accept no favours from priests. I will have no more compromises, Padre; I have had enough of them, and of their consequences. You must give up your priesthood, or you must give up me.'

'How can I give you up? Arthur, how can I give you up?'

'Then give up Him. You have to choose between us. Would you offer me a share of your love—half for me, half for your friend of a God? I will not take His leaveings. If you are His, you are not mine.'

'Would you have me tear my heart in two? Arthur! Arthur! Do you want to drive me mad?'

The Gadfly struck his hand against the wall.

'You have to choose between us,' he repeated once more.

Montanelli permits the law to take its course, and the Gadfly is shot. This is the scene on the ground of execution:

He had repeated the request that his eyes might not be bandaged, and his defiant face had wrung from the colonel a reluctant consent. They had both forgotten what they were inflicting on the soldiers.

He stood and faced them, smiling, and the carbines shook in their hands.

'I am quite ready,' he said.

The lieutenant stepped forward, trembling a little with excitement. He had never given the word of command for an execution before.

'Ready—present—fire!'

The Gadfly staggered a little and recovered his balance. One unsteady shot had grazed his cheek, and a little blood fell on to the white cravat. Another ball had struck him above the knee. When the smoke cleared away the soldiers looked and saw him smiling still, and wiping the blood from his cheek with the mutilated hand.

'A bad shot, men!' he said; and his voice cut in, clear and articulate, upon the dazed stupor of the wretched soldiers. 'Have another try.'

A general groan and shudder passed through the row of carabineers. Each man had aimed aside, with a secret hope that the death-shot would come from his neighbour's hand, not his; and then the Gadfly stood and smiled at them; they had only turned the execution into a butchery, and the whole ghastly business was to do again. They were seized with sudden terror, and, lowering their carbines, listened hopelessly to the furious curses and reproaches of the officers, staring in dull horror at the man whom they had killed, and who somehow was not dead.

The governor shook his fist in their faces, savagely shouting to them to stand in position, to present arms, to make haste and get the thing over. He had become as thoroughly demoralised as they were, and dared not look at the terrible figure that stood and stood, and would not fall. When the Gadfly spoke to him, he started and shuddered at the sound of the mocking voice.

'You have brought out the awkward squad this morning, Colonel! Let me see if I can manage them better. Now, men! Hold your tool higher there, you to the left. Bless your heart, man, it's a carbine you've got in your hand, not a frying-pan! Are you all straight? Now, then! Ready—present—'

'Fire!' the colonel interrupted, starting forward. It was intolerable that this man should give the command for his own death.

There was another confused, disorganised volley, and the line broke up into a knot of shivering figures, staring before them with wild eyes. One of the soldiers had not even discharged his carbine; he had flung it away, and crouched down moaning under his breath: 'I can't—I can't!'

The smoke cleared slowly away, floating up into the glimmer of the early sunlight; and they saw that the Gadfly had fallen; and saw, too, that he was still not dead. For the first moment soldiers and officials stood as if they had been turned to stone, and watched the ghastly thing that writhed and struggled on the ground; then both doctor and colonel rushed forward with a cry, for he had dragged himself up on one knee and was still facing the soldiers, and still laughing.

'Another miss! Try—again, lads—see—if you can't—'

He suddenly swayed and fell over sideways on the grass.

'Is he dead?' the colonel asked under his breath; and the doctor, kneeling down, with a hand on the bloody shirt, answered softly:

'I think so—God be praised!'

'God be praised!' the colonel repeated. 'At last!'

These quotations bear rather upon the dramatic value of the book than upon its psychology. Its psychology is, as it happens, not impressive. Mr. Voynich can conceive interesting characters, but at present he lacks the power to embody them adequately. His imaginative force is in advance of his execution. The end of the book, where action predominates, is better than the earlier chapters where conversation has to bear the brunt of the work. Mr. Voynich has no gift of flashing insight. He tells us much of the Gadfly's wit, but we meet with little worthy the name. The book needs to be more tense—more, well, more Meredithian. Vittoria was ever before me as I read. The fabric of The Gadfly is so good that some day Mr. Voynich might re-write the story; but as it stands it is more deeply interesting and rich in promise than ninety-nine out of every hundred novels that pass through the reviewers' hands.

* * * *

The "Paradise" Coal-boat. By Cutcliffe Hyne.
(James Bowden.)

Mr. Cutcliffe Hyne has a piquant and incisive style: and he goes so far afield for his themes that, as a rule, they have the fascination of unfamiliarity. He seems to be intimately acquainted with the back of several "beyonds." Most of these stories come from the West Coast of Africa; but one finds variety in tales of orange-growing in Florida, of military adventure in Peru, and of melancholy mésalliances in the Far North. When he comes nearer home, Mr. Hyne's muse is strictly maritime. And, as that department of fiction is apt to be overcrowded, he has specialised in favour of the coal-boat and the tug, and other craft of low repute. Through it all his love of the sea and the sailor is manifest. A fair type of his nautical character is Captain Ezra Pollard, who finds himself in charge of the Paradise coal-boat, running between the Tyne and London, with orders never to slow down for any cause whatever. He is a humane man; "and on thick nights the voices of the smackmen he had run down off Humber Mouth (and not carried home to claim damages) came and chatted to him out of the sea-smoke which drove from the wave crests."

"He did not blame Gedge, because he quite understood that a ship-owner, who has a living to make, cannot afford, under any circumstances, to run coal-boats at a loss; but he very much wished that he (Ezra) followed any occupation other than the sea, and (being a sailor) his mind naturally turned on agriculture. With clay on his boots and a straw in his mouth, he would not be called upon to murder fishermen, under any circumstances whatever; and he could go to chapel on Sundays, and sing noisily, and with a clear conscience."

Another mariner who had aspirations after agriculture—for Mr. Hyne repeats himself to that extent—is Captain Kettle; but he is on a larger scale than the skipper of the Paradise. Here is his exploit, as told by another:

"And then you English are so indecently reckless. I knew a man once, the master of a little tramp steamer, who successfully tackled a Central American revolution absolutely single-handed. He went into the business at five minutes' notice, without even knowing the language of the country: and he disorganised the movements of the two parties to such an extent that a third party sprang up and swept the board while the others were gaping with astonishment."

He also wrote poetry.

"'I saw the poetry,' said Don Pablo, 'and it fairly made me gasp. You know what the man is?'

'I can sincerely say that he is the most thorough-paced little ruffian that ever hazed a crew.'

Don Pablo nodded.

'He is a man who for years has carried his life in his hand, and has never gone to sleep on board ship without a probability of waking with a cut throat. But you should have seen that poetry. Anyone would have expected it to be full of fights and gunpowder and melodrama generally. But not a bit of it. One piece was a serenade to a lady with eyebrows; in another he eulogised the "glowing scarlet of the grain," presumably from a railway-window view of poppies in a corn-field; and a third was a hymn as full of religion and doggerel as its writer was crammed with truculence.'

There is a familiar ring about the story of the Irishman who took unto himself the command of a tribe in West Africa, and from the top of an impregnable plateau defied the Government and levied tribute on the neighbouring villages. But in spite of one or two reminiscences of the kind, Mr. Hyne's book is both clever and fascinating. I have already mentioned his picturesqueness of phrase. "Give me a drink," says Vatchell, when he has just been rescued from committing suicide. "I have grazed my shoulder against the—er—the palings of the next world, and I feel a bit chippy."

* * * *
The Captive of Pekin. By Charles Hannan.
(Jarrold & Sons.)

Mr. Hannan is of the school of Mr. Le Queux. That is to say, he deals in mystery and horror, he affects the first person singular, he invents better than he writes, and once you begin his story you have some difficulty in giving it up before the end. In The Captive of Pekin we are taken to China, a country which has not been sufficiently exploited by the novelist. Mr. Payn's By Proxy is almost the only conspicuous romance laid among the Celestials. For minds like Mr. Hannan's the Chinese have habits of blood-thirstiness which make them invaluable; hence The Captive of Pekin. If you like reading about the bastinado, and torture by melted lead, and torture by the beak of a white bird, you will like this book. Personally, I don't; I detest it. But to those who do I can recommend Mr. Hannan as a writer who is careful to give the reader his money's worth.

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H.; B.; H.H.; B.B.; finest BAVARIAN Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

If your stationer does not sell them, send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
46, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

The BOOK of DREAMS and GHOSTS.

By ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Many of the best-known ghost stories are here assembled. There is, however, much that to the majority of readers will be absolutely new."

Notes and Queries.

"It is a volume, indeed, with which nobody, whether a believer in the supernatural or a sceptic, can be disappointed."—Mr. JAMES PAYN in the Illustrated London News.

NEW ROMANCE BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE WATER of the WONDROUS

ISLES: a Romance. By WILLIAM MORRIS, Author of "The Earthly Paradise." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Early in October.]

DARWIN, and AFTER DARWIN:

an Exposition of the Darwinian Theory and a Discussion of Post-Darwinian Questions. By the late GEORGE JOHN ROMANES, M.A., LL.D., F.R.S. Part III. POST-DARWINIAN QUESTIONS: Isolation and Physiological Selection. Crown 8vo, 5s. [On October 8.]

The DIARY of MASTER WILLIAM

SILENCE: a Study of Shakespeare and of Elizabethan Sport. By the Right Hon. D. H. MADDEN, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin. 8vo, 16s. [On October 1.]

PHILOSOPHY of KNOWLEDGE:

an Inquiry into the Nature, Limits, and Validity of Human Cognitive Faculty. By GEORGE TRUMBULL LADD, Professor of Philosophy in Yale University. 8vo, 18s.

ARE WE to GO ON with LATIN

VERSES? By the Rev. Hon. EDWARD LYTTTELTON, M.A., Head Master of Haileybury College. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

POEMS. By John Lucas Tupper.

Selected and Edited by WILLIAM MICHAEL ROSSETTI. Crown 8vo, 5s.

* * The Author of these Poems was a Sculptor, and afterwards Art Instructor in Rugby School. He died in 1879, having been a very close associate of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, and contributing in verse and prose to their magazine, the Germ, in 1850.

A YEAR'S SERMONS. Based upon

some of the Scriptures appointed for each Sunday Morning. By RICHARD W. HILEY, D.D., of St. Mary Hall, Oxford, Vicar of Wighill, Tadcaster, Yorks. Vol. III. Supplementing the Course with SERMONS for EVENING SERVICE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE THRESHOLD of the

SANCTUARY: being Short Chapters on Preparation for Holy Orders. By B. W. RANDOLPH, M.A., Principal of Ely Theological College, Hon. Canon of Ely, and Examining Chaplain to the Bishop of Lincoln. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Early in October.]

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.

No. 180.—OCTOBER, 1897.—8vo, price 6d.

WEeping FERRY. 7-11. By Margaret L. Woods, Author of "A Village Tragedy," &c.

THE "JUBILEE CRICKET BOOK." By Andrew Lang.

A DEVON CRABBER. By E. M. Ord Marshall.

AN AUTO-DA-FE. By Mrs. Murray Hickson.

FASHIONS in FLOWERS. By the Hon. Alicia Amherst.

A DEMON BEAR. By Fred. Whishaw.

AT the SIGN of the SHIP. By Andrew Lang.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

MISS VIOLET HUNT'S NEW NOVEL.

TO BE PUBLISHED ON OCTOBER 1st.

UNKIST, UNKIND!

A Romance.

By VIOLET HUNT,

Author of "A Hard Woman," "The Way of Marriage."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

DANTE.

A Defence of the Ancient Text of the "Divina Commedia."

By WICKHAM FLOWER, F.S.A.

Square crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

ALLEN UPWARD'S NOVEL IN RHYME.

A DAY'S TRAGEDY: a Novel in Rhyme. By ALLEN UPWARD, Author of "Secrets of the Courts of Europe," &c. With Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

W. H. DAWSON'S NEW BOOK.

SOCIAL SWITZERLAND: Studies of

Present-day Social Movements and Legislation in the Swiss Republic. By W. H. DAWSON, Author of "Germany and the Germans," &c., &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is full of value for all who watch the progress of social reform as a tendency of civilisation.... This intelligent and stimulating book. Professed students of economic science will read it to their advantage, and be grateful to an author who knows how to make so unpromising a subject so fruitful in interest."—Scotsman.

NEW WORK ON SPORT AND TRAVEL.

SPORT and TRAVEL in INDIA and

CENTRAL AMERICA. By A. G. BAGOT, late 60th Rifles (Bagatelle), Author of "Sporting Sketches," &c., &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

A NEW WORK ON BIMETALLISM.

BIMETALLISM EXPLAINED. By

WM. THOS. ROTHWELL. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

This work is not written by a theorist, but by one who has had a practical acquaintance with many phases of industrial life, as workman, manager, and employer of labour. The author aims at supplying a work in which will be found all that is necessary for a clear understanding of the question, both for the expert and the general reader.

JAMES WARD'S HISTORY OF ORNAMENT.

HISTORIC ORNAMENT: Treatise on

Decorative Art and Architectural Ornament; Pre-historic Art; Ancient Art and Architecture; Eastern, Early Christian, Byzantine, Saracenic, Romanesque, Gothic and Renaissance Architecture and Ornament. By JAMES WARD, Author of "The Principles of Ornament." With 436 illustrations. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Ready.]

NEW VOLUME OF CHAPMAN'S DIAMOND LIBRARY.

ENGLISH EPIGRAMS and EPITAPHS

Collected and Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Index, by AUBREY STEWART. With 3 Woodcut Portraits by Sydney Adamson. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, gilt top, 2s.; limp calf, 4s. [Ready.]

"It is a very clever, catholic collection, and has the merit while cohering chestnuts of being fully representative."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"JAMES CASSIDY'S 'AMAZING STORY.'" Daily Graphic.

THE GIFT of LIFE: a Romance. By

JAMES CASSIDY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Suggests 'Faust,' but is not a bit like it."—Western Daily Mercury.

"Is striking as suggesting a new train of thought."—Black and White.

"Clever and original."—Heart and Home.

"The literary style of the book throughout is of a high order."—Western Guardian.

"The Herr is a mysterious enough being."—Scotsman.

"It is certainly a remarkable conception, developed with much skill and power."—Bournemouth Guardian.

"A work which will be read with the greatest interest."—Queens Advertiser.

"We shall be surprised if 'The Gift of Life,' by Mr. James Cassidy, is not in great demand."—Birmingham News.

CHAPMAN & HALL LIMITED, LONDON.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SOWERS."

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED,

Crown 8vo, 6s.,

IN KEDAR'S TENTS.

BY

HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

AUTHOR OF "THE SOWERS," "WITH EDGED TOOLS," &c.

NEW NOVEL BY CLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY.
READY THIS DAY, crown 8vo, 6s.

ONE OF THE BROKEN BRIGADE.

By CLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY.

Author of "Snap," "The Queensberry Cup," &c.

READY THIS DAY, crown 8vo, 6s.

STUDIES IN BOARD SCHOOLS.

By CHARLES MORLEY.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY."

READY THIS DAY, 15s. net, in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, &c., 20s. net.

Volume 52 (SHEARMAN—SMIRKE) of

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY

Edited by SIDNEY LEE.

* * Vol. I. was published on January 1, 1885, and a further Volume will be issued Quarterly until the Completion of the Work.

FOURTH EDITION, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

POT-POURRI FROM A SURREY GARDEN.

By Mrs. C. W. EARLE.

With an Appendix by Lady CONSTANCE LYTTON.

From the GUARDIAN.—"It is impossible to read a page of this book without being struck by its vigorous freshness, its helpfulness, and its human kindness."

CORNHILL MAGAZINE

For OCTOBER. Price One Shilling.

CONTENTS.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR (October).

A NIGHT IN VENICE. By M. P. SHIEL.

AGINCOURT: an Anniversary Study. By the Hon. J. W. FORTESCUE.

PELOTA. By CHARLES EDWARDS.

SOME SPIES. By ANDREW LANG.

THE SEPOY REVOLT at DELHI, May, 1857; a Personal Narrative. Part II. By Colonel E. VIBART.

A GENTLE ADVISER. By E. V. LUCAS.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

THE ROMANCE of RACE. By GRANT ALLEN.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. Chapters XXVIII.-XXX. (Conclusion). By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," &c.

THE FROZEN MAN. By ERNEST G. HENHAM.

THE MECHANISM of the STOCK EXCHANGE.

London: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, Waterloo Place.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1897.

No. 1325, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. typo-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Office: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MR. QUILLER COUCH'S daring in consenting to finish Stevenson's St. Ives fills us with amazement. The instalment in the current Pall Mall Magazine is quite brilliant in a thin, bloodless, kind of way—but oh! how unlike R. L. S. It is an imitation of Mr. Quiller Couch's own imitation of Stevenson. The Vicomte Anne de Keronal de St. Ives has been carried to America, we can only suppose, because the author did not know what else to do with him. We have not seen Stevenson's notes upon which Mr. Quiller Couch founded these last chapters, but there is no doubt that Stevenson was tired and out of conceit with the story. There are pitiable allusions to it in the Vailima Letters: "I will ask you to spare St. Ives when it goes to you; it is a sort of Count Robert of Paris. I'm as sick of the thing as ever anyone can be; it's a rudderless hulk; it's a pagoda, and you can just feel—or I can feel—that it might have been a pleasant story if it had only been blessed at baptism." And yet—and yet it contained Goguelat. Would that Goguelat had not died so early!

If only the brave and gifted spirit who created Goguelat and Catriona had been able to look a little into the future, the dark cloud of imaginary financial troubles that troubled his last days would have melted away even as he looked. Mr. Colvin and Mr. Baxter telegraphed to Stevenson that financially the success of the "Edinburgh Edition" was assured; but he did not know, they did not know, what we and they know now, that the "Edinburgh Edition" would show a clear profit of some thousands of pounds.

THE forthcoming season promises to be rendered notable by the number of anthologies which it will yield. Mr. Palgrave's continuation of his Golden Treasury in itself would endow the season with importance; but two other critics of high distinction have also been at work gleaning among the poets. The result is that, at the same moment, we are to have Mr. Palgrave's supplemental songs and lyrics, chosen from the poets of this century; Mr. W. E. Henley's English Lyrics; and Mrs. Meynell's The Flower of the Mind: a Choice among the Best Poems. The anthologist has in these days no easy task, publishers being more than ever alive to the value of copyrights. In the main they are generous enough; but the line must be drawn somewhere. Hence it is well to be in the position of Mr. Palgrave, and publish through a firm which itself issues the bulk of the most desired poetry. Messrs. Macmillan, who are the publishers of the Golden Treasury series, hold, it is hardly necessary to say, the copyrights of Tennyson, Matthew Arnold, Clough, Christina Rossetti, Charles Kingsley, and many another upon whom the anthologist of modern poems would naturally wish to draw.

ANOTHER forthcoming contribution to these anthologies is the eighth volume of English Minstrelsy, by Mr. Baring Gould. Thus this author of "immitigable industry" (he publishes two novels this very week) brings to a completion his monumental work on English national song. In all, some 350 songs are printed, and the antiquarian notes are voluminous.

IN addition to the anthologies named, we are to have also A Book of Verses for Children, brought together by Mr. E. V. Lucas. Books of verse for children are numerous enough, but, as a rule, they contain more of what the compiler considers children ought to like than of what children actually do like. Mr. Lucas's aim has been to come into immediate relation with his readers. With this end in view, he has given them nothing but poems dealing with what may be called their own subjects, the result being a volume of unusual simplicity and lightness of tone. A number of pieces dating from the early years of the century have been included, drawn principally from the works of Ann and Jane Taylor and Elizabeth Turner, the author of The Cowslip, The Daisy, and other little collections of "cautionary tales." The book is unillustrated, save for end papers and a frontispiece, in colours, by Mr. F. D. Bedford.

THE following is the substance of a paragraph which appeared in the Times of Thursday, under the heading "Literature":—"Towards the end of October there will be issued from this office a weekly review entitled Literature, under the editorship of Mr. H. D. Traill. As its name indicates, it will be devoted solely to the world of books, and it is intended to be the organ of the literary classes in the widest sense, embracing in its purview not only English, but Continental and American publications. . . . As a general rule, the contents of Literature will be anonymous, but its columns will be open to the discussion of literary subjects in the form of correspondence. . . . Although published by the Times, Literature will, both as regards the matter it contains and the opinions it expresses, be entirely independent of this journal."

MR. HEINEMANN having discovered Mr. Nicholson for the New Review, intends to use that artist's remarkable gifts to the full. This month, therefore, will appear an "Alphabet," by William Nicholson, and an "Almanac of Twelve Sports," by the same hand. Both will be printed in colours, and, from the specimens which lie before us, both, we should say, will be representative and valuable. No one can mass black more effectively than this draughtsman. The "Alphabet" runs on old lines—"A was an artist," "B is for beggar," and so on—enabling Mr. Nicholson to show his wide range and feeling for character. The "Twelve Sports" are hunting, coursing, racing, rowing, fishing, cricket, archery, driving, shooting, golf, boxing, and skating. Each has its coloured cut. The cricket block is peculiarly quaint and ancient, recording the game not of Ranjitsinhji but of Alfred Mynn. Mr. Nicholson's prospectuses are documents of unusual floridity, in most striking contrast to the severe simplicity of the artist's manner. One sentence is worthy of Ouida: "September sees the sportsman with his rifle under his arm." Rifle!

THE place on the Punch staff made vacant by the death of Mr. Milliken is to be taken by Mr. Owen Seaman. Mr. Seaman is the author of The Battle of the Bays, a collection of literary parodies, and Tillers of the Sand, a volume of satirical lays concerning Lord Rosebery's administration. He had previously written Horace at Cambridge, a sheaf of poems on a familiar undergraduate pattern, which appeared in the Granta, and a large quantity of clever occasional verse. But his best work was, we think, to be found, week by week, in the late National Observer under Mr. Vincent's control. Mr. Seaman is of the school of Calverley, with the added ambition to hit hard. No living rhymers are more deft or concise, and his wit is considerable. Mr. Milliken gave Punch a Liberal, almost Radical, tone. We must suppose that its new laureate will in time make it as conspicuously Conservative.

THE new large labels on the backs of the catalogue volumes in the British Museum Reading Room are a blessing. The wonder is that the painful peering and groping of students and attendants was not relieved sooner. But as an attendant remarked the other day, "We never thought of it till it was done." Another reform, and this inside the volumes, is called for by a correspondent of the Westminster Gazette, who expresses the hope, which we share, that the mixing of I's and J's and of V's and U's will not be perpetuated.

THAT Americans prefer indigenous to imported poetry has been proved again and again, and quite recently by the New York Life. A request addressed by the editor to his readers asking them to name the ten best short poems in the English language yielded the following egregious prize list: Gray's "Elegy," Bryant's "Thanatopsis," Longfellow's "Psalm of Life," Poe's "Raven," Tennyson's "Charge of the Light Brigade," Shelley's "Skylark," Holmes's "Chambered Nautilus," Whittier's "Maud Müller," Hood's "Bridge of Sighs," and Wolfe's "Burial of Sir John Moore."

MR. W. D. HOWELLS, the American novelist, is about to visit London. Mr. Stockton is also expected, and next May we are to see Mr. G. W. Cable.

ACCORDING to the Westminster Gazette, the stone erected over the grave of Helen Walker, the prototype of Jeanie Deans, in the little churchyard of Irongray, near Dumfriesshire, has been thoroughly repaired. The stone, which was erected by Sir Walter Scott in 1831, and which bears an inscription from his pen telling in brief the story of the humble heroine, who "practised in real life the virtues with which fiction has invested the imaginary character of Jeanie Deans," had been greatly damaged by thoughtless visitors chipping pieces off and carrying them away as mementoes. Fortunately, says our contemporary, this foolish vandalism will be rendered practically impossible in future, as the monument has now been protected by a high iron railing.

A MONUMENT, the gift of a friend of letters who wishes to remain anonymous, is to be erected to the memory of Joanna Baillie at her birthplace, Bothwell, Lanarkshire.

THE publication of the little monthly magazine, To-morrow, which has been discontinued for a couple of months, is to be resumed with the October number, Mr. J. T. Grein and Mr. Hannaford Bennett remaining the editors. There will be no change in the appearance or character of the magazine, but it will now be published by Mr. Grant Richards.

To the new Scotts which were mentioned last week must be added the cheap reprint of the Border edition, which Mr. Lang edited for Mr. Nimmo a few years ago. The novels first appeared each in two volumes; they are to be re-issued now in single volumes at a greatly reduced price. From Messrs. Service & Paton comes an edition of Rob Roy, illustrated by Mr. F. H. Townsend with much spirit and grace. For a companion volume in the same series—Vanity Fair—we have less praise, owing to the cramped appearance of the page and the minute type.

THE hero of Mr. S. R. Crockett's forthcoming novel, Lochinvar, which Messrs. Methuen will publish, is a young cavalier, for a time driven by circumstances to serve as a common soldier in the regiments of the Prince of Orange. His sweetheart is trepanned and carried off to a lonely island. He follows, and attempts to rescue her. They spend some months in ideal happiness before their luck is again crossed. Then they are parted. The hero aids in the raising of the Clans by Viscount Dundee, and is with him when he falls at Killie crankie. The hero himself has better fortune, and regains his bride. The title, Lochinvar, is a bold one for a countryman of Sir Walter to have chosen.

DR. JESSOPP has written a Life of Donne, which will appear in Messrs. Methuen's "Leaders of Religion" series. Dr. Jessopp has long made a study of his subject. Two highly interesting portraits will enrich the book—one of Donne at eighteen, the other of Donne in his shroud.

MR. W. S. GILBERT for some time past has been at work on a new and comprehensive collection of his humorous verse. The result is a volume, shortly to appear, containing some hundred and sixty pieces chosen from his Bab Ballads and comic operas. The text has been revised and a number of illustrations have been added, bringing the total to some three hundred. Mr. Gilbert wished, it seems, to bring the book into line with his "more chastened sense of humour." The publishers are Messrs. Routledge.

THE long legal and political career of the late Sir John Simon, serjeant-at-law, formerly M.P. for Dewsbury, is to be treated in a memoir now being prepared by his son, Mr. Oswald John Simon. This will comprise much interesting correspondence with eminent lawyers and statesmen extending over half a century, while the active and influential part which the late serjeant took in relation to Jewish affairs all over the world will form an important section of the work.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS will publish at once a volume of verse that will be of interest to those who remember the achievements of the fifties and sixties, entitled Poems by A. and L. It is the collected work of the sisters Arabella and Louisa Shore, and is in some sense a supplementary volume to a volume published last year, Poems and Memoirs of Louisa Shore. Many of the poems in this volume were planned by the younger sister. Upon her death, however, the work was completed by Miss Arabella Shore. Among the sections is a selection from those war lyrics with which these authors' names are identified, and which attracted considerable attention at the time of their publication during the Crimean War.

MRS. BOYCE, the widow of the late Mr. George P. Boyce, has presented to the Chelsea Public Library, Manresa-road, a water-colour drawing of "St. Bride's Church, Fleet-street, in 1867." The drawing was recently on loan at South Kensington, and Mrs. Boyce selected it to deposit in the Library in memory of her husband, who resided for twenty-eight years in Chelsea. This Library has also acquired the collection of fifty-five original drawings of Chelsea by Mr. W. W. Burgess.

M. J. K. HUYSMANS, the author of En Route, is about to visit Holland to study the Legends of Saint Lidwina, whose remarkable life he proposes to write. M. Huysmans' new book, La Cathédrale, will appear this year.

PROPER BIOGRAPHY.

MANY have grown impatient of the modern biographer—too often an immitigated toady, refining and explaining away his subject's robustness, quoting his letters to his Sunday-school teacher, but omitting those to his mistress, and making of a proper man an impossible saint in two fat volumes. In the Centenary Burns, edited by Mr. W. E. Henley and Mr. T. F. Henderson, of which the fourth and concluding volume is published to-day, we have a brave example of the way biography should be written. Our reviewer will deal with the volume later, but it may not be out of place briefly to consider this achievement now as an example of proper biography. It is in four volumes. Every scrap that Burns wrote has been weighed and sifted; his life has been viewed, piece by piece, as through a binocular glass; his productions judged as if never a line had been written about him before; the history and the local setting of his "every several piece" recorded; his indebtedness to his forebears examined; the text elucidated with notes alive with vigour and personality; a glossary added which makes the Scots dialect easy as English to the Southron; and to crown all, a terminal essay by Mr. Henley, one hundred and nine pages long, on the Life, Genius, and Achievement of Robert Burns, which might be offered to students as a model of what biography should be.

As a model, too, of immitigable industry. Take the notes that go hot-foot through the pages of Mr. Henley's terminal essay. They would form a small volume of themselves—these by-blows thrown up from the exuberance of long primer, caught up into nonpareil, and showered beneath. The note on p. 263, for example, is enough of itself to prove Mr. Henley's contention that Burns outside the vernacular is but one of the talented herd—the note where "the diabolical fire and movement and energy" of certain lines from Tam o' Shanter in the Scots are contrasted with the "poppies spread" English couplet—"merely Hudibrastic." And these notes—so gay, so scholarly, so pointed, so full of surprises—these marginalia given over and above the text of the Life, are not the work of a man of leisure with processions of mornings by his own fireside, but of a driven and busy writer. And himself a poet too. Therein lies the lesson, that having undertaken to edit Burns, he has worked as if his edition were the one thing needful in the world to be done. No labour was too great, no flower of imagination and experience too fine, for the task.

That the real Burns lies within the covers of this edition nobody with a brain to judge and eyes to see can doubt. There is no white-washing here. "The bad in him was bad enough to wreck the good"—that is all. "The white-flower of a blameless life was never a button-hole for him." His life was "one logical, irrefragable sequence of preparations for his death." Being a peasant of genius, being himself, he lived in the only way he could live, and he died too early to teach himself a better.

Remains his achievement. If the enthusiastic Scots—Burns fanatics through thick and thin—clear the hurdle of this frank, ruthless, yet sympathetic Life, assuredly they will founder at the water-jump of the verdict upon the poems. As a creative and original poet Burns must go. Mr. Henley would not have us esteem a man's work as we would a spider's, and value it in proportion as it does, or does not, come out of its belly. Burns was but the crown, the culmination of his forebears—"a hundred strong behind him." They were the journeymen, he the master of genius. "What he found was of quite extraordinary worth to him; what he added was himself, and his addition made the life of his find perennial."

This judgment is a pretty theme for the critics. But we hold that in plan, scope, and judgment this is proper biography. The day of the Pious Editors, who would reconcile everything to their piety, is over. We need the lives of men as they lived them—up, down, and straight through—where their lives touched their work and where their work influenced their contemporaries. Such a life as that set down here: Burns himself—not another.

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

II.—CLARENCE MANGAN.

WHEN the editor of a "popularised" edition of Chaucer requested by letter from a well-known author his support for the project in question, the author sublimely answered, that "he did not want Chaucer popularised, he wanted to keep Chaucer for himself and a few friends." I never ascertained the author's name, the editor said he was "well-known" or "distinguished," or something of the kind, and I took it on faith; since his answer revealed that he must have been a man of very great mind. It was Sultanik. What has this to do with Mangan? What is he to Chaucer, or Chaucer to him? Simply this, that I and a few friends have for a number of years felt a kind of private proprietorship in Clarence Mangan. We cannot all appropriate Chaucers; so we were humbly content with our Mangan. Even we did not know much about him. We only knew him as the author of three or four poems, not all of which we greatly admired. One was an imperfect, but deeply felt and moving poem on his own misfortunes, ending with a noble stanza:

"Him grant a grave to, ye pitying noble,
Deep in your bosoms; there let him dwell.
He, too, had tears for all souls in trouble
Here—and in hell."

There could be no suspicion of pose, for the poet had lived and died in the deepest misery. The other, "Dark Rosaleen," was a splendid and impassioned love-song, a fantasia on an old Irish poem addressed to Ireland under the allegory of a woman. A fantasia, I call it, for it was expanded with a freedom and originality which left translation panting behind. It is too long to quote, and single stanzas would only scandal the torrent vehemence of the whole. This was all we knew of him; but outside his own countrymen we met none who knew as much. Therefore we possessed him, and imparted him to those poorer than ourselves. Of late years I dreaded that our monopoly was coming to an end. I surmised that he would presently go forth to the English public in a volume, and the critics would find he had the Gaelic glamour, or some other infectious complaint. And I did not think Mangan would at all like it. Now here is the volume, issued by Mr. John Lane, with a preface by Miss Louise Imogen Guiney, an American essayist and poetess. When I had timidly glanced through her pages, and satisfied myself that there was no Gaelic glamour, even in a suppressed form, I was able to read the preface with a heart at ease. And now I am reconciled to the failure of my monopoly.

The story told in that preface should alone be sufficient to give the volume something of a "send-off." The public loves "sad stories of the deaths of kings"—and poets. And here is tragedy enough, in all conscience. Mangan was the son of a small shopkeeper in Ireland, grew up under harsh and capricious paternal rule, received but a poor education, and was straightway put to copying to support his family, in which he slaved from morning till night. Thence he was transferred to an attorney's office, where he slaved yet harder amid coarse companionship which was to him brutal and hideous. He contrived somehow to supply the defects of his education by self-teaching, in spite of work, poverty, and friendlessness, and became known to a number of young men with literary tastes. He became an occasional contributor to various obscure papers, and also to the Dublin University Magazine; was finally enrolled among the band of brilliant men who contributed to the Nation, but nowhere found firm rest for the sole of his foot. Why is not quite clear. His work was of an unpopular cast, he was crippled by having to support his family, who preyed on his earnings; he had no push or energy, no doubt. But there was something behind, which has been very plainly asserted to have been drink. Anyway, his habits were appallingly irregular, and through them he lost a post which had been procured for him in the library of Trinity College, and went steadily down and down. In his latter years, when misery and prematurely broken health had completely sapped the last remains of will, there is no question that he was a drunkard—with spasmodic attempts at reformation. At last he was discovered destitute and ill in his room, taken to hospital, and there died of starvation.

That is about all, except the circumstances connected with his writings, and his friends' descriptions of his oddity, his sweet nature, and the charm of his talk. Half of his life is hidden. He disappeared from view for long periods, during which he is surmised to have sought refuge in the depths of outcast society. Then he would reappear, the same as ever, in his brown cloak of prehistoric ages, with a no less marvellous hat surmounting his early whitened hair. The rest is conjecture—conjecture of a love-disappointment, of which nothing seems really known beyond his own bare reference, and conjecture as to what was his besetting vice. Miss Guiney will not listen to the tradition that he drank before those later years when his liability to cough in the gutter puts the matter past dispute. He was an opium-eater, she says. Carleton declared that he took opium, and Mangan denied it. That is all. The rest is, as usual, conjecture. We have descriptions of his personal appearance, and they remind Miss Guiney of the descriptions of De Quincey. Also a medical acquaintance of hers was struck by the same fact, and said that opium would account for Mangan's queer habits, while drink would not. All which establishes a bare "perhaps"—particularly since the medical friend avowed his candid anxiety to saddle Mangan with opium rather than with alcohol. Opium, you see, is rather poetic, while whiskey is decidedly vulgar. But he drank at last, it is plain, you may say. Ah, yes, says Miss Guiney, but he drank in order to get rid of the opium. He cast out the devil opium by alcohol, the prince of devils. Proofs—none. That is the way she is sure it must have been. On second thoughts, there is a proof. A man cannot be a drunkard and an opium-eater at the same time. Therefore, since Mangan was a drunkard at the last, he must have got rid of the opium before he took to the alcohol. Therefore he took to the alcohol in order to get rid of the (hypothetical) opium. It is a pretty piece of tangled reasoning on which we need not comment. Because, why cannot a man be a drunkard and an opium-eater together? It is "pathologically impossible," says Miss Guiney. When a lady takes a large scientific word in her mouth at the crisis of an argument you know pretty well that you are having a particularly unsupported assertion thrust down your throat. Unfortunately, it is but too "pathologically possible" to combine the two habits, and in the alcohol-drinking West the combination too often results. A man happens to take a glass of wine, for example, while he is under the influence of opium, and discovers that a powerful and Bacchic exaltation results, very different from the serene and luminous exaltation of opium alone. He pursues the discovery, unknowing his danger, to find too late that he is in the hands of the most fearfully destructive power conceivable—ininitely swifter and more deadly than either habit singly. A man may escape from the one; it is no common grace of Heaven if he escape from the two. If Mangan began by taking opium, then I have little doubt this is what ultimately happened to him.

But I am keeping the poems waiting. In some respects I confess to a disappointment. There is no other outburst of swift-ness and passion like the "Dark Rosaleen." The best of them are dreamy, deficient in substance, passion, or imagery, depending for their effect almost solely on metrical melody. Yet some of them are undoubtedly noticeable. They would be remarkable for one thing alone—the discovery (pointed out by Miss Guiney) that Mangan had elaborated the artifice of the reiterated refrain, exactly in the manner of Edgar Poe, before the date when Edgar Poe first began to use it. In fact, the whole manner of the best poems is so startlingly like that of Edgar Poe that it is difficult to resist the suspicion that Poe somehow came across specimens of them, and turned the discovery to account with his usual unscrupulousness and power. Take an example cited by Miss Guiney:

"The pall of the sunset fell
Vermilioning earth and water;
The bulbul's melody broke from the dell,
A song to the rose, the summer's daughter!
The lulling music of Tigris' flow
Was blended with echoes from many a mosque
As the muezzin chanted the Allah-el-illah:
Yet my heart in that hour was low,
For I stood in a ruined Kiosk:
O my heart in that hour was low,
For I stood in the ruined Kiosk
Of the Caliph Moostanzar Billah;
I mused alone in the ruined Kiosk
Of the mighty Moostanzar Billah."

Again, take this from the song of a dying Arab, The Last Words of Al-Hassan:

"The wasted moon has a marvellous look
Amiddle of the starry hordes;
The heavens, too, shine like a mystic book
All bright with burning words.
The mists of the dawn begin to dislimn
Lahara's castles of sand.
Farewell! farewell! mine eyes feel dim:
They turn to the lampless land.
'Llah Hu!
My heart is weary, mine eyes are dim,
I would rest in the dark, dark land!"

The Karamanian Exile has the same note, in yet another arrangement, as a stanza will show:

"O none of all my sisters ten,
Karaman!
Loved like me my fellow-men,
Karaman, O Karaman!
I was mild as milk till then,
I was soft as silk till then;
Now my breast is as a den,
Karaman!
Foul with blood and bones of men,
Karaman!
With blood and bones of slaughtered men,
Karaman, O Karaman!"

Let me quote one more stanza from another poem, for the sake of its pictorial expression, and I have done:

"The silks that swathe my hall divan
Are damascened with moons of gold;
(Allah, Allah hu!)
Musk-roses from my gulistan
Fill vases of Egyptian mould.
(Allah, Allah hu!)
The Koran's treasures lie unrolled
Near where my radiant night-lamp burns;
(Allah, Allah hu!)
Around me rows of silver urns
Perfume the air with odours old.
(Allah, Allah hu!)
But what avail these luxuries?
The blood of him I slew
Burns red on all; I cry therefore,
All night long, on my knees,
Evermore:
Allah, Allah hu!"

It will be clear from these extracts that the man who could thus anticipate Poe's metrical feats, though chiefly self-educated, in a country where literary culture could hardly be said to exist, and where there was nothing which we should call literary society; and who yet showed in conception and expression so trained and literary a sense, was of no common gifts. He has, too, something of Poe's atmosphere, if his imagination is weaker. As to that, it is clear his imagination must have been literally starved. To complete the coincidence, Miss Guiney calls attention to the fact that both men died in the same year, and both in a hospital.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

Gyp is really astounding. One asks oneself in dismay where she finds the secret of such inexhaustible comic spirit, such literary abundance, the strength for such mere mechanical labour, as goes to the production of an average of five or six volumes a year. Three months ago I received Joies d'Amour for review; a month ago Le Baron Sinai, and now comes La Fée Surprise. This makes the fifth volume since January last. In November there will probably be a sixth. To me, a contented idler, such stupendous waste of tissue, nerve, imagination, and labour is downright immoral. I do not speak of art. Art, I imagine, is not a serious preoccupation of the sparkling and irreverent Gyp. Her mission is to please at all cost, and be incessantly on view. Hence she writes continually, laughs continually, mocks, flouts, amuses, and leads, by her very perversity and commercial attractions, to the fatal hour of satiety. Perhaps another point of view is also her object as well as a resounding popularity.

Man, after all, works hard here below, that he may the more rapidly gain the right to be idle. Each one has his ideal. Some burn the candle at both ends in order to lie at cushioned ease when fatigue overtakes them.

Others (and these seem to me the most sensible) burn all along the road a modest, measured flame, from the start to the end economical of their illumination, which they vary with agreeable pauses in the rest of obscurity. These are the idlers, the pleasantest part of humanity.

The surprise for us of the Fée Surprise is the incongruous gathering into which Gyp's fragile art pitches the imagination, with an indescribable volatility and impertinence of effect.

It all means nothing, and yet one reads on. It is like the foam of the champagne-cup. It attracts though it is completely empty—mere froth. Sometimes a true word here and there strikes luminously out of a mist of nonsense. "You are like Sarcey, then; you believe that women are such liars as all that?" a lady asks of the grumbler of a dialogue. "I believe, madame," he replies, "that women lie whenever they can, and in every circumstance of life; that they lie from interest, love, ambition, vanity, wickedness, fear, and even stupidity—" "Oh!!!" all protest. The grumbler continues, "Just like men, for that matter."

To put modern speech into the mouth of the dead is not a particularly difficult or interesting task. In this flippant art any one may excel. Here is a specimen of Gyp's incongruous juxtaposition. Xenophon and Cora Pearl are talking of the concours hippique which takes place at the Champs Elysées of Paris. Louis XIV. interrupts them to remark: "It is nothing to—" when the Centaur Chiron shouts: "Make him stop, or he will begin about the carousal of 1662." The Comte d'Aure observes: "Certainly, when I wrote, in 1840, my book, entitled De l'industrie Chevaline, matters were not as advanced as to-day." Xenophon: "Well, and I! When I wrote the Hipparchique towards 399, I think—Louis XIV.: "All the same . . . do what they will, they will never surpass the carousal of 1662!" The Centaur Chiron: "Heavens! What a bore that great man is!" This sort of thing is the work of Gyp's odd moments, and it cannot be described as a highly spiced refreshment for the leisure of her readers.

The Baron Sinai is more serious. This is a novel of modern life. The hero is a Jew. If I were a Jew I would instantly join in the scheme afoot to refound Palestine and rebuild the Temple of Solomon. It would be a pleasing exchange for the part the race is made to play in modern French fiction. The Baron is, of course, an atrocious figure, and, being a Jew, he is bound to succeed. But if Gyp's presentment of Christian society be a true one, the Baron has not the monopoly in rascality. The noble Faubourg opens its exclusive doors to a common and beautiful young woman with the art of dressing well, solely because she is the acknowledged mistress of one of its favourites, the Vicomte de Chagny. Protected by him, she floats triumphantly through salons. The Baron, to whom these doors remain inhospitably sealed, designs to marry her, on the death of her husband, the Vicomte's dearest friend. At first he means to suppress the lover, but discovering that the lovely Mme. Guérandé only possesses a ticket of entrance into select society through that same lover, he decides upon the ménage à trois. The Vicomte, drawn with all Gyp's predilection for aristocratic sinners, poisons himself. The Faubourg which has received Chagny's mistress declines to recognise Sinai's millionaire fiancée; so the Baron, in a scene of unimaginable brutality, informs the lady that there would be no gain for him in their marriage, and offers himself as a substitute for Chagny. With equal brutality he offers his hand to a susceptible maiden lady of the highest world. Both women accept: the widow becomes his mistress and the maiden lady his wife.

Pays d'Ouest, by Gustave Geffroy, is a collection of fugitive studies along the Norman and Breton coasts. It is agreeable, but not particularly vivid reading. This sort of literature requires a much stronger and quainter personality, a much more delicate touch, a vitality of stroke, and a subtlety of shade and sentiment that M. Geffroy is far from possessing. There is not a single notable sentence, not a striking picture, or a suggestive figure in the entire volume. And if amends were made by distinction in simplicity there would then be a gain to literature. Still the book may be recommended. If it is not humorous, there is nothing cheap or vulgar in its dulness. It is like a uniform grey sky over a rolling grey sea, without foam or thunderous surge, with a damp shore-line, where a cheerless humanity labours and suffers. But it would assuredly never prompt the excitable reader to take horse or cycle and instantly ride or wheel to the West Country in search of the picturesque, the quaint, or the original. I had some comfort when my glance alighted on the promising title, Belle-Ile-en-Mer. Alas! there is no mention of Fouquet, of Porthos, or Aramis. A chapter on "Belle-Ile" without a tear for the death of Porthos!

H. L.

NEW BOOKS.

La Fête Surprise. Gyp.
Déracinés. Maurice Barrès.

THE WEEK.

SOME books of solid interest have come to hand this week. Mr. Meredith's promised selections from his published poems is the first arrival to be noted. Messrs. Constable have put the book, which contains 245 pages, into the brown buckram binding in which they recently dressed the Essay on Comedy. The only note introducing the volume is this: "The selection here made has been under the supervision of the Author."

The series of "Short Histories of the Literatures of the World" which Mr. Heinemann is publishing began most successfully with Prof. Gilbert Murray's Ancient Greek Literature. The second volume of the series, now to hand, is French Literature, by Prof. Edward Dowden. A cursory inspection of the volume inclines us to credit it with most of the virtues of a good introduction to a complex subject. A frank, clear preface defines the scope of the work, and a bibliography directs the reader to the highest authorities. The index seems complete, and a respectable bit of errata divests the work of any note of infallibility.

Another series published by Mr. Heinemann—"The Good Educators"—achieves a new volume. This is Thomas and Matthew Arnold, and their Influence on English Education. Incidentally, the author, Sir Joshua Fitch, mentions that in the catalogue of the British Museum Library there are no less than eighty-nine entries under the name of Matthew Arnold, and sixty-seven under that of his father.

The recent celebrations at Ebbs Fleet give timeliness to an important historical work, The English Black Monks of St. Benedict, by the Rev. Ethelred L. Taunton. The book is in two volumes, each containing over three hundred pages. Referring to the planting of Christianity in England by Gregory and St. Augustine—"men full of the Benedictine largeness of mind"—the author says: "It is not going too far, but it is the sober truth, to say England in great measure is what she is to-day through the work and the influence of St. Benedict's sons. And there has always been deep set in English hearts a love for the Benedictine name, which no time, absence, or calumny could efface."

Among new editions we have new half-crown editions of Rob Roy and Vanity Fair from Messrs. Service & Paton. These are illustrated by Mr. F. H. Townsend and Miss Chris Hammond respectively. We have also received the second, third, fourth, and fifth volumes of Messrs. Cassell's cheap re-issue of Familiar Wild Flowers.

Canon W. J. Knox Little has revised a series of lectures on St. Francis of Assisi, delivered by him in the Lady Chapel of Worcester Cathedral, and they are now published as a biography of the Saint by Messrs. Ibister & Co.

Another new work of historical interest is The Household of the Lafayettes, by Edith Sichel. Messrs. Constable & Co. are the publishers.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

LECTURES ON THE GOSPEL OF THE PENTATEUCH. By C. H. Waterhouse. Ibister & Co. 2s.

THEOLOGICAL TRANSLATION LIBRARY: HISTORY OF DOGMA. By Dr. Adolph Harnack. Translated from the Third German edition by James Millar, B.D. Williams & Norgate.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

RICHARD BAIRED SMITH, THE LEADER OF THE DELHI HEROES IN 1857. By Colonel H. M. Vibart, R.E. Archibald Constable & Co. 5s.

GREEK IN THE NINETEENTH CENTURY: A RECORD OF HELLENIC EMANCIPATION AND PROGRESS, 1821-1897. By Lewis Sergeant. T. Fisher Unwin. 10s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE. By Edward Dowden. William Heinemann.

ST. FRANCIS OF ASSISI: HIS TIMES, LIFE, AND WORK. By W. J. Knox Little, M.A. Ibister & Co. 10s. 6d.

THE ENGLISH BLACK MONKS OF ST. BENEDICT: A SKETCH OF THEIR HISTORY FROM THE COMING OF ST. AUGUSTINE TO THE PRESENT DAY. By Rev. Ethelred L. Taunton. 2 vols. John C. Nimmo.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE LAFAYETTES. By Edith Sichel. Archibald Constable & Co. 15s.

ART, POETRY, DRAMA.

THE POETRY OF ROBERT BURNS. Edited by W. E. Henley and T. F. Henderson. With Etchings by William Hole, R.S.A. Vol. IV.: Songs, Unauthenticated Pieces, Miscellanies, Biographical, Notes, Glossarial Index, and General Index, Terminal Essay. T. C. & E. O. Jack.

SELECTED POEMS. By George Meredith. Archibald Constable & Co. 6s.

A NEW BOOK OF THE FAIRIES. By Beatrice Hartman. Griffith, Farran, Brown & Co. 3s. 6d.

LYRICS. By John B. Tabb. John Lane. 4s. 6d.

THE FALL OF THE NIBELUNGS. Done into English by Margaret Armour. Illustrated by W. B. Macdougall. J. M. Dent & Co. 6s.

ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE OF THE NATIONAL GALLERY OF BRITISH ART (TATE GALLERY). With an Introduction by David Cressy Thompson. Office of the Art Journal.

A TEXT-BOOK DEALING WITH ORNAMENTAL DESIGN FOR WOVEN FABRICS. By J. Stephenson and F. Suddards. Methuen & Co. 7s. 6d.

FICTION.

THE TIME SPELL OF THE CHATEAU D'ARPON. By M. Carta Sturge. Arrowsmith (Bristol).

VANITY FAIR. By W. M. Thackeray. Illustrated by Chris Hammond. ROB ROY. By Walter Scott. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Service & Paton. 2s. 6d. each.

THE SETTLING OF BERTIN MENMAN. By Naranja Amarga. J. W. Arrowsmith. 6s.

A STRONG NECESSITY. By Isabel Don. Jarrold & Sons. 6s.

THE DEVIL'S SMILING. By Campbell Rae-Brown. Henry J. Drane. 3s. 6d.

PARADISE. By A. Kevill-Davies. Ward, Lock & Co. 6s.

THOSE DEADFUL TWINS: BOSEN AND MIDDY, THEIR ADVENTURES. By Themselves. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.

LAWRENCE CLAVERING. By A. E. W. Mason. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.

THE FORCE IN THE FOREST. By Charles G. D. Roberts. Kegan Paul. 5s.

NATURAL HISTORY.

FAMILIAR WILD FLOWERS. New cheap issue. Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Series Figured and Described by F. Edward Hulme, F.L.S. Cassell & Co.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

IN NORTHERN SPAIN. By Hans Gadow, M.A. A. & C. Black.

IDYLLS OF SPAIN: VARNISHED PICTURES OF TRAVEL IN THE PENINSULA. By Rowland Thirlmere. Elkin Mathews. 4s. 6d.

EFFING FOREST. By Edward North Buxton. Fourth edition, revised. Edward Stanford. 1s.

JOURNAL OF A TOUR IN THE UNITED STATES, CANADA, AND MEXICO. By Winifred Lady Howard of Glossop. Sampson Low.

EDUCATIONAL.

THE UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: A MANUAL OF ETHICS. By John S. Mackenzie, M.A. Third edition. W. B. Clive. 6s. 6d.

EXERCISES IN LATIN ACCIDENCE. By S. E. Winbolt, M.A. Methuen & Co. 1s. 6d.

LITERARY EPOCH SERIES: XIXTH CENTURY PROSE. Edited by J. H. Fowler, M.A. XIXTH CENTURY POETRY. Edited by A. O. Macdonald, M.A. A. & C. Black. 1s. each.

GREAT EDUCATORS: THOMAS AND MATTHEW ARNOLD AND THEIR INFLUENCE ON ENGLISH EDUCATION. By Sir Joshua Fitch, M.A. William Heinemann.

EXERCISES AND TEST QUESTIONS OF THE TUTORIAL LATIN GRAMMAR. By F. L. D. Richardson, B.A., and A. M. W. Hazel, M.A. W. B. Clive.

FRENCH POETICAL READER AND RECITER. Edited by Emile B. Le François. Hachette. 1s.

FOREIGN.

FORELESNINGER OG VIDENSKABELIGE AFHANDLINGER, AF KOWIAD GJSLASON. Copenhagen, Gyldendalske Boghandel. 1897.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE MYSTIC ROSE FROM THE GARDEN OF THE KING: A FRAGMENT OF THE VISION OF SHEIKH HAJI IBRAHIM OF KERBELA. Rendered into English by Fairfax L. Cartwright, B.A. Privately printed.

A DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE OF USEFUL FIBRE PLANTS OF THE WORLD. By Charles Richards Dodge. Government Printing Office (Washington, U.S.A.).

THE GREAT POWER, ITS ORIGIN, USE, AND INFLUENCE: A BRIEF EXPLANATION OF THE NECESSITY FOR MONETARY REFORM. By M. de P. Webb. Kegan Paul.

SIX BAGATELLES FOR THE PIANOFORTE, AND OTHER NEW MUSIC. Weekes & Co.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON TECHNICAL EDUCATION: REPORT OF THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE FOURTH MEETING HELD IN LONDON, JUNE, 1897. William Trownce. 3s. 6d.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish early next week a book entitled The Benin Massacre, by Capt. Boisragon, one of the two survivors who escaped the terrible massacre in Benin at the beginning of this year. The author relates in detail his adventures and his extraordinary escape, and adds a description of the country and of the events which led up to the outbreak.

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & Co. will shortly publish a work by the Rev. Dom Bede Camm, O.S.B., B.A., Oxon, priest of St. Thomas's Abbey, Erdington, near Birmingham, of the congregation of Beuron, entitled A Benedictine Martyr in England; being the Life and Times of the Venerable Servant of God, Dom John Roberts, O.S.B., who was hanged, drawn, and quartered on December 10, 1610, at Tyburn.

Verdi: Man and Musician, is the title of a monograph now in the press, from the pen of Mr. Frederick J. Crowest, author of The Great Tone Poets. It will be published by Mr. John Milne.

THE two volumes of English history, by Sir James H. Ramsay, announced by Messrs. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. are a further instalment of the work, of which a portion has already been given to the public under the title of Lancaster and York. The title of the forthcoming volumes will probably be Foundations of England, the period comprised extending from the beginning of British history down to the death of Stephen.

The House of Seven Gables, the second volume of Messrs. Service & Paton's beautiful edition of Nathaniel Hawthorne's romances, with introduction by Dr. Moncure D. Conway, and illustrated by Mr. F. H. Townsend, will be issued in October. The introduction will contain a letter of Hawthorne's, hitherto unpublished, referring to the Punccheon family. The same firm will issue, in continuance of their new "Whitehall Library," the following standard works: Charlotte Brontë's Jane Eyre, Sir Walter Scott's Ivanhoe, Lord Lytton's Last Days of Pompeii, and Charlotte Brontë's Shirley.

SARAH TYTLER's new novel, entitled The American Cousins, will be published immediately by Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. The scene of the tale is laid in the heart of Shakespeare land.

MISS MONTRESOR's new novel, At the Cross Roads, will be published on September 28 by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKSHOPS, EAST TO WEST.

I HAVE been for a saunter among the bookshops, beginning at Liverpool-street, that street of unrest. Here the pulse of the new publishing season is not yet felt strongly. A shop window near the station is still in August. But The Martian is there in fair quantity, and so is Mr. Gilbert Parker's The Pomp of the Lavilottes, and Mr. Richard Marsh's Crime and the Criminal, and there were a few copies of Mr. Guy Boothby's The Fascination of the King, and a couple of copies of The Jubilee Book of Cricket. But these gleamed from a background of "Chandos" and "Minerva" classics, and sets of Lytton and Mrs. Henry Wood, and old kailyard books like Kate Carnegie, and The Little Minister, and A Window in Thrums. The "cheap line" was Messrs. Downey & Co.'s already extended series of sixpenny standard novels in yellow covers, sold here at 4d.

Walking through Finsbury-circus to Moorgate-street, I found a large bookshop making the most of The Martian, the sale of which they were aiding with a poster. I observe that the proprietors have added cycling stop-watches and chains to their stock; may this be taken as a commentary on the discount question? or is it Messrs. Gilbert & Field's clever way for pursuing cyclist customers who have become tired of books?

In Poultry and Cheapside I found some good displays. At one shop George Eliot's Scenes of Clerical Life was awarded a poster, and at another a similar réclame was given to Mr. Le Queux's Devil's Dice. At both shops The Christian and The Martian were well to the front, and in Cheapside The Martian was shown alongside Trilby and Peter Ibbetson. Mr. Wells's The Invisible Man was visible in Cheapside, and Mr. Guy Boothby's Fascination of the King seemed to fascinate in Poultry, for I saw it much handled.

In Queen-street I spent five minutes. Here a high class trade is done. Already the window contained eight copies of Mr. Meredith's Selected Poems and three copies of Prof. Dowden's French Literature. An announcement board in the window seemed a good feature; it reminded me of several new enterprises: Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.'s new eight-volume edition of the Spectator (a specimen page was shown), Mr. John S. Farmer's Hunting Songs and Ballads of the Chase, and the Bishop of London's forthcoming book, The Story of Some English Shires. Although cheap books are not shown here, although nothing less expensive than the Gadshill edition of Dickens is shown in the Dickens line, yet I noticed that a cordial welcome was given to Messrs. Bliss, Sands & Co.'s "Cheapest Books in the World" series. Their Pilgrim's Progress and Don Quixote were liberally represented. The Martian was there in profusion.

Facing the west end of Cheapside, and that worthily, is a large bookshop. Here, as elsewhere in the City, I found a refreshing elasticity in ideas as to what is recent. Ziska, for instance, was still to the front as "Marie Correlli's latest sensation." The Master Craftsman and Hilda Strafford are still "just published" in Cheapside. Baedeker & Murray, too, prolong their reign on the best shelf. But the poster is given to The Martian; and The Altruist, and The Pomp of the Lavilottes, and Mr. Louis Tracy's An American Emperor have the prominent positions.

It was only when I came to Ludgate-hill that I saw Mr. Lang's Book of Dreams and Ghosts at all; but that may have been due to imperfect observation. Each bookshop seems to give a plum of position to a different book. Here I found Mr. Bret Harte's Three Partners honoured. Again The Martian got the poster, and here it was described "as Mr. Du Maurier's Great Work, 'The Martian.'" Mr. Andrew Balfour's By Stroke of Sword was well shown here, and so was Mr. John A. Logan's In Joyful Russia.

THE DISCOUNT QUESTION.

PUBLIC interest in the great discount question is shown by the manner in which the daily papers have taken up the subject. Almost every paper has button-holed a bookseller and reported the conversation. A Pall Mall Gazette representative, for instance, has been talking to a large provincial bookseller, and this was the gist of the interview:

"How about this 3d. discount?" I asked. "Is it true it will come to an end before the year is out?"—"I can't say about the latter, but something will have to be done. At present there is no living to be made out of the higher-priced books except on order. Take the 6s. book, for instance. It costs us 4s., which means sixpence profit, out of which all the 'outs' have to come. But supposing we overstock? The same is true, only more so, when we come to books published at half-a-guinea and a guinea."

"It is said that if the change is made the author will be the sufferer, at any rate for a while, especially the less known writers. The public likes its discount, and will hold aloof if it fails to get it?"—"I don't believe it for a moment. Authors will gain. We shall have a fair margin for risk, and we shall stock more. This will be a gain to authors and publishers. It is the books that are seen that are bought, especially with less known authors; only a small proportion of the public order books not in stock. The six-shilling novel is going. It will soon follow in the wake of the three-volume book. The magazines have taught the public how much reading can be got for a small sum, and the cheap reprints are nails in the coffin of dear books. The publishers are beginning to find it out, and this season will show a large increase in the output of 1s., 2s., and 3s. 6d. books (published price)."

I demurred and asked, "How about The Christian?"—"It is having a great sale. I have three gross of copies coming in this morning, which will probably all be cleared before night. In fact, most of them are bespoken."

"That doesn't look like——."—"Of course I don't mean to say it of well-established authors, especially when they give good weight for the money—and Mr. Hall Caine does that, which is more than can be said for some of them."

"What sort of books do you like to sell best?"—"The cheap issues which come from Nelsons, Wells Gardner, Blackie, and houses like that. There is a substantial margin of profit, and the public buys them in batches."

"And the future of the trade?"—"Booming!—more especially in cheap books," he hammered in as a final shot.

AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE CLARENDON PRESS ANNOUNCEMENTS INCLUDE:

Theology, &c.—"Novum Testamentum Domini Nostri Iesu Christi Latine, secundum Editionem S. Hieronymi," ad Codd. mss. fidem recensuit I. Wordsworth, S.T.P., Episcopus Sarisburiensis; in operis societatem adsumto H. I. White, A.M. Partis I. Fasc. V. (completing part i.); "The Peshitto Version of the Gospels," edited by G. H. Gwilliam, M.A., part i.; "The Coptic Version of the New Testament in the Northern Dialect (otherwise called Memphitic and Bohairic)," with introduction, critical apparatus, and literal English translation, 2 vols., 8vo; "Samaritan Liturgies," edited by A. E. Cowley, M.A.; "Latin Versions of the Canons of the Greek Councils of the Fourth and Fifth Centuries," by C. H. Turner, M.A.; "Sancti Irenaei Novum Testamentum," edited by W. Sanday, D.D.; "The Key of Truth: a Paulician Ritual and Catechism," edited by F. C. Conybeare, M.A.; "Legenda Angliæ," edited by C. Horstmann, Ph.D., 2 vols., 8vo; "Old Testament History for Schools," by T. H. Stokoe, D.D., part iii.: "The Disruption to the Return from Captivity."

Greek and Latin.—"The Politics of Aristotle," edited by W. L. Newman, M.A., vols. iii. and iv. (completing the work); "Indices to Andocides, Lycurgus, and Dinarchus," by L. L. Forman, Ph.D.; "Horace," a miniature text, edited by E. C. Wickham, D.D.; Ovid, "Heroides," edited by Arthur Palmer, D.C.L.; Cæsar, "De Bello Gallico," edited by St. George Stock, M.A.; "The Agricola of Tacitus," edited by H. Furneaux, M.A.

Oriental.—"Thesaurus Syriacus," editit R. Payne Smith, S.T.P., Fasc. X., Pars. I.; "An Abridged Syriac Lexicon," by Mrs. Margoliouth, part ii.; "A Hebrew and English Lexicon of the Old Testament," based on the Lexicon of Gesenius, as translated by E. Robinson, edited by Francis Brown, D.D., S. R. Driver, D.D., and C. A. Briggs, D.D., part vi.; Gesenius' "Hebrew Grammar," translated from the twenty-sixth German edition by A. E. Cowley, M.A.; "A Catalogue of the Turkish, Hindustani, and Pushtu MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by H. Ethé, M.A., part ii.; "A Catalogue of the Armenian MSS. in the Bodleian Library," by S. Baronian, D.D.

General Literature and Modern Languages.—"Manners, Institutions, and Ceremonies of the Hindus," by the Abbé J. A. Dubois, translated from the author's later French MS. in the Madras Government's Records, with notes, corrections, and biography of the author, by H. K. Beauchamp; "A Summary Catalogue of Bodleian MSS.," by F. Madan, M.A., vol. iv.; "Dictionary of Proper Names and Notable Matters in the Works of Dante," by Paget Toynbee, M.A.; Aubrey's "Lives," edited by Andrew Clark, M.A.; "The Odes of Keats," edited, with notes, analyses, and a memoir, and illustrations, by A. C. Downer, M.A.; "Ætolia: its Geography, Topography, and Antiquities," by W. J. Woodhouse, M.A., with maps and illustrations; "A Catalogue of the Antiquities in the Cyprus Museum," by J. L. Myres, M.A., and M. Ohnefalsch Richter, Ph.D., with illustrations

The English Language and Literature.—"Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary," part iv., section 2, edited by T. N. Toller, M.A.; "First Steps in Anglo-Saxon," by Henry Sweet, M.A.; "A New English Dictionary, founded mainly on the Materials collected by the Philological Society," the concluding portion of F, edited by Henry Bradley, M.A., and H, edited by James A. H. Murray, M.A., LL.D.; "King Horn," edited by Joseph Hall, M.A.; Shakespeare, "King Henry the Fourth," part i., edited by W. Aldis Wright, D.C.L.

Law, History, Geography, &c.—"Studies in International Law," by T. E. Holland, D.C.L.; "A Digest of the Law relating to the Government of India," by Sir C. P. Ilbert, K.C.S.I.; "History of the New World called America," by E. J. Payne, M.A., vol. ii.; "Selections from the Whitefoord Papers," edited by W. A. S. Hewins, M.A.; "The Landnámabók, edited by the late G. Vigfússon, M.A., and F. York Powell, M.A.; "History of Agriculture and Prices," by the late J. E. Thorold Rogers, M.A., vols. vii. and viii.; "Catalogue of the Rawlinson MSS. (D) in the Bodleian Library," by W. D. Macray, M.A., part ii.; "Historical Atlas of Modern Europe, from the Decline of the Roman Empire": comprising also maps of parts of Asia and of the New World connected with European History, edited by B. L. Poole, M.A., part xi.

Arrangements have been made for the issue of twenty-five works in the series of "Oxford Classical Texts."

MESSRS. HODDER & STOUGHTON'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

"The Expositor's Greek Testament," edited by the Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll; "The Providential Order of the World," by the Rev. Prof. A. B. Bruce, D.D.; "The Clerical Life," a Series of Letters to Ministers, by John Watson, D.D., Prof. Marcus Dods, D.D., Prof. James Denney, D.D., Principal T. C. Edwards, D.D., W. Robertson Nicoll, LL.D., T. G. Selby, T. H. Darlow, M.A., and J. T. Stoddart; "On the Threshold of Central Africa," by François Coillard, Paris Mission; "Sunday Afternoon Verses": "Side-Lights from Patmos," by George Matheson, M.A., D.D. "Little Books on Religion": "The Righteous Father and the Living Christ," by the Rev. P. T. Forsyth, D.D.; "From Strength to Strength," by the Rev. J. H. Jowett, M.A.; "A New Volume," by the Rev. Hugh Black, M.A.; "The Silence of God," by Robert Anderson, C.B., LL.D.; "True and False Aims, and Other Sermons," by the late Rev. E. Herbert Evans, D.D.; "The Book of the Twelve Prophets," by Prof. George Adam Smith, D.D., LL.D., vol. ii.; "The Life of F. R. Wynne, D.D., Bishop of Killaloe," with a collection of sermons and addresses; "The Ritschlian Theology and the Evangelical Faith," by Rev. Prof. James Orr, M.A., D.D.; "Personal Friendship of Jesus," by the Rev. J. R. Miller, D.D.; "Essays and Addresses by Henry Drummond, F.R.S.E.," with introductory sketches by Ian Maclaren and W. Robertson Nicoll; "The Potter's Wheel," by Rev. John Watson, D.D.; "Other People's Lives," by Rosa Nouchette Carey; "Mary Queen of Scots, from her Birth to her Flight into England," including documents hitherto unpublished, by D. Hay Fleming; "A Doctor of the Old School," by Ian Maclaren; "The Ian Maclaren Year-Book"; "Outlines of a Philosophy of Religion, Based on Psychology and History," by Auguste Sabatier; "The Monkey that Would Not Kill," and another story for young people, by the late Henry Drummond; "Jane Eyre," by Charlotte Brontë, being the first volume of "The Works of the Brontës"; "David Lyall's Love Story," by the author of "The Land of the Leal"; "Through Lattice Windows," by W. J. Dawson; "By Far Euphrates," a new story by the author of "The Spanish Brothers"; "To the Angel's Chair," a story of ideals in a Welsh Village, by the Rev. John Thomas, M.A., Liverpool; "Autobiography of a Highland Minister," with a letter of appreciation, by the Rev. Alex. Whyte, D.D.; "In Strange Quarters," a story of Constantinople, by Edwin Hodder.

DRAMA.

ONLY on the vast stage of Drury Lane could such a spectacle as "The White Heather" be adequately presented. To a great extent it is the size of the theatre that determines the nature of the play, which must appeal to the eye at least as much as to the ear or the understanding; and it must be owned that the new management of Drury Lane in this, their first venture, have succeeded in maintaining, if not surpassing, the Harris tradition of spectacular sensationalism. "The White Heather" is, indeed, an excellent piece of its kind. Messrs. Cecil Raleigh and Henry

Hamilton, the artificers of this huge dramatic mechanism, to which, as an accident has apprised the public, the working of hydraulic lifts is more essential than the best acting talent, have contrived to illustrate an interesting story of persecuted virtue and baffled villainy with mechanical effects of unprecedented ingenuity. I refer to the wonderful scene of the fight between divers under water for the possession of an all-important document recovered from the wreck of a yacht. No stage illusion of equal difficulty has ever been attempted. And, unlike sensational effects as a rule, it happens to be entirely pertinent to the story, the document in question being no other than the proof of an irregular Scotch marriage into which the heroine has been entrapped by a titled villain, and the establishing of which is the main purpose of the author's dramatic scheme.

WITH admirable consistency this purpose is pursued through four acts and as many hours—for the Drury Lane public like quantity as well as quality—with just such interruptions as the sensational illustrations of the story demand. It is part of the formula of Drury Lane melodrama that the story should move through the more or less familiar scenes of everyday life. Accordingly, we begin with a shooting party on the moors, where Lord Angus Cameron repudiates his alleged marriage coram populo. Passing thence to the interior of the Stock Exchange, we see the heroine's father "hammered" as a defaulter at the instance of the villain, who adds to his other wickedness that of being a mammoth speculator, and also assist at the playful antics of the stockbrokers, who tear a visitor's coat off his back. Battersea Park in the height of the bicycling craze, and Boulter's Lock on the Upper Thames in the season, bring the scattered dramatis personæ once more together, under picturesque circumstances; and then comes the race between the villain on the one hand and the heroine's friend on the other for the recovery of the missing marriage "lines," which not only make an "honest woman" of the heroine, but determine the succession of a dukedom. In the old days authors of melodrama were not too particular as to their facts. Dion Boucicault, for instance, thought it enough—and it was enough—that the Colleen Bawn should merely lose her marriage lines or be robbed of them, regardless of the fact that as the marriage had been contracted in regular form some official record of it would exist. But we live in critical times, and the authors of "The White Heather," re-creating a similar plight for their heroine to that which afflicted poor Eily O'Connor, are obliged to avail themselves of the irregularities of the Scotch marriage law.

At first sight the lady's chances are desperate enough. The marriage was celebrated on board Lord Angus's yacht (whose name, by the way, gives the play its enigmatical title). Not long afterwards the vessel was wrecked "off a rugged part of the coast of Scotland," with the log-book, containing the record, on board; and at the two witnesses to the ceremony, one is dead and the other was last heard of in the Chinese seas. Naturally the hopes of the experienced playgoer are centred in this missing witness, who, by all the rules of the game, ought to turn up at the critical juncture, and, as a sailor, espouse the cause of justice. But the authors have cleverly evaded this obvious solution. Turn up he does, this missing sailor, and at Boulter's Lock, of all places in the world, but not to assist beauty and virtue in distress. On the contrary, his function is simply to tell Lord Angus where the log-book is likely to be found on the wrecked yacht if she should still be holding together, ten fathoms under water. The information is, however, picked up by a sharp-eared lad, who is the heroine's most devoted slave, and so at the end of the third act the problem is, who shall be the first to recover the fateful log-book—the villain who wishes it destroyed, or the heroine's friend who hopes to restore her good name by its means? That poetic justice is finally done need not be told. But a serious difficulty has still to be overcome. Is the lady, once her marriage is proved, to be burdened with a husband whom she has every reason to detest? Clearly not; but how is he to be disposed of? Here, again, the ingenuity of the authors does not fail them. Failing professional divers, it is the wicked nobleman who dons the diving gear and recovers the document. On the bottom of the sea he is met by the heroine's champion, who has descended on the same errand, and it is there the fatal fight is engaged in. Lord Angus uses his knife; the other retaliates by cutting the villain's air-tube and leaving him to drown, while he himself is drawn to the surface mortally wounded, but with the invaluable log-book in his dying clutch.

By dint of artfully contrived gauzes the illusion of being under water is conveyed to the spectator with a startling degree of realism. The descent of the divers is managed by hydraulic lifts, which slowly raise the diver's barge to "the flies"; and, marvel of marvels, in the dimly lit depths fish of various sizes are seen swimming about with an absolutely life-like movement. This effect is, I understand, due to a cinematographic reproduction of the interior of an aquarium. Its like has certainly never been seen on the stage. Of the acting by a company comprising Miss Kate Rorke, Mr. Henry Neville, Mrs. John Wood, and other experienced hands, it is hardly necessary to speak. The actor in such plays pales his ineffectual fires by the side of the stage carpenter and the stage engineer. Mr. Henry Neville's conversion or perversion to villainy after a practice of virtue which dates at least from the production of the "Ticket-of-Leave Man" in the early sixties is noteworthy, but to the well-grounded actor nothing comes amiss. As a lady of quality, with her heart in the right place, Mrs. John Wood is, in her own jargon, "immense." An excellent recruit to the London stage in the line of business known as "character acting" is found in Mr. J. B. Gordon, who enacts the hard-headed, but soft-hearted, stockbroker with a fine pathetic touch. The entire performance—play and spectacle in equal proportions—will rank with the best that Drury Lane as a home of melodrama has had to show.

HERE praise for the dramatic novelties of the week must end. The English version of Dumas' "Francillon" given at the Duke of York's Theatre is crudely and ineffectively acted (with one or two minor exceptions) by Mrs. Brown-Potter, Mr. Kyrle Bellew, and a scratch company. It is a difficult piece to handle, consisting as it does of a ha'p'orth of action to an intolerable deal of talk. In French, of course, the talk possesses the brilliancy characteristic of all the work of the younger Dumas. The translation necessarily loses much of that; added to which the English actors do not succeed in looking at home in their French surroundings. In the most favourable circumstances it would be difficult, no doubt, to lay satisfactorily before an English audience the particular question here discussed—namely, whether a wife has the right to retaliate upon a faithless husband by an infidelity of her own. But Mrs. Brown-Potter has few of the qualifications required for her part, though she is able to make an imposing display of Parisian costumes; while Mr. Bellew, a romantic actor of some distinction, is not seen to advantage as a society cynic.

THE faults in connexion with Mr. H. V. Esmond's love-story in three acts, given at the Comedy Theatre under the title of "One Summer's Day," are mainly those of the author, who has attempted, with an insufficient degree of dramatic intuition, to depict an idyll on the banks of the upper Thames. It is a confused and irritating piece of work, better in design than execution. Mr. Esmond gives us real hay-cocks and false sentiment. Unfortunately, too, Mr. Hawtrey is cast for a part which does not suit him—that of a sleepy, indolent major, who fails to see that a pretty girl in the person of Miss Eva Moore is throwing herself at his head.

J. F. N.

SCIENCE.

THE report of Mr. Cotton, Chief Commissioner of Assam, on the destructive earthquake of last June, will open people's eyes far more than any sensational paragraphs could do to the magnitude of the catastrophe, and also to the remarkable power of coping with an emergency which Indian officials have acquired. There are some people who are never weary of abusing the administrators of the Indian provinces; for them the reading of this report will be a healthy reproof. Except for a conjecture that the source of the disturbance was a long-suspected fault near Cherrapunji, Mr. Cotton refrains from entering into a discussion of the physical causes of the earthquake, contenting himself with the compilation of all the facts it was possible to discover. In this way he has provided the scientific staff of the Indian Geological Department with a greater mass of detail than has ever before been available in connexion with such an occurrence. The study of earthquakes and volcanic outbursts has within recent years been very scientifically carried out. Among the data now available on the subject this prompt and able report will undoubtedly take high rank for the future.

I AM sorry to see that the Marine Biological Association is obliged to appeal for funds, not only in order to extend its field of action, but even for the bare purpose of remunerating some of the men who are carrying out valuable researches on our national sea fisheries. The association was the outcome of a very strong feeling that Government had neglected the fisheries, and suffered them to decline, at a time when all other nations were zealously protecting them, and the United States, in particular, were spending something like £75,000 a year on theirs. This agitation led in one instance to the Fisheries Exhibition, which was successful in drawing public attention to the value and importance of the industries involved. The association was an after-growth, and was formed under the auspices of Prof. Huxley and others to promote a scientific study of the conditions affecting all marine fauna, and especially those bearing on the fishing industries. A laboratory was built under the citadel at Plymouth, with assistance from Government, and a staff of exceedingly able and energetic naturalists was established there. The plan of the laboratory, which I had the pleasure of visiting this summer, is somewhat on the lines of the more famous one at Naples. That is to say, dredging, trawling, and tow-netting expeditions are made all round the neighbouring coast by means of a fleet of boats specially equipped, and the results are tabulated or worked up in a large variety of ways according to their bearing on the definite researches in hand. During the summer season tables are let to students anxious to carry on private investigations. The association has already been the means of publishing excellent work, both of a practical and a scientific kind, the series of reports on the fisheries of the North Sea by Mr. J. T. Cunningham and Mr. E. W. L. Holt, and the latter's studies of edible fishes, being especially noteworthy. Unfortunately, as I was able to gather from my visit, the staff are completely hampered for want of funds, and are in need of larger and better equipped boats. The association is not one that can advertise itself in any way, and its unostentatious work is likely to go unnoticed except by the class to whose interest it directly appeals. As a matter of fact, however, the prosperity of the fisheries is a matter of the gravest national importance, and as it is a British custom to leave all necessary work to be performed by individuals or private societies, it is at least fair that these should be supported in an adequate manner.

H. C. M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DATE OF SIR W. SCOTT'S DEATH.

Edinburgh: Sept. 15, 1897.

On the anniversary of the decease of Sir Walter Scott (Sept. 21, 1832) I looked for the date in the Edinburgh almanacs, and found it omitted in the Edinburgh Directory, and also in that of Oliver & Boyd, but inserted in the Church (Episcopal) almanacs for this year. Strange to say, further, the dates of his birth (September 15, 1771) are also omitted in the Edinburgh Directory and in Oliver & Boyd, but inserted in the Church Year-Book. It may be inquired into how has this forgetfulness come about in Scottish publications in the very city of his birth and scenes of his career and reputation. Not so very far back as the first quarter of this century, Whitaker's Almanac, a London publication, was found to have both dates inserted all right, an example set by a more patriotic Saxon.

W. V. BLACK.

CHRONOLOGY OF IRISH TEXTS.

London: Sept. 18.

This time I must protest, not "mildly," but vehemently against Mr. Nutt's manipulation of my last letter (ACADEMY, September 4). To the passage he selects for criticism he has added a whole clause which, although included within the marks of quotation, I never wrote, and which I moreover repudiate as distorting my meaning. By the expression "between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries" I meant the whole period of 400 years dating from the beginning of the twelfth, which was obvious enough from the passage from Mr. Borlase's book referred to four lines above; but Mr. Nutt makes me stultify myself by adding the absurd explanatory clause—"i.e., in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries." Of course, I cannot suppose that he interpolated these words in order to score a point; but he interpolated them none the less, and the discussion must therefore cease so far as concerns

THE REVIEWER.

"LIZA OF LAMBETH."

London: Sept. 13.

I am told that your review of Liza of Lambeth is most unfair, and that I ought to reply to it.

I don't really know why I should, except that it is perhaps a little annoying to be charged with plagiarism, when my book was finished three months before The Child of the Jugo appeared. I have not yet had an opportunity of reading Mr. Arthur Morrison's books, so I cannot tell what similarity there may be between them and my own. But I might suggest that a fight between two women is not so uncommon a thing in the alums as to be seen by one man only. While the remark—not talk—about plumes I heard one night two years ago, when I was watching by a woman dying in childbirth.

Of course the story is sordid and nasty: it is meant to be. If the book was to be written at all it had to be done truthfully; and what have you made the poor, you others, but sordid and nasty!

I suppose no one can tell why the desire comes to him to write about a certain thing—but besides the feeling that I was writing because I could not help it, was another, that possibly it might induce the Philistine to look a little less self-righteously at the poor, and even to pity their unhappiness.

I am sorry that your reviewer should "quit me with a grimy feeling, as if he had had a mud bath in all the filth of a London street." But perhaps he will not entirely forget me; and next time he is forced to go through some alums, he will not push aside with his umbrella the ragged child who is in his way, and when he sees a woman with a black eye, her face all pale and tear-stained, he may not look upon her entirely with contempt.

W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

WITH The Martian before them, and with Trilby and Peter Ibbetson on their shelves, the critics have formed their final estimates of Mr. Du Maurier's abilities as a novelist. It was to be expected that these estimates would be sober, and they have been sober almost to severity. Their unanimity, too, is remarkable. It seems to be agreed that in The Martian Mr. Du Maurier did but work the vein of Trilby and Peter Ibbetson, and that he exhausted it. Says the critic of the Pall Mall Gazette:

"Perhaps one wearies somewhat rapidly of the artifices by which Mr. Du Maurier produces his effects; perhaps in his last book his hand had somehow lost its cunning. Certain it is that the net result is weariness and occasionally irritation. The descriptions of Paris and its environs are here, the interjected French phrases, the French slang (with English translation appended). We have all Mr. Du Maurier's familiar enthusiasms—for physical perfection, for gentleness and strength and good temper, for France and things French, for food and drink—all the things, in fact, over which he is apt to wax lyrical. But the thing has lost its savour. The little tricks of style—or the want of style—by which he produces his effects, the multitude of epithets, the piling of Pelion upon Ossa, the long rushing sentences full of parentheses, merely irritate. They no longer produce a corresponding glow in the reader."

Even more explicit is the Daily News:

"The book suggests that the author had worked out the peculiar vein which he at first 'struck' with such unparalleled success to its last grain of ore. In any further work he would most certainly have been required to try fresh fields and pastures new. It would be as idle as it would be ungenerous to speculate the probabilities of his success in any new quest. It is enough to say that this book must, in any circumstances, have brought the first remarkable series to a close."

The same critic, on the other hand, does justice to Mr. Du Maurier's individual and indisputable faculty of observation.

"We recognise its author's obligations to its fine training in observation as a draughtsman for Punch. It cultivated his eyes quickly to apprehend the traits and peculiarities that make for definiteness of presentation. The book abounds in little scenes in London and on the Continent that might have been taken bodily from the jottings of the artist's 'carnet' of subjects for illustration. It is full of unforeseen touches of observation that lend an air of reality to character and episode."

The "chaotic construction" of the book, noted by the Pall Mall Gazette, is the subject of general remark; but the Daily Telegraph excuses the author:

"A story which consists mainly of interruptions, of parentheses, of discussions on every subject under the sun except the immediate topic in hand, of thoughts which are trivial, and of moralisings which are ineffectual, is from the literary standpoint nil. Nevertheless, we would defy the reader to sit down to The Martian without gradually succumbing to Mr. Du Maurier's charm. . . . The central fact remains that it is a novel which has got to be read through from start to finish, not so much because it is good of its kind, but because it has its own secret for arresting and securing our attention."

"This singular novel is outside of all canons of literary art," says the Daily Chronicle. The reviewer remarks on the "incredible silliness" of the supernatural elements in the story, but says.

"If this volume of 470 pages had been reduced by one half, and if the author had been content to label his bundle of anecdotes 'Barty Josselin's Boyhood,' he would have achieved an original and even startling success. For, as a picture of school life in France, the early part of The Martian is altogether delightful. Here Du Maurier was on ground that he knew intimately; his memory was stored with impressions which he reproduced in firm outline and with atmospheric delicacy; his vignettes of French boys, ushers, country people, are little gems; and through these charming pages are scattered snatches of French songs, which spread around them a fragrance of tender gaiety."

Similarly the Westminster Gazette critic thinks the main theme of the book "a piece of bewildering nonsense," but he "prefers to remember that a great deal of The Martian is in the author of Trilby's characteristic style, and that it comes to us as the legacy of a well-loved and gifted man."

Finally, the Times says: "Like Trilby, the book has no literary style, but is written with the same enchanting grace, and resembles the bright and winning conversation of a genial and accomplished companion."

The illustrations are praised on all hands, but by one critic only as "charming oases in a desert of small talk."

THE reviews of Mr. Wells's latest story are more descriptive of its plot than critical of its art. The Scotsman gives it a word of warm praise:

"This is a wonderful story—grotesque, indeed, as the title-page has it, but deepening as it goes from the farcical to the fearful and tragical. The Invisible Man has been happy in his biographer, if in nothing else."

The Saturday Review says:

"Mr. Wells is more concerned with telling us the adventures that befall a man who made his body invisible than with persuading us that such a miracle is possible. This is a great advantage. We accept the miracle, and then the man with an invisible body becomes almost as interesting to watch as the man with an exaggerated affection for his daughters, or an exaggerated self-consciousness, or any other qualification that leads him into remarkable scrapes. And the greater elbow-room allows Mr. Wells to throw himself away, to laugh, to be reckless and irresponsible; indeed, the general tone of the book, and the entire first half, is farcical, broad farce, bordering on the knock-about business. . . . The tragedy is always on the brink of farce until we reach the last page and a piece of wholly pathetic tragedy. The hunted terror of society is caught at last, and most pitiful is the re-entry he makes into the visible world he left so boldly."

The Daily Chronicle speaks of Mr. Wells's "fertility of imaginative resource."

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

SIDE LIGHTS on CHURCH HISTORY.—THE LITURGY and RITUAL of the ANTE-NICENE CHURCH. By the Rev. F. E. WARREN, B.D., F.S.A. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

CHRISTIAN LIFE in SONG (TE DEUM LAUDAMUS).—THE SONG and the SINGERS. By the late Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THEODORE and WILFRITH. Lectures delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral, December, 1896, by the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop Designate of Bristol. With several Illustrations. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

THE ANCIENT HEBREW TRADITION as ILLUSTRATED by the MONUMENTS. A Protest against the Modern School of Old Testament Criticism. By Dr. FRITZ HOMMEL, Professor of the Semitic Languages in the University of Munich. Translated from the German by EDMUND MCCLURE, M.A., and LEONARD CROSSLE. With Map. Large post 8vo, buckram boards, 5s.

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom, until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the present day. By EDMUND MCCLURE, M.A. Containing 18 Coloured Maps besides some 50 Maps in the Text. 4to, cloth boards. [In the press.]

THE ANGLICAN ORDINAL. Annotated and Arranged for Use at Ordinations, combined or single. By the Rev. BLOMFIELD JACKSON, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

ADDRESSES and SERMONS. By Basil, Archbishop of Smyrna. Translated (with his permission) by the Rev. A. BAKER, R.N. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION: its Position and Prospects. Sermons preached in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, in July and August, 1897, by the ARCHBISHOP of CAPE TOWN, the ARCHBISHOP of RUPESTLAND, the ARCHBISHOP of SYDNEY, the BISHOP of CALCUTTA, and the BISHOP of KENTUCKY. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE PAPAL CONCLAVES. By the Rev. Canon Pennington, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OUTLINES of the HISTORY of the THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE of the CHURCH of ENGLAND from the REFORMATION to the CLOSE of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. The Bishop Paddock Lectures. By JOHN DOWDEN, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

PATRIARCHAL PALESTINE. By the Rev. A. H. SAYCE, Professor of Assyriology, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Map, buckram boards, 4s.

[This book is the first to apply the Tel-el-Amarna Tablets, both published and unpublished, towards elucidating the condition of Syria at this period. It also contains a recent and important revision of the Egyptian Geographical Lists bearing on Palestine.]

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Professor SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Fifth Edition. Demy 8vo, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

"A really valuable and important work; perhaps the best which Professor Sayce has yet written." Academy.

ANCIENT HISTORY from the MONUMENTS.—THE HISTORY of BABYLONIA. By the late GEORGE SMITH. Edited and brought up to date by the Rev. Professor A. H. SAYCE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE CONVERSION of the HEPTAROHY. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop Designate of Bristol. Small post 8vo, with several Illustrations, cloth boards, 3s.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH in THESE ISLANDS before the COMING of AUGUSTINE. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop Designate of Bristol. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

AUGUSTINE and HIS COMPANIONS. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop Designate of Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIBLE in the LIGHT of TO-DAY. By the Rev. CHARLES CROSLIGH, D.D. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

BIBLE PLACES; or, the Topography of the Holy Land. A Succinct Account of all the Places, Rivers, and Mountains of the Land of Israel mentioned in the Bible, so far as they have been identified; together with their Modern Names and Historical References. By the Rev. Canon H. B. TRISTRAM, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S. New Edition, brought up to date. With Map. Crown 8vo, 5s.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on hand-made paper, buckram, top edge gilt, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

THE MACHINERY of the UNIVERSE. Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics and Astronomy, Tufts College, Mass. Small post 8vo, with several Diagrams. Cloth boards, 2s.

THE SPLASH of a DROP. By Prof. Worthington. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Percy Faraday FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (London), F.R.S. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.
"It is a book which every clergyman, every magistrate, every guardian of the poor, every governor of a school ought to possess and master."—Guardian.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Prof. R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Prof. Marshall Ward. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Third Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles MEYMOTT TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Prof. GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution, in December, 1896, and January, 1897, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Prof. J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Prof. George HENSLow, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several Illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and Adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. MCCLURE, M.A. Imperial 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

THE STRUGGLE of the NATIONS: Egypt, Syria, and Assyria. By Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. MCCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 Illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 35s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

This is a companion volume to "The Dawn of Civilization," and contains the History of the Ancient Peoples of the East from the XIVth Egyptian Dynasty to the end of the Ramesside period. This interval covers the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt and their Exodus therefrom. The recent discovery of an Egyptian Stele mentioning the Israelites gives special interest to this volume, where the matter is discussed with his usual acumen by the Author.

"The translation by M. L. McClure is in both cases excellent. Professor Maspero's presentation of the new learning is at once eminently popular and attractive."—Times.

THE DAWN of CIVILIZATION (EGYPT and CHALDEA). New and Revised Edition. By Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. MCCLURE. With Map and over 470 Illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 35s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 48s.

Professor Maspero, by using the result of the most recent researches in Egypt and Mesopotamia, has brought this New Edition up to the latest date.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, CHARING CROSS, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 129, NORTH STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

11

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1326.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 20, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

TH. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS,
2, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla.
MSB. considered for Publication. (Established 1812.)
A large Orientale in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS.—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.
Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Farnival Street, London, E.C.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate—Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—R. W. LUKINS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERB. HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.
The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.
For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.
Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

SALES BY AUCTION.

Miscellaneous Books, including the Library of the late Sir MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D.—FIVE DAYS' SALE.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., on MONDAY, OCTOBER 4, and Four Following Days, at 1 o'clock, MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising:—Vertue's Heads, Large Paper—Nash's Mansions, 4 vols.—Newcastle's Households, 2 vols.—Lodge's Portraits, India proofs, 12 vols.—Wilkinson's Iconologia Illustrata, 2 vols.—Akermann's Westminster Abbey, 3 vols.—Strutt's Dress, 3 vols.—Coloured Costume of Foreign Countries, 3 vols.—Archæologia to 1800, 75 vols.—Sussex Archaeological Collections to 1804, 49 vols.—Sowerby's English Botany, 13 vols.—Ruskin's Modern Painters, Large Paper, 6 vols.—The Writings of Sir W. Scott, Dickens, Lever, Tinsley, Surtees, Ainsworth, Jesse, Miss Fraser, Dr. Doran, Walpole, Gravelle, Macaulay, Mahon, Froide, Prescott, Motley, Carlyle, &c.—French Memoirs—Badminton Library, 10 vols. Large Paper.—Apperley's John Mytton—Carey's Life in Paris—Burton's Arabian Nights, 12 vols.—Landscape Annual and other Gift Books—Modern Mathematical Treatises, Greek and Latin Classics and Translations, Students' Books, Scientific Works, &c.
To be viewed, and Catalogues had.

Valuable Miscellaneous Books, Mathematical, Classical, and Antiquarian Works, from Three Private Libraries, &c.

MESSRS. HODGSON will SELL by AUCTION, at their ROOMS, 115, CHANCERY LANE, W.C., on TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12, and Three Following Days, at 1 o'clock, VALUABLE MISCELLANEOUS BOOKS, comprising:—Houbraken and Vertue's Heads, Large Paper—Nash's Mansions, 4 vols.—Newcastle's Households, 2 vols.—Lodge's Portraits, India proofs, 12 vols.—Wilkinson's Iconologia Illustrata, 2 vols.—Akermann's Westminster Abbey, 3 vols.—Strutt's Dress, 3 vols.—Coloured Costume of Foreign Countries, 3 vols.—Archæologia to 1800, 75 vols.—Sussex Archaeological Collections to 1804, 49 vols.—Sowerby's English Botany, 13 vols.—Ruskin's Modern Painters, Large Paper, 6 vols.—The Writings of Sir W. Scott, Dickens, Lever, Tinsley, Surtees, Ainsworth, Jesse, Miss Fraser, Dr. Doran, Walpole, Gravelle, Macaulay, Mahon, Froide, Prescott, Motley, Carlyle, &c.—French Memoirs—Badminton Library, 10 vols. Large Paper.—Apperley's John Mytton—Carey's Life in Paris—Burton's Arabian Nights, 12 vols.—Landscape Annual and other Gift Books—Modern Mathematical Treatises, Greek and Latin Classics and Translations, Students' Books, Scientific Works, &c.
Catalogues forwarded on application.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.

THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The 34th SESSION of the DEPARTMENT OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY, and ARTS will begin on OCTOBER 5, and the 67th SESSION of the SCHOOL OF MEDICINE on OCTOBER 1, 1897.
The Classes prepare for the following professions:—Chemistry, Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Sanitary Engineering, Coal Mining, Textile Industries, Dyeing, Leather Manufacture, Agriculture, School Teaching, Medicine, and Surgery.
University Degrees are also conferred in the Faculties of Arts, Science, Medicine, and Surgery.
Lyddon Hall has been established for Students' Residence.
Prospectus of any of the above may be had from the REGISTRAR.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF SCIENCE, LONDON

(With which is incorporated the Royal School of Mines).
Dean: Professor J. W. JUDD, C.B., LL.D., F.R.S.

THE SESSION OPENS on WEDNESDAY, 8th OCTOBER, at 10 a.m. There will be a DISTRIBUTION of PRIZES and MEDALS and an ADDRESS by Professor W. C. ROBERTS-AUSTEN, C.B., F.R.S., in the LECTURE THEATRE of the MUSEUM of SCIENCE and ART, South Kensington, at 2.30 p.m.

THE DURHAM COLLEGE of SCIENCE, NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

PRINCIPAL.—REV. H. P. GURNEY, M.A., D.C.L.
The College forms part of the University of Durham, and the University Degrees in Science and Letters are open to Students of both sexes.
In addition to the Departments of Mathematics and Natural Science complete Courses are provided in Agriculture, Engineering, Naval Architecture, Mining, Literature, History, Ancient and Modern Languages, Fine Art, &c.
Residential Hostels for Men and for Women Students are attached to the College.
The 27th SESSION begins SEPTEMBER 27th, 1897.
Full particulars of the University Curricula in Science and Letters will be found in the CALENDAR (price 1s. 4d.). Prospectuses on application to the SECRETARY.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR FOR SESSION 1897-8.

London: MACMILLAN & CO. | Manchester: JAS. E. CORRISS.

TECHNICAL COLLEGE, HUDDERSFIELD.

The LECTURESHIP in ART is Vacant. Salary £200 per annum.—Applications must be sent in not later than October 25th to the PRINCIPAL. Statement of duties will be forwarded on application.—THOMAS THORP, Secretary.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (2d. per copy) paid.—Apply Academy Office, 24, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Crandon Road, Fulham, S.W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 6s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

JOHN & ED. BUMPUS, Ltd.,

BOOKSELLERS TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
DISCOUNT BOOKSELLERS,
350, OXFORD STREET, W., and
6 & 6, HOLBORN BARS, E.C.

The Largest Stock of Current Literature in London. 3d. in the 1s. Discount off Published Prices, except where published net.

Special Discount to Public Libraries.

Librarians are requested to write for Estimates.

HANDSOME SHOWROOM for BOUND BOOKS.

All the Standard Books in strong and handsome bindings always in Stock.

Books bound in strong, cheap, and useful, as well as in the most tasteful and artistic styles.

Patterns designed for presentation and other special purposes.

BOOK-PLATES designed and executed.

SECOND-HAND DEPARTMENT.

A very large and well-selected Stock of Standard and Miscellaneous Books suitable to the Library and the Collector always on sale at low prices for cash.

Handsomely bound Sets of Standard Books, Scarce Books, and Editions now out of print.

Catalogues issued and forwarded post-free on application.

ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITANNICA. Eighth Edition. 22 vols., cloth, and little shabby ... 2 15 0

ARABIAN NIGHTS, translated by Capt. BURNES. 13 vols., royal 8vo, cloth, (pub. £8 6s. net) ... 4 4 0

DICKENS'S (CHAS.) WORKS. Best Library Edition. 30 vols., 8vo, half-calf, gilt, (pub. £15 unbound) ... 12 10 0

PUNCH. Complete Set from commencement to end of 1896. 111 vols. in 56. Half-morocco 25 0 0

FRASER'S MAGAZINE, complete, 1830—1882. 100 vols., 8vo, very fine Set in half-calf, panelled backs ... 32 10 0

HOOD'S (THOS.) HUMOROUS POEMS. Illustrated by Brock. Large Paper, roy. 8vo, cloth (pub. 30s. net) ... 0 15 0

LANG'S (A.) THE LIBRARY. Large Paper (pub. 30s. net) ... 0 8 6

QUEEN MARY. by SKELTON. Vellum paper edition with the duplicate set of plates NOTES and QUERIES. Complete, 1849—1890, with all the GENERAL INDEXES to 1890. 101 vols. in half-calf, the remainder in cloth ... 36 0 0

RUSKIN'S MODERN PAINTERS, with the plates on India paper. Large and thick paper. 6 vols., cloth (pub. £11 11s.) ... 7 10 0

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE, 1831—1840. 48 vols., half-calf ... 6 15 0

DICKENS'S PICKWICK PAPERS. 3 vols., cloth ... 4 0 0

PORTFOLIO. Vols. 1—19, cloth ... 16 16 0

SOWERBY'S BOTANY. Third Edition. 13 vols., half-morocco (pub. £28) ... 18 0 0

SEEBOHM'S SIBERIA in EUROPE and ASIA. 3 vols., 8vo, cloth ...

BRYON'S (Lord) LIFE, by LEIGH HUNT. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth ... 1 10 0

JESSE'S (J. H.) LITERARY and HISTORICAL MEMORIALS of LONDON; with London and its Celebrities. 4 vols., 8vo, blue cloth, 1847—50 ... 7 7 0

BACON'S (Lord) WORKS, by ELLIS & SPEDDING. 14 vols., 8vo ... 5 5 0

RANKE'S (L.) HISTORY of the REFORMATION. 3 vols. ... 3 3 0

RANKE'S (L.) HISTORY of PRUSSIA. 3 vols. ... 3 18

Stevens &amp; Sons' New Law Works.

NOW READY, No. 52 (OCTOBER), price 5s.
Annual Subscription, post free, 12s. 6d.

THE LAW QUARTERLY REVIEW.

Edited by Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., M.A., LL.D.,
Corpus Professor of Jurisprudence in the University of Oxford.

Contents.
NOTES.—The Rule in "Clayton's Case"; Cases on Fraudulent Preference, Fixtures, Constructive Notice, Precoatory Trusts, &c.; The Working of the Income Tax Acts.
GOVERNMENT BY INJUNCTION. By WILLIAM H. DUNBAR.
THE MYSTERY OF ELIZABETH CANNING. By COURTNEY KENNY.
THE MAHOMEDAN LAW OF WAKF. By Sir W. C. PETHERAM.
NUISANCES IN ROMAN LAW. By His Honour MELIUS DE VILLIERS, Chief Justice of the Orange Free State.
THE LAW OF DIVORCE IN ENGLAND and in GERMANY. By JULIUS HIRSCHFELD.
THE MARRIED WOMAN JUDGMENT DEBTOR. By T. K. NUTTALL.
THE GROWTH of the DEBENTURE. By EDWARD MANSON.
THE STATUS of BRITISH COMPANIES in FRANCE. By THOMAS BARCLAY.
BOOK REVIEWS.

Just published, Fifth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 25s.
POLLOCK'S LAW OF TORTS. A Treatise
on the Principles of Obligations, arising from Civil Wrongs in the Common Law, to which is added the draft of a Code of Civil Wrongs prepared for the Government of India. By Sir FREDERICK POLLOCK, Bart., Barrister-at-Law. 1897.

By the same Author. Sixth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 25s.
PRINCIPLES of CONTRACT. Being a
Treatise on the General Principles relating to the Validity of Agreements in the Law of England. 1894.

By the same Author. Sixth Edition, demy 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
A DIGEST of the LAW of PARTNERSHIP.
Incorporating the Partnership Act, 1890. 1895.

Just published, Ninth Edition, royal, cloth, 20s.
GREENWOOD'S CONVEYANCING. A
Manual of the Practice of Conveyancing; showing the present Practice relating to the daily routine of Conveyancing in Solicitors' Offices. To which are added Concise Common Forms in Conveyancing. Ninth Edition. By HARRY GREENWOOD, LL.D., Barrister-at-Law. 1897.
"One of those books which no lawyer's bookshelf should be without." Law Gazette.

STEVENS & SONS, LIMITED,
119 and 120, Chancery Lane, London.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of
PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Cromo, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. (Will be ready shortly.)

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA.
From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size, 15 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY
FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.
(TEA-LIKE.)

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the natura Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely flavoured powder—"Cocoaïne," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistency of tea, of which it is now, with many, beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system. Sold only in labelled Tins.

THE BOOKMAN

FOR OCTOBER,
PRICE SIXPENCE (post-free, 7½d.).

THE FIRST NUMBER OF A NEW VOLUME.

CONTENTS:

MRS. HUMPHRY WARD.
A Character-Sketch (illustrated).
A TALK about MR. HALL CAINE and his CRITICS.

New Writer.

ALLEN RAINE, Author of "A Welsh Singer."

The Reader.

MR. R. H. HUTTON. An Estimate of his Life and Work. By T. H. S. ESCOTT.

MR. HAY FLEMING'S "MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS." By ANDREW LANG.

Advice About Books.

A HUNDRED BOOKS for a VILLAGE LIBRARY. By CLEMENT K. SHORTER.

The Journalist.

The STAFF of the "PALL MALL GAZETTE."

Letters to the Editor.

The DISCOUNT QUESTION.

New Books. (Reviews.)

MR. ANDREW LANG'S "BOOK OF DREAMS and GHOSTS." Chancery and Other Pieces. By C. H. HERFORD.

SIR WALTER RALEIGH. By Y. Y.
MR. SERGEANT'S NINETEENTH CENTURY GREECE. By T. E. PAGE.

* * A Specimen Number of the BOOKMAN will be sent post-free on application to the Publishers.

London:

HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER ROW.

Price 2½d., by post 3d.; yearly subscription (including Supplements), 2s. 6d.

THE LITERARY GUIDE:

A Rationalist Review.

Devoted mainly to Books and Publications which deal with Religion, Philosophy, Science, and Ethics from a Rationalist standpoint.

THE OCTOBER NUMBER CONTAINS:
SCIENTIFIC CRITICISM: Mr. J. M. ROBERTSON'S New Book. A SINGULAR SINGER: M. C. O'BRYEN.
THE YOUNGEST of SCIENCES: The New Psychology. CRYSTAL and OTHER VISIONS: Andrew Lang's "Ghosts" HERESY IN FICTION.
DID MARK POLLOW MATTHEW? GOTHES GREAT THOUGHTS.
PROFESSOR GOLDWIN SMITH INTERVIEWED: The Progress of Agnosticism.
LITERARY SHRINES and PILGRIMAGES.—1. The Grave of Mary Osborn.
THE STUDY of DARWIN: A Concise Guide to Darwinology. RANDOM JOTTINGS; and the usual features.
Also a 4-page Supplement, containing a Review and Criticism, by Mr. F. J. GOULD, of Dean Farrar's recent work on "The Bible: its Meaning and Supremacy."

London: WATTS & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balance, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made daily qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

J. NISBET & CO'S
NEW BOOKS.

THE RIP'S REDEMPTION: a Trooper's Story.

By E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT, Author of "Scarlet and Steel," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Heartily welcome.... always interesting."—Sootsman.
"Mr. E. Livingston Prescott is one of those writers who know 'Mr. Atkins' down to the ground. His novel of military prison life, 'Scarlet and Steel,' which was one of the successes of last season, is now followed by an equally stimulating story."—Daily Mail.

LADY ROSALIND. By Mrs. Emma Marshall.

Crown 8vo, 6s.
A FIGHT for FREEDOM. By Gordon STABLES, M.D., R.N. Illustrated by C. Whymper. Gilt, 5s.
"A fascinating book for boy or girl."—Record.
"Dr. Stables is virile and healthy in all his writing, possessing unbounded enthusiasm for every description of out-door sport."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

HEALTH in AFRICA. A Medical Handbook, both Scientific and Popular, for Europeans in Central and Southern Africa. By Dr. KERR CROSS, Medical Officer to the British Central Africa Protectorate. With an Introduction by Sir H. H. JOHNSTON, K.C.B., and numerous Diagrams. 3s. 6d.
"An admirably practical handbook.... Will be of the greatest possible use in emergencies to those beyond the reach of medical assistance."—Aberdeen Free Press.

LORD SHAFTESBURY as SOCIAL REFORMER. A New Biography, with fresh Matter. By EDWIN HODDER. 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

THE FAITH of CENTURIES. A Series of Essays and Lectures by well-known Writers and Preachers, relating and explaining in a form both scholarly and popular the Essential Doctrines of the Christian Faith. Edited by the Rev. the Hon. W. E. BOWEN, and containing Contributions from the BISHOP of ROCHESTER, BISHOP PARRY, Archdeacon SINCLAIR, Canon SCOTT-HOLLAND, Canon NEWBOLT, Professor RYLE, Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, and the Rev. T. B. STRONG. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

OLD TESTAMENT SYNONYMS. By Canon GIRDLESTONE. Revised and Re-written from an Earlier Work. Demy 8vo, 12s.

PICTURES of the EAST. A Set of Forty Full-page Original Drawings to illustrate the Life of Our Lord and the Preaching of St. Paul. With Notes and Explanations, by Mrs. RENDEL HARRIS. Imperial 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Shortly.]

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY. Letters by Sir GEORGE STOKES, Bart. Long 8cap. 8vo, 1s.

J. NISBET & Co., LTD., 21, Berner's Street, W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 964.—OCTOBER, 1897.—2s. 6d.

DARIEL: A ROMANCE OF SURREY—Conclusion, by R. D. Blackmore.—FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE: HIS LIFE AND WORKS, by Professor Andrew Seth.—OUR NATIONAL COLLECTIONS of MANUSCRIPTS: THE HARLEIAN LIBRARY, by J. M. Stone.—THE CALENDAR of SCOTTISH CRIME, Part I., by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.—CHINESE CENSORS.—FAVOURITES IN FRENCH FICTION.—THE FAILURE of FLIPPERY, by Zack.—FRENCH and ENGLISH in the BASIN of the NIGER.—NAVIS SACRA.—THE NATIVE PRESS in INDIA.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY W. L. COURTNEY.
OCTOBER.

KHARTOUM IN SIGHT. By Major ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.
AT ARCAHON. By W. M. FULLERTON.
THE LORD-LIEUTENANCY and a ROYAL RESIDENCE in IRELAND. By J. G. SWIFT MACNEILL, Q.C., M.P.
IMAGINATION in MODERN ART. By VERNON LEE.
AN OBJECT LESSON in POLITICS. By W. S. LILLY.
SOME RECENT FRENCH LITERATURE.—
1. MADAME GEOFFRIN and her DAUGHTER. By JANET E. HOGARTH.
2. THE HATES of NAPOLEON. By CHARLES WHISKEY.
3. LOVE LETTERS of GUY DE MAUPASSANT. By HANNA LYNN.
A STATESMAN'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. By T. H. S. ESCOTT.
SCANDINAVIA and her KING. By CONSTANCE BUTCLIFFE.
THE SPEED of WARSHIPS: a Reply. By Sir W. H. WHITE, K.C.B.
AN APOLOGY for UNPRINCIPLED TOYISM. By A. A. BAUMANN.
THE TRIUMPH of the COSSACK. By DIPLOMATICUS.

CHAPMAN'S MAGAZINE.

EDITED BY OSWALD CRAWFORD.
OCTOBER.—Price Sixpence.

VIOLET HUNT . . . . . UNKIST, UNKIND! (Conclusion).
G. B. STREET . . . . . A LITTLE PROBLEM.
JAMES WORKMAN . . . . . THE SCARLET BUTTERFLY.
A. W. COOPER . . . . . THE GORDIAN KNOT.
E. and H. HERON . . . . . THINGS THAT ARE
C. J. KIRBY FENTON . . . . . ARCHITECTURE
MARGARETA SYRBE . . . . . A SECOND PAVILION.
CHAS. K. MOORE . . . . . A BROTHER'S TRIAL.
CHAPMAN & HALL, LTD., London.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS' LIST.

NIPPUR; or, Explorations and Adventures on the Euphrates. The Narrative of the University of Pennsylvania Expedition to Babylonia in the Years 1880-1890. By JOHN PUNNETT PETERS, Ph.D., Sc.D., D.D., Director of the Expedition. Very fully illustrated. 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. each. Vol. I. (ready). Vol. II. (shortly).

THE LITERARY HISTORY of the AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By MOSES COIR TYLER, Professor of American History in Cornell University, and Author of "A History of American Literature during the Colonial Time," &c. Volumes sold separately. 8vo, 12s. 6d. each. Vol. I. (ready). Vol. II. (shortly).

THE AYRSHIRE HOMES and HAUNTS of BURNS. By HENRY C. SHELLEY. With 26 Illustrations from Photographs by the Author. 16mo, cloth extra, 6s. [Ready].

AUTHORS and PUBLISHERS: a Manual of Suggestions for Beginners in Literature. Comprising a Description of Publishing Methods and Arrangements, Directions for the Preparation of MSS. for the Press, Explanations of the Details of Book-manufacturing, with Instructions for Proof-reading and Specimens of Typography, the Text of the United States Copyright Law, and Information concerning International Copyrights, together with General Hints for Authors. By G. H. P. and J. B. P. Seventh Edition, Re-written, with New Material. 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d. net. [Ready].

AN INTRODUCTION to LITERATURE; or, Guide for Readers. By LYNDS E. JONES. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly].

THE LITERARY MOVEMENT in FRANCE during the XIXth CENTURY. By GEORGES PELLISSIER. Translated by ANNIE G. BRINTON. Crown 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d. [Ready].

HANNIBAL: Soldier, Statesman, Patriot, and the Crisis of the Struggle between Carthage and Rome. By W. O'CONNOR MORRIS, Author of "Napoleon." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [HEROES OF THE NATIONS.] (Ready).

ULYSSES S. GRANT and the Maintenance of American Nationality, 1822-1885. By WILLIAM CONANT CHURCH, late Lieut-Col. U.S.A. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [HEROES OF THE NATIONS.] (Ready).

THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA By ANNETTE L. NOBLE, Author of "Love and Shawl-Straps," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth. [Shortly].

PERSONAL RECOLLECTIONS of the WAR of the REBELLION. Addresses delivered before the Commandery of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, 1888-91.

FIRST SERIES.—Edited by JAMES GRANT WILSON and TITUS MUNSON COAN, M.D. With Steel Portrait of Admiral Farragut.

SECOND SERIES, for 1896. Edited by A. NOEL BLAKEMAN. With Portraits. 8vo, cloth. [Shortly].

THE VENETIAN PAINTERS of the RENAISSANCE. By BERNHARD BERENSON. New Edition, printed in larger form, and containing 25 Photogravure Reproductions of Famous Paintings. 4to, cloth extra, gilt top. [Shortly].

RELIGIONS of PRIMITIVE PEOPLES Being the Second Series of American Lectures on the History of Religions, 1896-1897. By DANIEL G. BRINTON, M.A., M.D., LL.D., D.Sc., Professor of Archaeology and Linguistics in the University of Pennsylvania. Uniform with Rhys-Ida's "Buddhism." 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready].

MODERN ENGLISH PROSE WRITERS. By FRANK PRESTON STEARNS, Author of "Concord and Appledore," "The Midsummer of Italian Art," &c. 8vo, cloth. [Shortly].

ASTORIA; or, Anecdotes of an Enterprize Beyond the Rocky Mountains. By WASHINGTON IRVING. Tacoma Edition. 2 vols., large 8vo, beautifully printed and bound, cloth extra, gilt top, 25s. net. [Shortly].

24, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, LONDON; AND NEW YORK.

HARPER &amp; BROTHERS'

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK.

White Man's Africa. By POULTNEY BIGELOW. Profusely illustrated from Drawings by R. Caton Woodville, and from Photographs by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth, ornamental, 16s.

CONTENTS.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| I. Jameson's Raid.                          | VIII. The Dutch Feeling towards England: The Boer at Home. Slanger's Neck. The Boers and Slavery. |
| II. President Kruger.                       | The Causes of the Great Trek.   |
| III. Portuguese Progress in South Africa.   | The Great Trek.   |
| IV. The President of the Orange Free State. | Dingaan's Daag.   |
| V. The Last of a Great Black Nation.        | IX. Natal — A Colonial Paradise.  |
| VI. At the Cape of Good Hope.               | X. British and Boer Government.   |
| VII. The White Man's Black Man.             |   |

Gleanings in Buddha Fields. By LAFCADIO HEARN, Author of "Kokoro," &c., Lecturer on English Literature in the Imperial University of Japan. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. [This day].

NEW WALTER CRANE EDITION.

The Sheppard's Calendar. By EDMUND SPENSER. Twelve Eclogues Proportionable to the Twelve Months. Entitled to the Noble and Vertuous Gentleman Most Worthy of all Titles both of Learning and Chivalry, Maister Philip Sidney. Newly adorned with Twelve Pictures and other Devices by Walter Crane. Ornamental Cover by Walter Crane. Square 8vo, 10s. 6d. [October 20].

ILLUSTRATED BY BERNARD PARTIDGE.

The Tinted Venus. A Farcial Romance. By F. ANSTEE, Author of "The Giant's Robe," "Vice Versa," &c. Illustrated by Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s. [October 15].

The People for whom Shakespeare Wrote. By CHARLES DUDLEY WARNER, Author of "As We Were Saying." Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Immediately].

UNCLE REMUS'S NEW BOOK.

Aaron in the Wild Woods. By JOE CHANDLER HARRIS. Illustrated. Square 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [October 9].

NEW NOVELS.

Jerome. By MARY E. WILKINS, Author of "A New England Nun," "Madelon," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

BY GEORGE DU MAURIER.

50,000 Copies sold in two weeks.

The Martian. Illustrated throughout by the Author of "Trilby," and "Peter Ibbetson." Imperial 16mo, cloth extra, gilt top, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "IN A NORTH COUNTRY VILLAGE."

Time o' the Corner. By M. E. FRANCIS (Mrs. Francis Blundell.) Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

BARRY PAIN'S SUCCESS.

The Octave of Claudius. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "FOR FREEDOM'S SAKE."

Father and Son. By ARTHUR PATERSON. No. V. of the Times Novels. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

Sweet Revenge. A Romance of the Civil War. By F. A. MITCHEL. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [October 9].

The Missionary Sheriff. By OCTAVE THANET. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s. [October 9].

Paste Jewels. Being Seven Tales of the Great Servant Question. By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS. 16mo, cloth, 2s. [October 20].

NOTE.—List of New Books post free on application.

HARPER & BROTHERS, LONDON AND NEW YORK.

J. M. DENT & CO.'S
NEW BOOKS.

BY HOUSTON STEWART CHAMBERLAIN.

RICHARD WAGNER. Translated from the German by G. AINSLIE HIGHT, and Revised by the Author. With numerous Photogravures, Colotypes, Facsimiles, Full-page and Text Illustrations. Demy 4to, £1 5s. net. (See Special Prospectus.)
"The illustrations are beautiful as well as plentiful, and the book is one of deep interest and great weight."—Times.

BY EMILE LEGOUIS.

THE EARLY LIFE of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH, 1770-1798.

A Study of the Prelude. Translated by J. W. MATHEWS. With a Prefatory Note by LESLIE STEPHEN, and a Photogravure Portrait of Wordsworth. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.
"The work will appeal strongly to all lovers of Wordsworth and all students of literature in this country."—Times.
"M. Legouis has written a book which must interest the English reader and may even make a few more French readers learn English."—Academy.

BY MARGARET ARMOUR.

THE FALL of the NIBELUNGS. Translated from the German by MARGARET ARMOUR, and Illustrated by W. B. Macdougall. With from 16 to 20 Full-page Drawings, &c. Small fcap. 4to, printed upon rough antique paper, 6s. net.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHOIR INVISIBLE."

SUMMER in ARCADY. By James LANE ALLEN. Fcap. 8vo, 8s. net.

QUO VADIS: a Narrative of Rome in the Time of Nero. By HENRYK SIENKIEWICZ, Author of "With Fire and Sword," &c. Translated from the Polish by JEREMIAH CURTIN. Crown 8vo, 540 pp., 4s. 6d. net. Of this book upwards of 30,000 copies have, so far, been sold.

"An exceptionally good novel.....The scheme of the book is ambitious.....the atmosphere is lurid, the scenes of extraordinary splendour.....It is like a drama magnificently put upon the stage, powerful in itself, but of which we are compelled to confess it is less of a play than of a spectacle."—Times.

BY F. ANSTEE, Author of "Vice Versa," &c.

BABOO JABBERJEE, B.A. With about 30 Full-page Illustrations by J. Bernard Partridge. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

CATS By Mrs. Chance. A Series of Drawings in Pencil, together with Essays and Quotations. Small crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net. [Ready shortly].

BY SYBIL AND KATHARINE CORBET.

ANIMAL LAND WHERE THERE ARE NO PEOPLE. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Small oblong crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

These Thirty Pictures of Grotesque Animals have been drawn by the Hon. Mrs. CORBET from graphic descriptions given by her Daughter SYBIL between the ages of three and four.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS of SIR WALTER SCOTT.

A New Edition, in 43 Volumes, post 8vo, printed on thin paper suitable for the pocket. With Portraits and Photogravure Frontispieces by Herbert Railton. Decorated Title-Page by W. B. Macdougall. Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, 2s. net. (See Special Prospectus.)

THE SPECTATOR. A New Edition, in 8 volumes, with an Introductory Essay by AUSTIN DOBSON. The Text Annotated and Edited by G. GREGORY SMITH, of Edinburgh University. With a Photogravure Portrait in each volume. Fcap. 8vo, dull gilt top, quarter canvas, cloth sides, 3s. net per volume. (See Special Prospectus.)

Copies of the General Catalogue, and of any Prospectus above-mentioned, will be forwarded post free on application.

ALDINE HOUSE, E.C.;
And 67, ST. JAMES'S STREET, S W

CASSELL & COMPANY'S FIRST AUTUMN LIST.

FOUR NEW NOVELS.
BY A HAIR'S-BREADTH.
By HEADON HILL. Ready October 6th. 6s.

CUPID'S GARDEN.
By ELLEN THORNEYCROFT FOWLER, Author of
"Verses, Grave and Gay," &c., &c. 6s.

A LIMITED SUCCESS.
By SARAH PITT. 6s.

THE WROTHAMS OF
WROTHAM COURT.
By FRANCES HEATH FRESHFIELD. 6s.

NEW VOLUMES.
COMPANION VOLUME TO "THE ROYAL RIVER" AND "RIVERS OF THE EAST COAST."
RIVERS OF THE SOUTH AND WEST COASTS.
With Etching as Frontispiece, and Numerous Illustrations in Text. 42s.

PICTORIAL ENGLAND AND WALES
With upwards of 320 Beautiful Illustrations prepared from Copyright Photographs. Cloth, 9s.; on superior paper, half-perman, in box, 15s. net.

CASSELL'S FAMILY DOCTOR.
A New and Original Work. By A MEDICAL MAN.
Illustrated. 10s. 6d.

MR. ARNOLD-FORSTER'S NEW HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

A HISTORY OF ENGLAND.
From the Landing of Julius Caesar to the Present Day.
By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P. Illustrated, 5s.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.
A History for the People. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrated. Vol. II. Ready shortly. 6s.

WITH NATURE AND A CAMERA.
Being the Adventures and Observations of a Field Naturalist and an Animal Photographer. By RICHARD KEARTON, F.Z.S. Illustrated by a Special Frontispiece, and about 150 Pictures of Wild Birds, Animals, &c., from Photographs taken direct from Nature, by CHERRY KEARTON. 21s.

FAMILIAR WILD FLOWERS.
By F. E. HULME, F.L.S., F.S.A. With 200 beautiful Coloured Plates. Popular Edition. Complete in 5 vols., 3s. 6d. each.

FAMILIAR GARDEN FLOWERS.
With 200 beautiful coloured plates, by F. E. HULME, F.L.S., F.S.A., and Descriptive Text by SHIRLEY HIBBERD. Popular Edition. Complete in 5 vols., 3s. 6d. each. Vol. I. now ready.

THE MAGAZINE OF ART
YEARLY VOLUME.
With about 800 Choice Illustrations, and a series of Special Plates, 21s.

THE STORY OF THE SUN.
By SIR ROBERT BALL, LL.D., &c. With Eight Coloured Plates. Cheap Edition. 10s. 6d.

AN ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF SENTIMENTAL TOMMY.
By J. M. BARRIE, Illustrated by W. HATHERELL, R.I., will be published shortly. 6s.

* * A Copy of Cassell & Company's LIST of NEW and FORTHCOMING VOLUMES will be sent post-free on application.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
Ludgate Hill, London; and all Booksellers.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER'S LIST.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.

Price 1s. 6d. each; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.
By GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

RECENT VOLUMES:

NORMAN MACLEOD. By John Wellwood.
THE "BLACKWOOD" GROUP. By Sir GEORGE DOUGLAS.

FLETCHER of SALTOUN. By G. W. T. Omond
TOBIAS SMOLLETT. By Oliphant Smeaton.
JAMES BOSWELL. By W. Keith Leask.

NEXT WEEK.

KIRKCALDY OF GRANGE.
By LOUIS BARBÉ.

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s. 6d.

THE PLAGIARIST: a Novel
THE PLAGIARIST. By William MYRTLE.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN and
REOUSANT. By Rev. T. CARTER. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

"Mr. Carter has accomplished his task with accuracy and scholarship."—Academy.

"A book deserving of respectful attention. Mr. Carter is an acute and well-informed critic, with a quick eye to the bearing of evidence."

"On the whole, we believe that Mr. Carter makes out his case."—Daily Chronicle.

Large crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands, their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M., Ph.D., of the Lutheran Mission, Sase, Japan. With 8 Full-page Illustrations.

Popular Edition, Revised, with 16 Full-page Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 5s.

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS. By
ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D.
"The best book on the Chinese people."—Examiner.

Volume I., now ready, price 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS and SOCIAL
PROGRESS: a Sociological Study of Foreign Missions. By JAMES S. DENNIS, D.D., Author of "Foreign Missions after a Century." In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with upwards of 100 Full-page Reproductions of Original Photographs.

MR. HAY HUNTER'S NEW STORY.—Price 3s. 6d.

JOHN ARMIGER'S REVENGE. By
P. HAY HUNTER, Author of "James Inwick," and Joint-Author of "My Ducats and my Daughter."
"Mr. Hunter's story is admirably written."—Daily Chronicle.

"The characterisation is excellent, the dialogue is brisk and humorous, and some of the situations are deeply pathetic."—Daily Mail.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, with 150 Illustrations. In 3 vols., large crown 8vo, art buckram, price 22s. 6d.

HOGARTH'S WORKS. With Life and
Anecdotal Descriptions of the Pictures by JOHN IRELAND and JOHN NICHOLS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

AFTER PENTECOST, WHAT? By the Rev. JAMES M. CAMPBELL, Author of "The Christ in Man."

HALF-CROWN EDITION OF DR. MILLER'S POPULAR WORK.

Post 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d.

WEEK-DAY RELIGION. By the Rev. J. R. MILLER, D.D., Author of "A Help for the Common Days," &c.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

READY ON OCTOBER 6th,

ALFRED,
LORD TENNYSON:
A MEMOIR.
BY HIS SON.

WITH PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAITS

OF
LORD TENNYSON, LADY TENNYSON, &c.

Facsimiles of portions of Poems, and Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. WATTS, R.A., SAMUEL LAURENCE, Mrs. ALLINGHAM, RICHARD DOYLE, BISCOMBE GARDNER, &c.

2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

ESSAYS on the NOVEL as ILLUSTRATED BY SCOTT and MISS AUSTEN. By ADOLPHUS ALFRED JACK.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SKETCHES from OLD VIRGINIA
By A. G. BRADLEY.

Contents: The Doctor—An Old Virginia Foxhunter—On the Old Bethel Pike—Parkin the Saddler—The "Poor Whites" of the Mountains—The Virginia Quail—Mar's Dab after the War—Two Episodes on Humbling Creek—Some Plantation Memories—A Turkey Hunter.

BY THE BISHOP OF SOUTHWELL

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE REVEL and the BATTLE, and
OTHER SERMONS. By GEORGE RIDDING, D.D.

Now Ready, OCTOBER NUMBER of

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.

Price 1s.

1. HOW the ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH SAVED INDIA. By P. V. LUXE, C.I.E.
2. A FIRST NIGHT at ATHENS.
3. EDWARD DE GONCOURT. By A. F. DAVIDSON.
4. A HEROIC RESISTANCE. By HAROLD BINDLOSS.
5. THE TWELFTH of JULY. By A. D. GODLEY.
6. WHAT is a UNIVERSITY? By E. A. SCHNEIDER.
7. MONSIEUR LE COLONEL.
8. THE CHILDHOOD of HORACE. By Prof. RAMSAY.
9. IN a GARDEN of PROVENCE. By WILLIAM BUCKLEY.
10. THE BLUE ROOM.

Also Ready, the OCTOBER NUMBER of

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE,

Illustrated, price 1s. 4d.,

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles—

THE ART of CHARLES KEENE. By JOSEPH PENNELL.
COLE'S OLD ENGLISH MASTERS: Sir JOSHUA REYNOLDS. By JOHN C. VAN DYKE.
THE FLIRTING of MR. NICKINS. By LUCY S. FURMAN.

Also Ready, the OCTOBER NUMBER of the

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE,

Illustrated, price 1s.,

Contains, besides many Stories and Articles—

A MAGICIAN for ONE DAY. By TUDOR JENKS.
THE TWO VICTORIES. By MARGARET JACKSON.
THE FIRE PATROL. By C. T. HILL.

MACMILLAN & CO. (LIMITED), LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Mr. Meredith as Poet ... ..	253
Mr. Henley's Burns ... ..	254
Inaccurate History ... ..	256
Signed Criticism ... ..	256
The Social Problem in Switzerland ... ..	257
About Birds ... ..	257
A New Anthology ... ..	258
NOTES AND NEWS	259
CLOUGH AND HIS DEFENDER ... ..	260
A PROVENÇAL POET ... ..	261
THE WEEK ... ..	262
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED ... ..	262
THE BOOK MARKET:
The Bohn Libraries ... ..	263
Announcements ... ..	263
What the American Publishers are Announcing ... ..	263
Publishers' Autumn Lists ... ..	264
DRAMA ... ..	265
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	266
MUSIC ... ..	267
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	267
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	77-82

REVIEWS.

MR. MEREDITH AS POET.

Selected Poems. By George Meredith.
(Constable & Co.)

MR. MEREDITH'S poetry is no mere side-issue of the work by which he is better known. Even were these poems the mere luxuries of a great prose writer, they would be interesting, and would be sure of a fit audience; but they are far more. Had Mr. Meredith published no single word of prose; had he left uncreated those living, breathing figures which have grown so familiar, and merely chosen to give to the world this book of verse, a slenderer, but a no less sure, fame would have been his. Not that we, for one moment, recognise in Mr. Meredith one of the great masters of English verse. He is quite incapable of such lines as "Absent thee from felicity awhile";

or

"In the bosom of bliss the light of light."

He is still less capable of such a verse as

"For old unhappy far-off things,
And battles long ago."

Judged by the highest tests, this poetry will be found wanting; and there seem to us two special deficiencies in it. There is throughout all these poems a lack of that great simplicity which we demand in the highest verse. Passages there are of quite extraordinary beauty, of ripe observation and flowing vigour; but we are from time to time arrested by a metaphor or a thought which is baffling in the extreme. No doubt the fault is largely that of the reader, and Mr. Meredith usually errs through excess of light; at the same time, greater poets, charged with an equal weight of thought, have spoken more directly and cleanly. The pathetic quality seems almost absent—a quality which stands for so much in poetry, and is so characteristic of the English race that the lack of it throughout these poems is the more remarkable. We are not demanding from Mr. Meredith that he should write lines such as

"And thou, too, old man, as we have heard, wast once happy,"

or

"the sting
Of perishable things in my departing," for there are but one or two in all time who can rise to these levels. What we complain of is, that throughout the book the sense of tears is nowhere apparent. Having pointed out what we believe to be certain limitations to Mr. Meredith's poetic gift, we can the more freely enjoy its undoubted richness. We opened the book at "The Nuptials of Attila," and cannot refrain from quoting once more its magnificent opening:

"Flat as to an eagle's eye,
Earth hung under Attila.
Sign for carnage gave he none.
In the peace of his disdain,
Sun and rain, and rain and sun,
Cherished men to wax again,
Crawl, and in their manner die.
On his people stood a frost.
Like the charger cut in stone,
Rearing stiff, the warrior host,
Which had life from him alone,
Craved the trumpet's eager note,
As the bridled earth the Spring.
Rusty was the trumpet's throat.
He let chief and prophet rave;
Venturous earth around him string
Threads of grass and slender rye,
Wave them, and untrampled wave.
O for the time when God did cry,
Eye and have, my Attila!"

The first two lines of this passage are magnificent, particularly the word "hung," which gives an impression of great distance and space.

Note, too, the look on the face of the "scourge of God," "in the peace of his disdain." Still finer is the image "Like the charger cut in stone," &c., which exactly gives the picture of a huge host ready to charge, but lifeless till their leader gave the word. Surely, however, the additional image, "as the bridled earth the Spring," merely weakens the effect, and the simile itself is altogether more commonplace. Fine, too, is the evidently intentional dissonance, or possibly echo, in—

"When God did cry,
Eye and have, my Attila!"

But the whole poem has about it the glee of devastation, the delight of an appointed avenger. Mr. Meredith's metrical effects are often bold, but always justified. Take the fine line—

"He burst out of the bosom of ire."

Wonderful, too, is this picture:

"Name us that,
Huddled in the corner dark,
Humped and grinning like a cat;
Teeth for lips! 'Tis she! She stares,
Glittering through her bristled hairs."

We have said that this poetry is wanting in the sense of tears. Nowhere is this seen more clearly than in "The Lark Ascending." The verse here has certainly a wonderful gush and clearness and quickness: it actually does give that sense of a song so joyous that the bird can scarcely get it out. We admit, too, that Mr. Meredith has a perfect right to take the lark in his own way, and hear nothing but the rapture. But if we compare the poem with that of Shelley, we shall at once see that Shelley strikes the deeper, and we believe the truer note. Both poets descend in spirit to the earth after the ravishment of the skylark's voice; but Shelley is touched with a certain sadness of the heart:

"We look before and after,
And pine for what is not;
Our sincerest laughter
With some pain is fraught;
Our sweetest songs are those that tell of saddest thought."

Now Mr. Meredith is touched rather by a certain sadness of the mind, here beautifully expressed:

"Was never voice of ours could say
Our inmost in the sweetest way,
Like yonder voice aloft, and link
All hearers in the song they drink.
Our wisdom speaks from falling blood,
Our passion is too full in flood,
We want the key of his wild note,
Of truthful in a tuneful throat;
The song seraphically free
Of taint of personality."

To compare these two poems on the same theme will reveal to us not a little of Mr. Meredith's excellences, and also, as we think, of his defects. Be this as it may, this poem to the lark has the true exuberance and bubble of music. The little poem, "Mother to Babe," opens in exquisite fashion:

"Fleck of sky you are Dropped through branches dark"; but hardly gives the impression of complete ease in the writing. Nothing more delightful in its way than "Love in the Valley" has been written for many years. It is steeped from start to finish in the faintness of dawn, the freshness of youth. Take only the following lovely lines, and especially the two last:

"Thicker crowd the shades as the grave East deepens,
Glowing, and with crimson a long cloud swells.
Maiden still the morn is; and strange she is and secret;
Strange her eyes; her cheeks are cold as cold
as sea-shells."

The "Hymn to Colour" we cannot profess to quite understand, except the ending verses, some lines of which are deep and excellent:

"They do not look through love to look on thee,
Grave heavenliness! Nor know they joy of sight,
Who deem the wave of rapt desire must be
Its wrecking and last issue of delight.
Dead seasons quicken in one petal-spot
Of colour unforgotten."

We have still reason to complain of a certain coldness in Mr. Meredith in the poem, "Whimper of Sympathy." All sane, strong men hate the sentimentalist, who is the greatest foe of emotion; and there is in these verses a certain fine scorn. But somehow or other we do not feel that these two lines are quite in the poetic key:

"All round we find cold nature slight
The feelings of the totter-kneed."

Here once more we can only raise the old complaint: that finely scornful as these verses are, it is none the less the "rueful sight" of the weak devoured by the strong that should appeal to the poet. Such scorn, though mentally fine, is not "the scorn of scorn" which is the dower of the poet. In "The Appeasement of Demeter" we have a poem really in honour of laughter:

Laughter! O thou reviver of sick earth!
Good for the spirit, good
For body, thou! to both art wine and bread."

Perhaps, however, the finest poem in the book is that called "The Day of the Daughter of Hades." The author shows in many another poem his delight in life, his love of light and laughter, his Greek apprehension of the beauty of earth; but nowhere, we think, has he given it such full and sweet utterance. We will quote as one example the following passage, containing a wonderful simile:

"He saw through leaves
The Mother and Daughter meet.
They stood by the chariot-wheel,
Embraced, very tall, most like
Fellow poplars, wind-taken, that reel
Down their shivering columns and strike
Head to head, crossing throats: and apart,
For the feast of the look, they drew,
Which Darkness no longer could thwart;
And they broke together anew,
Exulting to tears, flower and bud.
But the mate of the Rayless was grave:
She smiled like Sleep on its flood,
That washes of all we crave:
Like the trance of eyes awake
And the spirit enshrouded, she cast
The wan underworld on the lake."

This is a passage of quiet beauty; but we cannot forbear quoting another full of fire and rush:

"And the lord of the steeds was in form
He, the God of implacable brow,
Darkness: he: he in person: he raged
Through the wave like a boar of the wilds
From the hunters and hounds disengaged,
And a name shouted hoarsely: his child's.
Horror melted in anguish to hear.
Lo, the wave hissed apart for the path
Of the terrible Charioteer,
With the foam and torn features of wrath,
Hurled aloft on each arm in a sheet;
And the steeds clove it, rushing at land
Like the teeth of the famished at meat.
Then he swept out his hand."

We must leave this fine poem with the cry of "Skiageneia!" ringing in our ears.

The "Young Princess" is lightly and often beautifully written, but has not the flash and force of the passage just quoted, or the deep charm of the passage before. Here are four mighty lines from "Lucifer in Starlight."

"Now his huge bulk o'er Afric's sands careened,
Now the black planet shadowed Arctic snows.
Soaring through wider zones that pricked his scars
With memory of the old revolt from Awe."

Somehow or other the word "pricked" seems rather too small for the effect of zones, but the poem, both in idea—that though Lucifer revolted from Awe, he sank before Law—and in execution, is very strong. "The Star Sirius" is, we think, nothing like as grand, and such words as "dotlings" and such lines as

"Reducing many lustrous to the lean" can scarcely be called happy. Of the tributes to Shakespeare there is no end, and Mr. Meredith makes his contribution. We are much inclined to doubt whether Shakespeare was the calm and benignant creature which it is the custom of all critics and most poets to imagine. The old note is struck by Mr. Meredith, who says:

"Thy greatest knew thee, Mother Earth; unsoured
He knew thy sons."

Tennyson speaks of

"Universal Shakespeare, bland and mild."

Matthew Arnold paints the same picture. One would like to ask whether the reader of "Othello," "Lear," "Timon," "Measure for Measure," and the Sonnets would rise from his book with quite the same feeling of serenity and blandness in Shakespeare's character. We should, at least, like to ask Mr. Meredith whether the word "unsoured" would apply to that wonderful piece of verse beginning

"Tired of all these for restful Death I cry."

In "Winter Heavens" we cannot pass by the following splendid lines:

"The living throb in me, the dead revive.
Yon mantle clothes us: there, past mortal breath,
Life glistens on the river of the death."

"The Old Chartist" is, in its way, delightful; and the whole scene with the rat and the mud-bank is natural in the extreme. Especially good is

"I feel superior to a chap whose place Commands him to be neat and supple."

"Fair Ladies in Revolt" is not, we think, quite so successful, and there are one or two lines which it is almost impossible to scan. For instance:

"You have erred
In mind only, and the perils that ensue."

We have no space to comment on the many powerful touches in "The Woods of Westernmain," with its ghastly ending. We should like to take leave of Mr. Meredith the poet with a last look at "Modern Love." The first of these poems is, we think, the finest. Listen to the ending lines:

"Then when the fire doomed blackening, I found
Her cheek was salt against my kiss, and swift
Up the sharp scale of sobs her breast did lift:
Now am I haunted by that taste, that sound!"

Then what a depth of truth there is in the following verse:

"In tragic life, God wot,
No villain need be! Passions spin the plot;
We are betrayed by what is false within."

The third poem is less fine; but in the fourth we get such lines as

"Ah, what a dusty answer gets the soul
When hot for certainties in this our life!"

But we do not quite like the line—it sounds a little hollow and swollen:

"Thundering like ramping hosts of warrior horse."

We have, as we said, found Mr. Meredith the poet somewhat cold, and lamented a certain obscurity in his verse; but that it is the verse of a true, and, at times, a splendid poet, no one with eyes or ears can for a moment doubt.

MR. HENLEY'S "BURNS."

The Poetry of Robert Burns. Vol. IV.
Edited by W. E. Henley and T. F. Henderson.

MR. HENLEY has ever been the enfant perdu of literature. It has always been the emprise perilous which has had attractions for him. In the achievement (essayed in company with Mr. T. F. Henderson) which he has now brought to a successful close by this fourth and final volume of the "Centenary Edition of Burns," the old fighting instinct shows itself strong as ten or a dozen years ago. Of whatever he set his pen to, one might be sure the average man would say: "True, no doubt; but how frightfully imprudent to say it!" To speak the truth about Burns! If Mr. Henley had looked round him for what forlorn hope yet remained to lead, he could not have made a more keenly characteristic choice. When the third volume appeared, the vital and straight-spoken notes of Mr. Henley and Mr. Henderson showed plainly enough to what manner of issue they were leading; and that issue we indicated in our comments at the time. Now we have Mr. Henley's own summing-up of Burns's "Life, Genius, and Achievement," in an essay bold, vivid, complete with all his old mastery. We look to see how far it confirms or contradicts the summary which we based on those former notes, and find that in the main we were not far astray as to his mind. What difference there is arises mostly from the fact that we dealt with but a part of Burns, and here (of course) Mr. Henley is dealing with the whole; so that it displays Burns in a more favourable—rightly, a more favourable light. Let it be our first duty, and our pleasure, to say that we accept Mr. Henley's conclusions with an assent as complete and cordial as is well possible for two diverse minds in this world of divergence. In but a few points (which we shall come at in due course) do we feel any recalcitrance; and those are mostly things which have to do with Burns the man, not Burns the poet.

The editors tell us (in the preface) that they have already incurred violent hostility from numbers of the poet's countrymen, on account of the previous volumes; though their views were rather to be gathered than read therein. Mr. Henley's essay will not be a peace-offering; but he has too many scars of battle to care. Let him take the thanks of the few, which to-morrow will be the thanks of the many. He has uttered what none have dared to utter, and none—if they had dared—could have uttered with like weight, and faculty to compel audience. It is fortunately impossible—or impossible with any plausibility—to account for his utterance by international prejudice. He has at all times shown such liking for Scots writers, and been so connected with Scotsmen, that many have taken him to be himself a Scot. It was as editor of a Scots paper that he first acquired his present brilliant repute and authority in the world of journalism. Already, indeed, his book of prose had made him known as a master of letters, with a style of perfect individuality and insuperable élan—the beau sabreur of essayists. But it was his editing of the Scots—afterwards the National-Observer, which made him not merely the possessor of style in himself, but the cause of style in others, an acknowledged revolutioniser of English journalism. Therefore none can ascribe his summary of Burns to anything but a disposition which sets the truth of literature before all nationality, and before ignorant obloquy. Nor has he tripped as he might have tripped. The Mr. Henley we knew of old neither praised nor blamed by halves. He loved a writer; and he descended in avalanche praise which often swept judgment before it. He saw grave, unnoted sins in a writer; and poured on him a glut of mitraille before which the hapless author's renown "reeled, shattered and sundered." Into no such trap has he fallen here. Mr. Henley seems to gain with the process of the years. Without sacrificing a jot of effectiveness, he has compassed an even balance of treatment. Seldom, indeed, can so grave a justice of matter have been fused with such brilliant entrain of manner.

What admirer of Burns, in good truth, could desire bolder, nay, more audacious estimate of the poet's place in literature than is given by Mr. Henley? It will not suffice the rabid Burnsian: "Think nothing gained," he cries, "while aught remains"; and allow that his poet's Muse stands next in beauty to Helen and Cleopatra, he will not be pacified unless you concede that she unites the golden tresses of the Greek with the dark riches of the Egyptian. Reason—at the name of Burns reason must bow; "there is reason in roasting of eggs," but not in toasting of Burns. His place, says Mr. Henley, is "in the first flight of English poets after Milton, Chaucer, Shakespeare." Is it not enough? "Enough, aye, and too much!" many may be inclined to cry with the reviewer; "Is this the grave judgment you talked of even now?" Well, let us look Mr. Henley's gift-horse a little in the mouth. He declares with explicit justice: "It is not for 'the love of lovely words' that we revert to Burns. He has all manner of qualities—wit, fancy, vision of a kind, nature, gaiety, the richest humour, a sort of homespun verbal magic." Nevertheless he affirms, "But for beauty we must go elsewhere." It is simple verity. What, then, does Mr. Henley mean by his first-quoted declaration? This he means: the power, the consummate power of Burns is to be sought in what we may perhaps call his poems of character. "The master-quality of Burns . . . is humour." There it is, the long-awaited truth spoken at last; directly, clearly, courageously. Therefore Mr. Henley concludes:

"The world of 'Scotch morals, Scotch religion, and Scotch drink,' may be ugly or not (as refracted through his temperament it is not). Ugly or not, however, it was the world of Burns; to paint it was part of his mission. . . . The world of realism lay broad-beaten by his ancestors . . . he followed it with vision, with humour, 'inspiration and sympathy,' and with art; and in the sequel he is found to have a place of his own in the first flight of English poets after Milton, Chaucer, Shakespeare."

You see now what it means. It means—not that Mr. Henley is under any delusion as to the mode of Burns's gift—but that humour and dramatic vision have for Mr. Henley a poetic value which for some of us they have not. Admit that, and Burns's latest editor is not far wrong in the place he assigns to Burns.

Wherefore, seeing that his comparative estimate in no way thickens his sight of Burns's absolute powers and their nature, we are little disposed to contend over it; we can afford to pass it by on the other side. Personally, if Shakespeare had given us Falstaffs as the sands of the sea, and plays like "Much Ado about Nothing" as the stars of the heavens, we should judge him a great dramatist, we should not judge him a great poet. But the essential thing remains, that Mr. Henley sees Burns exactly as he is, and utters his seeing without fear or flinching. The rest is a bagatelle. "The master-quality of Burns is humour." The "Address to the Deil," "The Devil and Dr. Hornbook," those irreverent, pungent, irresistible flights of satire against the gloomy spirit of Scotch Calvinism, those pictures of peasant jollity, of vagrant revelry, full of animal spirits, of shrewdness, of character—instantaneous graffiti, the Comic Muse barefoot, reckless, tossing with dishevelled laughter; these are "rantin', rovin' Robin" himself. Himself, and also—as Mr. Henley sees—his predecessors, Fergusson, and the author of Christ's Kirk on the Green, and the many more. In the Songs this is far more so. Mr. Henley says plainly that Burns worked best in these where "he had a lead" from some older singer; and that it is such lyrics which "show Burns the song-smith at his best." He adduces in the notes of this edition abundant proofs of the fact—some of which we quoted at length in reviewing the third volume. In our opinion, this fact, now thoroughly established by Messrs. Henley and Henderson, must needs place Burns somewhat below true greatness as a song-writer. This, however, does not seem to be altogether Mr. Henley's view. It is so far true, he says, in that "the Burns of fact differs, and differs considerably and at many points, from the Burns of legend." But "enough remains to Burns to keep him easily first in the first flight of singers in the vernacular, and to secure him, outside the vernacular, the fame of an unique artist." Our objection to this (let it pass for what it is worth) would be that the old border singers were "vernacular," and easily pass Burns in the serious lyric. Perhaps, however, Mr. Henley would argue that few of their productions are real songs, but rather belong to the class of brief ballads.

Mr. Henley is not less, but rather more outspoken, in dealing with Burns the man. Terrible will be the flutter in the kailyards over this section of his work. Not Don Quixote among the puppets worked such slaughter grim and great as Mr. Henley when he lugs out his long sword, and slices right and left among the marionettes that have hitherto done duty in the pleasant tragedy mixed full of lamentable mirth of "The Ploughman Poet; or, the Glasses and the Lasses." Wood and tinsel are scattered about the stage; even Highland Mary lies lopped and low. For that last deed let Mr. Henley have our warmest thanks. Hateful is all sham, but most hateful of all the sentimental sham. Let him also be thanked that, by way of righteous compensation, he has championed poor Jean Armour, neglected of all the sentimentalists, because Burns took the romance out of her by giving her the tardy justice of marriage—not that the tardiness was his fault. For the first time we have Burns with the whitewash scraped off him—in his colours as he lived.

Mr. Henley sums his own sketch in one chance-dropped sentence: "The lewd, amazing peasant of genius, the inspired faun." Nay, he carries the revolt against smug unreality to excess; until we think of Lear tearing off his "lendings," when the contemplation of Poor Tom has convicted him of being "sophisticated." He declares it too late to apologise for the "primordial instinct," and a particularly rank absurdity "in the case of a man who so exulted in its manifestations and results" as Burns. Passing by the principle involved in this sentence, most people will understand from it that Mr. Henley applauds Burns for illustrating the "primordial instinct" by a life-long career of seduction; and it is not probable that Mr. Henley quite meant that. He shows clearly enough at the end what is really to be said of Burns: "a peasant of genius perverted from his peasantry . . . constrained to live his qualities into defects." Let it be added, that, though we have talked of the poet's "career of seduction" (because, like Mr. Henley, we have a taste for calling things by their names), it was far from implying what it would imply in a higher society. The young ladies of such a community did not need much seduction. The delicate manner in which Jean Armour opened her affair with Burns is typical. Some philosophers affirm that in all love affairs the first call comes from the woman, though it is a silent call. But these maidens were articulate, and left nothing to chance.

We are not, it is true, personally acquainted with Scottish village-life, we are willing to believe that things may have bettered since Burns wrote; and there is an immense gap between Mauchline and Thrums. Yet we do not speak out of our inner consciousness only. The reviewer has lived intimately in contact with a type of peasantry strongly analogous to that described by Burns, though more dour, less streaked with gaiety, and has, therefore, a vivid realisation of what such an environment means. Even in our actual position of superiority and proud enlightenment, we do not find any stone exactly safe to throw at him. From this same experience, we doubt the heroism which Mr. Henley imputes to Jean Armour in a certain detail of conduct. He hardly, we think, realises the extent to which such girls' sensibilities are dulled in these matters. But all this is not to be pursued here. Enough that without such experience it is not possible to understand all the excuse for Burns.

In conclusion, let us hope that Mr. Henley's courage and sincerity will purify the atmosphere about Burns. As in the case of the Chinese Emperor's clothes, one has spoken, and now many may begin to speak. But, as in Andersen's story, to say that first word it needed, if not a child, what is in some ways the same—a man of genius.

INACCURATE HISTORY.

The Battlefields of Thessaly: By Sir Ellis Ashmead-Bartlett, M.P. (John Murray.)

THIS is a wearisome and profitless work. It cannot pretend to be a new and original history of the recent campaign in Greece, owing to the very trifling portion of the fighting that the author himself witnessed. Nor, so far as he was himself present at the battlefields of Thessaly, did his personal experiences differ at all from those already recounted in book form by several of the newspaper correspondents who professionally went all through the war. Nor, indeed, has Sir Ellis anything very fresh to tell us about his capture by a Greek gunboat, while the circumstance, naturally enough, hardly appeals to him so humorously as it did to the English journalists who narrated it at the time. It may also be suggested that the resistance of the Greeks to the Turks was of so contemptible a nature, on the whole, that it would hardly be worth a new and minute description, even if it had been possible for any individual to procure one. But Sir Ellis is by no means an accurate observer, and, being cursed with the trick of needless repetition, he gets into absurd tangles. The long artillery duel at Mati will not rank as an historical event of any great importance, but it is no doubt excusable for our present writer to tell us that on its third day (being the day of his own arrival on the scene of action) "the first shell was fired in the artillery fight at 7.45, and the cannonade continued without cessation till about 12.45." But is it excusable for him to tell us, three chapters on, in another account of the same battle, that "a furious cannonade began at eleven o'clock and lasted till four"? His ideas of distances are equally vague. He tells us how he watched this same engagement from the top of the Melouna Pass, at a distance of but two miles from the Turkish batteries. But on the next day, when he descends into the plain, he quotes this distance as four miles. Other authorities make it even further, and on yet another page of the book before us it is described as "about two hours' ride." What can be the use of such contradictory details, except to distract the reader from paying attention to the author's conclusions?

Sir Ellis cannot even be congratulated on the maps which he includes in his volume. Beautifully printed as they are, their blunders are all the more manifest. The projected railway, for example, vid Thermopylæ and Lamia to Larissa is inserted as enjoying the same definite existence as the railways from Volo to Larissa and Kalabatea, while the much-used railway from Lamia to Marina is omitted from the same chart. The spelling of the various towns varies with the maps, even though in the text the name of the new premier, M. Ralli, is consistently spelt (for no apparent reason) Rhallys. These, no doubt, would be trivialities if in other respects we could obtain accurate history or comment. But, incredible as it may seem, on p. 94 we are told that certain mistakes in tactics on the part of the Turks at Velestino and Domoko "are explained or excused on the ground that the modern long range or repeating rifle prevents the soldier from being kept in hand." Yet it is the fact, as truly narrated on p. 140 of the same book, that "the Turkish infantry were all armed with the Martini-Henry rifle" at Velestino, and that "only one brigade of the second division" had the Mauser at Domoko, which brigade fought with remarkable bravery and perfect discipline. So, too, on p. 139, Pharsalos is mentioned as marked by one of the "largest and most sanguinary conflicts, and by the heaviest losses to the Turks." Yet on p. 225 we are told "the action at Pharsalos cannot be called a battle," and on p. 229 that the Turkish loss in the same engagement was "about 300 men hors de combat." Many other "howlers" of equal calibre might be quoted if space permitted, but enough have been advanced to indicate the value that this volume would possess as a book of reference. Sir Ellis Ashmead Bartlett, M.P.'s Russophobic views on the Eastern Question are already pretty well known, and are no doubt appreciated at their full value by his friends. The medley of obvious blunders in which these opinions are involved in The Battlefields of Thessaly will scarcely assist them to carry conviction to the minds of his political opponents.

SIGNED CRITICISM.

Studies in Two Literatures. By Arthur Symons. (Leonard Smithers.)

MR. SYMONS believes in the personal element in criticism: he judges no author, no book, by generally accepted formula or hard and fast dogmatic rule. He is distinctly an impressionist, and his criticisms are the records of his own feelings while reading certain books. He does not care an iota for abstract generalities, for his studies are studies in purely personal sensations. And as every man is, at his best, but a creature of moods and impulses, it would be unfair to expect to find in these studies, written as they were at different times and under different circumstances, an absolute continuity of thought, an absolute freedom from contradictions. As it is, the slight contradictions and revisions of previous impressions which crop up here and there only add to the charm of the book.

These studies are divided into (1) Studies in the Elizabethan Drama; (2) Studies in Contemporary Literature; (3) Notes and Impressions: English Writers; (4) Notes and Impressions: French Writers. Of these, the Studies in the Elizabethan Drama are the least successful; while the Notes on French writers are somewhat disappointing and unsatisfactory. In the Shakespeare essays, Mr. Symons has, as he remarks in the preface, been forced to become argumentative—"that was a necessity of the case, as I had to clear the ground." Now this clearing of the ground is useful, but somewhat exasperating and tedious work; and though Mr. Symons does his best to make interesting the time-worn arguments of date and place and "internal evidences," he cannot conceal his sense of the utter futility of them all. In arguments, in clearing the ground, personal impressions count for very little. The essays included under this section are on "Antony and Cleopatra," "Macbeth," "Twelfth Night," "Measure for Measure," "The Winter's Tale," "Titus Andronicus," and "Henry VIII.," Philip Massinger and John Day. They were written as introductions to an edition of Shakespeare's plays, and the "Mermaid Series" of Elizabethan dramatists, and model introductions they unquestionably are. But they are nothing more. They contain admirable summaries of the works of a host of writers on the same subjects, but little that is distinctly original. Here and there, when Mr. Symons allows himself a free hand and gives his own impressions of certain characters—notably of Cleopatra and Lady Macbeth—they rise above the level of the merely commonplace; but for a volume of this kind, a book that makes some claim for permanency, the clearing of the ground is altogether too much in evidence. The best essay is that on "Titus Andronicus," where the evolution of the tragedy of blood, the change from the merely horrible in "The Spanish Tragedy" or the "Jew of Malta" to the intensely and magnificently terrible, then to the most awful of all, the tragedy of the soul, is traced with particular clearness.

In the "Studies in Contemporary Literature" Mr. Symons is on surer and more congenial ground, for he is a modern of the moderns, one of les jeunes. We have here essays on Christina Rossetti, William Morris, Coventry Patmore, Walter Pater, Modernity in Verse and on Zola's Method—essays intensely personal, and containing no suggestion of finality. It will be seen at once that in reviewing these studies we are confined to the expression of agreement with or disagreement from the personal impressions they set forth. To begin with, we certainly do not like the passage on the first page of the essay on Christina Rossetti, which reads very much like a sneer at the genius of Mrs. Browning, and though in our admiration for the poems of Miss Rossetti we would yield to none, we should hardly care to subscribe to Mr. Symons's dictum that "she possessed a power of artistic self-restraint which no other woman who has written verse, except the supreme Sappho, has ever shown. . . . She is more English than any Englishwoman." In passing we may say that we have noted throughout the book quite a number of such dogmatic exaggerations. Mr. Symons's somewhat magnified enthusiasms may serve as an excuse for these outbursts, but many of his studies—that on Walter Pater, for instance—suffer from a superfluity of admiration. The peculiar note of Christina Rossetti's genius is well summed up as "a power of seeing finely beyond the scope of ordinary vision . . . an autumnal muse, perhaps, but the muse certainly of an autumn going down towards winter with the happy light still on it of a past, or now but scarcely passing summer." In such summings up, Mr. Symons's method is seen at his best. They are terse, graphic, and original, and, as a rule, give in a few lines a wonderfully true picture of the author's peculiar genius.

In the essay on William Morris, Mr. Symons is inclined to emphasise rather too strongly what he aptly calls the "vague and monotonous, and continuous and restful going on" of the poems, and to ignore the real passion and fire of which Morris's work was so full. It is curious to find a critic who in his confession of faith in the preface to this volume writes: "A work of art has but one reason of existence—that it should be a work of art, a moment of the eternity of beauty," complaining that "to read 'The Earthly Paradise' is like taking a dose of opium," and that in Morris's work there is a sense of "that weariness which comes of over-much repose."

Mr. Symons's criticism of Robert Louis Stevenson is rather carping, and shows that he has failed to fathom the marvellous attractiveness of Stevenson the man apart from Stevenson the writer. There is a lack of the all-necessary sympathy in Mr. Symons's study. The "Notes on French Writers" are, as we have said before, distinctly disappointing. Mr. Symons knows contemporary French poetry, better than most critics. He has soaked himself in Continentalisms of every kind, but these studies are scrappy and haphazard and incomplete. In one is he biographical, in another critical, and, though all are interesting, the wisdom of including such flimsy impressions in a volume of solid merit is questionable. The note on Catulle Mendès is altogether laudatory. Yet a man who has abused his real talents as Mendès has done is positively despicable.

We have left to the last Mr. Symons's essay on "Modernity in Verse," perhaps the most suggestive study in the collection. With all the good that he says of Mr. Henley's poetry we heartily agree, but it is a pity that no mention is made of Mr. Kipling, one of the most essentially modern of poets. Mr. Symons finds in Mr. Henley's capacity for dealing with London, with the maddening roar and rush of life, the true test of modernity.

THE SOCIAL PROBLEM IN SWITZERLAND.

Social Switzerland. By William Harbutt Dawson. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. DAWSON writes primarily for the expert, and those who are intimately connected with trade organisations or social work in this country will find his book particularly suggestive and instructive; but in these days, when such problems as the relief of the unemployed, the housing of the aged poor, or the protection of the working classes, are forced into such tremendous prominence, the experiments which have been carried on in Switzerland become of universal interest. We could have wished that Mr. Dawson had pointed out more distinctly the difference between the social legislation now in force in England, France, and Germany and that of the various cantons in Switzerland, for his book would then have been of more value to the general reader, who is not always too well informed with regard to the intricacies of social legislation.

The first section of the book deals with the organisation and protection of labour in factories. In Switzerland the law fixes a normal day of eleven hours, though ten hours only may be worked on Saturday and the days preceding holidays. There seems to be little or no desire for an eight-hours' day. In the middle of the day at least an hour's rest must be given to all workpeople. Sunday work is only permitted under special circumstances, and all factory regulations—as to conditions and hours of work, payment of wages, fines, &c.—must be submitted to the Cantonal Government, "which first takes the opinion thereon of the workpeople themselves." Sunday and night work is prohibited for women, who are allowed an extra half-hour for the mid-day rest—when they have household duties to perform. The regulations with regard to child labour do not, however, appear to be very satisfactory.

In spite of the longer hours, the wages paid to the Swiss working classes fall considerably below the standard common in this country, and Mr. Dawson cites the case of the silk-ribbon weavers of Basle who struck quite recently for a minimum wage of 3s. 9d. per day. Though the trade union organisation in Switzerland is comparatively weak, strikes are more generally successful than in this country, for the essentially democratic spirit of the Swiss people is an immense and invariable power on the side of the strikers. Mr. Dawson gives a detailed account of the various organisations of working men in different parts of the country. The story of the evolution of the Grütlerversin now a Socialist organisation of great importance, boasting of some thirteen thousand members, is particularly instructive.

Under the general heading of "Industrial Peace" we have next an account of the Industrial Courts of Arbitration which are now to be found in most cantons. All minor disputes between employer and employee are finally settled by the judges of these courts; but there seems little doubt that the side of the employee is much favoured, and employers are by no means satisfied with the workings of the courts of arbitration. There are three judges—one chosen from the civil courts, one from the ranks of the employers, and one from among the men—but Mr. Dawson adds, very significantly, "there is a tendency for employing members of the courts, or certain of them, to vote with the labour side from motives of trade rivalry or with the object of ingratiating themselves with the working classes."

Switzerland would appear to be a haven of rest for the unemployed working man. There are relief stations situated in all parts of the country—stations very different in every respect from the English workhouse—and labour registries are to be found in every town of any importance. Some idea of the amount of relief given to the unemployed may be gathered from the fact that in 1894, in the canton of Zurich alone, the relief stations drew more than £1,100 from the cantonal exchequer. In many of the large towns homes for travelling working men in search of employment have been established on a very large scale. In the Passantenhaus, in Berne, no fewer than 17,000 persons—a third of them foreigners—are fed and housed every year. Of these more than 300 received new shoes, many received new clothes, and not a few gifts of money to help them on their way.

We have no space for a detailed account of the various Swiss labour colonies and labour bureaux and exchanges. As is generally known, it has fallen to the lot of Switzerland to make the first practical experiments in compulsory out-of-work insurance, and Mr. Dawson gives an excellent history of the attempt and its results in the various cantons. The homes for the aged poor, which are scattered throughout Switzerland, are ideal establishments, and it is painful to realise we have so few establishments like the Grienenasyl of Berne in this country.

The book concludes with chapters on technical education and the control of the drink traffic. Social Switzerland is altogether a suggestive and instructive book—a book to read, mark, learn, and inwardly digest.

ABOUT BIRDS.

Citizen Bird: Scenes from Bird-life for Beginners. By Mabel Osgood Wright and Elliott Coues. With 111 Illustrations. (New York: The Macmillan Company.)

"BIRD-DAY" is a phrase unknown to our Cisatlantic ears. In the land of the free and glorious it is becoming known as the name of a festival devoted to instructing the youth in the useful qualities of what a pamphlet before us on the subject calls "our feathered brothers." In a similar manner "Arbor Day" has come to be recognised throughout America as a day on which it is meet for children to plant trees and think about them. These two celebrations are the outcome of a movement which has been taking place to interest young people in the beauties and economics of nature generally. It is a movement which must command the sympathy of all, but especially of those who have seen the previous sacrifice of nature to the utilitarian Moloch, and have noted the rapid disappearance of singing birds and flowering plants before the devastating march of industry. Many writers have dwelt upon this saddening feature of American growth. Now the reaction has set in with a kind of frenzy, and birds, beasts, and wild vegetation are to be protected at all hazards. The authors of the movement have sensibly abandoned all hope of securing their object by means of prohibitive legislation, and have gone instead direct to the heart of the people at its most plastic and impressionable age. One might have felt sceptical as to the power of any human influence to rob the schoolboy of his bird's-nesting and catapulting propensities; and in England especially we should probably shrug shoulders over the idea, and utter the time-worn complacencies that boys do very little damage to our feathered population, and that birds'-nesting is an excellent means of inculcating a spirit of hardiness and adventure. They look at things differently in America. There not only does the schoolboy seem to be amenable to the dulcet reasoning of humanitarians, but even a Secretary of Agriculture can so far unbend from his official calmness as to "enthuse" in the following strain:

"The love of feather ornaments so heartlessly persisted in by thousands of women, and the mania for collecting eggs and killing birds so deeply rooted in our boys, are legacies of barbarism inherited from our savage ancestry. The number of beautiful and useful birds annually slaughtered for bonnet trimmings runs into hundreds of thousands, and threatens, if it has not accomplished, the extermination of some of our rarer species. The insidious egg-hunting and pea-shooting proclivities of the small boy are hardly less widespread and destructive. It matters little which of the two agencies is more fatal since neither is productive of good. One looks to the gratification of a shallow vanity, the other of a cruel instinct and an expenditure of boyish energy which might profitably be diverted into other channels."

And again:

"Birds are of inestimable value to mankind. Without their unremitting services our gardens and fields would be laid waste by insect pests. But we owe them an even deeper debt than this, for the study of birds tends to develop some of the best impulses and attributes of our nature. Among them we find examples of generosity, unselfish devotion, of the love of mother for offspring, and other estimable qualities."

We try to picture Mr. Walter Long carried away to this extent, and after repealing in one breath his much-detested muzzling-order, sitting down to reflect on the simple beauties of Mrs. Gatty's nature parables!

However, sentimental or not—and it is astoundingly sentimental—one cannot find anything but praise for the authors of the bird-protection movement in America. It has a practical side as well which it would be unfair to ignore, and that is that considerable efforts are being made to put before farmers the true facts as to their indebtedness to birds for destroying the grubs which injure agricultural industries. The farmer, like the gamekeeper, has an instinctive feeling that most wild creatures are to be regarded as enemies, and destroyed. How short-sighted this policy is can be demonstrated to simplicity by examining the crops of even such an agricultural terror as the crow.

The nicely printed book before us is not unconnected with the movement we have been referring to. Its objects, therefore, are unimpeachable. Whether in the form presented by Miss (? Mrs.) Osgood Wright and Dr. Elliott Coues it is likely to prove acceptable, is a matter which an English reviewer has some difficulty about deciding. We have seen that full-grown American officials can write very sentimentally about birds with confidence of appealing to their public; maybe the peculiarly waterish sentiment of Citizen Bird is the kind of thing appreciated by American children. We would rather that American children spoke for themselves. One thing is tolerably certain, it does not appeal to English children. The setting is unfamiliar, involving "Mammy Bun," an old negress cook, certain very Transatlantic children—we assume them to be Transatlantic—an irritating but faultless cripple, and a preposterously benevolent ornithologist. The literary flavour is something between Maria Edgeworth and Sandford and Merton, fraught with unpalatable suggestions of an antique time. But more important still is the fact that scarcely a bird mentioned is familiar, or bears a familiar name. The "blue bird" does not flit about our English eaves; cat birds, mocking birds, chickadees, towkees, and a hundred others which figure in these apologies, are conspicuous by their absence. The only English bird of the lot is the English sparrow, and that alone of them all is condemned to ruthless extermination. For these various reasons we doubt the popularity of Citizen Bird in England; its charming get-up and scrupulous accuracy may commend it to the different tastes of the American jeunesse.

A NEW ANTHOLOGY.

English Epigrams and Epitaphs. Selected by Aubrey Stewart. (Chapman & Hall.)

MR. STEWART'S collection of epigrams and epitaphs makes a pleasant little volume which many people will be glad to keep on their shelves for reference. Like all books of its kind, it contains a certain amount that, from the literary standpoint, is of no particular value, while, on the other hand, it omits some well-known epigrams which one would have expected to find included in it. But, on the whole, its contents are judiciously selected and well arranged. As one might expect, the section devoted to epitaphs is more interesting than that which contains the epigrams, perhaps because comparatively few English poets of the first rank have turned their attention to the epigram. Pope, of course, is an exception, and his epigrams are almost always admirable. But Swift's are too often clumsy, while Byron's, though neat, are rather obvious. Mr. Stewart, by the way, omits the well-known one of his on Castlereagh:

"So Castlereagh has cut his throat—the worst
Of this is, that his own was not the first!"

Also the clever punning epitaph on John Adams of Southwell, and the oft-quoted

"With Death doomed to grapple,
Beneath this cold slab he
Who lied in the chapel
Now lies in the abbey."

Byron, in fact, is but scantily represented in this collection. It contains, of course, the celebrated lines on Milton by Dryden,

"Three poets in three distant ages born," perhaps the best epigram, in the Greek sense of the word, in the English language. While in the more ordinary sense of the word "epigram" nothing can be better than the familiar one by Wesley on Butler, the author of Hudibras, also included here:

"While Butler, needy wretch! was yet alive
No gen'rous patron would a dinner give.
See him when starved to death, and turn'd to dust,
Presented with a monumental bust!
The Poet's fate is here in emblem shown—
He ask'd for bread, and he receiv'd a stone."

The last two lines are as good as they can possibly be, but the first four are somewhat too diffuse for a perfect epigram.

Turning to the epitaphs in this collection, we find all, or nearly all, that we could wish of the famous ones, while some new ones are included that were well worth recording. Here is one from Edinburgh:

"John McPherson
Was a wonderful Person.
He stood 6 ft. 2 without his shoe.
And he was slew
At Waterloo."

This from Pewsey Church is still more delightful:

"Here lies the body of Lady O'Looney,
Great niece of Burke, commonly Called the Sublime.
She was
Bland, passionate, and deeply religious,
Also she painted in water-colours,
And sent several pictures to the Exhibitions.
She was first cousin to Lady Jones,
And of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Mr. Stewart, in one place, gives a very unsatisfactory version of a famous epigram:

"This World's a city full of crooked streets,
Death is the market-place where each one meets:
If Life were only merchandise to buy,
The Rich would live, the poor alone would die."

The other version, which is undeniably superior, runs as follows:

"Life is a city with many a street,
Death is the portal where all men meet.
If Life were a thing that money could buy
The Poor could not live—and the Rich would not die."

The epitaph on a great Talker,

"Hic tacet," is extremely happy. Altogether this is a pleasant collection, clearly printed and convenient in size. It should be popular with lovers of the epigram.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

The novels published during the past week number twenty-two. They are:

WHAT MAISIE KNEW.

By HENRY JAMES.

A study of a young girl upon whom the world opened hardly and harshly. A typical Henry James. Ran serially through the New Review and the Chap Book. (W. Heinemann. 304 pp. 6s.)

THE LADY'S WALK.

By MRS. OLIPHANT.

A posthumous, supernatural novel. About a ghost—a lady—that frequents Ellermore in the Highlands. A gentle story. Not in the least bluggy. "We don't call it a ghost," said Charlotte. "I am fond of it for my part; but, then, I have been used to it all my life." (Methuen & Co. 251 pp. 6s.)

HUGH WYNNE: FREE QUAKER.

By S. WEIR MITCHELL.

A novel of the American revolution. Ran through the Century magazine. The Free Quaker, or Disowned Friend (disowned because he believed, with others, that active resistance was justifiable) who tells the story, was on General Washington's staff. One critic has already boldly stated that "Dr. Mitchell has now written the great American novel." Another (in the Outlook) says: "If not the long-sought American novel, it at least comes closer to it than any other novel of the decade." We await our own verdict with fortitude. (T. Fisher Unwin. 485 pp. 6s.)

MARIETTA'S MARRIAGE.

By W. E. NORRIS.

Another long novel by the patient, pleasant, pedestrian author of The Countess Radna, &c., &c., &c. As usual, many of the characters are titled. The end leaves Marietta, "for once in her life, happy and contented." (W. Heinemann. 350 pp. 6s.)

IN KEDAR'S TENTS.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN.

The Sowers took us to Russia. Now we are off to Spain ('tis sixty years ago) with an impulsive and generous Irishman, who plays no inconsiderable part in the Carlist war. Mr. Merriman, as usual, convinces and thrills. (Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.)

THE BEETLE.

By RICHARD MARSH.

But such a Beetle! Let the author speak for himself: "I am quite prepared to believe that the so-called Beetle was a creature born neither of God nor man." Dracula, by Mr. Bram Stoker, was creepy, but Mr. Marsh goes one, oh! many more than one, better. There is a horrible picture as frontispiece. (Skeffington & Co. 351 pp. 6s.)

ONE OF THE BROKEN BRIGADE.

By CLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY.

By the author of Snap and Gold Gold in Cariboo; but we know them not. The characters move on from Berkshire to Vancouver Island, where adventures follow fast and faster till the postscript, where you may see "an old grey-haired man and a fair type of English womanhood bending over a marble tablet, and underneath is written —" No, fairness forbids. (Smith, Elder & Co. 279 pp. 6s.)

THE MISANTHROPE'S HEIR.

By CYRIL GREY.

Of a former effort, Glenathole, we wrote: "A most conscientious performance." This, too, is conscientious—and very, very long. It should please the Scot, for the dialect begins on the first page: "Ye canna cross the nicht, Duncan. Hoots, man, ye're daft to think o't." (Skeffington & Son. 380 pp. 6s.)

A FAIR DECEIVER.

By GEORGE PASTON.

The end falls thus: "Presently the couple went into the cheerful vicarage drawing-room. . . . But outside in the darkness and the rain the man sat beside the rose-guarded grave, and leant his cheek against the branches, all unconscious of the thorns [our italics], and whispered that he had not forgotten. . . ." (Harper & Brothers. 277 pp.)

AMY VIVIAN'S RING.

By SURGEON-MAJOR H. M. GREENHOW.

An Indian story, by the author of The Tower of Ghilaan. Durbars, station balls, dak-bungalows, and bits like this: "'Khanamez pur hai' announced the khansamah with a solemn salaam; and next moment the young pair went into dinner." (Skeffington & Son. 244 pp. 5s.)

THE ADVENTURES OF ST. KEVIN.

By R. D. ROGERS.

The author would join the humorists with these Irish tales. He is not ill-equipped for the task. Seven of the tales deal with St. Kevin, Abbot of Ballykilowen, "who administered justice somewhat in the Eastern fashion." He and the author are very Irish. (Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 266 pp. 6s.)

THE SHOWMAN'S DAUGHTER.

By SCOTT GRAHAM.

By the author of A Bolt from the Blue, &c., &c., who prints this motto: "We pay for everything here below; nothing is stolen." Many characters, much dialogue, and rapid movement. A "meaty" novel. Period: Close of the Second Empire, "ere the Napoleonic bubble had been pricked by the sword of the Teuton, and burst." (Hurst & Blackett. 370 pp. 6s.)

THE GODS ARRIVE.

By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH.

By the author of Joanna Traill, Spinster. Much about Labour and the People. In the beginning Katherine loved Franklin. Had he not "beggared himself to feed the starving women and children in a great dock-strike!" He also gave them (1) his clothes, (2) his savings, and (3) his furniture. So he became a hero, and even a saint in Katherine's eyes. Appeared in the Sunday Magazine, and is now published by Mr. William Heinemann. (344 pp. 6s.)

A BOOK WITHOUT A MAN.

By AGNES G. HERBERTSON.

But they talk about men throughout, which comes to much the same thing in the end. The heroines are Ross (bright and bonny), Morda (tall, dark, tragic), Eona (fair, plump, emancipated), and The Limpet (small, curly, musical, affable—extremely), and they talk. Need we say more? (Elliot Stock. 144 pp.)

THE FUTURE POWER.

By Z. S. HENDOW.

An imaginary account of the great strike of 190—, and the triumph of twelve and a half million workers who wanted to change our present social system. They did it, and now (that is, in 190—) "whispered blessings ascend to heaven from millions of lips which formerly only opened to emit groans, sighs, and blasphemies." (The Roxburghe Press. 79 pp. 1s.)

THE SECRETAR.

By W. BEATTY.

A Scotch historical romance, an addition to the first-person-singular school. "I, John Kilgour," tell the story, and there is an average of one N.B. word to every three lines. Some one says: "Hech me! d'ye tell me sae? Weel, weel, that may weel be. . . . I maun hae siller some gate." Someone else has "a walth o' fechtin'." The tale is founded on the story of the Casket Letters. (Alox Gardner. 433 pp.)

THE SINGER OF MARLY.

By T. HOOPER.

A brisk historical novel of adventure of the Stanley Weyman school, as you will perceive by the first three lines which we quote:

"A PROTESTANT spy!
The cards fell on the table with a soft, pattering click."

Period 1697. (Methuen & Co. 259 pp. 6s.)

MAIME O' THE CORNER.

By M. E. FRANCIS.

M. E. Francis, or Mrs. Francis Blundell, as she is known in private life, is doing for Yorkshire what Miss Wilkins has done for New England. Maime o' the Corner is a pathetic story of village life in the manner of the author's earlier books, In a North Country Village and A Daughter of the Soil. (Harper & Brothers. 302 pp. 6s. For some or no reason it is dated 1898.)

THE FALL OF THE SPARROW.

By M. C. BALFOUR.

A story of old-fashioned comfort with old-fashioned flowers and furniture in it, and a squire who says: "I'm d—d if you sha'n't marry the little hussy with my blessing!" "Only," adds the author, "he did not say 'hussy' at all, but another word which he had learnt from the farmers about him." (Methuen & Co. 371 pp. 6s.)

FORBIDDEN BY LAW.

By MAJOR ARTHUR GRIFFITHS.

Major Griffiths's experience as a prison inspector entitles him to write a novel under this title peculiarly well. It is a bustling, sensational story of vice and virtue—a melodrama between two covers. (Jarrold & Sons. 332 pp. 6s.)

A RETURN TO NATURE.

By ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING.

A story of quiet life in Kent, by the author of Appassionata. Social chit-chat, love, rustic humour. On the penultimate page the heroine cries, "Direk, get a blue-bag from someone! Go to the Goodwins and get all the blue-bags you can. I've sat on a wasp's nest. Oh, I must be stung." She was not stung, but a minute later she was proposed to and said "Yes." A pocket-novel. (Jarrold & Sons. 262 pp. 1s. 6d.)

NIOBE.

By JONAS LIE.

A translation. Jonas Lie is a Norwegian, and "the best beloved" of living Norwegian novelists. His age is sixty-three. His work is noted for truthfulness, simple pathos, deep moral sincerity, and his style is "colloquial almost to a fault." Mr. Edmund Gosse tells us in an introduction to Niobe that Lie was introduced to his notice by "the elegant and hospitable Mr. Hegel in the classic parlour of his firm." Only think! (W. Heinemann. 290 pp.)

REVIEWS.

Three Partners. By Bret Harte.
(Chatto & Windus.)

The most notable feature of Mr. Bret Harte's new story is the reappearance of Mr. Jack Hamlin.

"Suddenly the conversation dropped, the laughter ceased. Everyone turned round, and, by a common instinct, looked towards the door. From the obscurity of the hillside below came a wonderful tenor voice, modulated by defiance and spiritualised by the darkness. . . . The men looked at one another. 'That's Jack Hamlin,' they said."

This recalls the old thrill that came with the ending of "Brown of Calaveras," does it not? Mr. Hamlin is quite at his best in Three Partners—suave, well-groomed, imperturbable, masterful, right. It is an absorbing story, even if the author has done far better things. The old, clean-cut, well-bred style; the old types—the gambler, the drunkard (it is our friend Whiskey Dick of "Two Saints of the Foot Hills," though less grand than of yore), the simple, lucky miner, the Paris-fashioned, delicate, exotic woman, and so on; the old alluring camp life; the mustangs and shooting irons, the clouds of dust and the majestic Sierras—all are here. And the plot holds you to the very end, thanks, very largely, to Mr. Jack Hamlin's share in it. The pictures do not help the book much. Indeed, one had hoped never to see any artist's conception of Mr. Hamlin.

A Day's Tragedy. (A Novel in Rhyme.) By Allen Upward.
(Chapman & Hall.)

[This being a novel in rhyme it has been thought well that it should have a review in rhyme. But in the interests of reviewers this cannot be considered a precedent.—ED. ACADEMY.]

Would you read of Mortimer Vane,
And Mortimer's lady love Madelaine
(Whom Mortimer never completely won),
And Mortimer's rival Harrington,
And Mortimer's trial for a deadly crime?—
Why, then you must read this "Novel in Rhyme."
Pages two hundred and fifty-three
Go to the woful history.—
It might be "The Ring and the Book" again,
But it's merely the story of Mortimer Vane.
When Mortimer Vane at first grew keen
On Madelaine she was just sixteen:

"He but a boy and she in the bud
Before it blossoms to womanhood."

He met her first in the Isle of Wight,
Or, as the poet prefers to write,
He

"found her in the lovers' isle,
The channel's diamond, where the smile
Of summer on our southern coast
Lingers last and softens most."

Madelaine was "one of those Whose love like the delicate myrtle blows."
Her father was known as "a warrior,
Scarred and aged in many a war";
While Mortimer's father was one "to whom Great is the calling of the groom"
(Which means—translated from Upwardese—
He went to races and "backed the gees.")
Mortimer's love, too strongly stirred,
Broke its fetters with one swift word,
And he was Madelaine's, Madelaine his,
And both drank deep of the lovers' bliss.
But ah! too poor, too dull, was Vane
To hold such a girl as Madelaine,
And hence she turned her ear anon
With a sigh of relief to Harrington.
Harrington was a millionaire,
Blackhearted, of course, but less of a bear
In every way than Mortimer Vane,
And much better suited to Madelaine.
Moreover, as far as we're able to see,
A much more lovable man than V.

"His wealth had been won by crooked ways,
Walking warily in the maze
Of London's mightier Monaco."

(Anglice: Stock Exchange, don't you know?)
So when Vane next sought Madelaine's face
Gracing their favourite watering-place,

"He found her sundered from his reach,
In the full vortex of the beach,
Where, to still more vacant fops,
London's painted Ethiops
Tuned their noisy serenade,
And of the sea a circus made,"

And knew at once that he was done
Brown by the affluent Harrington.
"Alas!" cried Vane,

"for him who is poor
To knock at the golden-hinged door
Of happiness is itself a sin.
Only the rich may enter in."

And so on Madelaine's wedding-night,
At Bournemouth, in the misty light,
Mortimer fired at Harrington,
And left the financier dead as a stone.
Such a story did Vane unlock
In passionate tones from the prisoner's dock

Before an amazingly patient judge,
Who never so much as whispered "Fudge!"
Mortimer Vane was condemned to die,
But, under the warder's very eye,
He swallowed poison just in time.
That is the end of the "Novel in Rhyme."

The principal charm of Upwardese
Resides in its choice periphrases.
Thus, novelists writing in prose would say
A "public-house," but the Upward way
Is to call it

"a Bacchic temple, where
All day a priestess debonaire
Glad with the vintages of France
Bright cups wherein the bubbles dance."

When some one wept,

"in a wild gush
The sluices of grief began to rush:"

While a telegram attains the state
Of "the russet envelope of fate."
People who like such tropes as these
Will fairly revel in Upwardese;
But others may show fatigue's worst signs
Ere they conquer the twice two thousand lines.

* * * * *
The Skipper's Wooing. By W. W. Jacobs.
(C. A. Pearson, Limited.)

From the point of view of pure art "The Brown Man's Servant," which is the second and shorter of the two stories in Mr. Jacobs's volume, makes the greater claim. It has a pretty touch on the uncanny. The characters are a Jew pawnbroker and a Burmese—the Brown Man—who wants a diamond which the Jew has got into his clutches and refuses to surrender. This is how the mysterious Brown Man is introduced:

"The cat, still dozing, became aware of a strong, strange odour. In a lazy fashion it opened one eye, and discovered that an old, shrivelled up little man, with a brown face, was standing by the counter. It watched him lazily, but warily, out of a half-closed eye, and then, finding that he appeared to be quite harmless, closed it again.

The intruder was not an impatient type of customer. He stood for some time gazing round him; then a thought struck him, and he approached the cat and stroked it with a masterly hand. Never, in the course of its life, had the animal met such a born stroker. Every touch was a caress, and a gentle thrum, thrum rose from its interior in response.

Something went wrong with the stroker. He hurt. The cat started up suddenly and jumped behind the counter. The dark gentleman smiled an evil smile, and, after waiting a little longer, tapped on the counter."

The Brown Man threatened to send a devil to work his revenge. That evening the cat goes apparently mad, and the Jew stumbles over its dead body on his way to bed. This is the prelude to a terrible night. I do not propose to give Mr. Jacobs away by revealing the form which the devil takes, but in the morning the Jew shoots himself. The story is told with considerable talent, tersely and without irrelevancies. Its companion is cast in a lighter vein and smells of sea-water, ropes' ends and shag tobacco. The skipper of a small coasting schooner has fallen in love with a Board-school teacher. She refuses to marry him until her long-lost father is found. The skipper proposes a reward to his crew, and the consequent adventures of Sam, Dick, the cook, and the boy Henry are, to my mind, immensely diverting. Henry, above all, in prosperity or adversity, is a fund of joy. Generally the laugh is on Henry's side, but when the gymnasium mistress carried him out of the garden with stolen apples rolling from his pocket, the tables were turned; for he met the cook outside. Here is a sample of Henry's wit and humour:

"They had got down to the river again, and he hesitated in front of a small beer-shop, whose half-open door and sanded floor offered a standing invitation to passers-by.

'Could you do a bottle o' ginger-beer?' inquired the mate, attracted in his turn.

'No,' said Henry shortly, 'I couldn't. I don't mind having what you're going to have.'

The mate grinned, and, leading the way in, ordered refreshment for two, exchanging a pleasant wink with the proprietor as that humorist drew the lad's half-pint in a quart pot.

'Ain't you goin' to blow the head off, sir?' inquired the landlord, as Henry, after glancing darkly into the depths and nodding to the mate, buried his small face in the pewter. 'You'll get your moustache all mussed up if you don't.'

The boy withdrew his face, and, wiping his mouth with the back of his hand, regarded the offender closely. 'So long as it don't turn it red, I don't mind,' he said patiently, 'and I don't think as 'ow your swipes would hurt anythin'.'

The Skipper's Wooing is extravaganza throughout, but it shows Mr. Jacobs to be possessed of real humour and humour of a more humorous sort than certain humorists have lately vouchsafed to us. Taken together, the two stories quite sustain the high promise of Many Cargoes.

* * * * *
Perpetua. By S. Baring-Gould.
(Isbister & Co.)

Mr. Baring-Gould is equally well known as a prolific writer of fiction and as an accomplished hagiologist. It is, perhaps, natural that, for once in a way, he should be tempted to combine the two rôles, and to take a saint, or an imagined saint, for the heroine of a romance. At Nîmes, in Provence, is a church dedicated to St. Perpetua. Mr. Baring-Gould chooses to distinguish this saint from the African martyr of that name, and connects her, for the purposes of his fiction, with the history of the Church in Gaul during the third century. At a festival of the local fountain-god Nemausus, Perpetua is chosen to be the victim of an annual sacrifice. She is rescued by a young lawyer, Æmilus; and hence arises an outcry against the Christians, and a persecution which ends in Perpetua's martyrdom.

Frankly, I do not think Mr. Baring-Gould's experiment altogether a successful one from the novel-reader's point of view. The plot is thin to the extent of exiguity. The motive, of a high-born pagan youth in love with, and half converted by, a Christian maiden, is hackneyed, and the scheme gives Mr. Baring-Gould no opportunity to introduce any of those wayward contorted characters in the painting of which his strength lies. But as an historical study of sub-apostolic Christianity the book has very considerable merits. Mr. Baring-Gould is steeped in ecclesiastical and antiquarian lore, and he succeeds in giving a vivid picture of the interesting period at which the first fervour of the Church had subsided, and its internal and external difficulties were beginning to grow thick upon it. He describes the cult of Nemausus, with its dainty and cruel rites, the religious guilds which were so prominent a feature of the century, a Christian agape—by no means, it would appear, an ascetic festival—a Roman prison with its barathrum, and a provincial amphitheatre. For the close of his story he borrows a pretty legend belonging to St. Eulalia of Merida, as to whom it is told that, while she lay naked in the arena, the unaccustomed snows fell to be her mantle.

"The dense cloud that filled the heavens began softly, soundlessly, to discharge its burden. First came, scarce noticed, sailing down a few large white flakes like fleeces of wool. Then they came fast, faster, ever faster. And now it was as though a white bridal veil had been let down out of heaven to hide from the eyes of the ravening multitude the spectacle of the agony of Christ's martyr. None could see across the arena; soon none could see obscurely into it. The snowflakes fell thick and dense, they massed as a white cornice on the parapet, they dropped on every head, they whitened the blood-stained, trampled sand. And all fled before the snow. First went a few in twos or threes; then whole rows stood up, and through the vomitories the multitude poured—freedmen, slaves, knights, ladies, flamines, magistrates; none could stand against the descending snow."

Perpetua should prove an excellent book for an Anglican working party. Personally, of course, I should much prefer it in some other form than that of a novel; but Mr. Baring-Gould probably knows his public, and knows that they will swallow nothing that is not presented to them as fiction, and almost anything that is.

* * * * *
The Crime and the Criminal. By Richard Marsh.
(Ward, Lock & Co.)

Mr. Marsh succeeds to the mantle of Charles Reade and the rest with an ingenious story of crime and detection. The mystery, indeed, of the murder becomes apparent to the experienced reader of sensational stories at an early stage; but this matters little, because the interest of the plot consists not in the question who committed the crime, but in its results. You have to grant Mr. Richard Marsh a good many initial improbabilities, but when you have done this, he manages to wind together the fortunes of some dozen of puppets in a highly subtle and intricate skein. They are puppets, of course, familiar and detestable. Here is a portrait of one of them:

"A man about the middle height, somewhat slightly built, in evening dress, with an orchid in his buttonhole—Mr. Cecil Pendarvon. Mr. Pendarvon was not bad-looking. He had a long, fair beard, which he had a trick of pulling with both his hands. His eyes were certainly not ugly, but to the close observer they conveyed an odd impression. As one watched them one began to wonder if they were the man's real eyes which one saw, or if the real eyes were behind them. Perhaps one had this feeling of wonder because, although there always was the light of laughter in Mr. Pendarvon's eyes, their real expression was one of such cold, passionless, unrelenting cruelty."

Mr. Cecil Pendarvon is, perhaps, the meanest villain in the piece; he is not, however, the principal villain. This distinction is reserved for Mr. Reginald Townsend, whose villainy almost wins to the heroic. At the very crisis of his fortunes, when the detective's hand is on his shoulder, he manages to destroy an enemy by dashing with him through the glass of a first-floor window.

"The drop from the window was only six or seven feet. By the time Mr. Holman had reached it Mr. Townsend was already again in the hands of the police. The detective shouted his instructions through the shattered pane—

'Put the handcuffs on him.'

A voice replied from below—

'They are on him. He has almost killed this other man.'

Mr. Townsend was heard speaking with a most pronounced drawl.

'Almost! Not quite! That's a pity. Still, 'twill serve. Officer, will you allow me to use my handkerchief; my mouth is bleeding?'

He succeeded, in spite of his handcuffed wrists, in withdrawing a handkerchief from an inner pocket of his coat. He pressed it, for a moment, to his lips. When he removed it, he tossed something into the air.

'Done you!' he cried. 'Hurrah!'

There was an exclamation from the officer who was in charge of him. 'He has taken something. I can smell it.'

'Yes,' said Mr. Townsend, 'I have taken leave.'

There was a small commotion. Mr. Townsend, reeling, would have fallen to the ground had he not been supported by the sergeant's arms. The man leaned over him to smell his breath. He, probably, was something of a chemist.

'Hydrocyanic acid!' he exclaimed. 'He is dead.'

The weak point in the book is the introduction of a Murder Club, founded on the Suicide Club of one of Stevenson's famous tales. This is out of keeping with the atmosphere of the rest of the narrative, and, to make it plausible, requires a whimsical imaginative touch, which Mr. Marsh has not at command.

* * * * *

Methodist Idylls. By Harry Lindsay.
(James Bowden.)

Mr. Lindsay's Methodist stories are told with great power and sympathy. He has given us a strangely old-fashioned picture of this Gloucestershire village life, with its supreme interest in the "Connexion"; where the personal concern of each member is in the saving or backsliding of his neighbour; where no punishment is so keenly felt as to have the "class-book taken away from him and his name struck off the plan"; and where religion and the language of religion are constantly on the lips. The figures described have a curious mixture of pathos and dignity, begotten of this religious interest; and the treatment also is dignified, breathing of the sympathy the author evidently has with those whose life he is describing.

The most successful of these idylls are perhaps "Aaron Priestly's Stewardship," "Removing Old Landmarks," "Ned Thornbury's Love Story," and "The Backslider"; but all are good. The first two have unfortunately rather too much resemblance to one another, each depicting the attempt of a younger generation to oust an old official—in the first case a "circuit steward," in the second a school "superintendent"—from his office. Aaron Priestly, the lawyer and man of means, who for forty years has been annually re-elected, as he repeats, "just for one more year," is a fine character, whose good deeds appear frequently throughout the volume. But when it is seriously suggested that a change in the "circuit steward" is desirable, he clings to office. When the crisis arrives, at Quarterly Meeting, Aaron's accounts, of which the grumblers complained that they had always been kept in ignorance, are produced and audited, and it is discovered for the first time that he had been all along making up a large adverse yearly balance out of his own pocket. But it was not this so much as the moral fervour of the man himself, and his deep spiritual conviction, that had earlier silenced the cabal; and it is for its picture of such mental states that Mr. Lindsay's book is principally notable.

"And are we yet alive?" was the hymn sung, and, when it was finished, the superintendent called upon Aaron to pray. It was a most unusual thing for the minister to ask the steward to pray, for it was generally one of the local brethren who was called upon; but there were those present who secretly commended the minister for so doing. It was catching the steward with guile. But the solemn sequel was not anticipated. Aaron's heart was almost too full for words, and for a space the brethren knelt in silence, no sound escaping him the while. A painful hush fell upon the assembly, and, when a few more moments of deep silence ensued, more than one of those present opened their eyes, and glanced up at Aaron. He was standing with both hands bearing down heavily upon the table in front of him, his usually ruddy-looking countenance blanched, and the nerves of his face twitching with strong emotion. Several times he essayed to speak and failed. Every man in the meeting guessed the truth, and a thrill of sympathy passed from heart to heart. A moment later and Aaron found utterance. 'Our Father which art in Heaven' . . .

Simeon Tandy is another of the lovable figures in the community. The place of the emotions in this Methodist life, and the influence of the revivalist element, may be illustrated by the passage in "Ned Thornbury's Love Story," where Selina Martin's singing in chapel carries away the congregation, and thus reconciles her lover's stern old mother to his choice:

"At length the singing was finished, and Selina resumed her seat in dead silence. Simeon Tandy thereupon rose in the pulpit and looked round upon the congregation with anxious face. 'Be there any lost sheep 'ere this mornin'?' he asked in a voice choked with pathos; 'any lost lambs what ha' wandered from th' fold? . . . After the beautiful way in which oor dear young sister ha' sung th' blessed Gospel, surely yo' can't doubt that th' Good Shepherd be seekin' yo'r souls . . . an' that He be anxious to restore yo' to th' fol' again? Sinner! . . . Nay, Brother! . . . Sister!

"Can yo' doubt that God is love
If to all His bowels move?"

'Won't yo' come back home, yo' pore, homeless wanderers? . . . Yo'll be sure o' a welcome. . . . Coom! . . . Who'll be th' first? . . . Th' big heart o' God throbs for yo'.' Then a marvellous thing happened—marvellous to those who know nothing of such things, but common enough among the 'people called Methodists.' In every part of the chapel men and women instantly rose to their feet, quite a score in all, and made their way to the penitent form, where they flung themselves down, crying aloud for mercy and pardon. The next instant the whole place was on 'fire.' Shouts of praise rang through the sacred building, the preaching service was immediately turned into a prayer-meeting, and that morning a score of souls went down to their houses justified."

There are half a dozen characters in these eleven stories who become familiar friends as we read on—Aaron Priestly, Simeon Tandy, Thomas Tarling, John Oakey, Janet Thornbury, Jethro Hawley—and this is true testimony to the human interest in these idylls. The book is certainly a very striking success in its own way.

* * * * *

A Child in the Temple. By Frank Mathew.
(John Lane.)

The title of this story suggests the infant Samuel, but the book is about other and more recent matters. Yet what it actually is about one would have difficulty in saying. There is, by way of prologue, an account of an old Irish nobleman entomologist, who has the customary broken-down fortunes and half-ruined house. This is well done, and the description of the childhood of Florence, the story's hero, who tells the tale, and Curly, his playmate, is pleasant too. But years pass and we are transported to the Temple, where a vagueness comparable only to a London fog sets in. During the remaining 150 pages many things happen, but one sees them as in a glass darkly. Persons to whom the reader is not introduced appear and disappear, and nothing is sufficiently explained. Mr. Mathew may retort that his intention was to leave an indistinct impression. Well, he has done so; but at the expense of at least one reader's interest. Here is a passage of more humour than relevance, showing how the "Child" (who is a grown man) is assured by a policeman that Kitty Moroney has not committed suicide:

"At the near end of the bridge I got out of the cab, and, accosting a stiff constable, asked had there been an accident lately.

"Accident?" said he sternly, "wot accident?"

"Well," said I airily, with a show of indifference, "I mean, has—that is—did anyone fall in the river?"

"Three," said he solemnly.

"Three!" I cried trembling, with all my fears coming back.

"Lawst week," he went on.

"I mean to-night."

"But you said lately," said he.

"Has anyone jumped into the river to-night?" I asked earnestly, and his stoical countenance altered a little, as if something was beginning to dawn on him.

Said he gloomily, "Might you be hawskin' about a beautiful gal?"

"Yes, yes."

"Wot was in furs?" he went on.

"The very one."

"Hand wot comes up in an 'ansom, hand 'ad been givin' the cabby too many drinks on the w'y?"

"Yes! yes! the same," I cried, though neither Kitty nor I had anything to do with the drinks.

The policeman turned his back on me suddenly, and looked away up the river; and then, in the words of the cabman, "that young copper 'e lawfed."

That laugh was so loud and abrupt, and so unprovoked by my tragical errand, that I believed he was mad; but he turned back to me, looking as stiff and solemn as ever.

"Young gent," said he sadly, "I've seen more of the world, so you'll excuse me if I speak like a fawther. It was crool of you not to have given that gal hall she could have possibly hawsked. I dessay, now, 't was a troifle like a necklice of diamonds that made you quarrel to-noight. Now that I've seen you, young gent, I can quoite hunderstawn'd 'ow hany lydy would tell you she'd jump into the Thames."

Drawing myself up to my full height, I gave him a scowl—though I felt it was wasted, for he was incredibly big.

"Then she has gone away?" I said sternly.

"She 'ave gone awy," he said stolidly.

"Where?" said I.

"Ome," said he. "'Aymarket. I 'eard 'er tellin' a cabby."

As I turned away he went on:

"When you want a gal to do you credit by drownin' 'erself for yer sake, you shouldn't give her such clothes; for 'ow could she be so 'ard-arted as to be spilin' those furs? There's more come to the bridge than will jump into the River," he said sadly, as I got into the cab. "You may bring a gal to the water, but you cawn't make her jump."

One drops the book at the end with the feeling that if the author had tried harder he might have made it so much better. Mr. Mathew's commas are too frequent. I advise him to study the writings of Mr. Pater as a means to reducing them.

* * * * *

The Adventure of the Broad Arrow. By Morley Roberts.
(Hutchinson & Co.)

Mr. Morley Roberts is at perpetual war with civilisation and the conventions of society, and his fury finds vent in a style which is always violent, and sometimes really strong. The central idea of this Australian story is an admirable one. Smith, a clergyman's son, and Mandeville, a baker from the Mile End-road, start off prospecting for gold, and, after penetrating far into the bush and nearly dying of thirst, come upon a strange tribe of white people, clad in skins, and using gold for their weapons and cooking utensils without any notion of its value. But it cannot be said that Mr. Morley Roberts has worked this excellent idea for quite all that it is worth. The value of the book would be immensely increased if the author had taken a little more trouble to work out the probable effects of three generations of savagery upon the descendants of criminals. The old man of the tribe of the "Brodarros" (a word handed down phonetically from convict forefathers) talks in the manner of Hiawatha, and not as one would expect a degenerated "lag" to speak. But the pictures of bush life are excellent, and the drought and desolation of the back blocks are admirably portrayed. If only Mr. Morley Roberts would divest himself of the delusion that everyone wants to contradict him he would be much pleasanter to read.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. MERRIMAN'S NEW NOVEL.

NOTICE.—A SECOND EDITION of

IN KEDAR'S TENTS,

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

AUTHOR of "The SOWERS," "WITH EDGED TOOLS," &c., crown 8vo, 6s.,

Is now ready at all Booksellers'.

"An excellent romance, at once virile and beguiling."—Daily Mail.
"The story is powerfully told, and charming throughout." Every scene is real, every character alive."—Scotsman.

STUDIES in BOARD SCHOOLS. By

CHARLES MORLEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Morley has navigated fresh streams of London life hitherto unexplored, and, bringing a light heart and a humour-loving imagination to bear upon his observations, has been able to make a vivid impression by his lively descriptions."—Daily News.

ONE of the BROKEN BRIGADE. By

CLIVE PHILLIPPS-WOLLEY, Author of "Snap," "The Queensberry Cup," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

POT-POURRI from a SURREY

GARDEN. By Mrs. C. W. EARLE. With an Appendix by Lady CONSTANCE LYTON. FIFTH EDITION now ready. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

From the SPECTATOR.—"Space fails to show the excellence in every department of Mrs. Earle's practical advice; but no woman who loves her house, her garden, and her children should fail to read this book."

DICTIONARY of NATIONAL BIO-

GRAPHY. Edited by SIDNEY LEE. Volume 52 (SHEARMAN—SMIRKE). 16s. net, in cloth; or in half-morocco, marbled edges, 20s. net.

Vol. I. was published on January 1, 1885, and a further Volume will be issued Quarterly until the completion of the Work.

FRANCE UNDER LOUIS XV. By

JAMES BRECK PERKINS, Author of "France Under the Regency." In 2 vols., crown 8vo, 10s.

CORNHILL MAGAZINE.

For OCTOBER.—Price One Shilling.—CONTENTS.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR (October).

AGINCOURT: an Anniversary Study. By the Hon. J. W. FORESTUS.

THE SEPOY REVOLT at DELHI, MAY, 1857: a Personal Narrative. Part II. By Colonel E. VIBART.

THE ROMANCE of RACE. By GRANT ALLER.

THE FROZEN MAN. By ERNEST G. HENHAM.

THE MECHANISM of the STOCK EXCHANGE.

A NIGHT in VENICE. By M. P. SKEEL.

PELOTA. By CHARLES EDWARDS.

SOME SPIES. By ANDREW LANG.

A GENTLE ADVISER. By E. V. LUCAS.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS. Chapters XXVIII.

XXX. (Conclusion). By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," &c.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

DOWNEY & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

MR. FITZGERALD MOLLOY'S NEW BOOK.

THE ROMANCE of the IRISH STAGE: with

Pictures of the Irish Capital in the Eighteenth Century. By the author of "The Most Gorgeous Lady Blessington," &c. 3 vols., with 2 Portraits, 21s. [This day.]
"The Romance of the Irish Stage" has no dull chapters; it is from first to last very amusing reading."—Daily News.

NEW FICTION.

ANOTHER'S BURDEN. By James Payn. 3s. 6d.

"A story deriving its charm from its simple directness, its unaffected style, its subtle and truthful touches of character, combined with that rare faculty, the power to bring out with a few telling strokes the full pathos of a touching situation."—Daily News.

A STORY OF THE IRISH REBELLION.

NINETY-EIGHT: being the Recollections of

CORMAC CAHIR FALY (late Colonel in the French Service of that awful period). With 12 Illustrations by A. D. McCormick. 6s. [This day.]

STORIES OF GIBRALTAR.

TALES of the ROCK. By Mary Anderson.

Illustrated by B. S. Le Fanu. 3s. 6d.

"Written with a simple direct brevity that is exceedingly telling."

Manchester Guardian.

A MINING ROMANCE.

THE GOLDEN CROCODILE. By F. M. Trimmer.

6s. [Second Edition now ready.]
"It is among the best specimens of the romance of Mammon."—World.

12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MESSRS. C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S NEW BOOKS

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries.

THE RAID of the "DETRIMENTAL." By the Earl of DESART. Author of "Lord and Lady Piccadilly," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

In this story the Earl of Desart has made a new departure. The tale deals with the True History of the Great Disappearance of 1862, and is related by several of those implicated and others. The story is so fantastic and novel, the dialogue so brilliant, that it recalls the former successes of the author in the particular field which is almost his own.

JOHN of STRATHBOURNE. By R. D. Chetwode. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

In this story Mr. Chetwode has fully caught the romantic spirit of the time when "The Thousand Devils" flourished in Old France, and furnishes a very pretty love story as a set-off to the foibles of the villains whom he depicts. The hero's ride to Paris (he is half dead from a recent wound), when he hears that the King has commanded the heroine to choose a husband on a certain evening, is one of the most exciting chapters in modern fiction; and the contrast between his mud-stained appearance and the gay courtiers of the King in their jewelled dresses admirably wrought out.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS'S LOVE AFFAIR. By J. MACLAREN COBBAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

In his new story Mr. Maclaren Cobban makes a hero of a shopman. The shopman in question is of good family, and sells lace for a West-End firm. He first meets the heroine (the Princess) when she is bicycling, and out of the rencontre Mr. Maclaren Cobban spins a very dainty love story.

THE INVISIBLE MAN. By H. G. Wells. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

In this latest work of this clever author he describes how, if a man becomes invisible, it does not follow that the clothes he wears become invisible also, and on this supposition has woven a story that will hold the reader with breathless interest from start to finish.

"The story is told with that fertility of imaginative resource which has made Mr. Wells conspicuous in this domain of fiction."—Daily Chronicle.

"The author's power of setting some incredible horror in the most every-day surroundings serves him well on this occasion. The tragedy is always on the brink of farce until we reach the last page and a piece of wholly pathetic tragedy. The hunted terror of so late is caught at last, and most pitiful is the re-entry he makes into the visible world he left so boldly."—Saturday Review.

FORTUNE'S FOOTBALLS. By G. B. Burgin. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"One always takes up a novel by Mr. G. B. Burgin with the comfortable self-assurance that his pages are certain to provide one with healthy amusement...." Fortune's Footballs amply fulfils such an expectation."—Daily Mail.

"We recognise in its pages the peculiar power which made Mr. Burgin's Canadian tales so attractive and even fascinating...." Mr. Burgin is producing a series of books that must place him very high among the favourite authors of the day."—Liverpool Mercury.

THE TYPEWRITER GIRL. By Olive Pratt Rayner. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Brilliantly clever...." The Typewriter Girl is the work of a cultured scholar, who can be academic without pedantry, who knows human nature and can interpret it truly, and who can visualize what appears on the surface a commonplace theme with that deep and earnest heartiness which is, after all, the one convincing characteristic of good fiction."—Daily Mail.

"There is not a dull page in the book, and it is one that is well suited to take a foremost place in the lists of a firm which has only just undertaken the publishing of library books on a large scale."—Sunday Times.

"Its manner is exceptionally winning. It possesses a fresh felicity of style, a piquant novelty and charm of outlook that mark it out from the soon unremembered 'books of the hour.' It has a flavour of 'modernity' that is lovable, and of culture that has heartened and widened, not spoiled, its humanity. Its hero looks on London—and Surrey—with eyes as fresh as Chaucer's, with a sweet, perverse independence and winning womanly romance, that have amply compensated us for the hideous crudities of all kinds in the 'revoluted' women's books of half a dozen seasons. Apart from the charm of personality it discloses, it is comforting and soothing to meet a woman whose limp, open-air English shows that she possesses an unerring instinct—or art—for the poetry and possibilities of words."—Sun.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOING. By W. W. Jacobs, Author of "Many Cargoes." Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"It contains scenes which we shall not be able to recall without a smile for many weeks to come.... It is a good story, well told, and full of humour and drollery."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Jacobs has taken to his heart those who go down to the Channel in ships, the sailor-men of the coasting schooner, and he is in the way of making them his own people. He has watched them with the sympathetic eyes of a friend—eyes not too keen for their faults, the smudges in the human documents—and the result is a humane proportion in the characters, whole pictures of the men.... The story is full of simple human nature—human nature in no stress of emotion, in no process of development, offering little scope for subtle analysis but giving full play to Mr. Jacobs's pleasant, penetrating sense of humour; and if the fun of the misadventures of the crew seems a little easy, the more delicate touches in the wooing and the conversations show a very happy insight.... The style of the book is lucid and easy; it is careful, thoughtful writing, showing no laboured trace of the pains spent on it. It is a piece of good work."—Saturday Review.

AN AMERICAN EMPEROR. By Louis Tracy, Author of "The Final War." Square crown 8vo, cloth, 16 Full-Page Illustrations, 6s.

"A bold and lively romance. Its hero is a charming American millionaire, who for the love of a woman seeks to gain the throne of France. He has the wealth of a Cæsar, and does not mind spending it. The reader soon gets interested in his campaign, the details of which are not without a certain air of truthfulness despite the essential extravagance of the main idea. The story is cleverly told, and is well illustrated."—Yorkshire Post.

QUEEN of the JESTERS. By Max Pemberton. Crown 8vo, cloth, illustrated, 6s.

"Mlle. de Montessen is an altogether delightful and high-spirited young woman, and Mr. Pemberton 'sets out' her adventures with exhilarating briskness and crispness."—Daily Chronicle.

"This writer is seen at his best in 'Queen of the Jesters.'.... The book is one to be enjoyed by every one who takes it up."—Scotsman.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

HURST &amp; BLACKETT'S LIST.

NEW WORK BY H. D. TRAILL.

Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW FICTION, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. By H. D. TRAILL, Author of "The New Lucian," "The Life of Sir John Franklin," &c.

"In a volume of 'Essays on Literary Subjects' by Mr. Traill, we expect to find much sound, robust, and well informed criticism, and great felicity of expression, and in the present volume the expectation is abundantly fulfilled."—Times, September 3.

"Mr. Traill's volume of criticism is ten times more entertaining to any one who cares about literature than ninety per cent. of moderately successful novels."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW WORK BY MRS. CUTHELL.

Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

IN CAMP and CANTONMENT. Stories of Foreign Service. By EDITH E. CUTHELL, Author of "Only a Guard-room Dog," "The Wee Widow's Cruise," &c.

"Mrs. Cuthell has evidently not lived in India to no purpose, and as she combines a keen judgment of character with a clear perception of a dramatic situation, she is to be congratulated on having displayed these qualities in a very entertaining volume."—Weekly Sun.

NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK.

Now ready, in 1 vol. small 4to, extra cloth, gilt top, price HALF-A-GUINEA.

WOMEN NOVELISTS of QUEEN VICTORIA'S

REIGN. A Book of Appreciations. The SISTERS BRONTE, by Mrs. OLIPHANT. GEORGE ELIOT, by Mrs. LYNN LINTON. Mrs. GASKELL, by EDNA LYALL. Mrs. CRAIK, by Mrs. PARR. And other Essays by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE, ADELINE SERGEANT, Mrs. MACQUOID, Mrs. ALEXANDER, and Mrs. MARSHALL.

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Portrait of Author, 12s.

AN OLD SOLDIER'S MEMORIES. By S. H. JONES-PARRY, J.P., D.L., late Captain Royal Dublin Fusiliers, Author of "My Journey Round the World," &c.

"The author is able to impart a considerable degree of freshness to the story of his varied experiences in Burmah, the Crimea, and the Indian Mutiny."—Scotsman.

NEW AND POPULAR SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

THE SHOWMAN'S DAUGHTER. By Scott Graham, Author of "The Golden Milestone," "The Sandiliff Mystery," &c.SUNSET. By Beatrice Whitby, Author of "The Awakening of Mary Fenwick," "One Reason Why," &c. Ready October 8.THE CLAIM of ANTHONY LOCHART. By Adeline SERGEANT, Author of "Sir Anthony," "Caspar Brooke's Daughter," &c. SECOND EDITION.WHERE the SURF BREAKS. By Mary F. A. Tench.*ONE HEART—ONE WAY. By W. Raisbeck Sharer.*SALTED WITH FIRE. By George Macdonald, LL.D.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, price 5s.

DAVID ELGINBROD.
ROBERT FALCONER.ALEC FORBES
SIR GIBBIE.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, 6s.

TO RIGHT THE WRONG.
DONOVAN.
WE TWO.IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT ERRANT.
WON BY WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

WORKS BY THE LATE MRS. OLIPHANT.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITION, uniformly bound in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price HALF-A-CROWN. Now ready at all Booksellers'.

ADAM GRAEME.
LAIRD OF NORLAW.
AGNES.LIFE OF IRVING.
A ROSE IN JUNE.
PHEBE JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

The following Cheap Editions are now ready. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, red cloth, price HALF-A-CROWN.

GRANDMOTHERS MONEY. By F. W. ROBINSON.
NO CHURCH. By F. W. ROBINSON.BARBARA'S HISTORY. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.
LORD BRACKENBURY. By AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

MARGARET AND HER BRIDESMAIDS. By the Author of "The Valley of a Hundred Fires."

THE VALLEY OF A HUNDRED FIRES. By the Author of "Margaret and Her Bridesmaids."

THROUGH THE LONG NIGHT. By Mrs. E. LYNN LINTON.

HURST &amp; BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1897.

No. 1326, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . . . .	0 18 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . . . .	0 18 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

IN connexion with the review of Mr. Meredith's Selected Poems, on another page, it may be remarked here that Mr. Meredith's poetical career extends over a much longer period than many of his readers suppose. His first volume of poems appeared in 1851, or forty-six years ago. It was entitled simply Poems. Modern Love and Poems and Ballads came ten years later. Then after a long break, filled gloriously with prose, we have had in the past dozen or so: A Reading of Earth, Jump to Glory Jane, Poems and Lyrics of the Joy of Earth, a revised re-issue of Modern Love, and certain pieces published in periodicals. In the Selected Poems a list of the parent volumes might have been given.

THE last paragraph of the preface to the second edition of The Gods, Some Mortals, and Lord Wickenham, is incorrectly printed. It should read: "The story is one which might have happened better in many ways, but which happened, nevertheless, in the way described. Again: it does not claim to be the picture of a whole society, but a study of a small circle of individuals."

THERE is a foolishly extravagant article on Adam Lindsay Gordon in Temple Bar. Gordon wrote some vigorous verse, which we are glad to remember—such verse as:

"And the long lithe sword in the hand became
As a leaping light, as a falling flame,
As a fire through the flax that hasted;
Slender and shining and beautiful,
How it shore through shivering casque and skull,
And never a stroke was void or null,
And never a thrust was wasted."

But he also wrote a deal of trash, and although Mr. C. R. Haines, the author of this appreciation spatters his pages with such doggerel of Gordon's as—

"Life is mostly froth and bubble,
Two things stand like stone:
KINDNESS in another's trouble,
COURAGE in one's own";

and,

"The valour from virtue that sunders
Is reft of its nobler part,
And Lancelot's arm may work wonders,
But braver is Galahad's heart";

we will not quarrel with him on that account now. But when he announces that Gordon's verse is "infinitely preferable to the 'obscene ravings' of Walt Whitman" we must protest. It is time such by-blow meaningless insults to that fine and fearless genius, that "free old hawk," ceased. They make us tired.

It is probable that many people have been puzzled by seeing that Mr. Hall Caine's novel, The Christian, is still running in the Windsor Magazine, and that many chapters are yet needed to complete it in its serial form. We believe that The Christian will be completed in the Windsor in November—that is to say, four months after its appearance in book form. The circumstance is, no doubt, an unusual one, though it is not without precedent. One popular error, however, should be corrected. Messrs. Ward & Lock are not aggrieved, as has been stated, by the early appearance of the story as a book. Nor did its publication in any way surprise them. They knew from the first that it would be published by Mr. Heinemann in August, and they do not regard this state of things as prejudicial to their interests.

ONE hundred and fifty thousand copies of Lorna Doone at sixpence are about to be distributed among bookshops and bookstalls by Messrs. Sampson, Low & Co. This enterprise means, we hope, renewed popularity for Mr. Blackmore's romance. The story was published twenty-eight years ago, and its vitality is as sound as ever. The democratic edition now before us is accompanied by both the preface of 1869 and of 1873. The latter is well known, but we are tempted to print it once more as an example, just now much needed, of literary humility:

"Few things have surprised me more, and nothing has more pleased me, than the great success of this simple tale.

"For truly it is a grand success, to win the attention and kind regard, not of the general public only, but also of those who are at home with the scenery, people, life, and language, wherein a native cannot always satisfy the natives.

"Therefore any son of Devon may imagine, and will not grudge, the writer's delight at hearing from a recent visitor to the west, that 'Lorna Doone, to a Devonshire man, is as good as clotted cream, almost!'

"Although not half so good as that, it has entered many a tranquil, happy, pure, and hospitable home; and the author, while deeply grateful for this genial reception, ascribes it partly to the fact that his story contains no word, or thought, disloyal to its birthright in the fairest county of England."

Mr. Blackmore's new romance, Dariel, was issued yesterday.

MR. GEORGE BERNARD SHAW's habit—a habit shared by other versatile and critical minds—of judging his work impersonally and exoterically is exemplified by the title of his new volume. It is called Plays: Pleasant and Unpleasant.

WE desire to draw attention to an article in the Pall Mall Gazette of last Wednesday, called "The Five Odes of Keats." Literary criticism so luminous, so penetrating, so sensitive, so judicial, so coloured by temperament, is rare in these days of hurried reviewing.

THE letter from Mr. Kipling which is prefixed to a forthcoming work on Newfoundland may give the death-blow to the word "Colonies." Mr. Kipling objects to it. "I dislike the word 'Colonies,'" he writes, "and if you look through my verses you will find I very seldom use it. It is out of date and misleading, besides being provincial." Yet it would be hard to find a better. "Greater Britain" carries the same meaning, but is clumsy.

A YEAR or two ago we used to hear that the British Museum Reading Room was being so overrun with readers that space and comfort were becoming seriously restricted. It appears that the tide has turned. From the annual Blue Book relating to the Museum we learn that the number of visitors to the Reading Room in the past year has been 191,363, being 3,000 less than in 1895, and 11,000 less than in 1894. The decrease is believed to be due to the rise of local libraries in London. But it would appear that these attract only a certain outer fringe of students. The hard readers, compilers, and copyists are more strenuous than of old, for while the number of visitors is less, the attendants have to supply more books than ever.

It might be said off-hand that something is wrong with drawings that, drawn and reproduced on one scale, can suddenly be reduced to something less than a quarter of the original size. Yet we cannot see much to find fault with in the tiny re-issue of The Rape of the Lock, with Mr. Beardsley's illustrations, which Mr. Smithers has just put forth. One or two plates may, it is true, be a little crowded; but "The Baron's Prayer," "The Toilet," and "The Dream," certainly gain in delicacy and charm. It makes an exquisite little book.

WE have in this country no novelist, and certainly no woman novelist, whose popularity can be compared with that of "Gyp" in France. Novels are there published at a lower price, it is true, but relatively—considering the thriftier nature of the French—the cost is about the same. Before us lies a list of forty-three of "Gyp's" books. Here are some figures: Autour du Divorce, 47th edition; Autour du Mariage, 91st ed.; Bijou, 28th ed.; Le Bonheur de Ginette, 27th ed.; Un Homme Délicat, 22nd ed.; Joies Confugales, 21st ed.; Joies d'Amour, 27th ed.; Leurs Ames, 26th ed.; Pas Jalouse, 21st ed.; Petit Bob, 46th ed.; and Le Mariage de Chiffon, 45th ed.

IN re-issuing Matthew Arnold's Friendship's Garland Messrs. Smith & Elder deserve the gratitude of those readers who have succeeded so far only in hearing of the book. The letters forming this delightful volume appeared in the Pall Mall Gazette at the time of the Franco-Prussian War. They were published in 1871, and for many years have been out of print. Although their subjects are out of date—people are no longer much disturbed about marrying deceased wives' sisters, and Dissenters are no longer the game they were—the delicious rallery of the book will always be timely. Wit, as has been said, is the best antiseptic.

WE have said much lately concerning the editions of Scott which are now in preparation. Burns also is stirring the publishers to extraordinary activity. We review Messrs. Henley & Henderson's Centenary Burns this week; on our table lies The Ayrshire Homes and Haunts of Burns, fresh from Messrs. Putnam's; an egregious study of Burns's "Clorinda" appeared a few weeks ago; Mr. Nimmo announces a Life of Burns's friend, George Thomson, by Mr. J. Cuthbert Hadden; Mr. J. M. Robertson's New Essays towards a Critical Method, reviewed in these columns last week, contain an inquiry into R. L. Stevenson's estimate of the poet; and Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton promise Robert Burns and Mrs. Dunlop, a collection of letters edited by Mr. W. Wallace. And probably there are forthcoming other kindred works of which we know nothing. Yet it is doubtful if "Holy Willie's Prayer" finds many new readers.

MR. ARTHUR MORRISON'S Child of the Jago is appearing in a Norwegian newspaper, called Verdens Gang. A Child of the Jago comes out in Norwegian as Et Fattigbarn. The copyright law has not yet reached Norway, but Mr. Morrison has nevertheless received a small sum from the proprietor of Verdens Gang—not very much, but enough to show that Verdens Gang is an honourable paper.

It has been decided to discontinue the publication of the Progressive Review, the issue of September 1 being the last.

MRS. OLIPHANT'S two volumes of The Annals of a Publishing House: William Blackwood and his Sons—their Magazine and their Friends will be published on October 12. These two volumes were written and partly revised by Mrs. Oliphant, and they bring the story of the Blackwood house and of Maga down to the death of Major Blackwood in 1861. The titles of some of the chapters—"The Tales of my Landlord," "The Magazine," "John Gibson Lockhart," "Christopher North," "The Ettrick Shepherd," "William Maquinn," "Coleridge—De Quincey"—indicate the scope of vol. i.; while in vol. ii., in addition to an account of later contributors, such as Samuel Warren, Alison, Douglas Jerrold, Bulwer Lytton, George Eliot, the biographer tells of the personal and domestic life of the Blackwood family, with whom, in later years, she herself was on terms of close and affectionate intimacy.

MR. GEORGE GISSING'S visit to Italy in search of health and strength will, we trust, prove successful.

THE Ruskin books which Mr. George Allen announces for this season are the fourth, fifth, and sixth volumes of the new and cheaper edition of Modern Painters; Lectures on Landscape, delivered at Oxford in January and February, 1871, with twenty photogravure plates and two in colour; and The Bible References of John Ruskin, a compilation from Mr. Ruskin's works.

SEVERAL members of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association Committee, in charge of the memorial to mark the birth-place of James Hogg, the Ettrick shepherd, at Ettrick Hall, favour, says the Westminster Gazette, an obelisk with a medallion. The proprietor and tenant of the ground have each given consent to the proposed memorial, which is being industriously furthered by Mr. Thomas Usher, secretary, and the Rev. Robert Borland, Yarrow. A sum of £100 is required, part of which is already subscribed. The house in which Hogg was born, in 1770, no longer exists, the only remnant being part of the jamb of the old kitchen door, with letters "J. H." scratched upon it, which has been built into the dyke at the roadside.

NEW YEAR'S DAY will witness the issue of the first number of another new sixpenny weekly, entitled Finance. Its name sufficiently denotes its purpose.

THE following conversation took place recently between a reader and the chief librarian of the — Free Public Library, London:

Reader: "Will you, please, let me have Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship—Carlyle's translation?"

(Librarian brings a volume, and hands it to reader.)

R.: "But this is only half the book. I want the whole of it!" (A portion of Wilhelm Meister had been bound up with another Carlyle volume.)

L.: "This is all I can give you. The remainder of the book is in the next volume. We only issue one volume at a time."

R.: "Really! And am I to take away a couple of hundred pages or so of Wilhelm Meister, and when I have read it come back for the remainder?"

L.: "That is what you must do. Our rules only permit us to issue one volume at a time, except in the case of fiction, each work of which is issued complete."

R.: "But Wilhelm Meister is fiction."

L. (examining the book): "Er—yes, but, as I have said, it is bound up with something else."

R.: "Well, it seems a most ridiculous rule, particularly when it has become the fashion for librarians to decry the large amount of fiction asked for by the public in preference to more solid literature."

L.: "It's the rule, sir. But there's another translation in the library, if you would like to have it."

R. (despairingly): "Well, thanks, I'll take it."

L. (brings another dust-begrimed volume): "This is Goethe's translation."

R.: "What? I really wasn't aware that Goethe had been so diligent as to himself make a translation into English."

(Librarian's attention is suddenly distracted by another borrower.)

The new volume turned out to be Dillon Boylan's translation in Bohn's series.

CLOUGH AND HIS DEFENDER.

IN a recent review of Mr. John Mackinnon Robertson's volume, New Essays towards a Critical Method, an allusion was made to the somewhat curious appreciation of Arthur Hugh Clough's verse which it contains. Clough's reputation might be thought to have so waned and dwindled during the last twenty years among all classes of readers that it might seem by this time to have well-nigh reached its vanishing point. As a member of a famous group of Rugby men, he is held by many to have been thrust into a position of eminence which his work never really merited, and the charm of his personality seems, during his life, and even after his death, to have enlisted for him the rather indiscriminating admiration of a powerful circle, especially among Oxford men, who exerted themselves to thrust him down the throats of an undiscerning public. But the cult of Clough has died entirely in the Oxford of to-day, and if it lingers at all among men of letters, it seldom makes itself heard. By most of us Clough, particularly Clough the poet, has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. One or two of his lyrics in the Arnold manner are occasionally quoted, and one may admire the dexterity and adroitness of The Latest Decalogue. But The Bothie of Tober-na-Vuolich (which we cannot pronounce) and the Amours de Voyage (which we cannot read) are dead past recall.

This, we say, was, or so we thought, the general opinion. The Bothie, as we all know, is not poetry, or anything at all like poetry—it is burdened with a detestable metre. No one, we imagine, at this time of day defends the classical hexameter as a possible form in English verse, and it is exceptionally tiresome reading. Mr. Robertson, however, holds a different opinion. He does not, of course, defend the Bothie or the Amours de Voyage as poetry. That, we imagine, is past the capacity of even the most tolerant or the most eccentric critic. He therefore throws them overboard as poems, and proceeds to eulogise them as prose! Let us quote his own words in order to be sure to do him justice.

"I do not believe that, in writing the Bothie and the Amours, he (Clough) was aiming at strictly poetical effects at all. This opinion has been ere now expressed, Mr. Swinburne having suggested in his essay on Mr. Arnold's poems that Clough meant his hexameters to be regarded as 'graduated prose,' and not as poetry; on which Prof. Masson rejoins to the effect that such a view is quite out of the question. But if, instead of saying anything about 'graduated prose,' a phrase which simply raises the further question why Clough did not write graduated prose pure and simple, if that were the kind of effect he wanted; if, rather, we say that he aimed at an effect which was not poetic, I think we should be stating the plain truth."

We confess that all this certainly does incline us to "raise the further question" why Clough did not write prose, graduated or otherwise, if the effect he aimed at was not a poetic one. And without troubling to go into the question of what Clough had or had not in his mind in the years 1848 and 1849, a question which obviously admits of no sort of final solution, we may say at once that the important point to us is that the effect which he did achieve was certainly not poetic. But Mr. Robertson's contention raises, to our thinking, the much more interesting question whether it is any defence of a poem to say that it makes excellent prose fiction. In fact, when you have settled in your own mind that a poem is not a poem, is there any ground left on which you can defend it? Mr. Robertson maintains that there is; that analysis of character, truthful observation, depth of suggestion, and the rest suffice to raise Clough's detestable hexameters into the region if not of great poets at least of great masters of fiction. The theory is an ingenious one, but in our opinion somewhat dangerous. It is a little like praising a picture while admitting that it is abominably painted, a thing which is seldom done at least by the critical.

But it is evident that Clough's hexameters do not offend Mr. Robertson in the way, or at least to the extent, that they offend many people. He quotes, apparently without a shudder, even with enjoyment, such lines as these:

"Allah is great no doubt, and juxta position his prophet.
Ah, but the women, alas! they don't look at it in that way.
Juxta position is great; but, my friend, I fear me, the maiden
Hardly would think or acknowledge the love that sought to obtain her,
Not as the thing he would wish, but the thing
he must even put up with. . . .
Ah, ye feminine souls, so loving, and so exact, . . .
Since we cannot escape, must we even submit to deceive you?
Since, so cruel is truth, sincerity shocks and revolts you,
Will you have us your slaves to lie to you,
flatter, and — leave you?"

And this again we choose from his selections at random. The others are quite as bad:

"I do not like him much, though I do not dialike being with him,
He is what people call, I suppose, a superior man, and
Certainly seems so to me; but I think he is terribly selfish."

It is certainly as well that Mr. Robertson did not take up the cudgels for this on poetic grounds. But is it legitimate even as prose? Will it stand the great test? Can one read it?

That seems to us to be the crucial point with regard to Clough. Can anyone with an ear of even ordinary sensitiveness read stuff of this kind for any length of time with patience? Can he read it without actual suffering? We think not. We quite admit that in all long narrative poems, from Homer downwards, there will always be found passages here and there deficient in interest, deficient in charm, unsatisfactory in rhythm. The hand of the potter will shake now and then. But mere doggerel is unpardonable, and this stuff is mere doggerel. Mr. Robertson says it is amusing doggerel. That is a matter of taste, and on a question of humour it is impossible to dogmatise. We fail to find it amusing. It may be urged that in satirical verse and in humorous verse poetical excellence is often sacrificed, and that effects, especially in satire, are often produced by means that would be entirely unpermissible in lyric or even in heroic verse. This is true enough, but satire, too, has its rules and its limitations, and, as long as it employs metre at all, must reckon with metre for its effects. The success of Juvenal, the success of Johnson, the success of Hudibras, is achieved by means of the verse, and not in spite of it. Mr. Robertson, however, would have us believe that the splendours of the Bohis and the Amours exist in spite of their metrical form. Indeed, we gather that he would have been only too glad—as also should we—if Clough had written them in honest homely prose. He does not venture to defend the hexameter form even for analytical fiction. He merely recognises, in Clough's case, what he calls its necessity. We, unfortunately, recognise nothing of the kind. In our view Clough was the victim of a fatal delusion with regard to classical hexameters in believing that they could be successfully employed in English. It may have been partly what Mr. Robertson calls "the exuberance of the holiday-making undergraduate," which caused him to attempt to employ the metre of Homer and Virgil in English poetry, but it must also have implied a certain defective sensibility to sound and rhythm not to have promptly abandoned the experiment.

It is inconceivable that anyone of real poetic instinct and feeling should have found the hexameters of the Bohis either impressive or amusing. Mr. Robertson says that Clough probably did not think hexameters, quid hexameters, "tractable to serious (English) verse." Our contention is that he ought not to have considered them tractable to English verse at all, and that if he did so originally, the Bohis, and the rest, not to mention Longfellow's Evangeline, should have sufficed to undeceive him. If his sense of rhythm was not strong enough to save him from so unwise an adventure, his sense of humour—Mr. Robertson declares that he had a sense of humour—should have been strong enough for the purpose. Altogether we are afraid that the zeal of his new defender will not avail to put Clough once more upon the pedestal. In the words of Swift—

"His kind of wit is out of date."

And so is his kind of verse.

A PROVENÇAL POET.

THE author of Calendau and Lou Pouémo d'ou Ross is one of those rare writers who possesses a personality akin to Stevenson's: he has rarely left the white freestone house where he was born in 1830, and which stands at an angle of the road for Baux and Saint Rémy, a short distance from the Provençal village of Maillane, and yet he has compelled friendship wherever his poems have been read. Frédéric Mistral has for many years had admirers in England; his chief poem has been read here, if not in the original, at least in several excellent translations. Leaving out of consideration the much-debated question as to whether or not the Provençal Renaissance, of which he is the head, is doomed to failure, all lovers of poetry cannot but be attracted by the poet who, in Mirèio, has presented to them with so much truth and seriousness the sum of his efforts to rejuvenate a lost and degenerate idiom.

What is known as the Provençal Renaissance dates from 1854, in which year Joseph Roumanille—a Saint-Rémy schoolmaster, whose first burst of song in the Provençal dialect was inspired by the needs of his aged mother, who had forgotten what little French she had learned at school—called a meeting of the poets of Southern France. Mistral, as an old pupil of Roumanille and as one of the most prolific contributors to Li Prouvençalo, a literary journal which had been founded two years before, was among the number. It was at this gathering that the poets of the Midi decided to call themselves Félibres—a word the derivation of which is wrapped in obscurity. Some have very ingeniously suggested that it is a contraction of the last two words in the phrase homme de foi libre, indicating that these poets emancipate themselves from all literary traditions; others, probably with more reason, have contended that it is derived from the Provençal fairé, "to make," and libré, "a book." The doubt which surrounds their collective name cannot, however, be said to extend to their aims. Briefly, the Félibre poet, whether he be Provençal, Languedocian, or Gascon, would be regarded as the modern troubadour of France; he writes his poems in the dialect of his particular district, drawing his inspiration, for the most part, from nature; and, above all, he cherishes the ideal of preserving his patois as a language distinct from French.

"I offer thee Mirèio—it is my heart and spirit—

The blossom of my years:

A cluster of Crau grapes, with all the green leaves near it,

To thee a peasant bears."

So runs the dedication to Lamartine of Mistral's Mirèio, which, upon its publication in 1859, marked him out as the successor to Roumanille. The author calls himself a peasant, but he is really no more a peasant than Jean Paul Courier was a wine-dresser. It is not difficult to point to the great models which inspired his song. Mistral graduated at the Universities of Montpellier and Aix, and is a man of great classical accomplishments. In reading Mirèio, which called from Lamartine the words "Un grand poète épique est né, un vrai poète homérique en ce temps-ci; un poète né, comme les hommes de Deucalion, d'un caillou de la Crau," we are continually reminded of the Odyssey.

Mirèio has now been translated into every language of any literary pretension. There are three English editions—a prose rendering by Mr. C. H. Grant; a second version in metre by Mr. H. Crichton, which appeared in 1868; and a third translation in verse by Miss Harriet Waters Preston, which appeared in 1890.

Mistral among the Félibres in their annual visits to the Midi, or at the feast of the Sainto Estello which commemorates their Renaissance every seven years, is a presence which inspires the most remarkable enthusiasm. These literary gatherings are much anticipated by the people of Provence. It must not be thought that only a limited number of lettrés take part in them: they have become as it were national, and you will find the peasant quite as willing as the cultured Félibre to take an interest in the present beauty and past history of his district. Though not invariably, yet in nine cases out of ten, visits are paid upon these occasions to the historic surroundings of Avignon, Agen, and Arles, or other places rich in Roman remains, notwithstanding the fact that every stone may be as well known as their own paternal mas. Of late years the performance of Greek plays in the Roman theatre at Orange has been considered one of the most important artistic events of the year in the South of France, and it is greatly owing to Mistral that the Greek drama has been restored there.

The composite body of these revivalists does not solely consist of poets; there are Félibresses as well as Félibres. The former are most en évidence at the Cours d'Amour, the most idealistic of the revivals which have been made by these Provençal poets. These Cours d'Amour are the modern substitute for the pastoral courts which were held in the days of the troubadours, when, we are told, "all the women were loved, and all the cavaliers were poets." The modern courts have, needless to say, assumed a character less amorous and more strictly literary, the successful competitors in what is a kind of poetical tourney being crowned with laurel or presented with the silver lily or the golden violet.

To those interested in literary ideals the question of the durability of the Provençal dialect (we cannot really call it a language), as not only a spoken but as a literary medium, presents the most fascinating subject for thought. In the Revue des Deux Mondes for October 15, 1859, M. Saint René Taillandier reviewed the work of Roumanille, Aubanel, and Frédéric Mistral; and, though appreciating its great beauty, he recognises the almost insurmountable task which the Félibre is endeavouring to accomplish. To the question of "Is this language constituted on a durable basis?" he answers:

"Pas encore assurément. Ce n'est pas là l'œuvre d'un seul homme, et si cet essai de restauration philologique, dans le cadre modeste où elle s'enferme, doit réussir un jour, il faudra sans doute que M. Roumanille, et ses amis aient de nombreux continuateurs."

Almost forty years have passed since these words were written, but one still recognises their truth. Roumanille died in 1891, and there is still a fine roll-call of followers who are carrying on this philological restoration, though theirs may be a forlorn hope. Still, though Mistral's ideals may be unattainable, he has given us sweet music which we should never have possessed, perhaps, but for the Renaissance of the idiom of Provence of the thirteenth century.

THE WEEK.

A GREAT many books have been published in the last week, but few of these are important. Theological and Educational works are more numerous than usual, and the vanguard of Boys' Books has arrived. The first volume of a new edition of Steele and Addison's Spectator, in eight volumes, may be noted. Mr. Austin Dobson supplies the introduction.

New works of Fiction, which have been very numerous, are catalogued elsewhere.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

OUTLINES OF A PHILOSOPHY OF RELIGION BASED ON PSYCHOLOGY AND HISTORY. By Auguste Sabatier. Translated by Rev. T. A. Seed. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.

THE SILENCE OF GOD. By Robert Anderson. Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.

THE REVEL AND THE BATTLE, AND OTHER SERMONS. By George Ridding, D.D. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

THE DYNAMICS OF RELIGION. By M. W. Wiseman. The University Press, Ltd. 7s. 6d.

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIOUS SYSTEMS—HINDUISM. By Sir Monier Monier-Williams, K.C.I.E. 13th Thousand. S.P.C.K.

ELEMENTS OF THE SCIENCE OF RELIGION. Vol. I. By C. P. Tiele. William Blackwood & Sons. 7s. 6d.

BASES OF RELIGIOUS BELIEF, HISTORICAL AND IDEAL. By Charles Mellen Tyler, D.D. G. P. Putnam's Sons.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE BENIN MASSACRE. By Captain Alan Boistragon. Methuen & Co.

BURNS: EXCISE OFFICER AND POET. By John Sinton. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.

TWELVE YEARS OF A SOLDIER'S LIFE. From the Letters of Major W. T. Johnson. Edited by his Widow. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.

PRE-REFORMATION WORTHIES. By Rev. W. Cowan. Elliot Stock.

THE REGISTERS OF JOHN DE SANDALE AND RIGAUD DE ASSERIO, BISHOPS OF WINCHESTER (A.D. 1316-1323). By Francis Joseph Baigent. Simpkin & Co.

THE JOURNAL OF COUNTESS FRANÇOISE KRASINSKA, GREAT GRANDMOTHER OF VICTOR EMANUEL. Translated from the Polish by Kasimir Dziekonska. Kegan Paul. 5s.

THE EXPLOITS OF MYLES STANDISH. By Henry Johnson. Sampson Low.

THE LOST EMPIRES OF THE MODERN WORLD. By Walter Frewen Lord. Richard Bentley & Son.

LONDON SIGNS AND INSCRIPTIONS. By Philip Norman. F.S.A. Elliot Stock.

THE NICHOLAS PAPERS: CORRESPONDENCE OF SIR EDWARD NICHOLAS. Edited by George F. Warner. Camden Society.

BERTRAND DU GUESCHIN, CONSTABLE OF FRANCE: HIS LIFE AND TIMES. By Knoch Vine Stoddard. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 10s. 6d.

POETRY, CRITICISM, ART.

ESSAYS ON THE NOVEL, AS ILLUSTRATED BY SCOTT AND MISS AUSTEN. By Adolphus Alfred Jack. Macmillan & Co. 5s.

POEMS. By the late John Lucas Tupper. Selected and edited by W. M. Rossetti. Longmans, Green & Co. 5s.

POEMS BY A. AND L. By Arabella and Louisa Shore. Grant Richards. 5s.

THE SPECTATOR. Vol. I. The Text Edited and Annotated by G. Gregory Smith. With an Introductory Essay by Austin Dobson. J. M. Dent & Co. 3s.

TEMPLE CLASSICS: THE ESSAYS OF MICHAEL, LORD OF MONTAIGNE. Vol. V.; and THE LIFE OF SAMUEL JOHNSON. Vol. III. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s. 6d. each.

THE RAPE OF THE LOCK. With Eleven Drawings by Aubrey Beardsley. Leonard Smithers. 4s.

MODERN PAINTERS. Vol. III. By John Ruskin. New Edition. George Allen.

EDUCATIONAL.

LATIN VERSE UNSEEN. Selected and Arranged by G. Middleton, M.A. William Blackwood & Sons. 1s. 6d.

CALENDAR OF UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF NORTH WALES, 1897-8.

THE BUILDING OF THE INTELLECT. By Douglas M. Gane. Elliot Stock.

ELEMENTARY GEOMETRICAL STATICS. By W. J. Dobbs, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 5s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY PRACTICAL PHYSIOGRAPHY (SECTION I.) A Course of Lessons and Experiments in Elementary Science. By John Thornton, M.A. Longmans & Co. 2s. 6d.

ARE WE TO GO ON WITH LATIN VERSES? By the Rev. Hon. Edward Lyttelton, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.

ENGLAND UNDER THE LATER HANOVERIANS, 1760-1837: BEING PART OF THE INTERMEDIATE TEXT-BOOK OF ENGLISH HISTORY. Vol. IV. By A. J. Evans, M.A., and C. S. Fearnside, M.A. W. B. Clive.

STUDIES IN BOARD SCHOOLS. By Charles Morley. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.

ANCIENT CLASSICS FOR ENGLISH READERS: ARISTOPHANES, PLAUTUS AND TERENCE, JUVENAL, HESIOD, AND THEOGNIS. New editions. 1s.

TOPOGRAPHY AND TRAVEL.

FROM JUNGLE TO JAVA. By Arthur Keyser. The Roxburgh Press. 2s.

SPORT AND TRAVEL IN INDIA AND CENTRAL AMERICA. By A. G. Bagot. Chapman & Hall. 6s.

WHITE MAN'S AFRICA. By Poulton Bigelow. Harper & Brothers. 16s.

FOREIGN.

LE MANNEQUIN D'OSIER. Par Anatole France. Sixième Edition. Calmann Lévy.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LAST LESSONS AND ESSAYS ON CONDUCT (3s. 6d.), and LILLIPUT LECTURES (2s. 6d.). By W. B. Eanda. Edited by R. Brimley Johnson. James Bowden.

HALF HOURS IN EARLY NAVAL ADVENTURE. James Nisbet & Co. 2s. 6d.

THE FUTURE POWER, OR THE GREAT REVOLUTION OF 1900. By Z. S. Hendow. The Roxburgh Press. 1s.

THE NON-RELIGION OF THE FUTURE: A SOCIOLOGICAL STUDY. Translated from the French of Marie Jean Guyau. William Heinemann.

THE MATHEMATICAL PSYCHOLOGY OF GRATEY AND BOOLE. Translated from the Language of the Higher Calculus into that of Elementary Geometry. By Mary Everest Boole. Swan, Sonnenschein & Co. 3s.

THE JOURNAL OF PHILOLOGY. Edited by W. Aldis Wright and Others. No 50. Macmillan & Co.

THE STORY OF GERM LIFE: BACTERIA. By H. W. Cown. George Newnes, Ltd. 1s.

CHRISTIAN MARTYRDOM IN RUSSIA. Edited by Vladimir Tobertoff. The Brotherhood Publishing Co. 1s.

SEVEN YEARS IN SIERRA LEONE. By the Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D. James Nisbet & Co.

THE CAMP OF REFUGE. By Charles Macfarlane. Archibald Constable & Co. 3s. 6d.

ANALOGIA EBOACENSIS: SOME REMAYNES OF THE ANCIENT CITY OF YORK. Collected by Sir Thomas Widdrington, Knt. Edited and Annotated by Rev. Cesar Caine, F.R.G.S. C. J. Clark.

THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF SPORT. Part VIII. Lawrence & Bullen.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE GLASGOW ARCHEOLOGICAL SOCIETY. New Series. Vol. III. Part I. James Maclehose & Sons (Glasgow).

MUSICAL MEMORIES. By A. M. Diehl. Richard Bentley & Son.

NOTES OF A MUSIC LOVER. By Lady Helen Craven. Richard Bentley & Son.

LIBRARY CONSTRUCTION: ARCHITECTURE, FITTINGS, AND FURNITURE. By F. J. Burgoyne. George Allen. 6s.

THE ATRANESE HOMES AND HAUNTS OF BURNS. By Henry C. Shelley. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.

SCIENCE.

LECTURES ON PHYSIOLOGY. First Series: On Animal Electricity. By Augustus D. Waller, M.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 5s.
MEMORY AND ITS CULTIVATION. By F. W. Edridge-Green, M.D. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. 5s.

BOYS' BOOKS.

IN LINCOLN GREEN. By Rev. E. Gilhat, M.A. Seeley & Co. 5s.
KING OLAF'S KINSMAN. By Charles W. Whistler. A STOUT ENGLISH BOWMAN. By Edgar Pickering. A MARCH OF LONDON. By G. A. Henty. PARIS AT BAY. By Herbert Hayens. LORDS OF THE WORLD. By Rev. Alfred Church. WITH MOORE AT CORUNNA. By G. A. Henty. Blackie & Son.
IN THE SWING OF THE SEA. By J. Macdonald Oxley, James Nisbet & Co.
HALF-TEXT HISTORY: CHRONICLES OF SCHOOL LIFE. By Ascott R. Hope. A. & C. Black.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

JUST FORTY WINKS. By Hamish Hendry. Blackie & Son.
ADVENTURES IN TOYLAND. By Edith King Hall. Illustrated by Aber E. Woodward. Blackie & Son.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOHN LIBRARIES.

MESSRS. GEORGE BELL & SONS have just reminded the public that the Bohn Libraries are fifty years old. Yet the series is still putting forth new volumes, for whatever comes and goes in the publishing world "Bohn" goes on for ever. Mr. Edward Bell was good enough to allow me to ask him questions about the books singly and collectively.

"Will you tell me first, Mr. Bell," I said, "anything you know about the origin of the library under Mr. Bohn?"

"Well, you know that Mr. Bohn was a second-hand bookseller. Indeed, he occupied the distinguished position which Mr. Quaritch does to-day. His guinea catalogue of his books was rather a famous production in its time. One of his ways of doing business was to purchase 'remainders' and sell them at 'remainder' prices to his customers. Of course, many good books which had hung fire at their published prices would come into his hands; and I suppose he began to say to himself, 'If these books had been published cheaply they would have done well.'"

"And so he began to publish cheap books and do well himself?"

"Yes; the Bohn Libraries being the result. Yet he had his troubles, and one of these was curious. Another publisher, Mr. David Bogue, had also perceived that the world wanted cheap books, and he, too, began to produce them. It was certain that there would be a struggle between Bohn and Bogue, and perhaps it was as well that they found speedy means to go to law, and have done with it. Mr. Bogue had brought out a cheap edition of Roscoe's Lorenzo de Medici, a work which Mr. Bohn had bought as a remainder, and of which he believed himself to be the copyright holder. Well, Bohn v. Bogue ended favourably for Bohn, and he went on with his scheme. Mr. Bohn was well fitted to make it succeed: he had great experience, knew exactly what people wanted, and courage to go ahead. He brought out books very fast, as you may judge by the fact that when Bell & Daldy bought the Bohn Libraries in 1864 they numbered 578 volumes."

"You have added a great number since then, have you not?"

"Oh, yes, and allowed about ninety books to go out of print. We have now 771 books in the list."

"Can you tell me, Mr. Bell, what the total sales of the 'Bohn' books have been from the first?"

"Certainly. About 2½ million volumes."

"You astonish me."

"Well, the 'Standard Library' alone accounts for nearly a million volumes, and there are fifteen other 'Libraries.'"

"The books have varied, of course, greatly in popularity?"

"Oh, yes. Goethe's Faust, for instance, was a great success. We sold 78,000 copies. So was our edition of Lamb's Essays of Elia and Eliana, and Carey's Dante. Of the latter work 15,000 copies were called for. Of course the sale of these works continues."

"I suppose, Mr. Bell, that you find libraries good customers for the 'Bohn' books?"

"Oh, yes. We are continually supplying large sets to libraries and institutions. But we find customers also in people who make a point of keeping up their private libraries."

"And what new volumes, may I ask, are you likely to add to the series shortly?"

"Well, we have a good many in hand. Leland's Itinerary will be one book, and I may say that it will be the first accurately printed edition. Hearne's text is good, but it was founded on only one MS., whereas the edition which Mr. Lawrence Gomme is preparing for the Bohn Libraries is based on an examination and comparison of two."

"By the way, you have discarded the old green binding?"

"Well, no; we supply it on demand, but the pattern had become too old-fashioned to be retained as the official binding."

I thanked Mr. Bell for his information, and, turning to leave I suddenly realised that in some bookshelves that filled the end of the large room in which we had been talking the entire Bohn Libraries were looking silently down upon us. Right well they looked in their jubilee year.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish in a few days a book by Mr. H. Morgan Browne, entitled Sporting and Athletic Records. This book gives, in a clear and complete form, accurate records of the best performances in all important branches of sport. The same publishers will issue shortly Mr. Crockett's new romance, Lochinvar.

THE Bishop of London's Story of Some English Shires, published by the Religious Tract Society, has been so rapidly subscribed that the édition de luxe, limited to 150 copies, was exhausted as soon as announced.

THE issue of Messrs. Blackie & Son's "Victorian Era" series will commence on November 15 with Mr. Rose's volume,

The Rise of Democracy, which will be followed on December 15 by Canon Overton's volume, The Anglican Revival.

THE price of Mr. Richard Marsh's The Crime and the Criminal is 3s. 6d., not 6s., as stated in our last issue.

MESSRS. SERVICE & PATON will shortly issue, in their "Illustrated English Library," Thackeray's The Newcomes, illustrated by Miss Chris. Hammond, and Scott's Bride of Lammermoor, illustrated by Mr. Fred. Pegram.

THE same firm will issue in October a new edition of Scott's Lady of the Lake, with an Introduction by Andrew Lang and illustrated by C. E. Brock.

WHAT THE AMERICAN PUBLISHERS ARE ANNOUNCING.

THE American publishing season is beginning with our own, and it is not uninteresting to scan the lists of announcements that are being issued by firms on the "other side." Here are a few notes.

Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co.'s list reads very familiarly. This firm is about to give to American readers Mr. R. D. Blackmore's Daniel, Mr. George Macdonald's Salted with Fire, Mr. William C. Hazlitt's The Confessions of a Collector, Mr. B. Yeats's The Secret Rose, and other books of our yester day.

The Ian Maclaren Calendar, "prepared under Dr. Watson's personal supervision," is the surprising announcement of this firm, which will also issue A Shakespeare Calendar for 1898: "A very seasonable Kalendar for the Year of our Lord 1898; Designed to be Used by Ye Manie Lovers of Ye Great Poet, Master William Shakespeare. Compiled by Louella C. Poole and Andrea Jonsson!"

Another undertaking of Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. is Zella Allen Dixson's Comprehensive Subject-Index to Universal Prose Fiction. Apparently the compiler takes those works of fiction in all languages which are founded upon fact, and classifies them. The index will contain 10,000 entries arranged topically, embracing events from 800 B.C. to the present time.

Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co.'s list also contains books on which English readers have given a verdict. Thus Mr. G. E. Weare's Cabot's Discovery of North America is to be issued by them; also Mr. Crockett's recent compilation of Carlyle's fugitive essays, and Mrs. Ernest Hart's Picturesque Burma, Past and Present.

The Beauties of Marie Corelli, "selected and arranged, with the author's permission, by Annie Mackay," is one of Messrs. Lippincott's announcements.

Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons will publish London: As Seen by C. D. Gibson, and a ready welcome is predicted for it. They are also to be the American publishers of Robert Louis Stevenson's St. Ives, Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's His Grace of Osmonde, Mr. Meredith's Selected Poems, and Mr. Austin Dobson's new edition of The Spectator in eight volumes.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. announce A Dictionary of American Authors, by Oscar Fay Adams, on the same general lines as the author's Handbook of American Authors, but adding largely both to the list of authors and to the books included. The Life of Harriet Beecher Stowe, by Mrs. James T. Fields, whose name is a guarantee of the excellence of this biography, will be uniform in style, &c., with the large-paper edition of Mrs. Stowe's works recently published by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

Hawthorne's First Diary, kept by him during his residence at Raymond, Maine, came to light in Virginia during the Civil War, and fell into the hands of a coloured man named William Symmes, who by a curious chance was a companion of Hawthorne in his fishing and gunning sports on the shores of Lake Sebago. Symmes said he had the book from a Maine soldier, whom he found in a hospital. Because of his boyish friendship for Hawthorne, he so prized the Diary that he could not be induced to part with it. After holding it several years, he sent extracts from it to a Maine newspaper. These extracts are reprinted in this little book, preceded by an account of Hawthorne's home in Raymond, and the story of William Symmes. The Diary has been prepared by Samuel T. Pickard, and will shortly be issued to the public by this firm.

Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. also announce some works of considerable interest to historical students. Of these, the most important is Old Virginia and Her Neighbours, by John Fiske (2 vols.). It covers the period from the defeat of the Spanish Armada to the first appearance of George Washington in history in 1753, with descriptions of the beginnings of Virginia and its time of struggles and distress, 1607-1610; the rapid rise in power of the great Virginia Company in London until it aroused the alarm of King James I., who compassed its overthrow in 1624; the political and social conditions of Virginia under Charles I., the beginnings of Maryland, and the relation of the two sister colonies down to the death of Cromwell in 1658. The second volume begins with the coming of the Cavaliers, 1649-1660. A chapter on the Golden Age of Pirates treats of the achievements of buccaneers in the West Indies, the Bahamas, and on the coast of Carolina, especially of the famous pirates Blackbeard, Bonnet, and others, and the stopping of piracy about 1720.

Mr. Bellamy has recently identified "equality" with progress, but President Harris, of Andover Theological Seminary, is of opinion that inequality has, at all events, its present uses. In Inequality and Progress, to be issued by Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., he examines the natural and acquired differences of men, criticises theories of economic equality and equal opportunity, and shows that inequality is the necessary condition of progress and social unity.

Mr. Joel Chandler Harris's new story for children, Aaron in the Wild Woods, a sequel to The Story of Aaron, the Son of Ben-Ali, will be issued by this firm.

PUBLISHERS' AUTUMN LISTS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS INCLUDE:

"Alfred Lord Tennyson: a Memoir," by his Son, with photogravure portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c., facsimiles of portions of poems, and illustrations after pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscombe Gardner, &c.; "Memorials," by Roundell Palmer, Earl of Selborne, part ii., "Political"; "Life and Letters of William John Butler, late Dean of Lincoln," by his daughter, Mrs. Knight; "Philosophical Lectures and Remains of Richard Lewis Nettleship, Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford," edited, with a biographical sketch, by A. C. Bradley and G. R. Benson; "Life and Letters of Edward Thring," by George R. Parkin, M.A.; "Cambridge Described and Illustrated: a History of the Town and University," by Thomas Dinham Atkinson; "South Africa of To-day," by Capt. Frank E. Younghusband; "Impressions of South Africa," by the Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P.; "West African Studies," by Miss Mary Kingale; "Old Virginia and her Neighbours," by John Fiske; "The Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome: a Companion Book for Students and Travellers," by Rodolfo Lanciani; "History of the Society of Dilettanti"; "France since the Revolution," by J. E. C. Bodley, M.A.; "Foreign Statesmen" Series, edited by Prof. Bury: new volumes—"William the Silent," by Frederic Harrison; "Charles the Great," by Thomas Hodgkin; "Philip II. of Spain," by Major Martin Hume; and "Mirabeau," by P. F. Willert; "A Short History of the Indian Mutiny," by T. Rice Holmes, M.A.; "The History of Greece from its Commencement to the Close of the Independence of the Greek Nation," by Adolf Holm, authorised translation from the German; "A Handbook of European History," by Arthur Hassall, M.A.; "Cameos from English History," by Charlotte M. Yonge, ninth series; "A History of Rome for Beginners," by Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, M.A.; "Life of Napoleon Bonaparte," by William Milligan Sloane; "Captains Courageous: a Story of the Grand Banks," by Rudyard Kipling; "Mansfield Park," by Jane Austen, with illustrations by Hugh Thomson and an introduction by Austin Dobson; "Northanger Abbey and Persuasion," by Jane Austen, with illustrations by Hugh Thomson and an introduction by Austin Dobson; édition de luxe of Rudyard Kipling's Writings in Prose and Verse, in 12 vols., with a portrait drawn and etched by James Strang; "Undine," by De La Motte Fouqué; "Highways and Byways of Devon and Cornwall," by Arthur H. Norway; "A Portfolio of Twenty Lithographs of Highways and Byways of Devon and Cornwall," by Joseph Pennell; "Miss Mouse and her Boys," by Mrs. Molesworth; "The Story of a Red Deer," by the Hon. J. W. Fortescue; "Sketches from Old Virginia," by A. G. Bradley; "Corleone," by F. Marion Crawford; "A Chapter of Accidents," by Mrs. Hugh Fraser, author of "Palladia"; "The Eversley Bible," arranged in paragraphs with an introduction by J. W. Mackail, M.A., in 8 vols., to be published monthly from October, 1897; "Poems of Thomas Hood," edited, with prefatory memoir, by Alfred Ainger; "Journals of Dorothy Wordsworth," edited by William Knight; "Life and Letters of Dean Church," edited by his daughter, Mary C. Church; "The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer," edited by Alfred W. Pollard, H. Frank Heath, Mark H. Liddell, and W. S. McCormick; "The Golden Treasury," second series, arranged, with notes, by Francis T. Palgrave; "Selections from Heine," with introduction and notes by Dr. C. A. Buchheim; "Aubrey de Vere's Collected Poems"; "Pausanias's Description of Greece," translated, with a commentary, by J. G. Frazer, M.A., LL.D. (Glasgow), Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, in 6 vols.; "The Scientific Papers of Thomas Henry Huxley," reprinted from the Journals of Scientific Societies, edited by Prof. Michael Foster and Prof. E. Ray Lankester; "A Text-Book of Zoology," by T. Jeffery Parker.

THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE ANNOUNCEMENTS INCLUDE:

"An Historical Church Atlas," illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom, until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the present day, by Edmund McClure, M.A.; "The Liturgy and Ritual of the Ante-Nicene Church," by the Rev. F. E. Warren; "The Machinery of the Universe: Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena," by A. E. Dolbear, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics and Astronomy, Tuft's College, Mass.; "Christian Life in Song": (Te Deum Laudamus) "The Song and the Singers," by the late Mrs. Rundle Charles; "The Anglican Ordinal," by the Rev. Blomfield Jackson, M.A.; "Stafford House Lectures," by the Bishop of Stepney, Rev. Prof. H. E. J. Bevan, Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, and Rev. Canon Winnington-Ingram; "The Anglican Communion," by the Archbishop of Capetown, the Archbishop of Rupertland, the Archbishop of Sydney, the Bishop of Calcutta, and the Bishop of Kentucky; "The Papal Conclaves," by the Rev. Canon Pennington, M.A.; "Missions to the Jews: an Historical Retrospect," by the Rev. A. Lukyn Williams, M.A.; "The Fatherly Hand," by the Rev. Canon Edward T. Vaughan, M.A.; "The Son of Man," by the Rev. Harry Jones, M.A.; "Goals and Tries," by V. Brooke-Hunt, with an introduction by the Headmaster of Rugby; "The Queen's Reign and its Commemoration," by Sir Walter Besant, including the Diamond Jubilee Celebrations and the Naval Review; "Frank and Saxon," by G. Manville Fenn; "By Sartal Sands," by Edward N. Hoare, M.A.; "The Faith of his Father," by Helen Shipton; "The Homeward Voyage," by Harry Collingwood; "The Siege Perilous," by Austin Clare; "Miss Carr's Young Ladies," by M. Bramston; "Sturdy and Stilt: or, Firm Friends," by Annette Lyster; "The Parting Ways," by Mrs. Newman; "Seaton Court," by Maud Carew; "The Carrier's Cart," by Catherine E. Mallandaine; "The Great Gold Mine," by C. E. M.; "Beside the Guns," by M. E. Shipley; "Heroes of the Chitral Siege," by Alice F. Jackson; "The Parish Clerk," by Ascott R. Hope; "The Quiet Hour" Series: "Panacea," by E. M. Mason; "Alfendeane Rectory," by Lady Dunboyne; "Ogres and Workers," in 2 parts, a true story for children, by Lady Laura Ridding.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS INCLUDE:

"More Tramps Abroad," by Mark Twain; "This Little World" and "Teles and Poems," by David Christie Murray; "By the Rise of the River," by Austin Clare; "The Three Disgraces, &c.," by Justin McCarthy; "The Secret of Wyvern Towers," by T. W. Speight; "The Witch-Wife," by Sarah Tytler; "Paris," by Émile Zola, translated by Ernest Alfred Vizetelly—this volume forms the concluding volume of a Trilogy, of which the first two volumes, "Lourdes" and "Rome," have already been published; "Through the Gold-Fields of Alaska to Bering Straits," by Harry De Windt; "The Life of Napoleon III.," by Archibald Forbes; "The French Revolution" (Constituent Assembly, 1789-91), by Justin Huntly McCarthy; "The Complete Art of Making Fireworks," by Thomas Kentish.

MR. ELKIN MATHEWS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Belles Lettres.—"The Canon: an Exposition of the Pagan Mystery perpetuated in the Cabala as the Rule of all the Arts," with a preface by R. B. Cunninghame Graham, with numerous illustrations; "Idylls of Spain: Varnished Pictures of Travel in the Peninsula," by Rowland Thirlmere; "An Attic in Bohemia: a Diary without Dates," by E. H. Lacon Watson, author of the "Unconscious Humourist"; "Two Essays upon Matthew Arnold, with his Letters to the Author," by Arthur Galton; "English Lands, Letters, and Kings: the later Georges to Victoria," by Donald G. Mitchell, LL.D. ("Ik Marvel"); "Gesta Typographica: a Collection of Printers' Sayings and Doings," by C. T. Jacobi; and new editions of "The Lambs: their Lives, their Friends, and their Correspondence"; "The Poetry of Tennyson," by Henry Van Dyke, much enlarged; and "The Unconscious Humourist, and Other Essays," by E. H. Lacon Watson.

Fiction.—"The Joy of My Youth," a novel, by Claud Nicholson.

Poetry.—"Ireland, with Other Poems," by Lionel Johnson; "Selected Lyrics from the Works of the Hon. Roden Noel," with a biographical and critical essay by Percy Addleshaw, with two portraits; "The Wind among the Reeds," by W. B. Yeats, with a portrait; "Baby Lays," by Ada Stow, with sixteen illustrations by Edith Calvert; "Admirals All, and Other Verses," by Henry Newbolt (new volume in "Shilling Garland" Series); and a fourth edition of "Christ in Hades," by Stephen Phillips, with additions—"A West Sussex Garland," by W. J. Ibbett ("Antæus"); "Bad Lady Betty," a Drama in Three Acts," by W. D. Scull.

DRAMA.

THE REMARKABLE CASE OF MR. GILBERT.

HOW essentially limited and groovy the finest talent may be is strikingly illustrated by Mr. W. S. Gilbert's pathetic efforts to become a dramatist. As a witty and ingenious writer of comic opera libretto, Mr. Gilbert has long since acquired fame and fortune, but, like Liston, who, being a first-rate comedian, pined to be recognised as a tragedian, he has never failed in his intervals of leisure to cultivate the dramatic muse; and to the brilliant librettist that fickle damsel has been more than usually unkind. Her last response, given in the case of "The Fortune Hunter," which the London critics were invited to see the other day at Birmingham, is less a manifestation of indifference than a rebuff, and as it is nine years since Mr. Gilbert last wrote a play there seems now but a slender chance of his dramatic ambition being realised. Mr. Gilbert's congenial sphere is that of topsy-turvydom, where, even without the aid of music, as in "Pygmalion and Galatea" and the "Palace of Truth," he contrives to be entertaining. In other forms of drama he is as unhappy as an angel strayed from Paradise. He loses his wings. His imagination fails him; his wit dies away on his lips. From the lightest of fantastic fairy tales, spiced with satire, he sinks, as soon as he sets about writing a play, to the level of conventional and laboured melodrama; for that, it may be well to say at once, is the category into which his new piece falls. Mr. Gilbert's is, indeed, a remarkable case. There is nothing like it in the annals. As a contriver of one highly successful class of stage-work, the author of "The Mikado" would readily be credited with the possession of a fine dramatic instinct and of a mordant wit that was equal to any occasion. But no! He has only to put himself to the test of writing a play instead of a libretto and it is at once perceived that the two classes of work require a totally different order of ability. The cleverest dramatists sometimes fail to carry critical opinion and public approbation with them. But this result has occurred too often in Mr. Gilbert's case to be accidental. He is a clever rhymster and a pungent satirist, if not exactly a wit; un homme de théâtre, as M. Sarcey would say, he is not.

THE most surprising feature of "The Fortune Hunter" is the poverty of the dialogue where one would naturally expect to find Mr. Gilbert at his best, and the conventionality of the comic relief. In how many plays, during the past few years, have we seen the vulgar, illiterate American heiress, with a fortune of millions of dollars made out of pork? Yet here she is, trotted out again in all her conventionality, loud of speech, deficient in taste, and generally inadapted to her new surroundings. Does the American heiress show this complete lack of good breeding, even though her father has made his fortune in pork? In reality, she is as quick as the rest of her sex to acquire the veneer of society. Mr. Gilbert's Euphemia S. Zyl is a puppet of the stage, from which the sawdust trickles as she walks. Moreover, this impossible person hooks in matrimony an octogenarian English duke in the last stage of physical decrepitude. Is this alliance a true piece of observation? Do English dukes of eighty-five do these things? At twenty-five, possibly; but with both legs in the grave? Surely this is pushing a joke too far! Mr. Gilbert is happier in his portrayal of the English snobbery that kisses the ground that dukes walk on; albeit this joke, too, is dwelt upon at tiresome length. It seems as though Mr. Gilbert's sense of humour deserts him, like Bob Acre's courage, as soon as he comes upon the unfamiliar terrain of the drama proper. He is weighed down apparently by his unaccustomed responsibilities. His pen, no longer tipped with a spark, like the Morse needle in a thunderstorm, becomes as heavy and unresponsive as lead.

As regards the flashes of wit in the dialogue, let me speak by the card. I jotted down the best of Mr. Gilbert's mots as they fell from the lips of the actors; and here is the record, the verbal accuracy of which, of course, I do not vouch for:

"Ten million dollars is the price of an octogenarian duke. An octogenarian duke is very dear."

A gambling system has been communicated to one of the characters. It was "the death-bed confidence of an Archimandrite in the Carpathians."

"Your nose is not very long and you cannot see beyond the end of it."

"Undress the duke and put him to bed."

"We met in popper's pork-works, I remember, and had a tender scene in the boiling room."

"In America they admit the British peer duty free."

"So glad to hear the duke was dead; it explained why he did not answer my letter."

As the theme of his play, Mr. Gilbert selects a point of law—French law—for illustration, and thus gives the story an old-fashioned air. "The Fortune Hunter," in subject and treatment, belongs to the period of Charles Reade and Wilkie Collins, who were both addicted to exposing the anomalies of the statute-book. Mr. Gilbert is like the Bourbons. During his long silence as a dramatist he has learnt nothing and forgotten nothing. He has not caught the spirit of the time. That we should have a dull and heavy melodrama, for such "The Fortune Hunter" is, with its realistic quarter-deck of a P. & O. liner and its duel with swords in the duchess's drawing-room, instead of a sparkling comedy of manners from the pen of the brilliant and original librettist, is one of the mysteries of the case. But in setting himself to expose the hardship of an article of the Code Napoléon, the author ties himself down of necessity to a more or less mechanical plot. The enactment in question is that a Frenchman's marriage is liable to be annulled if, in contracting it under the age of twenty-five, he has failed to obtain the consent of his parents. It is in such circumstances that the Vicomte Armand de Bréville—i.e., the Aubrey Plantagenet, or the Montmorency of the sensational novelette—has married the confiding Australian heiress, Diana Caverel; and with the results of this ill-assorted union the remainder of the play is concerned. The lady is not without friends. One of her most devoted is an English baronet whose honourable proposals she has already refused. It is strange that she should not be advised as to the pitfalls of French marriage. But the author is entitled to lay down his postulates; it is for the public to judge as to the manner in which he turns them to account.

Now, assuredly, this does not prove a good subject for an English play, because the enactment of the Code Napoléon, to which Mr. Gilbert invites attention, strikes the average Englishman as incredible or absurd; it fails to touch the pathetic note in his bosom. But a worse fault of the work is that the character of the Vicomte, who meanly resolves to annul his marriage in order to ally himself with the American duchess, now left a widow, is not clearly drawn. He is first brought before us as a globe-trotting sportsman, fond of big game. He next appears as a despicable cur, and as such is disowned by his Boulevard St. Germain parents. Anon he soliloquises à la Hamlet. Finally, his matrimonial scheme with the duchess falling through, he nobly restores his wife her liberty and her good name—the proceedings for nullifying the marriage being stayed by his death—by throwing himself on the point of his opponent's sword in a duel, provoked by him for that purpose. Is he a hero, or a coward, or simply a shuffler who does not know his own mind, this Vicomte Armand de Bréville? Nobody knows—it is a secret which the author has locked up in his own bosom. We do not get to know this man, nor, indeed, any of the characters in the play, as human beings. They are not realities but stage puppets. Mr. Gilbert has not looked around him and studied his types from life. He has borrowed the dusty and moth-eaten “properties” of the transpontine dramatist.

THE acting of “The Fortune Hunter” by a provincial touring company, with Miss Fortescue at its head, does not call for notice. It was adequate; and more need not be said. The piece would not have fared better at any of the West-end theatres from which, indeed, the principal performers, Mr. Luigi Lablache, Mr. Edmund Maurice, Mr. Compton Courtts, and Miss Cicely Richards, not to mention Miss Fortescue herself, hailed. It is Mr. Gilbert's curious position in the matter that attracts attention on literary grounds.

J. F. N.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

“The New Fiction, and Other Essays,”
By H. D. Traill.

THE St. James's Gazette's review of Mr. Traill's book is at once sympathetic and acute. Says this critic:

“Those, if such there be, who had read nothing of Mr. Traill's before turning to this volume will be delighted by those qualities which have so long been familiar to the rest of us—the wit, the high scholarly feeling, the easy eloquence. But those who have followed the career of the essayist with sympathy and hope will put the book down with a sense of faint regret. This will be caused by no failure in Mr. Traill's executive talent, but by a condition of temper in him which becomes more and more apparent. The most successful of journalists, all gaiety and verve, he gives us, nevertheless, the impression of a man intellectually disappointed, and he shows his disappointment by a continuous relinquishment of the highest ideals. ‘What does it matter?’ he seems to say. ‘Why should I praise the best and ridicule the worst, since they see no difference between worst and best?’ This is a blunt and vague generation of Gadarenes, noisily rushing down into stupid places. Mr. Traill is tired of trying to turn them back; he will stand and laugh at them; he will even run with them a little way to see where they are going.”

And so Mr. Traill, in the critic's view, shows “the signals of relinquishment.” Does he not declare in this book that Matthew Arnold's endeavour to restore taste in England was “a positively monumental instance of self-deception”? The reviewer concludes:

“Mr. Traill resists no longer. He gives way to the preposterous pretensions of the novelists.

In his opening essay he deigns to argue with an extravagant story-teller whom it were better to have left unassailed. He writes on ‘The Political Novel’ with a ludicrous solemnity, which seems to be for ever breaking out into the laugh that never comes. He discusses ‘The Politics of Literature’ in a tone of derisive gravity which sends a chill to the heart. One would like to say to Mr. Traill, with brutal directness, ‘You gain absolutely nothing by these defections. The romance-writers think no better of you because you bend before them with mocking salutations. You will never be a popular author, for your instincts are too fine, your apprenticeship to the best literature was too complete, to permit you to produce books such as the gross public loves. Be contented, therefore, to fight in the ranks of those few persons who endeavour to resist the débacle of letters. Let them and their cause have the benefit of your irony and incisive wit.’”

That last hit is repeated by the Athenæum, which, in distinguishing Mr. Traill's “common-sense criticism,” says:

“... It is not perhaps the most popular form of literary criticism, and Mr. Traill has—unfortunately, may we say?—squandered on political journalism, for the proper objects of which they are worse than useless, a large share of the wit and humour which might have been better bestowed in quarters where they would have been more valued. Consequently his name may be less familiar to the ‘general reader’ than those of some other literary critics of not half his merit.”

The Scotsman makes less ado:

“The essays have an analytical skill and a logical inevitableness only too rare in these times of impressionist criticism, and oftener displayed on the other side of the Channel than on this. Always deeper than they seem to be, they are always bright and often brilliant in their purely literary aspect; and they make their points by many happy strokes of wit and irony. Readers of correct taste in matters of literature will always agree or sympathise with Mr. Traill's judgments, and even those who have another way of thinking must find his book readable and enjoyable in no common degree for its incisiveness, its insight, and its never-failing good humour.”

“The Poetical
Works of William Wordsworth.”
Vol. VIII.
Edited by William Knight.

THIS volume completes Prof. Knight's edition of the poet's works, and the Athenæum falls on it like a panther. It does not even begin with a caress. “We regret to observe,” is its first sentence, “that the editing of this volume, the last of the ‘Poems,’ is little, if at all, better than that of the preceding ones.” And the review is picked out with such sentences and phrases as these:

“Many of the Professor's notes are useless and absurd.”

“All this Baedeker and Herzog because Wordsworth heard a cuckoo at Laverna.”

“When, however, information might be expected, we do not get it.”

“This is a fair specimen of the Professor's slovenly handiwork.”

“But the Professor is perhaps most provoking . . .”

“And when a semblance of a reference is given it is often of no value.”

“We can refresh his memory,” &c.

The Spectator is more urbane, it chastises only with whips. Referring to the Professor's too liberal and too naive notes, it says:

“If there be any reader who does not know that St. Paul's Cathedral was designed by Sir Christopher Wren, that Waltham Abbey is in Essex, that King Edward VI. reigned for six years, that Latimer and Ridley were burnt together at Oxford, that William landed at Torbay, and scores of similar facts, we submit that he ought not to look for such elementary knowledge in the pages containing the text of an illustrious poet.”

But the Spectator would not

“depreciate the prolonged and exhaustive labours which Prof. Knight has given to Wordsworth. The poet, who was so little esteemed by the public during a large portion of his lifetime, is now a great English classic, and as such merits all the critical study which a classic deserves. To supply the fullest materials for this study has been the editor's aim, and we think that in many respects he has accomplished it. His granary is overflowing with golden grain, and if the chaff has not been wholly separated from it, that perhaps was inevitable.”

Journeys Through France, has been heartily welcomed. “The M. Taine's ‘Journeys Through France,’ translation,” says the Times, “is for the most part executed with unusual skill.” Concerning Taine's matter the same critic writes:

“Though rather hasty sketches than finished pictures, they are Taine tout pur, showing all his serious concern for the intellectual and social welfare of France, his noble impatience of the commonplace and the mesquin, his keen and imaginative eye for the picturesque in architecture and scenery, his responsive sympathy with the varying aspects of French scenery and life, and his rare felicity of presentation.”

The Standard thinks the book is a reflection of the man:

“This book strikes us as being in every sense characteristic of the man, for it is candid, unconventional, shrewd, and vivacious. It represents Taine, however, in full possession of his prejudices, as well as in his most cynical mood. His judgments for the most part scarcely lean towards mercy, and he is too honest to conceal his contempt when men or institutions provoke satire.”

The Scotsman says:

“There are in these ‘Journeys’ much of keen observation, a great deal of witty writing, and many epigrammatic sayings which fix themselves on the memory. In fact, it would be worth while to read the book for no other reason than for the clever things that are in it.”

“By Stroke of Sword” By the Times, and then it gives Andrew Balfour. the book a very quotable certificate of merit:

“Readers who like domestic scenes must go elsewhere for their milk and water, but for the brandy, which Dr. Johnson thought the proper drink for heroes, this tap can be recommended.”

It must be a rollicking tale that the Times calls “this tap.”

The Bookman praises Mr. Balfour's title-headings:

“Who would not set to the reading of a story in the most sympathetic mood, finding in its table of contents such items as these: ‘Of the Hollow Tree and the Eyes which Moved;’ ‘Of what I Heard in the Chimney, and the Man in the Archway"; "Of our Lady the Virgin and the Gathering of the Sharks"? And there is something to be found if we follow the leading of these signposts. Mr. Balfour has a tender conscience about giving full measure to his readers."

The Chronicle, too, gives this story five inches of praise:

"Had the hero not been pursued by bloodhounds we had been bitterly disappointed. But the author knows his boy and loves him, and the hero is pursued by bloodhounds."

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

THE title was once a sensible one; at Covent Garden the public used really to promenade right round the platform on which the orchestra was placed, and the greater number, no doubt, looked upon the players as helpmates to movement and to conversation. Now they are quieter; more attention is paid to the music, although the programmes are, on the whole, made of sterner stuff than in days of yore. One of the great differences to be noticed between the past and the present is the prominence given to novelties. They are, indeed, quite a feature of the present series of concerts at the Queen's Hall under the direction of Mr. Newman. Excess of anything is bad, but here they are carefully introduced into programmes which include well-known works; and hitherto they have been fairly short, also of light character, so that, if they fail to please, the evening's enjoyment is scarcely spoiled. It is right that we should know a little more of works other than of the great composers who have become household words. Another marked difference is, of course, the present worship of Wagner. Now a popular night means a Wagner night. No doubt much of the present popularity of the master does not arise from genuine appreciation of his music-dramas. But one thing is certain, namely, that what, by the critics—almost to a man—was once thought music well-nigh devoid of form, melody, and meaning, now draws the public more than that of any other composer. And yet, with few exceptions, it was never intended by Wagner for the concert-room.

The first part of the programme on the occasion of my visit was devoted principally to Wagner specimens of his art work ab ovo usque ad mala, from "Rienzi" to "Parsifal." It may occasionally be interesting to hear the "Rienzi Overture"; that opera, however, was not a firm foundation on which he afterwards built, but a false one which had to be removed ere the master could develop what was in him. On the other hand, even in Beethoven's earliest works, there is nothing to offend; while, from time to time, there are foreshadowings, and of by no means ordinary character, of the glories about to follow.

Mr. Wood conducted all the Wagner numbers in able manner. He is in thorough sympathy with the music, and it is evident that he has not sat in vain at the feet of some of the great German conductors. He has, nevertheless, still something to learn from them. He does not always keep enough reserve force, so that the climacteric point of a passage, or of a piece, does not always make its due effect. Then, again, the proper balance of tone between strings and wind is not always maintained—the latter at times outsound the former. In vigorous passages it is naturally difficult to restrain trumpeters, trombonists, and drummers, who are proud of the strong effects which they can produce; yet unless this is carefully managed the result is unsatisfactory. Fortunately, the anti-Wagnerite is almost an extinct species, or we might still hear about his noisy scoring. It was my first visit to these concerts on this Monday, and I should not like to form a hasty opinion, but it seems to me that the tone of the violins is not strong enough. If that be so, a few more players would establish a natural balance. The violoncellos of the orchestra are particularly good, and the wood-wind players are excellent. Of the excerpts, the Prelude to the third act of "Lohengrin" and the "Parsifal" music were the finest. Mr. Wood is a conductor of whom we may be proud, and I am pleased to see that he is already quieter in gesture. Mr. Orme Darvall sang "The term is past," from the "Flying Dutchman." This Air, as it is curiously called in the score, did not quite suit him, but he sang it with great intelligence, and in a thoroughly dramatic spirit. He had his music in his hand, yet he sang without looking at it, and this, for Wagner, is a great advantage. Mme. Marie Duma gave Elisabeth's Prayer from "Tannhäuser," but her rendering of it was not satisfactory.

The first part of the programme included two of Liszt's "Symphonic Poems." The first was "Les Préludes," one of the most attractive. It was carefully rendered, though scarcely with sufficient breadth. The other was "Orpheus," interpreted with much delicacy. The public here in England have never taken very kindly to Liszt's music, with exception, perhaps, of one or two of the Rhapsodies. There was a time when it was the custom to speak of the music of Wagner and Liszt as if, forsooth, they were co-ordinate. Liszt's name in history is inseparable from that of Wagner. He helped the latter in the hour of need, encouraged him during the long years of exile, and was one of his first and stoutest champions. Without this patient guide, Christian philosopher, and firm friend, Wagner might possibly not have had the strength and the courage to realise his art dreams. All this redounds infinitely to the credit of Liszt, yet it only concerns the man. His generous deeds have nothing to do with his music. Liszt wrote many works varying considerably in merit. A great number of his pianoforte pieces were composed merely to show off his marvellous technique, and when he ceased to perform them they ceased to give pleasure. The twelve Symphonic Poems represent his most ambitious efforts as a composer of instrumental music, and there is much in them of interest. The matter may not be very deep, but they contain clever workmanship, often graceful melody, and piquant orchestration. "Faust," "Tasso," and "Die Ideale" scarcely deserve the neglect into which they have fallen. I have often wondered why Dr. Richter, who at one time seemed inclined to introduce Liszt's music, has confined himself of late to the Rhapsodies. The late Walter Bache, in his enthusiasm for his master and friend, erred through excess of zeal. A whole programme of Liszt wearies the public and worries the critics. But, received in small doses, there is no reason why his best works should not meet with due appreciation. Surely, also, two or three of the Symphonic Poems which have never or very rarely been performed in London might be given a trial! J. S. S.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DISCOVERY OF COINS.

Blackburn: Sept. 20, 1897.

A very important discovery of coins has been made at Escharen, in the south of Holland, of which Rev. Dr. C. Wilde gives an account in the Museum—a Dutch philological paper. The following is a translation:

"At Escharen, a little village about two miles to the south of Grave, a notable discovery was made about the middle of last April. Whilst digging in his field, situated not far from the parish church, a peasant observed at a depth of about sixty centimetres a little jar of old-Franconian workmanship, that proved to contain sixty gold pieces. These coins date, as far as we could make out, from the fifth, sixth, and seventh centuries, and represent not less than thirty-one different types. Some are Byzantine, the majority are of Franconian (Merovingian) origin. Eleven of them are solidi, and weigh from three and a half to four grammes. The rest are trientes (one-third solidus), some of them being considerably clipped. Thanks to the kind help of Dr. H. J. de Dompierre de Chaupépié, director of the Royal Collection of Coins at the Hague, who showed great interest in the discovery, I was so fortunate as to succeed in determining a good number of the coins. Thus we found a neatly executed and well-preserved solidus with the effigy of the Emperor Zeno (474-491), besides several of the second coinages of Anastasius (491-518), Justinus I. (518-527), Justinianus I. (527-565), Justinus II. (565-578), and Mauritius Tiberius (582-602).

"Among the Merovingian coins many are known already from other sources, but still they are rather rare. One triens is coined at Choe (Hoei [P] in Belgium), and shows the name of the mintmaster, Landigisilus; another is the work of Medo(v)aldus, the well-known coiner of Amiens; two others come from the workshop of Bertulfus, at Orleans; one other comes from Sion (Sid-ninsium Civitas) in Wallis. In the imperial collection of coins at Vienna they possess a very odd coin, that has on its reverse the words 'BONCOLVNIA CIVITAS.' At Escharen six specimens of this kind have been found. The inscription 'AVDVLFVS FRISLA,' not yet explained with certainty, also appears on three pieces.

"Lastly I have to mention, together with several undecipherable coins, a few curiosities that are not to be found in any of the known standard works on coins (Prou, de Belfort, &c.). This is not the place to enter into many particulars about them. I confine myself, therefore, to mentioning the inscription ACO + NIOM (or + NIOMAGO = Nimeguen [P]), that is to be seen on several pieces.—C. RAAIJMAKERS."

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the Literary matter, and of the Advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING	s. d.
POSTAGE* ... ..	8 6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING
POSTAGE ... ..	4 6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING
POSTAGE ... ..	2 6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—THE ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated Titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages, whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenæum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records .... The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London :

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

MR. MURRAY'S LIST

OF

NEW AND RECENTLY PUBLISHED WORKS.

With Portrait and Maps, crown 8vo, 9s.

[Next week.

UNDER THE RED CRESCENT :

Adventures and Experiences of an English Surgeon in the Service of the Turkish Government during the Sieges of Plevna and Erzeroum, 1877-78. Related by CHARLES S. RYAN, M.B., O.M. Edin., in association with his friend, JOHN SANDER, B.A., Oxon.

With Portrait and Illustrations, 8vo, 18s.

[Next week.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM PENGELLY,

Of Torquay, F.R.S. Geologist. With Selections from his Correspondence. By his Daughter, HESTER PENGELLY. And a Summary of his Scientific Works, by Professor BONNEY, F.R.S., F.G.S., &c.

With Portraits and Maps, large crown 8vo, 9s.

[Just out.

THE BATTLEFIELDS OF THESSALY.

With the Personal Experiences in the late War between Turkey and Greece of Sir ELLIS ASHMEAD BARTLETT, M.P.

"When Sir Ellis's politics are not immediately concerned, his book is not only an interesting but a valuable contribution to the history of the late war."—Daily News.

"We are not obliged to agree with him in his pro-Turkish enthusiasm or his vituperation of certain great Powers; but we may find entertainment in his animated sketches of the people he met and the places he visited, and of his personal experiences of a short and not too glorious campaign."—Western Morning News.

With Portrait, fcap. 8vo, 5s.

[Next week.

WOMEN OF THE COLONIAL AND REVOLUTIONARY TIMES SERIES.

MARTHA WASHINGTON

(Wife of George Washington). By ANNE HOLLINGSWORTH WHARTON, Author of "Through Colonial Doorways" and "Colonial Days and Dames."

With Maps and Plans, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of the PERSIAN

WARS as TOLD by HERODOTUS. In English. Selected, Arranged, and Edited so as to form a History Reading Book for Schools. By the Rev. C. C. TANCOCK, sometime Head Master of Rossall School.

The idea of this work originated with a well-known teacher of long experience, who had often felt the want of a continuous narrative of the Persian Wars as told in the simple and attractive style of Herodotus. The basis of the text is the excellent translation of Canon Rawlinson, but the whole work has been carefully revised and prepared with a view to use in schools. Illustrations and Map. A short Life of Herodotus has been added.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, 6s.

HOW to LISTEN to MUSIC:

Hints and Suggestions to Untaught Lovers of the Art. By HENRY EDWARD KREHBIEL, Author of "Studies in the Wagnerian Drama," &c. With a Preface by Sir GEORGE GROVE, C.B., D.C.L., Editor of "Dictionary of Music and Musicians."

"It is not too much to say that the object of the title has never been so thoroughly or so ably accomplished before."

"The book may be recommended very cordially as fulfilling with singular success every purpose it set out to accomplish."—Pall Mall Gazette.

On Thin Paper, small fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HANDBOOK of TRAVEL TALK.

A New Edition, thoroughly Revised, Extended, and in great part Re-written to adapt it to the requirements of Modern Travellers, including Photographers and Cyclists.

"The best of its kind."—Athenæum.

"Comes in a new form with many improvements."

"One of, if not the most useful phrase book in existence."—Queen.

Illustrated by a Road Atlas at the end of the book.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s.

MURRAY'S CYCLIST'S ROAD-

BOOK from London through Chichester, Portsmouth, Southampton to the New Forest, and back by Romsey, Winchester, Dorking, Leatherhead, and Epsom.

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

FRENCH STUMBLING-

BLOCKS and ENGLISH STEPPING-STONES. By FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., late Senior French Master at Eton College. An entirely New Book on a New Plan.

Mr. Francis Tarver's skill as a teacher of French to Englishmen is well known. His thorough knowledge of both languages and his thirty years' experience as a master at Eton have afforded him exceptional opportunities of judging what are the difficulties, pit-falls, stumbling-blocks which beset the path of an Englishman in his study of French.

It contains a list of 3,000 idiomatic expressions most valuable to the student and traveller.

"An excellent little compendium."—Athenæum.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

WASTE and REPAIR in

MODERN LIFE. A Series of Essays on the Maintenance of Health under Conditions which Prevail at the Present Time. By ROBSON ROOSE, M.D.

Wear and Tear of Modern Life—Rest and Repair in London Life—The Art of Prolonging Life—Health Resorts and their Uses—Infection and Disinfection—Clothing as a Preventive against Cold—A Contribution to the Alcohol Question—The Physiology of Fasting—The Spread of Diphtheria—The Metropolitan Water Supply—The Propagation and Prevention of Cholera.

With Map and Illustrations, 8vo, 14s.

PHILIP and AELXANDER of MACEDON. Two Essays in Biography. By DAVID G. HOGARTH, Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; Author of "A Wandering Scholar," &c.

"This is a brilliant, and, in a large degree, an original book. The essay on Philip of Macedon gives a clearer, more consistent, and, on the whole, a more satisfying view of the king than can be found elsewhere. That on Alexander, though designedly less full, in view of the larger literature dealing with the subject, is such that no student of Greek history can afford to neglect it."

Spectator.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY of a GREAT

AGRICULTURAL ESTATE. An Account of the Origin and Administration of the "Beds and Bucks" and "Thorney" Estates. By the DUKE OF BEDFORD.

London : JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

BOHN'S LIBRARIES, 1847-1897.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF PUBLICATION.

THE inauguration of this series of Copyright Works was the first attempt on the part of English publishers to provide good literature at a low price. It was commenced in 1847 by Mr. H. G. Bohn with the issue of his Standard Library, which consisted of reprints and translations of the classical literature of England, Germany, France, and Italy. The success which attended this was so great that Mr. Bohn was encouraged to extend the field, and he started the various "Libraries" known as The Scientific, The Illustrated, The Classical, The Antiquarian, &c. In every case the works were admirably printed on good paper and furnished with illustrations, portraits, and maps of the highest quality. So important an influence has this series obtained in the advancement of English education, that there is hardly a library, public or private, the nucleus of which is not founded on "Bohn."

Thomas Carlyle said of it: "I may say, in regard to all manner of books, Bohn's Publication Series is the usefulest thing I know"; and his friend, Emerson, recognised its admirable purpose when he said: "The translations of Bohn's Library have done for literature what railroads have done for internal intercourse."

In 1864 Messrs. Bell & Sons acquired the series, and from time to time added new works, until to-day it includes over 770 volumes in all departments of literature, art, and science. With the progress of scholarship and research Messrs. Bell & Sons have found that new editions and new translations were necessary, and these they have initiated, with the result that Bohn's Libraries are unrivalled for accuracy of text. As for the editorial work the chief literary organ of America—the "New York Critic"—considers the "imprint of Bohn's Standard Library is a guarantee of good editing."

Within late years the Publishers have so far improved the paper, printing, and binding that the volumes form handsome as well as essential additions to every library.

770 Volumes at 3s. 6d. or 5s. each, with a few exceptions.

The following Volumes have been recently issued or are in preparation:—

THE PROSE WORKS of JONATHAN SWIFT.
Edited by TEMPLE SCOTT. With an Introduction by the Right Hon. W. E. H. LECKY, M.P.

In about 10 Vols., 3s. 6d. each.

Vol. I.—A TALE of a TUB, the BATTLE of the BOOKS, and other Early Works.

Vol. II.—THE JOURNAL to STELLA. Edited by F. RYLAND, M.A.

THE WORKS of GEORGE BERKELEY, BISHOP OF CLOYNE. Edited by GEORGE SAMPSON. With a Biographical Introduction by the Right Hon. A. J. BALFOUR, M.P. 3 vols., 5s. each. [Vol. I. ready.]

MOTLEY'S HISTORY of the RISE of the DUTCH REPUBLIC. With Introduction by MONCURE D. CONWAY, and Portrait of MOTLEY. 3 vols., 3s. 6d. each

COMTE'S POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY.—Translated and Condensed by HARRIET MARTINEAU. With Introduction by FREDERIC HARRISON. Three vols., 5s. each.

EARLY ESSAYS by JOHN STUART MILL. 3s. 6d.

BURTON'S ANATOMY of MELANCHOLY. Edited by the Rev. A. R. SHILLETO, M.A. With an Introduction by A. H. BULLEN. Portrait and full index. Three vols., 3s. 6d. each.

HORACE. A New Literal Prose Translation. By A. HAMILTON BRYCE, LL.D. 3s. 6d.

THE CAMPAIGN of SEDAN. By George Hooper. New Edition. 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

LELAND'S ITINERARY. Edited by Laurence GOMME, F.S.A. In several volumes. [Preparing.]

GASPARY'S HISTORY of ITALIAN LITERATURE. Translated by HERMANN OELSNER, B.A., Ph.D. Vol. I. [Preparing.]

Complete Catalogue of the Series on Application.

London: GEORGE BELL & SON, York Street, Covent Garden.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.

48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

SEELEY & CO.'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

MOUNTAIN, STREAM, and COVERT. Sketches of Country Life and Sport in England and Scotland. By ALEXANDER INNES SHAND. With many Illustrations, by Lancelot Speed, Archibald Thorburn, and others. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS in MANY LANDS. By the Rev. H. N. HUTCHINSON, F.G.S., Author of "Extinct Monsters," &c. With 24 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, price 12s. 6d.

IN the CHOIR of WESTMINSTER ABBEY. A Story of Henry Purcell's Days. By EMMA MARSHALL, Author of "Under Salisbury Spire." With Illustrations by T. Hamilton Crawford. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

ALBRECHT DÜRER. A Study of his Life and Work. By LIONEL CUST, Keeper of the National Portrait Gallery, and lately of the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum. With 8 Copper-plates and many other Illustrations. Super-royal 8vo, price 7s. 6d. net.

IN LINCOLN GREEN. A Merrie Tale of Robin Hood. By Rev. E. GILLIAT, Author of "Forest Outlaws," "Asylum Christi," &c. With Illustrations by Ralph Cleaver. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

NIGHTS WITH an OLD GUNNER, and other Studies of Wild Life. By C. J. CORNISH, Author of "Life at the Zoo." With many Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE PORTFOLIO.

MONOGRAPHS ON ARTISTIC SUBJECTS.

THE EARLIER WORK of TITIAN. By Claude Phillips. With 4 Copper-plates and many other Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d. net. [Ready October 15.]

JULY NUMBER.

ARMOUR in ENGLAND. From the Earliest Times to the Reign of James I. By J. STARKIE GARDNER. With 8 Coloured Plates and many other Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d. net.

"The monograph is throughout interesting and valuable, and the illustrations are of singular beauty."

"The subject is exhaustively treated, and the illustrations are even above the average in excellence."—Birmingham Post.

London: SEELEY & CO., LIMITED, 38, Great Russell Street.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

Price to Subscribers, before Publication, £10 10s. net; after Publication, £12 12s. net.

CODEX BEZAE CANTABRIGIENSIS. A Facsimile Edition of the Greek and Latin Manuscript of the Four Gospels and Acts of the Apostles preserved in the Cambridge University Library, and generally known as Codex Bezae or Codex D.

M. Paul Dujardin, of Paris, whose name is a sufficient guarantee of excellence in any work he undertakes, will photograph the pages of the manuscript and engrave them on copper by the process known as "Heliogravure." It is believed that this process has not yet been used for the reproduction entire of so large a volume.

The Facsimile will contain 880 pages, and will, it is hoped, be published early in 1898. Subscribers should send in their names at once through any Bookseller. A Prospectus, with Facsimiles, will be forwarded on application.

SOPHOCLES.—THE TEXT of the SEVEN PLAYS. Edited by R. C. Jebb, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

SOPHOCLES.—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS. School Edition, with Introduction and Commentary, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., LL.D. Second Edition. Extra fcap. 8vo, 4s. 6d. (PITT PRESS SERIES.) [Nearly ready.]

THE PHILEBUS of PLATO. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by R. G. Bury, M.A., formerly Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE REPUBLIC of PLATO. Edited, with Critical Notes and an Introduction on the Text, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE ITALIC DIALECTS. Edited, with a Grammar and Glossary, by R. S. Conway, M.A., Professor of Latin in University College, Cardiff, late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. Royal 8vo, in 2 vols., 30s.

AN ELEMENTARY COURSE of INFINITESIMAL CALCULUS, for the use of Students of Physics and Engineering, by HORACE LAMB, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics in the Owens College, Manchester. Crown 8vo, 12s.

THEORETICAL MECHANICS. An Introductory Treatise on the Principles of Dynamics, with numerous Applications and Examples, by A. E. H. LOVE, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s.

THE WORKS of ARCHIMEDES. Edited in Modern Notation, with Introductory Chapters, by T. L. HEATH, Sc.D., sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, Editor of the Treatise on Conic Sections by Apollonius of Perga. Demy 8vo, 15s.

THE THEORY of GROUPS of FINITE ORDE. By W. S. Burnside, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of Pembroke College. Demy 8vo, 15s.

AN APPARATUS CRITICUS to CHRONICLES the PESHITTA VERSION. With a Discussion of the Value of the Codex Ambrosianus. By W. E. BARNES, D.D., Fellow of Peterhouse. Demy 8vo, 5s.

STUDIA SINAITICA.—No. VI. A PALESTINIAN SYRIAC LECTIONARY, containing Lessons from the Pentateuch, Job, Proverbs, Prophets, Acts, and Epistles. Edited by AGNES SMITH LEWIS, with Critical Notes by Professor EBERHARD NESTLE, D.D., and a Glossary by MARGARET D. GIBSON. 12s. 6d. net.

CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.—New Volumes.

General Editor for the Old Testament and Apocrypha, A. F. KIRKPATRICK, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew.

THE BOOKS of JOEL and AMOS. With Illustrations. By the Rev. S. R. Driver, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Oxford. 3s. 6d.

THE FIRST BOOK of MACCABEES. With the Text of the Revised Version. By the Rev. W. FAIRWEATHER, M.A., and J. S. BLAOK, LL.D. With Map and Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

THE SMALLER CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS.—New Volume.

THE BOOKS of EZRA and NEHEMIAH. Edited by Professor H. E. Ryle, D.D., President of Queens' College, Cambridge. 1s.

PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE FOR SCHOOLS.—New Volume.

SHAKESPEARE.—KING LEAR. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By A. W. Verity, M.A. 1s. 6d. [Immediately.]

PITT PRESS SERIES.

DEMOSTHENES.—THE OLYNTHIAC XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. Book III. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

BIART.—QUAND J'ÉTAIS PETIT. Part II. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by JAMES BOIELLE, B.-ès-L. 2s.

MACAULAY.—PITT and CHATHAM. Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A., Oriel College, Oxford. [Nearly ready.]

London: C. J. CLAY & SONS, Cambridge University Press Warehouse, Ave Maria Lane.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 48, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1327.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

SOTHERAN'S SPECIAL CATALOGUE,
No. 10, Just Published.
PART I. containing choice and unique EXTRA ILLUSTRATED BOOKS, including magnificent copies of DON QUIXOTE, LYRON'S DEVON, MARLBOROUGH'S LIFE, WATSON'S ANGLER, &c.
PART II. containing Books having AUTOGRAPH LETTERS by their AUTHORS inserted, PROOF-SHEETS of ROBERT BROWNING'S POEMS, NELSON'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY, HOLOGRAPH, &c.
Post free from H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 37, Piccadilly, W.; or 140, Strand, W.C.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The OCTOBER CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 148, Strand, London, W.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS,
Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford.
CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLER BEN,
FOREIGN BOOKSELLER,
45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum),
Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices.
CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO.,
PUBLISHERS,
3, Creed Lane, London, E.C.
And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla.
MSB. considered for Publication. (Established 1819.)
A large Chester in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS of 27 and 28 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 13, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C. have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 32, or 32-page Journals at one operation.
Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted.
Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africaism, London."

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate.
Greek, Latin, Foreign MSB. Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMKIN, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

LITERARY LADY, experienced Typist, desires AUTHORS' MSS. to COPY, at 10d. per 1,000 words. Work neatly and expeditiously done.—"Typist," 27, Strathblaine Road, S.W.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 45, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scorr, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

STAMPS.—CANADA JUBILEE, already scarce, 10 will become rare; Cyprus, Java, Malta, Peru, Funchal, Selangor, Iceland, Saint Lucia, Sierra, Newfoundland, Hawaiian Islands, Herta; 30 genuine varieties, 1s. 1d.—Smith, Upper Park Road, Kingston, Surrey.

HAKLUYT SOCIETY (President, Sir CLEMENTS MARKHAM, K.C.B.).—TWO NEW VOLUMES—viz., "DANISH ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS, 1806-20" edited by C. G. A. BOSCH. Esq., are now being DISTRIBUTED to MEMBERS by Mr. QUARITCH. The Annual Subscription is One Guinea. List of Works already issued or in preparation may be obtained from WILLIAM FOSTER, Honorary Secretary, Bordeaux, Holly Road, Wanstead.

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, N.W.

The Committee have resolved to proceed to the ELECTION of a PROFESSOR of HEBREW at the College forthwith. The subjects will be the Language and Introduction to the Old Testament, Exegesis of the Old Testament, and the Contents of the Bible. Candidates are requested to send 25 copies of testimonials to the Secretary by January 31, 1898. Preference will be given, all other things being equal, to Welshmen and members of the Welsh Presbyterian Church. Commencing salary £170.—Applications to be sent, by December 31, 1897, to the Secretary, The Rev. R. H. MORRIS, M.A., Lluesty, Upper Bangor, N.W.

Just published, price 3s.; free by post, 3s. 4d.

THE OWENS COLLEGE CALENDAR FOR SESSION 1897-8.

London: Macmillan & Co. Manchester: Jas. E. CORNISH.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to the care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 22, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. A. care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Aron Lodge, West Kensington, W.

WILL any bold Editor INTRODUCE a POET worth notice to the Public? Specimens of work can be sent.—"Z," Kingstone Rectory, Canterbury.

PHONETICS and ANGLO-SAXON.

Mr. H. SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., will begin Courses of Systematic Instruction in the above in MICHAELMAS TERM (beginning about October 30).—For particulars apply to Mr. Sweet, 38, Northam Road, Oxford. Graduated Certificates will be obtainable by those who go through a full Course with satisfactory results.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD.
(The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)
Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of
PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS
OF
FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Ootman, Cromie, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size, 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY
FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS FOR THE PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processors in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archæologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Office: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the house of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited

30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.

40, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ROAD, MANCHESTER.

NEW SERIES, No. 24. OCTOBER, 1897.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

MIND:

A Quarterly Review of Psychology and Philosophy.

Edited by G. F. STOUT.

With the Co-operation of Professor H. SIDGWICK, E. CAIRD, Dr. VERN, Dr. WARD, and Professor E. B. TITCHENER.

Contents: 1. Richard Avenarius and His General Theory of Knowledge, Empirio-criticism, F. CARSTEN (translated by H. Bosanquet).—2. The Goal of Knowledge, J. H. MUIRHEAD.—3. Symbolic Reasoning, (II.) H. MACCOLL.—4. Suggestions on Aesthetics, E. H. DODD.—5. Fixity of Character, its Ethical Interpretation, J. D. LOGAN.—6. Discussions: Aristotle's Explanation of Apatheia, D. G. RICHIE; The Existential Import of Propositions, W. B. NEARBY.—7. Critical Notices: W. James, The Will to Believe, and Other Essays in Popular Philosophy, F. C. S. SCHILLER. L. BRUNSCHWIG: La Modalité du Jugement, G. E. MOORE. G. SANTAYANA: The Sense of Beauty, being the Outlines of Aesthetic Theory, E. B. TITCHENER. P. I. HOLM: Eine Theorie des Schönen, mathematisch-psychologische Studie, E. B. TITCHENER.—8. New Books.—9. Philosophical Periodicals.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE,
LONDON, EDINBURGH, AND OXFORD.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "STEPHEN REMARK."
PAUL MERCER: a Tale of Repentance among Millions. By the Hon. and Rev JAMES ADDERLEY.

JOB HILDRED, Artist and Carpenter.
By ELLEN F. PINSENT, Author of "Jenny's Case," "No Place for Repentance," &c.
[October 15.]

Cloth, 6s.

THE KING WITH TWO FACES.
By M. E. COLERIDGE, Author of "The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus." [October 15.]

THE SON of a PEASANT. By EDWARD McNULTY, Author of "Misther O'Ryan," &c. [October 15.]

NETHERDYKE. By R. J. Charleton, Author of "Newcastle Town," &c. [October 15.]

NOW READY, AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.
DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. An Account of Glass Drinking-Vessels in England from Early Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century. By ALBERT HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. Illustrated by about 70 Tinted Plates and several Hundred Illustrations in the Text. Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

RECOLLECTIONS OF AUBREY DE VERE

Demy 8vo, with Portrait, 16s.

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh. Professor of English Literature at University College, Liverpool. Author of "Robert Louis Stevenson," "The English Novel," &c. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE CHIPPENDALE PERIOD in ENGLISH FURNITURE. By K. WARREN CLOUSTON. With 200 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, handsomely bound, 21s. net.

Daily Telegraph.—"This handsome volume is enriched with illustrations which will be of great value to collectors, and of interest to any person of taste. It fills a distinct gap in the annals of art, and that in a manner not too technical for the Philistine in search of enlightenment."

ROME: the Middle of the World. By ALICE GARDNER, Lecturer in History at Newnham College. Author of "Friends of the Olden Time," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NEW, REVISED, AND CHEAPER EDITION.
FIRE and SWORD in the SUDAN. By SLATIN PASHA. Translated and Edited by Lieut.-Col. WINGATE, C.B. A New, Revised, and Cheaper Edition of this Famous Work. Illustrated. Cloth, 6s.

New Volume in the "SPORTSMAN'S LIBRARY." Edited by the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

THE REMINISCENCES of a HUNTSMAN. By the Hon. GRANTLEY F. BERKELEY. With the Original Illustrations by John Leech, and several Coloured Plates and other Illustrations by G. H. Jalland. Large 8vo, handsomely bound, 15s.; Large Paper Edition, limited to 200 copies, £2 2s. net.
[October 15.]

EDWARD ARNOLD, LONDON AND NEW YORK.

MR. DAVID NUTT'S LIST.

Just Published, to be had of all Booksellers.

CHILDREN'S AND ILLUSTRATED GIFT-BOOKS.

FAIRY TALES from the FAR NORTH. By P. C. ASBJORNSEN. Translated by H. L. BRAEKSTAD. With 94 Illustrations by E. Werenskjold and T. Kittelsen. The only English Edition authorised by Asbjørnsen's representatives. A beautifully printed volume of upwards of 330 pages, on paper of the finest quality, in specially designed cloth cover, small 4to. ("Wonder Voyages" size.) 6s.

A NEW BOOK BY JUDGE PARRY AND ARCHIE MACGREGOR.

THE FIRST BOOK of KRAB. Christmas Stories for Young and Old. By His Honour Judge EDWARD ABBOTT PARRY. With Illustrations by Archie MacGregor. A beautiful volume, in square crown 8vo. Printed at the Ballantyne Press, on special paper. Bound in specially designed cloth cover. 3s. 6d.

THE GIANT CRAB, and other Tales from Old India. Retold by W. H. D. ROUSE. With many Full-Page Plates, Vignettes, Tailpieces, and Illustrations in the Text by W. Robinson. A beautiful volume in square crown 8vo. Printed at the Ballantyne Press, on special paper. Bound in specially designed cloth cover. 3s. 6d.

THE MIRACLES of MADAME SAINT KATHERINE of FIERBOIS. Translated from the Edition of the Abbé J. J. BOUBASSE, Tours, 1868, by ANDREW LANG. With designed Title-page, Headpieces, Initials, and Tailpieces, by Selwyn Image. Square 12mo, 151 pages, beautifully printed at the De Vinne Press, on Hand-made Paper, title in red and black, bound in half-buckram, 7s. 6d. net.

* The Fifteenth-century French text here translated by Mr. Lang is of extreme interest to the student of the marvellous, as well as on account of the Saint's connexion with Joan of Arc. Of this exquisitely printed volume only 350 are issued for the English market on Hand-made Paper and 50 on Japanese Vellum. The price of the latter is £1 1s. net.

WILLIAM WORDSWORTH. Poems in Two Volumes. 1807. Edited, with Prefatory Essay upon the Wordsworthian Sonnet, and Notes by TH. HUTCHINSON, M.A. 2 vols., half-buckram, with label. 7s. 6d. net.

* An absolutely faithful reproduction textually, and a facsimile reproduction typographically, of the famous Poems in Two Volumes, which contains so much of Wordsworth's finest work. Mr. Hutchinson's elaborate notes are worthy of his position as perhaps the foremost student of Wordsworth's text, and will be found of deep interest to all lovers of literature.

DANTE.—A QUESTION of the LAND and the WATER. Translated into English (for the first time) by C. HAMILTON BROMBY. Crown 8vo, printed on Antique Paper, boards, uncut, 3s. net.

* Apart from its interest as the only work of Dante not yet rendered into English, the "Question" is a most curious example of mediæval scientific discussion.

THE HISTORY of REYNARD the FOX. With some Account of his Friends and Enemies. Turned into English Verse by F. S. ELLIS. With Illustrative Devices by Walter Crane. Square crown 8vo. Printed at the Chiswick Press on Hand-made Paper. Cloth, 6s.

GOSSIP from a MUNIMENT ROOM. Being Passages in the Lives of Anne and Mary Fytton, 1574 to 1618. Transcribed and Edited by Lady NEWDEGATE-NEWDEGATE. Small 4to, xii-158 pages, printed on Antique Paper, with deckle edges. With 3 Photogravures from the Gallery at Arbury, representing Anne and Mary Fytton as Girls, Mary Fytton as Maid of Honour, and Anne Fytton (Newdegate) in Widow's Weeds. Bound in gilt buckram, stamped with the Arms and Devices of the Fytton and Newdegate Families. 7s. 6d. net.

* Affords a quaint and charming glimpse of English Country and Court Life at the end of the Sixteenth Century, and is important on account of the asserted connexion of Mary Fytton with Shakespeare. The numerous letters and documents are printed verbatim et literatim.

JEWISH PORTRAITS. By Lady MAGNUS. Second Edition. 183 pages, 16mo. Charmingly printed at the Constable Press. Cloth, top gilt, 3s. 6d.

Contents:—Jehudah Halevi—Heinrich Heine—Moses ben Israel—Moses Mendelssohn—Charity in Talmudic Times, &c.

STUDIES in IRISH EPIGRAPHY. A Collection of Revised Readings of the Ancient Inscriptions of Ireland. With Introduction and Notes by R. A. STEWART MACALISTER, M.A. Part I., containing the Ogham Inscriptions of the Barony of Corkaguiney, and the Counties of Mayo, Wicklow, and Kildare. Demy 8vo, 98 pages, cloth, 3s. 6d. net (3s. 9d. post free).

* One of the most thorough and scientific works that have yet appeared upon the Ogham Inscriptions of Ireland, in which are preserved forms of the language dating from the Fourth to the Seventh Centuries.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON:

A MEMOIR.

BY HIS SON.

WITH PHOTOGRAVURE PORTRAITS

OR

LORD TENNYSON, LADY TENNYSON, &c.

Facsimiles of portions of Poems, and Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. WATTS, R.A., SAMUEL LAURENCE, Mrs. ALLINGHAM, RICHARD DOYLE, BISCOMBE GARDNER, &c.

2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

VOLUME I. NOW READY.

THE EVERSLEY BIBLE.

Arranged in Paragraphs, with an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In Eight Volumes, to be Published Monthly. Globe 8vo, 5s. each.

Vol. I. GENESIS—NUMBERS.

* The Text is that of the Authorised Version.

Two Volumes, Globe 8vo, 10s.

JOURNALS OF DOROTHY WORDSWORTH.

Edited by WILLIAM KNIGHT. With Etched Portraits and Vignettes. [Eversley Series.]

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SKETCHES FROM OLD VIRGINIA.

By A. G. BRADLEY.

Demy 8vo, 25s. net.

AN HISTORICAL GREEK GRAMMAR,

Chiefly of the Attic Dialect as written and spoken from Classical Antiquity down to the Present Time, founded upon the Ancient Texts, Inscriptions, Papyri, and Present Popular Greek. By A. N. JANNAKIS, Ph.D., Lecturer on Post-Classical and Modern Greek at the University of St. Andrews.

VOLUME LIV. NOW READY.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE,

Price 10s. 6d.

LEADING CONTENTS.

QUEEN VICTORIA. By the Hon. T. F. BAYARD.
GLIMPSES of GLADSTONE; with Sketches from Life. By HARRY FURNISS.

THE DAYS of JEANNE D'ARC. By M. H. CATHERWOOD.

A JOURNEY in THESSALY. By T. D. GOODELL.

VOLUME XXIV. NOW READY.

THE

ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE,

An Illustrated Magazine for the Family Circle.

Price 8s. 6d.

MACMILLAN & CO. (LIMITED),
ST. MARTIN'S STREET, LONDON.

A SELECTION FROM MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S ANNOUNCEMENTS AND NEW PUBLICATIONS.

NEW LETTERS OF NAPOLEON I. Omitted from the Collection published under the Auspices of Napoleon III. Translated from the French by Lady MARY LOYD. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, price 15s. net.

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE: A CRITICAL STUDY. By Georg Brandes, Ph.D. Translated from the Danish by WILLIAM ARCHER and DIANA WHITE. 2 vols., demy 8vo, price 24s.

A HISTORY OF DANCING, FROM THE EARLIEST AGES TO OUR OWN TIMES. From the French of GASTON VUILLIER. With 25 Plates in Photogravure and about 400 Illustrations in the Text. In 1 vol., 4to, price 36s. net.

Also 35 copies printed on Japanese Vellum (containing Three additional Plates), with a Duplicate set of the Plates on India Paper for framing. Each copy numbered and signed, price TWELVE GUINEAS net.

THE NON-RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. By Marie JEAN GUYAU. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 17s. net.

LITERATURES OF THE WORLD.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, 6s. each.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLISH LITERATURE
By EDMUND GOSSE, Hon. M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge.

Previously published.

A HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE. By Edward DOWDEN, D.C.L., LL.D., Professor of Oratory and English Literature in the University of Dublin.

A HISTORY OF ANCIENT GREEK LITERATURE. By GILBERT MURRAY, M.A., Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow.

SIXTY YEARS OF EMPIRE. Reprinted, by permission, from the "Daily Chronicle." A Symposium. Contributions by Sir CHARLES DILKE, Mr. JOHN BURNS, Mr. JOSEPH PENNELL, &c. With Reproductions of all the Illustrations, and Additional Portraits. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

[Great Lives and Events.]

THOMAS AND MATTHEW ARNOLD: and their Influence on English Education. By Sir JOSHUA FITCH, LL.D., formerly Her Majesty's Inspector of Training Colleges. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

[Great Educators.]

THE WORKS OF LORD BYRON. Edited by William ERNEST HENLEY. To be completed in 13 vols. Small crown 8vo, 5s. net each.

VERSE VOLUME I. Containing HOURS of IDLENESS, CHILDE HAROLD, and ENGLISH BARDS and SCOTCH REVIEWERS. With a Portrait after Sanders.

1. LETTERS, 1804-1813. With a Portrait after Phillips.

[Is now ready.]

POEMS FROM THE DIVAN OF HAFIZ. Translated from the Persian by GERTRUDE LOWTHIAN BELL. Small crown 8vo, 6s.

A SELECTION FROM THE POEMS OF WILFRED SOAWEEN BLUNT. With an Introduction by W. E. HENLEY. Crown 8vo, 6s.

STUDIES IN FRANKNESS. By Charles Whibley, Author of "A Book of Scoundrels." Crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, 7s. 6d.

JUDGE JEFFREYS. A Study. By H. B. Irving. 1 vol., crown 8vo.

THE WOMEN OF HOMER. By Walter Copland Perry. With numerous Illustrations. 1 vol., large crown 8vo, 6s.

THE STORY OF THE GREEKS. By H. A. Grueber. With Illustrations. 1 vol., crown 8vo.

LUMEN. By Camille Flammarion. 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

CUBA IN WAR TIME. By Richard Harding Davis, Author of "Soldiers of Fortune." 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

WITH THE FIGHTING JAPS. Naval Experiences during the late Chino-Japanese War. By J. CHALMERS. Crown 8vo.

MY FOURTH TOUR IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA. By ALBERT F. CALVERT, F.R.G.S. 4to, with many Illustrations and Photographs, 21s. net.

A N A L P H A B E T.

By WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

IN THREE EDITIONS.

1. The POPULAR EDITION, Lithographed in Colours, on stout cartridge paper, 5s.

2. The LIBRARY EDITION (Limited), Lithographed in Colours, on Dutch hand-made paper, mounted on brown paper and bound in cloth, gilt edges, 12s. 6d.

3. The EDITION DE LUXE (Limited), printed from the Original Woodblocks, Hand-Coloured, and signed by the Artist, in vellum Portfolio, £12 12s.

An Illustrated Prospectus on application.

FICTION.

ST. IVES. By R. L. Stevenson. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BETH BOOK. By Sarah Grand. 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 6s.

MARIETTA'S MARRIAGE. By W. E. Norris. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

WHAT MAISIE KNEW. By Henry James. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE CHRISTIAN. By Hall Caine. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GADFLY. By E. L. Voynich. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GODS ARRIVE. By Annie E. Holdsworth. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FREEDOM OF HENRY MEREDYTH. By M. HAMILTON. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

IN THE PERMANENT WAY, and other Stories. By FLORA ANNIE STEEL. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

LAST STUDIES. By Hubert Crackanthorpe. With an Introduction by HENRY JAMES, and a Portrait. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NIGGER OF "THE NARCISSUS." By Joseph CONRAD. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE DRONES MUST DIE. By Max Nordau. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FOURTH NAPOLEON. By Charles Benham. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A ROMANCE OF THE FIRST CONSUL. From the Swedish of M. MALLING. By ANNA MOLBOE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A NEW NOVEL. By J. A. Steuart. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LAKE OF WINE. By B. E. J. Capes. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

EZEKIEL'S SIN. By J. H. Pearce. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

A CHAMPION OF THE SEVENTIES. By Edith A. BARNETT. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

GOD'S FOUNDLING. By A. J. Dawson. 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 6s.

THE WAR of the WORLDS. By H. G. Wells. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LONDONERS. By Robert Hichens. 1 vol., cr. 8vo, 6s.

MRS. JOHN FORSTER. By Charles Granville. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A MAN WITH A MAID. By Mrs. Henry Dudeney. Cloth, 3s. net; paper, 2s. 6d. net.

[Pioneer Series.]

THE OLD ADAM AND THE NEW EVE. From the German of RUDOLF GÖLM. Cloth, 3s. 6d.; paper, 2s. 6d. [International Library.]

AN ALMANAC OF TWELVE SPORTS FOR 1898.

By WILLIAM NICHOLSON.

IN THREE EDITIONS.

1. The POPULAR EDITION, Lithographed in Colours, on stout cartridge paper, 2s.

2. The LIBRARY EDITION (Limited), Lithographed in Colours, on Japanese vellum, and bound in cloth, 7s. 6d.

3. The EDITION DE LUXE (Limited), printed from the Original Woodblocks, Hand-Coloured, and signed by the Artist, in vellum Portfolio, £5 5s.

An Illustrated Prospectus on application.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

Mr. MACQUEEN has pleasure in announcing that he will publish on MONDAY, the 11th inst., "FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY: a Novel of the Graces," by JOHN LE BRETON, Author of "Miss Tudor." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

NOW READY.

AFLOAT with NELSON; or, From Nile to Trafalgar. A Book for Boys and Others. By CHARLES H. EDEN, Author of "George Donnington," "Queer Chums," &c., &c. With 10 Full-page Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

A GIRL'S AWAKENING: a Novel. By J. H. CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland." With Frontispiece by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A pretty and idyllic study is 'A Girl's Awakening.' Mr. Crawford's feeling for nature stands him in good stead, and the background of his picture in the Scottish village is as harmoniously fitted with the central figures, Alan Forde and his companions, as one of George Eliot's own drawings."—Athenaeum.

THE RED PAINTED BOX: a Novel. By MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON, Author of "The Harvest of Sin," &c.; Joint-Author of "Convict 99," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

"It is only at pretty long intervals that stories so full of baffling mystery and powerful interest as 'The Red Painted Box' issue from the press. With cunning art the author weaves her plot, and the reader follows its windings with absorbed attention, spurred on from point to point by the pleasant but deluded belief that he or she has solved the mystery."—Scotsman.

THE COURT of KING ARTHUR: Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By WILLIAM HENRY FROST. 30 Illustrations by Sydney Richmond Burleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is a cleverly written adaptation of the chief legends of the Round Table, done after Malory into simple language, and held together in a pretty framework of story of childhood. The book is well illustrated by Mr. S. R. Burleigh."—Scotsman.

POSSESSED OF DEVILS. By Mrs. HAROLD E. GORST. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It would be impossible to convey a better idea of this book than by quoting the few first and very frank lines of its introduction: 'This is a story of a woman for whom I offer no apology, whose character and morals it is impossible to defend, whose sentiments were abominable, whose principles were "all".....but who, nevertheless, was in very truth a woman..... One may not endorse Mrs. Gorst's thesis, and yet acknowledge that she has exposed it with considerable talent.....The story ends with an unexpected and thrilling climax.'—Morning Post.

A DRAWING-ROOM CYNIC. By LORIN KAYE, Author of "Her Ladyship's Income," Art canvas, gilt top, crown 8vo, 6s.

"In Lorin Kaye's brilliant novel, 'A Drawing-room Cynic,' the author sets out a plan—engaging in its simplicity—by which Woman may bring a backward lover to the point."—ELIA HERWORTH DIXON in The Lady's Pictorial.

"A witty, cynical, whimsical writer is the author of this most captivating story. 'A Drawing-room Cynic' is so much better a novel than the reader is likely to come across for some time, that he will find it advisable to begin it again when he has reached the end, for the book is a gallop from start to finish, and during the race he must miss some of the excellent things of which the story is full."—Queen.

THE WOOING of AVIS GRAYLE.

By CHARLES HANNAN, Author of "Chin Chin Wa," "The Captive of Pekin," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Since Sir William Brandon on the Bench was confronted by Paul Clifford in the dock by that master of romance the first Lord Lytton, we have not had so strong a situation in the same order as that of the husband of Avis Grayle and his sworn friend."—World.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND.

By the AUTHOR of "THE WILD LIFE of SCOTLAND," &c. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound, uniform with Mr. CRAWFORD's other Works. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net. [Just published.

"Those who shrink from the hard scientific aspect and the cacophonous would-be Latinity of many works with titles of this kind need have no fear that these pleasant, gossip papers will be too severely botanical for them..... The reader will be hard to please, be he but a lover of nature, who does not find these pages interesting and full of charm."—The Times.

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

A NOTABLE CONTRIBUTION TO LITERARY HISTORY.

ON OCTOBER 12 WILL BE PUBLISHED

MRS. OLIPHANT'S LAST WORK.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD

AND HIS SONS.

THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS.

VOLS. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

Demy 8vo, 42s.

The following is a brief list of the many important literary names referred to in these volumes:—

William Blackwood—The Booksellers of Edinburgh—Sir Walter Scott—Thomas M'Crie—Miss Ferrier—John Murray—Charles Kirkpatrick Sharpe—William Gifford—"The Edinburgh Monthly Magazine"—The Chaldee Manuscript—John Gibson Lockhart—Christopher North—The Ettrick Shepherd—William Maginn—The Leslie Trial—Coleridge—De Quincey—John Galt—John Wilson Croker—Rev. Dr. Croly—Chaplain-General Gleig—Thos. Doubleday—Mrs. Hemans—Alaric Attila Watts—Samuel Warren—Michael Scott—The Crash of Constable—Branwell Brontë—John Sterling—Walter Savage Landor—Rev. James White—Lord Neaves—Douglas Jerrold—Delane of the Times—Mr. Gladstone Co-operates with the Blackwoods—Tom of Ingoldsby—Samuel Phillips—Peel and Disraeli—John Ruskin—G. P. R. James—Sir John M'Neill—Mrs. Oliphant's First Contribution to "Maga"—Bulwer Lytton—Sir Edward Hamley—George Henry Lewes—George Eliot—Ayton—Sir Theodore Martin—Laurence Oliphant—A. W. Kinglake—Major Blackwood—Palmerston and Lord Derby—Sir John Watson Gordon.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 984.—OCTOBER, 1897.—2s. 6d.

DARIEL: A ROMANCE OF SURREY.—Conclusion.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

FRIEDRICH NIETZSCHE: HIS LIFE AND WORKS.

By PROFESSOR ANDREW SEITZ.

OUR NATIONAL COLLECTIONS OF MANUSCRIPTS.

THE HARLEIAN LIBRARY. By J. M. STONE.

THE CALENDAR OF SCOTTISH CRIME.—PART I.

By THE RIGHT HON. SIR HERBERT MAXWELL, BART., M.P.

CHINESE CENSORS.

FAVOURITES IN FRENCH FICTION.

THE FAILURE OF FLIPPERTY. By ZACK.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH IN THE BASIN OF THE NIGER. With Map.

NAVIS SACRA.

THE NATIVE PRESS IN INDIA.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

FICTION.

NOTICE.—On October 11 will be published Mr. W. PETT RIDGE'S New Novel, "SECRETARY to BAYNE M.P."—On October 15, "A OBEEL of IRISH STORIES," by JANE BARLOW. Author of "Irish Idylls."—Mr. S. R. CROCKETT'S New Novel, "LOOHINVAR," with 6 Illustrations and Coloured Map, will be published about October 20th.

BLADYS of the STEWPONEY. By E. BARING-GOULD. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LADY'S WALK. By Mrs. Oliphant. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE SINGER of MARLY. By I. Hooper. Illustrated by W. Cubitt Cooke. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE FALL of the SPARROW. By M. C. BALFOUR. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE BUILDERS. By J. S. Fletcher. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE POMP of the LAVILETTES. By GILBERT PARKER. Author of "Seats of the Mighty," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE MUTABLE MANY. By Robert Barr, Author of "In the Midst of Alarms." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best novel that Mr. Barr has given us. There is much insight in it and much humour."—Daily Chronicle.

"A series of pictures of a strike which have rarely been equalled in brilliancy."—Star.

BY STROKE of SWORD. By Andrew BALFOUR. Illustrated by W. C. Cooke. Crown 8vo, 6s. Third Edition.

"A banquet of good things."—Academy.

"An unusually excellent example of a semi-historical romance. This exciting volume is worthy of a place in the front rank."—World.

KIRKHAM'S FIND. By Mary G. Aust, Author of "The Moving Finger." Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A really charming novel."—Standard.

"A graceful story."—Fall Mall Gazette.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

WITH the GREEKS in THESSALY. By W. KINNAIRD ROSE. With 23 Illustrations by Mr. W. T. Maud. and several Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Mr. Rose's description of the flight from Larissa will go down to history."—Daily Chronicle.

THE MASSACRE in BENIN. By A. BOISRAGON. With Map and Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The volume is written by one of the two survivors who escaped the terrible massacre in Benin at the beginning of this year. The author relates in detail his adventures and his extraordinary escape, and adds a description of the country and of the events which led up to the outbreak.

NURSERY RHYMES. With many Coloured Pictures. By F. D. BEDFORD. Small 4to, 6s.

This book has many beautiful designs in colour to illustrate the old rhymes.

A PRIMER of WORDSWORTH. By LAURIE MAGNUS. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This volume is uniform with the Primer of Tennyson and Burns, and contains a concise biography of the poet, a critical appreciation of his work in detail, and a bibliography.

A PRIMER of the BIBLE. By Prof. W. H. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

This Primer sketches the history of the books which make up the Bible in the light of recent criticism. It gives an account of their character, origin, and composition, as far as possible in chronological order, with special reference to their relations to one another and to the history of Israel and the Church. The formation of the Canon is illustrated by chapters on the Apocrypha (Old and New Testaments); and there is a brief notice of the history of the Bible since the close of the Canon.

SPORTING and ATHLETIC RECORDS. By F. MORGAN-BROWNE. Crown 8vo, 350 pp., paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

HOW to MAKE a DRESS. By Miss J. A. E. WOOD, Head Teacher of Dressmaking, Goldsmiths' Institute. With numerous Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

ORNAMENTAL DESIGN for WOVEN FABRICS. By C. STEPHENSON, of the Technical College, Bradford, and F. HUDDARDS, of the Yorkshire College, Leeds.

With 65 Full-page Plates, and numerous Designs and Diagrams in the Text. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

The aim of this book is to supply, in a systematic and practical form, information on the subject of Decorative Design as applied to Woven Fabrics, and is primarily intended to meet the requirements of students in Textile and Art Schools, or of designers actively engaged in the weaving industry. Its wealth of illustration is a marked feature of the book.

EXERCISES in LATIN ACCIDENCE. By S. R. WINDOLT, Assistant Master in Christ's Hospital. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

An elementary book adapted for Lower Forms to accompany the shorter Latin Primer.

NOTES on GREEK and LATIN SYNTAX. By G. BUCKLAND GREEN, M.A., Assistant Master at the Edinburgh Academy, late Fellow of St. John's College, Oxon. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Notes and explanations on the chief difficulties of Greek and Latin Syntax, with numerous passages for exercise.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOK GAZETTE and CATALOGUE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., ESSEX STREET, W.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
The Tennyson Biography ... ..	275
Original, Fearless, Fine ... ..	277
"The Power of an Endless Life" ... ..	278
Old London ... ..	279
Citizens in the Making ... ..	279
A Writer for Children ... ..	280
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	281
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: L. A. SOLICITOR ... ..	283
PARIS LETTER ... ..	283
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	284
VILLAGE READING ROOMS ... ..	284
AMERICAN PUBLISHING ... ..	285
THE WEEK ... ..	285
PUBLISHERS' AUTUMN LISTS ... ..	286
DRAMA ... ..	287
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	288
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	83-86

REVIEWS.

THE TENNYSON BIOGRAPHY.

Alfred, Lord Tennyson. A Memoir. By his Son. In 2 vols. (Macmillan & Co.)

A MEMOIR of Tennyson was necessary, and we take it as we find it. It is a gift-horse—given, perhaps, a little grudgingly; or we have not to regard it too critically if it lacks in frankness, or stops short where a genuine human document would proceed. We have here a smooth instead of a rough Tennyson—a Tennyson as a son sees him, and decides that we shall see him. No doubt the biographer realises this, for he heads his preface with a hitherto unpublished sonnet, in which his father says:

"Ye know that History is half a dream—say, even,
The man's life in the letters of the man.

For whatever knows us truly, knows
That none can truly write his single day,
And none can write it for him upon earth."

These are not the best principles on which to set forth on a biography. But the biographer is frank, at any rate, in advertising the impossibility of frankness, and in going on to tell us that his book is written, not for its own sake, but to keep out any other. Tennyson, we are told, "disliked the notion" of a biography. "He wished that the incidents of his life should be given as shortly as might be without comment, but that any notes should be final and full enough"—not to give the world the lesson of a great life, but—"to preclude the chance of further and unauthentic biographies." That is what we mean by saying that the book is a gift-horse.

We take it, then, for what it is. The real Tennyson will stand forth in time. Meanwhile, this Memoir will serve its purpose for a day. It is not proper biography, but once we know the lines on which it runs, we need have few disappointments. It is a book which nearly everybody will like to read; which hardly anyone will want to keep.

Tennyson, as a poet, has made his gift to England once for all; he has written what he has written; and his glory as a poet no biographer can magnify and none disturb. Tennyson was himself a very apt courtier, as his letters to the Queen declare, perhaps because he himself lived in a kind of court. His own letters to his correspondents are all of a piece—they deal with his attitude towards his correspondents, very little with any affairs or feelings of theirs. The homage of Browning, rendered with a delightful impetus, is accepted; also that of Fitzgerald; and the letters of both these men—not intellectually the inferiors of Tennyson on most topics to be discussed, and in some cases his superiors—are approved, disapproved, or tolerated, as the case may be; rarely made a plane for meeting on an equality of thought or speech. If the Poet applies to a Cabinet Minister for a favour for a friend, the letter is given, but not the result of the application—it is the Tennyson application alone that is important. There is a charming letter of homage from Currer Bell, ingenuously saying that she is giving to Tennyson and other admired persons copies of her own and her sister's poems because nobody will buy them. We are glad to know that Tennyson had the pleasure of this letter, but we should have been more delighted still to hear that Haworth had been stirred by an immediate recognition of Emily Brontë's poems in that volume from the poet she admired; we are not even told that he acknowledged the letter. This is only an instance of the book's consistent attitude—it tells us sometimes, in perfectly worthless letters of formal flattery—such as Mr. Froude's—how far Tennyson affected his contemporaries. We knew all that before; and now we should like to know how Tennyson was affected by them. But of this knowledge the reader will be balked in this book; and perhaps it is as well, for where we have a hint of it it is hardly reassuring. The arrangement is, no doubt, the biographer's; but where Stevenson and Mr. Meredith appear in a list hardly divided from Miss Braddon and Miss Edna Lyall, as among admired novelists, we recognise a certain pervading insensibility to Art, save where the Poet's own work is concerned. Nothing but your own business matters much, you may easily persuade yourself, if you have one idea always, and lack the humour that saves from egotism.

Within these limitations, of which, though they constantly stop the reader short in the biography, we shall say no more in this review, lest we, too, should seem to be ungracious insisters on one point of view, we give the volumes a warm welcome. They open with a glimpse, one does not say more, of the home-life of the poet as a boy in Lincolnshire. When he was twelve he wrote from Somersby to an aunt in Louth to give her his impressions of Samson Agonistes (he spells it Sampson), and we find him expressing particular admiration for

"O dark, dark, dark, amid the blaze of noon," a line in which we see Milton as already his master. Thomson of the "Seasons" had been a yet earlier influence, under which he wrote blank verse at eight; for Thomson was the first poet he knew. Pope's translation of the "Iliad," made acquaintance with when he was ten or eleven, set him off composing hundreds of lines in the same metre. Byron, of course, became an absorbing influence a little later, and, equally of course, an influence that passed away. When Byron died, the Lincolnshire boy of fourteen felt that the world was darkened. "Byron is dead" he carved on a rock at Somersby. As the placing of Byron is still in dispute, it is worth while to note the experience of Tennyson, as one born during the Byron rule. In maturity he spoke of Byron to Locker Lampson, saying: "Thanks to Byron, I was more blat at fourteen than I am now. . . . Byron's merits are on the surface. . . . As a boy I was an enormous admirer of Byron, so much so that I got a surfeit of him, and now I cannot read him as I should like to do." Then, when his friend remarked on the omission of the "Isles of Greece" from the Golden Treasury, he "supposed that the editor had discovered some defect in it of which he [Tennyson] was not aware; but he had not read it for years." The first stanza he repeated, saying "That's very fine," but adding: "Thackeray tells me that Samian wine is very wretched stuff." Elsewhere the biographer repeats: "In early boyhood he had been possessed of Byron's poetry, but he could not read it in later life, except, perhaps, 'The Vision of Judgment' and parts of 'Childe Harold' and of 'Don Juan.' He would say: 'Byron is not an artist or a thinker or a creator in the higher sense,' adding, however, that 'he is endlessly clever, and is now unduly depreciated.'" We know not by whom, for nobody has denied him more than Tennyson denies him here. Of Wordsworth, Tennyson was willing to allow that he was the first of moderns, although he accompanies that admission with an amount of reservation that will strike cold into hot Wordsworthians. Among such we must rank Mr. Aubrey de Vere, whose hand constantly appears through these pages, and never too often. He it is who gives the account of the personal relations between Wordsworth and Tennyson.

Mr. de Vere made the acquaintance of Tennyson very early in the forties, and they called each other by their Christian names at the first, and for more than fifty years after. It is with touching pains to unite those two great poets as closely as may be, then and for ever, that Mr. de Vere tells the story:

"Alfred Tennyson's largeness of mind and of heart was touchingly illustrated by his reverence for Wordsworth's poetry, notwithstanding that the immense merits he recognised in it were not, in his opinion, supplemented by a proportionate amount of literary skill. He was always glad to show reverence to the 'Old Poet.' 'Wordsworth,' he said to me one day, 'is staying at Hampstead in the house of his friend, Mr. Hoare. I must go and see him; and you must come with me.' As we walked back to London through grassy fields Tennyson complained of the Old Poet's coldness. He had endeavoured to stimulate some latent ardours by telling Wordsworth of a tropical island where the trees, when they first came into leaf, were a vivid scarlet; 'everyone of them, I told him, one flush all over the island, the colour of blood! It would not do. I could not influence his imagination in the least!"

Our own, we confess, is left cold. But we interrupt to say as much, for Mr. de Vere, warming to his theme, proceeds:

"During the preceding year I had had the great honour of passing several days at Rydel Mount with Wordsworth, walking on his mountains and listening to him at his fireside. I told him that a young poet had lately risen up. Wordsworth answered that he feared, from the little he had heard, that if Crabbe was the driest of poets, the young aspirant must have the opposite fault. I replied that he should judge for himself, and, without leave given, recited to him two poems of Tennyson: 'You ask me why, though ill at ease,' and 'Of old sat Freedom on the heights.' Wordsworth listened with a gradually deepening attention. After a pause he answered, 'I must acknowledge that these two poems are very solid and noble in thought. Their diction also seems singularly stately.'"

On another occasion Mr. de Vere saw Wordsworth and Tennyson together, at a dinner given by Mr. Moxon. After dinner, when last words were to be said, Tennyson moved up to Wordsworth:

"He spoke in a low voice, and with a perceptible emotion. The old man looked very much pleased, more so, indeed, than I ever saw him look on any other occasion; shook hands with him heartily, and thanked him affectionately."

Wordsworth, it may be added, records this very meeting in one of his letters to his American friend, Prof. Reed: "You will be pleased to hear that he expressed in the strongest terms his gratitude to my writings. To this I was far from indifferent."

To these great literary influences, begun so early, must be added the influence of locality. Lincolnshire is to be found on the face of verse after verse throughout his poems. Even the magic of the landscape in "The Lady of Shalott" has its origin amid the flat cornfields of the poet's native county; and the long waves beating on the long sands of its coast held over him to the end of his days the dominion they gained in his boyhood. When the "Poems by Two Brothers"—Alfred and Charles—were published by Jackson, the Louth bookseller, who gave them the generous sum of £20, part of which was paid in kind, the elated poets hired a carriage in which they drove to the coast, fourteen miles distant, and at Mablethorpe "shared their triumph with the winds and waves." "Poems by Three Brothers" the book ought to have been named, for four of the pieces, usually assigned to Charles, were of Frederick's composing. "My father," says the biographer, "could hardly tolerate what he called his 'early rot,'" although his last judgment on it was: "Some of it is better than I thought it was."

The influence of Trinity College, Cambridge, was not great on Tennyson, excepting so far as it gained for him friends—Spedding, Hallam, Brookfield, Milnes, Trench, and the rest—who were, in truth, his apostles, proclaiming a little later, in the press, his merits to an unbelieving generation. In 1829 he took the prize medal for his "Timbuctoo" in blank verse; in 1830 he published "Poems, chiefly Lyrical," and in the next year he left the University. The next few years were influential; there was the friendship with Fitzgerald, "faithful Fitz," who met Tennyson at the house of the Speddings in the Lake country, and saw what afterwards formed part of the contents of the splendid 1842 volume—the "Morte d'Arthur," "The Day-Dream," "Dora," and, among others, "The Lord of Burleigh," the inferiority of which Fitz does not seem to have perceived. In the thirties and forties the family lived at High Beech in Epping Forest, at Tunbridge Wells, and at Boxley, near Maidstone. Visits to his beloved Lincolnshire were made when funds allowed—only once or twice do we get allusions to the poverty of those times, when a fare to the neighbourhood of Mablethorpe was a fine too great to be paid. Emily Sellwood, too, lived at Horncastle, in that county. She had been a bridesmaid when her sister married his brother; and her engagement to the Poet was a long affair, not unattended by parental injunctions to the maiden not to write to one who was so ineligible. Indeed, the engagement dragged out for long over a decade; for it was not till 1850 that they were married, his poems then bringing him in a competency. His love of the "central roar" of London drew him, now and again, to lodgings in Norfolk-street, Strand, and he delighted to walk down Fleet-street, dining often at the Cock. "Instead of the stuccoed houses of the West End this is the place where I would like to live," he said to Fitz; but if you look for his London address in later days you will find it in Belgravia. "The Princess," however, published in 1847, was written mostly in Lincoln's Inn Fields. Fitzgerald, who generally knew what he was writing about, rated it lower than much of the work published five years earlier; and he was right. But that was unpalatable truth then; and Fitzgerald, to cover the situation, put his case with extremity. "Like Carlyle," he says, "I gave up all hopes of Tennyson after 'The Princess.'" The biographer has his explanation, to be sure. "Nothing either by Thackeray or by my father," he says, "met Fitzgerald's appreciation unless he had first seen it in MS."

The facts relating to the friendship with Arthur Hallam, and to the publication of "In Memoriam," are so familiarly known that this biography adds little to the history. Even the loss of "the Elegiacs," as Tennyson called them while they were in process, and the recovery of the MS. by Mr. Patmore's persistency pitted against the landlady's statement that the cupboard was bare, will not be new to readers of our columns, and Tennyson's letter to "My dear Coventry," now printed, adds no fresh surprise to the episode. Particularly welcome, indeed, would have been some further account of the friendship between these two poets, very warm in the forties, but untimely ended by the withdrawal of Mr. Patmore into himself and his cloud and fire of mysticism. Tennyson's admiration for "The Angel in the House" is put on record in the biography by the pen of Mr. de Vere, the devoted friend of both poets, but "The Unknown Eros" opens fields where Tennyson could not follow. Nevertheless, the chapter on "In Memoriam" contains a statement of Tennyson's religious sentiments which will commend itself to every reader as the indication of a grave, sincere, and even humble mind. He did not pretend to a knowledge of theology, nor do we claim it for him. He did not treat it as a science largely accepted on the authority of the past; he began again for himself, as it were. One lifetime is not very long for an investigator in any great department of thought; but it was long enough, in Tennyson's case, to bring him to a belief in man's immortality, and in the existence of a God with a conscious personality. The difficulties of Revelation, and especially the great difficulty that is presented by Revelation's avoidance of just those very explanations that the inquirer needs, were constantly in his thoughts. More and more as time passes will the distinctly ethical note of his poetry be recognised. He came to be an individualist in this orthodox sense, that he distrusted large schemes for the general welfare of the world—he believed that each man was his own especial charge. It pleased him, therefore, to do any kindness, or to hear that his poetry—especially "In Memoriam"—had been of use to readers, and this not less when those readers happened to be of the humblest mental capacity. Such testimonies were a true consolation to him as one who wished well to all his fellows, quite apart, as we believe, from any gratification they gave to one who, from the days of his boyhood on the desolate Mablethorpe sands, craved to be popular. He had, indeed, popularity enough and to spare; enough, some would say, to punish him.

There are no surprises in the volumes; unless, indeed, the correspondence with the Queen be accounted such, and this has a social rather than a literary interest. But we note in passing that the Queen sent her Highland Notebook to the Laureate, who praised, among other things, its "pure English," and that, though they wrote often, and lived near one another at times in the Isle of Wight, they met seldom. The last meeting was in 1883, when the Queen, in her private journal, wrote the account of it at Osborne, as follows:

"After luncheon saw the great Poet Tennyson in dearest Albert's room for nearly an hour; and most interesting it was. He is grown very old, his eyesight much impaired. But he was very kind. Asked him to sit down. He talked of many friends he had lost, and what it would be if he did not feel and know that there was another world where there would be no partings; and then he spoke with horror of the unbelievers and philosophers who would make you believe there was no other world, no Immortality, who tried to explain all away in a miserable manner. We agreed that were such a thing possible, God, Who is Love, would be far more cruel than any human being. He spoke of Ireland and the wickedness of ill-using dumb animals: 'I am afraid I think this world is darkened; I dare say it will brighten again.' I told him what a comfort 'In Memoriam' had again been to me, which pleased him but he said I could not believe the number of shameful letters of abuse he had received about it. Incredible! When I took leave of him I thanked him for his kindness, and said I needed it, for I had gone through much; and he said: 'You are so alone on that terrible height; it is terrible. I've only a year or two to live, but I shall be happy to do anything for you I can. Send for me whenever you like.' I thanked him warmly."

Social also in its interest we must hold to be the correspondence about the peerage conferred on the Poet by Mr. Gladstone, although there is a good deal of chatter about the honour being accepted in the interests of Literature. Social certainly is the astonishing item that one of Mr. Gladstone's difficulties in offering the peerage was that the Poet might insist in going to the House of Lords in his wideawake. Mr. Gladstone, as usual, comes out of the correspondence with Tennyson as a man full of considerateness, the possessor of a magnanimity which has, perhaps, been more tried than any man's, and yet has never failed when put to the test. This Memoir is a witness to the genius, gravity, dignity, and essential sincerity of its central figure. Under surface affectations and insimplicities a great and single character.

ORIGINAL, FEARLESS, FINE.

History of the Life of Fénelon. By Andrew Michael Ramsay. Translated from the French edition of 1723. With a Biographical Memoir of the Author, Bibliography, and Notes by David Cuthbertson. (Paisley: T. & R. Parlane.)

It seems at first sight strangely improbable that the son of an Ayrshire Protestant baker should, early in the last century, become the disciple and friend of contemporary Christendom's greatest Catholic prelate; but those were the relations between the Chevalier Andrew Ramsay and Fénelon, Archbishop of Cambrai. Mystic recognises mystic, and the plebeian man from the county of Burns found a fellow spirit in the holy aristocrat of Périgord, courtliest of saints, saintliest of courtiers. Each lived to illustrate the saying of a later expert in "the science of the saints," that "it is a very easy thing for a man to go wrong in spiritual theology, and to stray into the shadow of condemned propositions." But Ramsay, though, indeed, as Hume calls him, "an author of taste and imagination, who was surely no enemy to Christianity," would scarce have survived but for his intimacy with Fénelon, whose faith he embraced, whose doctrines he followed, whose Life he wrote. At best we should know him as one of the innumerable obscurer Mystics, who testify to the soul's thirst in the dry places of the world, but whose testimony is not memorable. Becoming Fénelon's convert, the captive of his sweetness and strength, Ramsay passed into history. As Gibbon says of himself and Bossuet, "he fell," if fall it was, "by a noble hand." For Fénelon is a figure of irresistible charm, rich in grace and in the graces; his presence adorns the courts of kings and of their King, yet there is a cordial humility and humanity in his carriage. He provokes distinguished writers to phrases of distinction. Here is Michelet:

"Who can say by what enchantment he seized and ravished souls? We encounter it in the infinite charm of his correspondence, all mutilated as that is—no other correspondence has been more cruelly emended, expurgated, obscured for a purpose. Well! in those fragments, those scanty remains, the fascination is still omnipotent. Apart from the nobility of style, the tone so vivid and refined, revealing the gentleman beneath the apostle, there is something peculiar to himself, a feminine delicacy, which in no way excludes strength, and, in the very subtlety, I know not what penetrating tenderness."

Or take Pater:

"A veritable grand seigneur! His refined old age, the impress of genius and honours—even his disappointments concur with natural graces to make him seem too distinguished (a fitter word fails me) for this world. Omnia vanitas! he seems to say, yet with a profound resignation, which makes the things we are most of us so fondly occupied with seem petty enough. Omnia vanitas! Is that, indeed, the proper comment on our lives, coming, as it does in this case, from one who might have made his own all that life has to bestow? Yet he was never to be seen at court, and has lived here almost as an exile. Was our 'Great King Lewis' jealous of a true grand seigneur or grand monarque by natural gift and the favour of Heaven, that he could not endure his presence?"

After speaking of Napoleon, Lord Acton proceeds:

"In another sphere, it is the vision of a higher world to be intimate with the character of Fénelon, the cherished model of politicians, ecclesiastics, men of letters, the witness against one century and precursor of another, the advocate of the poor against oppression, of liberty in an age of arbitrary power, of tolerance in an age of persecution, of the human virtues among men accustomed to sacrifice them to authority, the man of whom one enemy says that his cleverness was enough to strike terror, and another, that genius poured in torrents from his eyes."

That M. Huysmans' hero, the malleus sanctorum, the superior artist in religion, Durtal, should find in a "Job mitré" but "une petite Mystique, ni trop chaude, ni trop froide, un peu moins tiède que celle de Saint François de Sales et surtout beaucoup moins ardente que celle de Sainte Térèse," is no poor compliment to the essential excellence of Monseigneur de Cambrai, to his "sanctified common-sense." Into the tangled and thorny questions of Molinism—Quietism—which made Fénelon's later life a martyrdom and a triumph, we cannot here enter. It had, perhaps, been well for him had he never met with Mme. Guyon and her writings, never written the Maximes des Saints. It is personally painful, even now, to watch Bossuet, "the eagle of Meaux," falling foul of Fénelon, "the dove of Cambrai." It is revolting to think of the most delicate and mysterious things of faith exposed to the impure handling of such men as the Great King and Harlay, the infamous Archbishop of Paris, who died in the arms of his mistress. Two true and witty sayings contain the gist of the notorious controversy. "M. de Cambrai," said Mme. de Sévigné's daughter, "pleads well the cause of God, but M. de Meaux still better that of orthodoxy; he cannot fail to win the day at Rome." Said Pope Innocent XII.: "Cambria has sinned through excess of love for God, and Meaux through want of love to his neighbour." Technically, verbally, Fénelon was wrong; he erred in expression, not in meaning. We cannot agree with Dean Church, that "it was a poor quarrel and a sign of degeneracy." It concerned the weightiest matters of spiritual life. But we agree with him in condemning its accidents and circumstances, its atmosphere and environment of devotee courtiers, and pietism à la grande dame, and social intrigues and jealousies. Mysticism and its exact theology are not for loose and general discussion upon the levels of society, but require retirement, solitude, patience. Take any approved treatise of mystical theology, such as the thousand-paged Institutiones Theologiae Mysticae of the Benedictine Schram: then imagine Paris of Fénelon's day canvassing problems and speculations, which even the most learned and experienced of theologians touch but at their perpetual peril. Men and women, whose first effort should have been to keep a few of the Ten Commandments, fell to disputing whether love for God must be absolutely "disinterested"; whether they should "desire hell" if God desired it for them; whether anything short of self-annihilation to the will of God were permitted to a Christian. Fine topics of talk among the frou-frou of skirts and the flutter of fans! When Fénelon's book was under examination at Rome, Mme. de Maintenon, we are quaintly told, "did not think herself entitled to enter into an affair which was laid before the Holy See." Mighty obliging and self-denying of the good lady! There was, perhaps, not a score of persons in France capable of judging the questions at issue, either by their scientific training in theology or by their experience of the spiritual life in its most profound reality. Such a man as Jean Baptiste de Renty, who died shortly before Fénelon's birth, and whose Holy Life ranks among the greatest of mystical biographies, was the kind of man to whom these tremendous questions were matters of personal knowledge; but such a man is as rare as the aloe blossom. It was Fénelon's lot to be cast among courtly offices, worldly affairs, relations with the State; c'était Louis XIV. He was not allowed the pastoral seclusion of Francis de Sales; he stood prominently before France—a public man. Yet he never lost the bloom of sincerity and gentleness, nor did his reserved strength ever kindle into passion; he won the hearts of the most unlikely persons. "He was cast," said Lord Peterborough, "in a particular mould, that was never used for anybody else; he is a delicious creature! But I was forced to get away from him as soon as I possibly could, for else he would have made me pious." His very aspect was an enchantment. "Il fallait faire effort," said Saint-Simon, "pour ne pas le regarder." In contrast with too many prelates of his day, he was a very Dupanloup in the discharge of diocesan duties and episcopal superintendence; and he discharged at the same time a vast "apostolate of letter-writing," as the director of countless souls. Withal, he was a master in literature; Télémaque is not yet a faded classic, and his dissertations upon oratory and the ancients are full of a rich purity in style and thought. He wrote the first important modern treatise upon the education of women: he was at all points original, fearless, fine. "Uction" in him was not that sickly-sweet sensibility and sentimentality which in French religious writers is apt to usurp the name: it was a veritable gift of love, eloquent and winning proprio motu, but never affectedly or foolishly effusive. His "Spiritual Letters" abound in salutary severities in the spirit of St. Teresa, though without her inimitable humour and homely terseness of speech. He is not languishing and rapturous, but a very wise and simple Christian, who uses a gracious and graceful style, and conveys piety with the pleasing politeness of good French. He had not the magnificent Bossuet's thunder, that organ music rolling over the deaths of princes and chaunting the procession of the ages: Fénelon is the Sophocles to Bossuet's Æschylus, the Spenser to his Milton. The elegance of holiness was upon him, as well as the loftier beauty; he was much of a George Herbert, though nobler, fashioned upon a greater plan. An essential candour shines about his memory; it purifies and freshens his not very wholesome age, in which single-hearted men were rare. His world was aware of his eminence, his solitary distinction; he won to himself even such men as Marlborough. "If I am sorry I have not taken Cambrai, it is not for the honour of the conquest as to have had the pleasure of seeing so great a man."

Mr. Cuthbertson has deserved well of literature in producing this book, with its vivid sketch of Ramsay and its useful annotations. Indeed, one is tempted to suggest that he would do well to write a monograph or brief biography of the Chevalier, whom most of us know merely through Spence's "Anecdotes." For Ramsay has a certain importance in the history of metaphysics, or rather of "theosophies"; and Fénelon's secretary, the tutor of Charles Edward and of "Henry IX.," Cardinal of York, is a picturesque and arresting figure.

L. J. DOWSON

DAVID WRIGHT.

The Power of an Endless Life, and other Sermons. By David Wright, late Vicar of Stoke Bishop. (Rivingtons.)

A VOLUME of David Wright's Sermons is furnished with a preface by Canon Ainger; and to the many who are complete strangers to the name upon the title-page, the recommending words of a distinguished and interesting preacher, who was likewise a friend, will be a serviceable introduction. Canon Ainger has held for the last several years, as readers will remember, not only the Mastership of the Temple, but a Bristol Canonry. In residence in Bristol the Master of the Temple first became acquainted with the vicar of Stoke Bishop, and there he had the opportunity of appreciating him. When David Wright died, only a year ago, he had been for five-and-thirty years vicar of Stoke Bishop, and he had been little else. He was a born preacher, uniting in himself so many of the fine preacher's finest qualities, yet entirely and intensely, though never aggressively, individual. But, though a born preacher, he never preached to crowds, and rarely to congregations consisting for the most part of the intellectually distinguished. If we remember rightly, in the very latest days of the ministry of F. D. Maurice at St. Peter's, Vere-street, David Wright preached a few sermons there—filling Mr. Maurice's place; but if he did so it was probably in the vacation—the congregation of St. Peter's, Vere-street, must have been out of town at the time. Once or twice, at least, his voice was heard in Westminster Abbey; and, as regards mere local recognition, it is true that there was bestowed on him for a year or so the more or less honorary appointment of Mayor's Chaplain at Bristol; but there, probably, his outward distinctions, such as they were, stopped. Practically he went without the rewards and recognitions of distinguished service and of exceptional capacity. He was valued, of course, and beloved in his own parish, and in the great city which lies upon its borders. In the best sense he must have been to some extent at least "influential." But a hundred smaller men might have exercised an influence as considerable, and would have enjoyed, locally, a consideration as great. The "powers that be"—careful, generally, in their selections for promotion, and guided generally, we do not doubt, by the best motives and by wisdom—were yet for once strangely lacking in the proper initiative when they permitted David Wright to end his labours almost as he had begun them—to end them simple vicar of the agreeable country parish where he had taken up his cure of souls thirty-five years before.

In Church newspapers habitually devoted to the discussion of doctrine—in the Guardian, the Record, and the Church Times, for instance—we shall expect to see what it would be almost inappropriate to print here, an analysis of the mind and method of David Wright as a Churchman. Here, in regard to his doctrinal position, it will be enough, or almost enough, to say that he was not a party man. He was nearer, perhaps, to the Evangelicals than to any others; yet his Evangelicalism was tempered by modern culture, by Broad Church influence, by something, too, that came to it from the graver leaders of the old High Church school. Briefly, and to repeat it, he was not a party man; but his attachment to the Catholic Church and to the Church of England as an institution, was profound and lasting—was perhaps growing in intensity to the very end—and his broad and tolerant Christianity, concerned so much with the spirit and so little with the letter, feared no undermining from "modern thought," and knew no apprehension from the later discoveries of a "Science" apt to be periodically revised or overturned by its own votaries. For David Wright the world of Nature might be pryed into to what conclusions you chose. The world of the Spirit and of the heart of Man at least remained.

Perhaps of his own personality, as of his published sermons, a spiritual gravity and dignity was the main characteristic. His sermons, while wholly devoid of pessimism—or he would scarcely have been Christian at all—had, as a frequent "note," that profound sadness which belongs to the great things of Literature, to the poem or the story which outlasts the fashion of a day. How could they avoid it, and yet have a true outlook on present human life? He was accustomed to read his sermons with absolutely no conscious art, and even little of acquired skill, of delivery; often with some nervousness—in the level and expository passages with some hesitation and shyness—but ever with an abounding sense of reverence and responsibility; with a voice second only in impressiveness and vibrating quality to that of the Bishop of Southwell—a Churchman with whom, whether he knew it or not, he must have been greatly in sympathy. The present writer was an occasional but close listener to his always remarkable and deeply studied sermons, over a period of six or eight-and-twenty years, and, so far as memory may be trusted, they changed but little in character, in method, or delivery. At the end as at the beginning of this prolonged experience of him, it was felt that one was listening to the most personal utterance of a profound though reserved nature—to an utterance fortified by much secluded meditation, by a deliberation of purpose and a quietude of life hardly attainable by the popular favourite, the celebrity of the busy hour. The Master of the Temple bears tribute to "the originality of thought and intellectual acuteness" of the author of sermons which justify indeed his praise to the full. David Wright was essentially reflective, subtle, stored with deep wisdom. It is claimed for him, by the sponsor we have already named, that he had "an almost ideal pulpit style." And so far as any one man can possess that, doubtless it was possessed by David Wright. On the negative side this is especially true. His style was singularly without fault or technical vice. And at the same time its actual qualities were various and convincing. He could be direct without abruptness; tender without sentimentality; picturesque and vivid without exaggeration; and, at need, satirical without flippancy. You could not, of course, ask him to combine within the limits of one personality every quality that is attractive or valuable in the speech of man to man—to be at once the preacher of a Carême at Notre Dame and Canon Eyton at Westminster, and Ignatius delivering a message from God to London Society. As well invite Schumann to appropriate the qualities of Chopin, or Edmund Kean to add to his own magic the elaborated art of Kemble. But among the masters of the English pulpit David Wright must surely take—and should have taken long ago—his honourable and recognised place. The volume which survives him, as he lies quiet in his grave by "that broad water of the West," may be a satisfaction to the thoughtful soul, and is a model for the younger preacher.

OLD LONDON.

London Signs and Inscriptions. By Philip Norman. (Elliot Stock.)

THIS is a good book with faults. One of its faults is that it has not been brought up to date, no trivial drawback in a work dealing with the ever vanishing relics of London's past. It is clear, indeed, that Mr. Norman wrote some of his chapters a long time ago. On p. 5 he speaks of a house in Panyer-alley as "shortly to be pulled down," and adds a note at the bottom of the page stating that this house was demolished in 1892. Why not have altered the text? On p. 76, in dealing with the Bridge House Estate, Mr. Norman writes of the Tower Bridge as in process of building! On p. 104 he tells the reader that at the "Cock" in Fleet-street he "will find excellent fare and the utmost attention from Paul." The excellent fare is still to be had at the "Cock," but everybody knows that Paul no longer serves the hot and hot. Again, on p. 113, Mr. Norman begins to discourse on the "Goose and Gridiron" as if it were still standing by St. Paul's, whereas it was shut up a year or more ago, and has since been razed to the ground, and replaced by the extension of a draper's premises. Elsewhere we read: "A well-modelled bas-relief of a woman's head, probably intended to represent Minerva, is on a house belonging to the Leathersellers' Company at the corner of Old Jewry and Gresham Street." Is it? We think not. The house and its decorations disappeared fully three years ago. Perhaps these mistakes are not very serious; but they are irritating, and they suggest the existence of others. A more serious defect in the book is its digressions. Now digressions are often charming, but they ought not to interfere with business, still less exclude it. Had Mr. Norman's treatment of his subject been exhaustive, his excursions into collateral subjects would have been more acceptable. But he gives us a long chapter on the old spas and pleasure gardens of Islington and Clerkenwell with practically no justification, while, equally without justification, he omits any account of the tablets which have been placed on London houses that have been dwelt in by illustrious men. These are "inscriptions" in every sense of the word, and their enumeration would have been a useful feature. Their number is constantly being added to, but we know of no complete list of them. The houses to which these circular tablets are fixed are necessarily houses with histories, and would have afforded material for a delightful chapter; whereas the substituted chapter on the Islington and Clerkenwell spas is neither relevant nor exhaustive. For why these spas any more than the Hampstead ones, or those which existed on the south side of the river? Moreover, it is a little annoying to find Mr. Norman dealing with this subject in a confessedly perfunctory manner, with never a mention of Mr. Warwick Wroth's exhaustive work on the London spas and pleasure-gardens, published only last year. Other digressions suggest other uses to which Mr. Norman might have put his space. For example, it is entirely to be desired that London landlords and architects should be encouraged to fix signs, escutcheons, dates, and other distinctive marks to new buildings. This practice has, if we mistake not, been growing in favour of late years; and we wish that a chapter had been devoted to such modern signs and inscriptions. This would have rounded off the book nicely. But enough of criticism or hyper-criticism. This is quite a good book; it is painstaking and pleasantly written, and its subject is one of real interest.

Signs, either painted or sculptured, entered into the daily life of old London in a way that we can now hardly realise. They were indispensable guides to the large proportion of Londoners who could not read. When an unlettered citizen required a jack-knife it was useless to tell him the name of the shopkeeper who could supply it; but if he were told that the best jack-knives were to be had at, say, the sign of the "Half-Moon" on Ludgate-hill, he had only to walk up Ludgate-hill until he saw a half-moon. In this way the signs of tradesmen and innkeepers became household hieroglyphics; and they still yield many a secret of old London to the intelligent student of their weather-beaten faces. A good example of this communicativeness is to be found in the well-known stone in Panyer-alley. A naked boy is sculptured sitting on a pannier or basket, and holding in his hand a bunch of grapes. Below is the inscription:

"When ye have sought the Citty round,
Yet still this is the highest ground."

Now the interest of this stone has generally been placed in this inscription; it really resides in the figure. It is quite doubtful whether Panyer-alley, which runs between Newgate-street and Paternoster-row, is the highest point in the City. That distinction has been claimed by Mr. W. J. Loftie for a point in Cornhill, and Leadenhall Market has a claim. In any case, the question raised by the inscription is a small one. The figure, on the other hand, is historically suggestive. Mr. Norman tells us that it probably dates from after the Great Fire, but it is equally probable that it is the successor of an earlier sign mentioned by Stow. Panyer-alley, according to Stow, was "so called of such a sign," and, in confirmation, a "Panyer," Paternoster-row, appears in a list of taverns of the fifteenth century. According to the Liber Albus, the sale of bread was only allowed in the King's open markets, and was sold in baskets or panniers. It may well be a true surmise that about 1430 Panyer-alley was a recognised standing place for bakers' boys with their panniers. The sign might thus be classified with that of the "Baker and Basket," which Mr. Norman has found still existing in Finsbury and Whitechapel.

Another interesting figure is that of the wooden boy at the corner of Giltspur-street and Cock-lane, put up to mark the spot where the Great Fire ended. Mr. Norman revives the delightful story of the Nonconformist preacher who thus moralised the theme of the Fire and this its memorial.

"He asserted that the calamity could not be occasioned by the sin of blasphemy, for in that case it would have begun in Billingsgate; nor lewdness, for then Drury-lane would have been first on fire; nor lying, for then the flames had reached them from Westminster Hall. 'No, my beloved, it was occasioned by the sin of gluttony, for it began at Pudding-lane and ended at Pie-corner.'"

A sign that has disappeared from this neighbourhood is one representing King Charles I.'s gigantic porter and his dwarf. Their portraits appeared side by side as a painted sign over the entrance to Bull Head-court, Newgate-street, but the sign vanished some years ago. Mr. Norman thinks it may still be in existence. The suggestion is exciting. A man with time and money to spare might give himself endless fun by undertaking the quest of the porter and dwarf.

We have not space in which to follow Mr. Norman through his interesting and well-packed pages on Animal and Bird Signs, on Crests, and on Miscellaneous Inscriptions. The book abounds with interesting facts and inferences. We could wish it had been more lavishly illustrated. The illustrations have quality, but their quantity is meagre, considering how necessary pictures are to a book of this kind. The sign of the "White Lion," in Upper-street, Islington, with its date 1724, is justly praised by Mr. Norman, but it is not illustrated; and there are many other signs which the reader could have understood better by the aid of pictures. The "Maiden's Head," "one of the commonest London sculptured signs," is one. We presume that this is the sign which still abounds in Long Acre. Talking of Long Acre, Mr. Norman does not say anything about the large and spirited cock which tickles the sky-line at the corner of Drury-lane. Perhaps it is not very old, but it can hardly be very new. There is also a pert grimy little cock (not mentioned) above Messrs. Pownceby's wineshop in the Strand. But Mr. Norman has discovered dozens of signs which we had missed. Not the least interesting is that of the "Three Squirrels," which is attached to the bars of the lower windows of Child's Bank in Fleet-street. The squirrels are within reach of one's stick, and they are delightfully quaint relics of a goldsmith's shop of the seventeenth century that stood "over against St. Dunstan's Church."

CITIZENS IN THE MAKING.

Studies in the Board Schools. By Charles Morley. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

THIS book is admirable journalism. Mr. Morley is always graphic, always dramatic, and never irrelevant. For some tastes he may be a thought too jaunty, but that is his only fault, and many readers will not agree to that. For the object in view, a more fitting name could not be desired—the object being the instruction of the reading public in the methods of the Board school teachers of this city and the stubborn material with which they have so often to deal. The chapters making the volume appeared first in the Daily News; reprinted between two covers they form an organic whole of no small value to those interested in education, and of considerable entertainment to the ordinary reader. Mr. Morley selects with great skill. His instinct is unfailing; his eye is alert for saliences, and he has the art of making a scene live. Few books contain so much life as this. Take, for example, the following passage, showing how the wild boys of Walworth have been so far tamed as to attempt dramatic renderings from the great poets:

"And then we had Tennyson's 'Dora.' You may remember how that hard-hearted Farmer Allan insisted that William (his son) should marry Dora (his niece); but, as you may also remember, William declined, and was accordingly turned out of the house. It fell to my friend Tom Tipping to personate poor William, and never shall I forget the peremptory way in which that ragged urchin in the long overcoat and the two old boots declaimed:

"I cannot marry Dorer; by my life, I WILL NOT MARRY DORER."

Poor Dora! He stamped his boot so that his toes came clean through the leather. His friend Bob Duffy was Farmer Allan. Little Bob's eyes started out of his head, so enraged was he, as he turned round upon William and cried: 'You will not, boy!'—with what unmeasured contempt he hissed out 'boy'!—'You dare to answer thus? But in my time [here he rapped his knuckles on the hard desk] a father's word was law!' This was altogether too much for my gravity. The idea of Bob, notoriously indifferent to parental admonitions, coming out so strong! But he regarded me with a frown and went on in even sterner accents than before: 'Look to it [and here he looked at me as if I was William]; consider, William:

"Take a monf to fink,
An' let me have [very strong aspirate] an answer to my wish;
Or, by the Lord [Lord tremendous! emphasised], that made me, you shall PACK,
And never more darken my doors again.'

The effect was terrific. Poor little Bob! I thought he would have burst the only button that held his clothes together."

Dickens himself would have enjoyed reading that passage. As to the advisability of teaching the boys of Walworth to recite in this way we say nothing. For the reviewer, at any rate, the justification of the proceeding is Mr. Morley's description.

The lesson described in the chapter entitled "Citizen Carrots," which is, perhaps, the best chapter in the book, is open to no possible disapproval. Here Mr. Morley shows us the manner in which the theory of rates and taxes is explained by a clever master. Nothing could be more lucid and more desirable. Teachers are, of course, born and not made; a few more of such teachers as Mr. Morley describes and the public schools will be seeking the Board schools to recruit their staffs! We must not, however, give the impression that Mr. Morley's presentment of the case is complete. That is not so. He says, for example, nothing of the tedious, uninspired teachers, nothing of the many instances of inconquerable dullness possessed by some children; but he shows enough of success to cause the ratepayer who reads the book to feel no little satisfaction. A glimpse of the literary taste of young Hampstead is gained from the following dialogue between teachers and scholars:

"Who reads Charles Dickens?
Great show of hands.
'Which book of his do you like best?'
Great show of hands and loud cries of 'Oliver Twist.'
'And what part of Oliver Twist do you like best?'
'When he is in the workhouse' (note: the boys and girls in this part of the world don't call it 'workus,' and their aspirates are remarkably well placed) say some. 'When he's with the old Jew,' say others.
'Who was he?'
'Fagin.'
'Why do you like Oliver when he was in the workhouse?'
'Because he ASKED FOR MORE.'

The answer could not be bettered, not even at Eton. Sometimes, however, Mr. Morley found the scholar very far astray. Then, at Gravel-lane, in a school composed mainly of Jews, the following replies were volunteered to the question, "Who is Henry Irving?"—Henry Irving is a great singer on theatres; is a man who writes poems; is a poem; is the Queen's son; is an archbishop; is a coal-merchant; is a Dutchman; is the greatest laughable actor; keeps a sweet-shop in New-street. The same children atoned for these wide shots by some very apt definitions. A tragedy, said one, is a cryable play. A novel, said another, is a kind of book which tells you of loves. Lord Rosebery, said a third, is a great man on betting on horses. But the most memorable is this: "The Armenians were discovered by the English." The St. James's Gazette, which to some extent shares this belief, should add the author of the remark to its staff.

Let us end by quoting some lines from the book of original verses, the work of his pupils, preserved by a Southwark master. The piece in question is called "Morning," and the poet was a boy of eleven:

"The leaves of trees do seem to talk
Among the grassy hills of chalk.
The sheep so merrily do play
On this great and happy day.
The river winding in and out
Upon its long and awkward route,
The policeman walking to and fro
Upon his beat so long and slow.
A boy so merrily at his play
Singing a sweet and merry lay.
The judge judges on the judgment day,
While the prisoners look as white as clay.
And now this lovely day is done,
People have got their great work done,
And to bed they gladly go
To lie and sleep so soft and low.
Thou, glorious God, so good has been
To make us happy and likewise clean."

This is not bad for a boy of eleven brought up in the Borough High-street! But Mr. Morley's book throughout shows us that there is more in the young Londoner than most people think.

A WRITER FOR CHILDREN.

Lazy Lessons and Essays on Conduct. By W. B. Rands.

Lilliput Lectures. By W. B. Rands. Both edited by R. Brimley Johnson. (James Bowden.)

THESE books were, it seems, prepared for the press in 1882 for Mr. Strahan, but the death of their author in that year interrupted the proceedings. They are now, therefore, issued in collected form for the first time.

Mr. Rands, according to Mr. Johnson's biographical note, was born in 1823. After attempting various methods of life he became a reporter to committees in the House of Lords. He resigned this post in 1875, became a professional journalist, and died in 1882. His writings appeared under various pseudonyms—Henry Holbeach, Timon Fieldmouse, T. Talker, and Matthew Browne—the last of which is the best known. His books for children won some measure of popularity—Lilliput Lovee (1866), Lilliput Revels (1871), Lilliput Legends (1872)—but they are now little known. Mr. Johnson extravagantly calls Rands "the laureate of the nursery," and states that "he stands somewhere between the simply didactic school of a hundred years ago and the highly imaginative writers of to-day"; adding, "he is as genuinely childlike as Miss Edgeworth, Jane and Anne Taylor, or the authors of Evenings at Home, but his conception of child-nature is more subtle and more philosophic." "Child-like" is an odd term to use. We cannot agree that in the foregoing sentences Rands' place is accurately established. Certainly he is not to be ranked with Miss Edgeworth and the Taylors, who possessed genius; and subtlety is not the most prominent of his characteristics.

The two volumes before us are distinguished rather for their author's kindness than anything else. They tell us nothing new of children, although they tell children many things of us. We cannot imagine children reading them alone if a story book, even a very familiar one, were within reach; but the chapters would come excellently well from a parent or governess. The style is so persuasive and so direct that a child could not possibly fail to carry away from the reading something to retain and think about.

An anecdote here and there, and now and then original verses—apt enough, but rarely, in our opinion, as "exquisite" as Mr. Johnson thinks them—now and then scraps of old poetry, help out the lessons very pleasantly. Among the subjects of Lazy Lessons and Essays on Conduct are Telling the Clock, Botany, the Middle Ages (a very interesting paper on a period which Rands knew well), Christmas Make-Believe in the Old Time, Telling the Truth, Moral Courage, Crossing the Road; while the Lilliput Lectures deal, among other subjects, with the World, Cities, Science and Philosophy, Art and Artists, Thoughts of God, Character, and In Church.

The two books, are excellently bound and printed.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

FICTION readers cannot complain of lack of novels. Reading eight hours a day for seven days, it would be a heroic task to master these twenty-seven stories—the harvest of the past week. For the Omnivorous there is a wide choice; even Particular readers will find something to their taste. A new novel by Stevenson is not an every-day occurrence; and there are many to whom a new story by Miss Mary E. Wilkins is also something of an event.

ST. IVES.

BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

The last work we shall have from that master hand. It tells of the adventures of St. Ives, a French prisoner in England. Period: 1813. These surprising and delightful adventures begin in Edinburgh Castle, and there the heroine, Flora, first meets St. Ives, and there dies that magnificent rascal Goguelat. "‘You have given me the key of the fields, comrade,’ said he, ‘sans rancune!’” St. Ives was taken down from Mr. Stevenson’s dictation between January, 1893, and October, 1894. About six weeks before his death he laid the story aside to work on Weir of Hermiston. He never completed St. Ives. The last six chapters have been written by Mr. Quiller Couch from notes left by R. L. S. (W. Heinemann. 312 pp. 6s.)

JEROME.

BY MARY E. WILKINS.

A long story by the talented author of A Humble Romance, A New England Nun, and A Far-away Melody. The hero of the novel, Jerome Edwards, is one of Miss Wilkins’s conscientious hard-working New Englanders. Jerome is certainly not for those who desire high-spirited books. It is as sad as sorrow. (Harper & Brothers. 506 pp. 6s.)

THE DORRINGTON DEED-BOX.

BY ARTHUR MORRISON.

Six stories by the other Arthur Morrison—that is to say, not the Arthur Morrison of A Child of the Jago and Mean Streets. They are exciting stories—even breathless; but if you want psychology you must go elsewhere. Pictures, too! The first is called "Mr. Loftus Deacon lay in a pool of blood." (Ward Lock & Co. 308 pp. 5s.)

UNKIST, UNKIND!

BY VIOLET HUNT.

A new novel, already familiar to readers of Chapman’s Magazine, by the author of A Hard Woman. A gruesome story of witchcraft and murder among the county families of Northumberland, told by a lady’s companion. (Chapman & Hall. 360 pp. 6s.)

FATHER AND SON.

BY ARTHUR PATERSON.

Mr. Paterson’s stories of rancho life in Texas, which lent distinction and interest to Macmillan’s, may be recalled. Of late he has done less. This new novel appeared in the Weekly Times. It is English and begins with a football match. A serious study of masculine character. (Harper & Brothers. 329 pp. 6s.)

MISS PROVIDENCE.

BY DOROTHEA GERARD.

By the author of Lady Baby and A Spotless Reputation. This story is concerned with a girl so young in age and honesty that she insists on breaking her engagement with her lover because he has once wooed a governess. In the end they are restored to each other. (Jarrold & Sons. 323 pp. 6s.)

CECILIA.

BY STANLEY V. MAKOWER.

A new novel by the author of The Mirror of Music, that remarkable study of music-madness. This also is the story of a girl—a singer—but the circumstances are less abnormal. An elaborate study of a very modern feminine mind. (John Lane. 319 pp. 3s. 6d.)

HERE THEY ARE!

BY J. F. SULLIVAN.

Mr. Sullivan is known as a droll writer and droller artist. In this book he offers some fantastic stories conceived in a spirit of burlesque, with pictures from his own pencil. People who liked The Flame Flower, his last year’s book, should like this. (Longmans & Co. 350 pp. 6s.)

CLAUDE DUVAL OF NINETY-FIVE.

BY FERGUS HUME.

Another Mystery of a Hansom Cab? is the natural question on opening a new story by Mr. Hume—such is the disadvantage to an author of early popularity! In the present case the reader must discover the reply for himself. The book is a story of modern highway robbery by a lady instead of a gentleman of the road. (Digby Long & Co. 256 pp. 3s. 6d.)

AT THE CROSS ROADS.

BY F. S. MONTRÉSOR.

A novel of feeling, "nobility of thought and purpose." There is a picture of cross-roads upon the cover, and the author of Into the Highways and Hedges explains in a rather sentimental preface that the book is so called because she has tried to describe how "first the man and afterwards the woman stood where two ways met . . . everlastingly together, and yet everlastingly alone." (Hutchinson & Co. 402 pp. 6s.)

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS’S LOVE AFFAIR. BY J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

A light-hearted, fantastic book by the author of The Cure for Souls, &c. The hero is a shopman—but an exquisite shopman of good family, who loves a princess. (C. Arthur Pearson. 301 pp. 3s. 6d.)

WHERE THE REEDS WAVE.

BY ANNE ELLIOT.

In two volumes. By the author of Dr. Edith Romney. A homely story, with an undercurrent of tragedy. It runs easily, and each chapter is headed by an oblong "bit" of quiet landscape. (R. Bentley & Son. 658 pp. Two vols.)

A VILLAIN OF PARTS.

BY B. PAUL NEUMAN.

Rather an old-fashioned yarn in the first person. It took place "a long time ago now, longer than I care to set down on paper." The dedication, like the story, is a little vague: "To my boys mine, yet not mine." (Harper Bros. 240 pp. 3s. 6d.)

DEILIE JOCK.

BY C. M. CAMPBELL.

The story of a scamp, told by himself. He is a Scot, and he talks throughout in the vernacular. Thus: "I was born in the South Back o’ the Canongate—it’ll may be fifty years syne." Mr. Campbell is not a stylist. In the introduction his scamp "discusses" food and lights "a postprandial pipe." (A. D. Innes & Co. 342 pp. 6s.)

ONLY A LOVE-STORY.

BY MRS. ROBERT JOCELYN.

Mrs. Jocelyn once wrote a novel called Only a Horse Dealer and her Drawn Blank may be remembered. This being "only a love-story," we may leave it for the present, merely remarking that the heroine is introduced as Veronia Blackendale, but becomes Veronia Brackendale two pages later. Her wish to change her name is thus apparent from the first. (Hutchinson & Co. 377 pp. 6s.)

DOCTOR LUTTRELL'S FIRST PATIENT. BY ROSA NOUCHETTE CAREY.

"The first patient, the first brief, the first book—aye, and the first love. What a halo remains round them." So exclaims the author of this story and of Not Like Other Girls, The Mistress of Bras Farm, and other novels that have pleased. Tells of a young doctor's struggles. (Hutchinson & Co. 322 pp. 6s.)

WHEN A MAIDEN MARRIES.

BY ANDREW DEIR.

Mr. Deir has been reading a Greater not wisely, but too well. "An old-fashioned inn with circumambulant cows" . . . "An ugly little woman was ranting sulphuric acid gas from the platform" . . . "Away rolls the carriage, and away go bride and bridegroom, luck-battered into the unknown." (Digby, Long & Co. 296 pp. 3s. 6d.)

EL CARMEN.

BY GEORGE CRAMPTON.

This is a story of El Carmen Estancia and of two Englishmen who lived there, and of a woman they both loved; also of how Belleville boomed, and, like a bubble, burst, involving the whole countryside in a common bankruptcy. We have easily arrived at this summary of this story, because the author gives it himself in these very words. (Digby, Long & Co. 289 pp. 6s.)

JOHN OF STRATHBOURNE.

BY R. D. CHETWODE.

On the cover a peasant clad in red, with cross-garter stockings, is sliding down a rope that overhangs a cliff. The heroine, in black, clings to his neck. The tops of fir-trees are still below them. The sun sets red and fateful. (C. Arthur Pearson, Limited. 301 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE LORDSHIP, THE PASSEN, AND WE.

BY FRED. T. JANE.

This humorous story, or series of episodes, is supposed to be told by Bill Baston, the village carpenter of Barroscombe. Bill has a pretty humour and a fine scorn for Radicals in red vans. His child is taught to pray: "O Lord, bless all this parish with aught that's to spare after father and mother and me; and send us Protection soon as may be. Amen." (A. D. Innes & Co. 312 pp. 6s.)

CHLOE.

BY DARLEY DALE.

A doctor attending Sir John Dane loves his patient's daughter, Chloe, who is given to playing an accompaniment to her life on her violin. An overdose of opium kills her father, the result of a careless prescription written by Paul's twin brother. Whereupon a compact of impersonation is made between the brothers. Chloe knows nothing of this, and is left to play out her bewilderments and griefs on her violin. She is fiddling quite happily on the last page. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 352 pp. 6s.)

ODD STORIES.

BY FRANCES FORBES-ROBERTSON.

A collection of stories—pathetic, humorous, tragic. Some have appeared in the Westminster Gazette, Pall Mall Magazine, and elsewhere. (H. Constable & Co. 318 pp. 6s.)

THE TORRENTS OF SPRING.

BY IVAN TURGENEV.

No. XI. in the series of translations of the great Russian's novels. As before, Mrs. Constance Garnett is responsible for the rendering. The volume also contains two shorter stories, First Love and Mumu. (W. Heinemann. 406 pp.)

CAPTAIN MANSANA.

BY BJÖRNSTJERNE BJÖRNSSON.

Contains two short novels, "Captain Mansana" and "Mother's Hands" and is Vol. VII. in the series of Björnsson's translations. "Captain Mansana" was first published in 1875 in a Norwegian periodical. Says the author: "Those of its incidents which appear most extraordinary are absolutely historical, the minutest details being in some cases reproduced. Mansana is drawn from life." Lassalle, we gather, was his prototype. (W. Heinemann. 224 pp.)

THE RAID OF THE "DETRIMENTAL."

BY THE EARL OF DESART.

The Detrimental is a yacht, not a man. The raid is made upon a castle in the south of England, the captives are "a bevy of young ladies well known in the best society." The story is rich in improbabilities, written in high spirits, and interlarded with slang, as "I heard that he had 'dropped' an enormous sum, and was what his friends called 'about cooked.'" (C. Arthur Pearson. 424 pp. 6s.)

A TRAGEDY OF GRUB STREET.

BY ADAIR FITZ-GERALD.

The title-story fills two-thirds of the book. It is followed by shorter tales. They talk oddly in Grub Street: "Owen!" cried the strange lady. "Angela! Leper!! Wanton!!!" came the horrible reply; and the spirit of Owen Considine passed away." (George Redway. 205 pp. 3s. 6d.)

MAX.

BY JULIAN CROSEY.

Clearly an early book—early books generally tell the life-story of a man of genius, and always without humour. We are introduced to Max in a Chinese prison, we accompany him to London, where he writes books and does other odd things. After 500 pages he leaves us (suicide). Here is a sentence Max addressed generally to the editors of newspapers a little before the end: "I die because I choose to die; because I am sick of the putrid vomitings with which you fill the world." Poor Max! Unfortunate editors! (John Lane. 503 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

The Charmer. By Shan F. Bullock.
(James Bowden.)

This book is a warning to those who would write a novel round a farce motive. On the stage, before a not very discriminating audience, the complications of the "Charmer" might raise a laugh. In their present form they chasten rather than exhilarate; and, personally, I regret to find them associated with the name of Mr. Bullock, who can do good work when he keeps his humour under restraint. One cannot deny a certain element of absurdity in the idea of a newly married couple posing on their honeymoon as brother and sister. Good books have been built on foundations just as flimsy. But when the jest is revealed only after 250 pages of some of the most low-comedy love-making ever penned, one wonders whether the secret is worth all the vagueness and inconsistency which it has cost Mr. Bullock to keep it. The little conspiracy involves, apparently—for at the critical moment of disclosure the heroine "quickly began pulling off the glove from her left hand"—the perpetual wearing of gloves to hide the wedding ring, and also, I should think, creates a dramatic necessity for a preternaturally unvigilant landlady. It was a serious indiscretion for Mr. Bullock to keep the reader till the very end of the book in ignorance of the fact that Philip and Stella York are husband and wife. If we knew the true state of affairs earlier we might find some humour in the rivalries of three natives who aspire to the hand of the lady. Of these the chief is Mr. David Cuffe, concerning whom my principal regret is that he does not get the thrashing he is eventually threatened with. He is a pertinacious wooer, but not, I think, very adroit.

"At last he caught William (a rival, by the way) by the collar, and in his most impressive manner gave out his plan of campaign. William was to do this, not to do that; to say this, not to say that; to keep his wits awake and his tongue free; above all, to follow David's lead. 'Ye hear me, William,' said David at last; 'ye hear me? Now listen to me: you'll sit you side o' her, as I said, an' I'll sit this; when I say a word, you'll second it; when she says a word, answer polite; an' when I wink or cough, up you get an' slope.'" "

Presently they heave in sight of the "Charmer," or "Herself," as Mr. Cuffe prefers to call her, and begin the attack:

"Now just take meself lyin' here at me ease in the butiful sunshine," David continued. "Some people'd think I could find somethin' better to do."

"Ay," said William, "ay, indeed."

"But that's as may be," said Mr. Cuffe, and crossed one leg over the other. "For, after all, maybe few in Kyle has better reason to be here lyin' snug in the sun."

"Yes," said Stella.

"Faith, that's so," said Long William.

Suddenly Mr. Cuffe shot out his legs, sat up, and turned his little black eyes on Stella.

"Now I put it to ye, Miss York," said he, "what's your private opinion o' what me business here in Kyle is?"

Stella turned and looked at him.

"Really, Mr. Cuffe," said she, "I have not the faintest notion."

"No! Well, then, in two words I'll tell ye: to find a wife."

Mr. Bullock made a fatal mistake in spinning the story out to its present dimensions. It might have made an amusing short tale.

A Girl's Awakening. By J. H. Crawford.
(John Macqueen.)

In his works on the wild life of Scotland Mr. Crawford showed himself to be a writer of discernment. His novel fulfils the high expectations which were thus raised. It is not without faults; but it is distinctly above the average.

The story, which is concerned with the lives and loves of village folk, opens prettily by the side of a trout-stream. Two wandering maidens, Margaret Grant and Gwendolen Anderson, surprise Alan Fordyce, who is fishing; and, from their confidential conversation after they have left him, it is clear that Margaret has had the youth very tenderly in her thoughts. In that respect, however, she is not alone. Dwells in the cottage next to Alan's another damsel—Narcisse, to wit—whose maiden fancy had ceased to be free soon after Alan had begun his evening visits to her guardian, an old astronomer. To be plain, Narcisse is resolved that Alan shall wed her. She makes him read The Mill on the Floss to her, and associates the hero and the heroine with him and herself, and the river with the stream of her own village. By and by he is the author of a novel; and there again, in happiness, and apparently with his assent, she finds the story of her opening life reflected. One night, when he has not called, she steals into a hut which he had built for himself in a wood, feasts her eyes upon him sleeping in the dark, and slips out before he is awake. In short, Narcisse makes hot love to the interesting young stranger who is sojourning in the quiet Scotch village by the German Ocean.

I state the theme thus fully in order that I may emphasise the ability with which it is developed. The plot has little in it; yet it is played upon with arresting skill. In the hands of a mediocrity in the art of fiction the story would have been coarse or lugubrious, or both; but, with his naturalist eye, Mr. Crawford saw all the pitfalls, and he has avoided them. Narcisse is not the erotic hussy which my account of her doings might suggest. She had read Alan's book, of the subject-matter in which, incidentally, Mr. Crawford remarks that "if the cottagers themselves were unaware that some of their experiences were touching—the commoner of them most touching of all—the same is true much higher up the scale. We know our faces only as cast back from the looking-glass. The complexion and features of our experiences are shown to us for the first time in a picture, and surprise no one more than ourselves."

By delicate touches such as that Mr. Crawford maintains my interest in his heroine. Narcisse is no green-sick girl inviting a squalid doom.

"There hangs, somewhere in the galleries of Rome, a twin picture, by the brush of Titian, representing human and Divine love—the chill absorption in things celestial; and the kindlier, warmer, clinging round earthly objects. With unerring instinct the artist has in both cases chosen a woman, seeing that the sex [sic] has in it the possibilities of the two extremes. Narcisse experienced the swift transition from one mood to the other. What might suit a placid and unexacting nature only mocked her with a false hope. The stoicism of a joyless life, the dull, unimaginative discontent which goes by the name of patience, the self-deceptive hypocrisy of pretending to be pleased with the unpleasing, were not within her compass. Nor did it really make it any better to dream of something beautiful and forget the facts. The hollowness revealed itself."

Mr. Crawford's faults are "defects of his qualities." His dialogue is sometimes difficult to follow. Apparently he took to heart the dictum—of Mr. Anthony Trollope, if I remember rightly—that in real life people conversing speak only five or six words at a time, and that in that respect fiction should be realistic. Consequently, his dialogue is snippety and too allusive. Then, at the bidding of a similar restraint in larger matters, five or six chapters towards the close are undramatic, even almost lifeless. For two-thirds of it, however, the book is excellent. When I reflect upon it at the close, I find myself astonished at having been so much absorbed. Of Alan I have learned next to nothing. He has hardly ever opened his mouth. Excepting the three Miss Aldcastles, whose prattle is excellent comedy, all the other characters are equally dumb. There is next to no action in the novel. Only Narcisse, practically, does anything. Nevertheless, I seem to be familiar with everybody, and to have witnessed a very moving play. It is a striking illusion.

Blight. By the Hon. Mrs. Walter R. D. Forbes.
(Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

"What," asks a certain wise old Duchess, for whose sake alone one would willingly read this book—"What can be the pleasure of being always disagreeable? I can understand losing one's temper now and then, and liking to hold one's own; but with her it is such a dead level; she is never pleased or pleasant except by accident." The allusion is to the Lady Easton of the book. Not many novelists would have the courage to write a story round so unlovely a character—unlovely not in point of morals, but of intense and incurable selfishness. Yet, with the insight and conscientiousness of an artist, the unity of purpose is maintained throughout the book, which, on the other hand, is by no means overloaded with psychological analysis. Blight is a skilful study of a woman from whom Nature, while endowing her with an intense craving for love, withheld the power of inspiring it. How her jealousy and resentment work out the tragedy of her life is portrayed with consistency. But if Mrs. Forbes writes with wide sympathies and large experience of the feminine temperament, she is also an author of shrewdness and observation. One seldom meets a more sagacious Duchess than the lady who says:

"Has it never struck you that it is the very women who are convinced that they are not heaven-born mothers who become such? They give themselves heart, soul, and intellect to the study of their children, and know them with a knowledge undreamt of by your motherly mothers, babbling baby-talk, and telling you that maternity is the highest blessing! Such women seem to think themselves singled out by Providence, instead of being the ordinary instruments of reproduction, and they consider that, having borne children, nothing further is required of them, and they have but to enjoy the gratitude of their offspring and the approbation of the world and its Creator."

Her theory of education, also, differs from the other lady's:

"When a boy is good-looking, well born and well endowed, he is bound to be spoiled, and if home does not do it the world will. Now home spoiling, with lots of love in it, will never hurt a fine nature, and the bad ones will go to the devil anyhow, so they don't count. The world's spoiling is another matter. A boy who at home has a hard, or even a dull, neglected time, always swallows the world's indulgences open-mouthed, and asks for more. He is completely taken in, and when at last he finds out what it is all worth, and how he is expected to pay for it, it sickens him, and, if he be not the worse for the experience, both morally and physically, he may thank God for an exceptional nature."

It must not be supposed that this is either a dull or a didactic book. With the one exception, its folk are quite pleasant company.

* * *

The Plagiarist. By William Myrtle.
(Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

The plagiarist was Gilbert Heath, and he purloined from a safe a MS. by the late Thomas Rushworth, and incorporated it in a work called "Italy's Place and Influence in the Domain of Pictorial Art—a Critical Estimate." The reviewers praised it unconditionally, and compared him with John Ruskin, the "Aristotle of Art," and Mrs. Jameson the "female Ruskin." He, therefore, threw up the law and took to literature, and in his recreations "he nurtured, so far as he possibly could, the artistic side of his nature. He listened to recitals by such virtuosi as Paderewski, Joachim, Sir Charles and Lady Hallé—he witnessed performances by Sir Henry Irving and Ellen Terry." He also married the daughter of his professor and inherited £95,996. But he was found out by a critic who thought and spoke as follows:

"The crime of plagiarism is becoming far too common. It is time for the critic to use the knife unsparingly. Examples must be made, else this widespread sin of a literary age will never be eradicated. The sad thing is, that the clergy are among the worst sinners in the matter of plagiarism. . . ."

Heath was exposed. A few nights later he broke open his father-in-law's safe and was shot by a mechanical burglar alarm. The Plagiarist, you see, is not too probable a book. It is, indeed, quite harmlessly silly. I should conjecture William Myrtle to be a young lady.

A SELECTION FROM
MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S
 AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

JOSEPH ARCH. The Story of His Life Told by Himself. Edited, with an Introduction, by THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK. In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, with Photogravure Portrait, 12s.

PICTURESQUE DUBLIN, OLD and NEW. By FRANCES GERARD. With a large number of original Illustrations by Rose Barton. In one handsome 8vo vol., 12s.

A NEW VOLUME OF THE CONCISE KNOWLEDGE LIBRARY.

In large crown 8vo, half-bound leather and gilt, 5s.

ASTRONOMY.

HISTORY of ASTRONOMY. By Agnes M. Clerke.

GEOMETRIC ASTRONOMY. By A. Fowler, F.R.A.S.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM. By Agnes M. Clerke.

THE STELLAR UNIVERSE. By J. Ellard Gore, F.R.A.S. Over 500 pp., with 104 Illustrations, including a beautifully produced Frontispiece in Rembrandt Intaglio.

A NEW AND MOST INTERESTING VOLUME.

The SAVAGE CLUB PAPERS. Edited by

J. E. MUDDOCK. Literary and Art contributions by (amongst others) E. J. Goodman, E. E. Peacock, G. Manville Fenn, Arthur Morrison, Mackenzie Bell, G. A. Henty, Lord Charles Beresford, Harrison Weir, Sir James D. Linton, Coulson Kernahan, Paul Merritt, Aaron Watson, Henri Vanlaun, W. H. J. Boot, Charles Green, R. I., Yeend King, Herbert Johnson, Paul Frenzini, W. Ralston, J. F. Sullivan, Phil May, &c., &c. In fcap. 4to, fancy cloth cover, designed by Albert W. Warren, with many Illustrations, 6s.

The ART of COOKERY, Ancient and Modern. By Mrs. H. DE SALIS. In crown 8vo, cloth, 2s.

HUMAN SACRIFICE amongst the EASTERN JEWS; or, The Murder of Padre Tomaso. By the late Sir RICHARD BURTON, K.C.M.G., F.R.G.S., &c. Edited, with an Introduction, by W. H. WILKINS. In large demy 8vo, cloth gilt and gilt top, with Photogravure Portrait of the Author from the picture by the late Lord Leighton. 21s. net.

KINGS of the TURF. Anecdotes and Memoirs of Distinguished Owners, Backers, Trainers, and Jockeys. By "THORMANBY," Author of "The Horse and His Rider," &c. With 32 Full-Page Portraits. In demy 8vo, handsome cloth gilt, 16s.

THE FIRST VOLUME OF A NEW SERIES OF WORKS ON

THE LIVES OF LEADERS OF MEN.

PETER the GREAT. By Oscar Browning, M.A. With Illustrations. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

BEAUTY CULTURE. By H. Ellen Browning. In crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

The HOUSEHOLD ORACLE. Edited by Alfred H. MILES. In large crown 8vo, 680 pp., cloth gilt, with numerous Illustrations, 3s. 6d.

The MARIE CORELLI BIRTHDAY BOOK. In square fcap, handsome cloth gilt edges, 3s. 6d. Also in various leather bindings. With twelve Full-Page Original Drawings by Ernest Prater, illustrating Miss Corelli's heroines.

A NEW VOLUME BY

MARIE CORELLI, FLORA ANNIE STEEL, LADY JEUNE, AND SUSAN, COUNTESS OF MALMESBURY.

The MODERN MARRIAGE MARKET. In fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. With Portraits.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.—Each in crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

At the CROSS-ROADS. By F. F. Montrésor, Author of "Into the Highways and Hedges."

The SINNER. By Rita.

The BLOOD of the VAMPIRE. By Florence MARRYAT.

By RIGHT of SWORD. By A. W. Marchmont. With Full-Page Illustrations.

For LOVE of a BEDOUIN MAID. By "Le VOLEUR." With 16 Full-Page Illustrations.

THE PRINCE'S DIAMOND. By Emeric Hulme BEAMAN.

NEW STORY BY ANNIE S. SWAN.

The NE'ER-DO-WEEL. In handsome cloth gilt, 6s. With Full-Page Illustrations.

A PRINCE of MISCHANCE. By Tom Gallon, Author of "Fatterley."

A KNIGHT of the NETS. By Amelia E. Barr.

A WELSH SINGER. By Allen Raine.

ONLY a LOVE STORY. By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

The BARN STORMERS. By Mrs. C. N. Williamson.

The SCHOLAR of BYGATE. By Algernon GISSING.

NEW STORY BY ROSA N. CAREY.

DR. LUTTRELL'S FIRST PATIENT. In cloth gilt, 6s.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

The ADVENTURE of the BROAD ARROW. By MORLEY ROBERTS. With Full-Page Illustrations by A. D. McCormick.

BIJOU. By Gyp.

A NEW FAIRY BOOK. With 83 Illustrations by H. R. Millar.

The DIAMOND FAIRY BOOK. In square 8vo, similar to the successful volumes "The Golden Fairy Book" and "The Silver Fairy Book." In handsome cloth gilt and gilt edges, 6s.

GOOD MRS. HYPOCRITE. By Rita.

THREE COMELY MAIDS. By M. L. Pendered.

A NEW AND ORIGINAL STORY.

A LONELY LITTLE LADY. By Dolf Wyllarde. In square 8vo, cloth, handsomely bound and fully gilt, price 6s. With 50 Original Illustrations by Ida Lovering.

NEW VOLUMES OF "THE 52 LIBRARY."

Each in large crown 8vo, handsome cloth gilt and gilt edges, with Full-Page Illustrations, 5s.

52 STORIES of DUTY and DARING for BOYS. 52 STORIES of DUTY and DARING for GIRLS.

BY
 G. A. HENTY, G. MANVILLE FENN, GRACE STEBBING,
 DAVID KER, and others.

BY
 L. T. MEADE, SARAH DOUDNEY, Lieut. WARNEFORD, R.N.,
 THOMAS ARCHER, and others.

FIFTY-TWO STORIES OF THE ARMY.

This Book will contain stories of the principal battles of the British Army, and also of the most famous regiments, as well as a number of stories of persons reminiscence by British and other officers.

*• OVER 130,000 VOLUMES OF THIS LIBRARY HAVE ALREADY BEEN SOLD

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO, PATERNOSTER ROW.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1897.

No. 1327, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

CERTAIN friends of the late Poet Laureate have contributed their recollections of him to the Memoir which we review this week. The name of Prof. Max Müller is not included, and yet the Professor's memories of his occasional meetings with the poet possess an interest, and are told with an engaging frankness which some of the others lack.

THE letters to the Queen in the Memoir proclaim Tennyson to have been a courtier of the first water. But sometimes the natural man overbore the courtier. Prof. Max Müller tells how he once complained to the Queen that he could no longer stay in the Isle of Wight, on account of the tourists who came to stare at him. The Queen, with a kindly irony, remarked that she did not suffer much from that grievance; but Tennyson, not seeing what she meant, replied, "No, madam; and if I could clap a sentinel wherever I liked I should not be troubled either."

THE annoyances to which he was subjected from the curiosity of tourists had its humorous side—for the onlookers. "It must be confessed," remarks the Professor, "that people were very inconsiderate. Rows of tourists sat like sparrows on the paling of his garden, waiting for his appearance. The guides were actually paid by sightseers, particularly by those from America, for showing them the great poet. Nay, they went so far as to dress up a sailor to look like Tennyson, and the result was that, after their trick had been found out, the tourists would walk up to Tennyson and ask him, 'Now, are you the real Tennyson?'"

It is on record that Tennyson visited Fitzgerald at Woodbridge in 1876, and by internal evidence we are made aware that, whether mutton cutlets or not, the meat was tough. The duty-letter written by the bard after his departure is not given, but Fitzgerald's reply to it is. It reads, under all the circumstances, rather sadly, one thinks:

"I am glad you were pleased with your short visit here. Perhaps you will one day come again; and, if you will but give warning, and no nieces are in possession of the house, it shall be ready for you, and some tender meat provided. Somehow, I, when you were gone, felt somewhat abroad; and, a few hours after, went to an old village by the sea, Dunwich. I was wishing I had made you come with me, over a wild stretch of heath too, but there was no room in the little inn, and, daresay, very tough meat. That fatal reed sticks in my side, you see. But I am still yours, and all yours, sincerely, E. F. G."

WHILE "last words" on Burns are being pronounced in the columns of the daily press, it is interesting to record some opinions of great poets elicited long ago by Mr. Aubrey de Vere. "Read the exquisite songs of Burns," Tennyson once besought him. "In shape each of them has the perfection of the berry, in light the radiance of the dew-drop: you forget for its sake those stupid things, his serious pieces." On the same day, Mr. de Vere met Wordsworth, who praised Burns as a great genius who had brought Poetry back to Nature, adding: "Of course, I refer to his serious efforts, such as 'The Cotter's Saturday Night'—those foolish little amatory songs of his one has to forget." This story of contrariety was told by Mr. de Vere that evening to Sir Henry Taylor, whose comment was: "Burns's exquisite songs and Burns's serious efforts are to me alike tedious and disagreeable reading."

THE unpublished poems in the Memoir have been selected according to Lord Tennyson's expressed desire. Some he put aside for preservation, others, according to his latest injunctions, have been chosen by the late Lady Tennyson and by the present Lord Tennyson from several volumes of unpublished poems, and by them submitted to a committee of friends (named by the late Poet Laureate), who have fully and finally approved of the selection.

AMONG the unpublished poems is one called Havelock, November 20, 1857—so fine, so stirring, that one wonders why Tennyson rejected it—

"Bold Havelock march'd,
Many a mile went he,
Every mile a battle,
Every battle a victory.

"Bold Havelock march'd,
Charged with his gallant few,
Ten men fought a thousand,
Slew them and overthrew.

"Bold Havelock march'd,
Wrought with his hand and his head;
March'd, and thought, and fought,
March'd and fought himself dead.

"Bold Havelock died,
Tender, and great, and good,
And every man in Britain
Says 'I am of Havelock's blood.'"

THE death is announced of Francis Newman at the age of ninety-two. His was a career as strange as it was long. It began in the England that had no Oxford Movement, no Carlyle, no Thackeray, no Tennyson, no Gladstone, and no Disraeli. William IV. was king when Francis Newman ceased to be a Fellow of Balliol, having already decided in his own mind that there was something wrong in his creed. In scholarship at Oxford he was the superior of his brother John Henry Newman, whose greater career and fame, however, put those of Francis under eclipse. It is a little unfortunate, too, for his posthumous fame that his death should be announced on the very day that the reviews of Tennyson's biography filled the papers, although the Times, despite its five columns on the late Laureate, spared space for a fair biography of the Professor, and gave him a leading article besides.

PROF. FRANCIS NEWMAN looked the man he was. His picturesque figure retained much of its vigour to within very recent years, as he walked about the roads of Weston-super-Mare; but his sight latterly failed him, and a fall downstairs, a few months ago, sent him to the bed from which he did not rise. Mentally, he was alert almost to the last. His two books, The Soul: Its Sorrows and Its Aspirations and Phases of Faith, had a place of their own; but George Eliot wrote of them in 1874 as an influence even then of "far-off days," though it was an influence she admitted she had felt. To her he had become "poor Mr. Francis Newman." Various other works from his pen, including four volumes of Miscellanies, were received with the respect due to his name—their titles are hardly heard of now. A stay in Bagdad gave him early in life a love for the East. He was a vegetarian; he loathed cruelty to animals; he did not smoke; he did not drink; and he spoke modern Arabic fluently.

BY the death of Sir John Gilbert in his eightieth year a great figure in Victorian Art has been removed. Yet of late years public gratitude to the artist had changed into gratitude to the art patron. When Sir John Gilbert ceased to paint pictures he began to present them, and many fine works, chiefly historical, are now in the municipal art galleries of London, Birmingham, Manchester, and Liverpool—his gifts to us and to our heirs for ever. As an illustrator Sir John Gilbert was long supreme. He was connected with the Illustrated London News from the first; and it has been computed that his drawings in that paper numbered thirty thousand. As an illustrator of books, too, Sir John Gilbert was successful: witness his illustrations to Shakespeare, Longfellow, and Cervantes.

WE welcome Mr. George Gissing to the ranks of the humorists. His story in the English Illustrated Magazine called "Spell-bound" is of humour the subtlest. It tells of a man who debauches himself upon Free Libraries. He neglects his work, he neglects his wife, he neglects himself for the Free Library. He does not care in the least what he reads, but read he must from morn till evening. So long as it is print nothing else matters. "The scent of newspapers, mingled with the odour of filthy garments and unwashed humanity, put him beside himself with joy; his nostrils quivered, his eyes sparkled."

We refer elsewhere to the fact that the value of the new édition de luxe of Mr. Kipling's works, not yet published, has risen from six to nine guineas. Meanwhile, the early editions of Mr. Kipling's books command high prices. We observe that Mr. Karslake, of the Charing Cross-road, asks for Wee Willie Winkie in its first edition and wrapper, £2 2s. A similar copy recently fetched £2 14s. The first edition of The Barrack-Room Ballads, uncut, is valued at £1 5s., and the first edition of the Second Jungle Book at 9s. These prices quite outshine those obtainable for first editions of R. L. Stevenson's works. Across the Plains, 10s.; Ballads, 10s. 6d.; The Ebb Tide, £1 1s.; The Black Arrow, 10s. 6d.—such are the prices asked for uncut first editions of these books.

On November 1 will be issued a new magazine for young people under the title Harper's Round Table. Mr. H. B. Marriott Watson (too long silent) will contribute a serial called "Treasure Trove."

LORD COLERIDGE has been delivering a lecture at Ottery St. Mary on some matters of local history. It has high memories, quite apart from its fame as the birthplace of Samuel Taylor Coleridge, the great-great uncle of the lecturer. For in that parish Sir Walter Raleigh, too, was born, and the house now owned by Lord Coleridge was the meeting-place of Sir Thomas Fairfax and Oliver Cromwell.

We trust that the stories from Tibet of the brutal treatment of Mr. Henry Savage Landor, the inheritor of a great name, may prove to be exaggerated. The pilgrimage to Lhasa, even in the interests of a London daily paper, is, of course, a risky adventure, and the discovery of the disguise of the supposed pilgrim may easily be followed by consequences less than agreeable, though we may hope that they stop short of torture with hot irons and of a sword that is arrested in its last fatal flourish only by the Grand Lama. Anyhow, Mr. Landor has reached the Indian frontier alive, though with wounds numbered at twenty-two.

MR. ANTHONY HOPE's approaching visit to America has inspired a writer in The Philistine, an amusing "little fad magazine-let," to the following parody:

"Glittering Anthony Hope seems dead!
Read at his last new book an hour.
That is the story, this its thread,
He penned the tale, but it lacks his power.
Beginning to languish, too, like the rest;
Much has been changed by his fame I think:
By ravenous publishers opprest,
He drowns his genius in seas of ink.

"It is not too late yet, Anthony Hope,
You can redeem yourself, firm and true;
For good stars meet in your horoscope,
Your earlier characters live and woo,
Flirt, laugh, skirmish—fight as of old,
And bewitch us—this cannot be denied;
Toward "The Prisoner" and "Dolly" no heart is cold,
They are fellow mortals—naught beside.

"We love you, Anthony, all the while!
There are better things yet to come, we hold;
There is place and to spare for your villain's
guile,
And your nonchalant heroes—overbold.
So hush—here's a bit of advice to keep;
We want your genius fresh from your hand.
There, that is your secret, don't try to reap
Gold for mere trash—you understand!"

DICK'S Coffee House is to be pulled down to enable an adjoining insurance office to expand itself. Thus another of the glories of Fleet-street is doomed. "Dick's," originally "Richard's," has many literary traditions, the most touching being one connected with Cowper. It was while "at Richard's Coffee House at breakfast" that the poet read in a newspaper a letter which seemed not only a libel on himself, but showed that the writer was acquainted with his intention to commit suicide. Flinging down the paper with a passionate gesture, he rushed out to seek a house to die in, or, if none offered, "to poison myself in a ditch, where I could meet with one sufficiently retired."

MR. JAMES LANE ALLEN, the author of The Choir Invisible, has been giving some information concerning himself and his work to an interviewer of the Springfield Republican. His remarks on local colour support Mr. Barrie's contention that everything of importance to us happens while we are children. Says Mr. Allen: "Nearly all material of a writer's work that comes from nature is usually gathered unconsciously during childhood. The impressions then received are deepest, strongest, and clearest. They are instinctive, and all the better for being unconscious, so that in middle of life an author, having changed his environment, may write for years regarding nature in the region of his childhood without ever once revisiting it or adding a single new impression."

MR. ALLEN's opinions concerning the state of American fiction at this moment are interesting: "Never before," he said, "was the interest in American fiction so keen, so genuine, and so widespread. Never before were there so many publishers eager to handle a good American novel or to pay such prices for it; never before were there so many critics on the whole press of the country so ready and so cordial to rate a book at its full value, and never before was there so studious and so sympathetic an audience of readers."

MR. ALLEN continued: "I give it only as an opinion, and it may be worth nothing whatever, but the literary situation in this country just at present is peculiar. The Scotch school that have been carrying everything before them are now a waning influence. Among the English novelists not a one is gaining on this side. Kipling himself has never touched an American subject in prose without a distinct injury to his reputation. The Russians have had their day. With the exception of two or three foreign novelists new to us, the national attention is directed towards the future of American fiction. The novelists of to-day may not be in that future, but they are certainly trying to be."

A VOLUME of verse by Mr. Theodore Watts-Dunton, called The Coming of Love and Other Poems, will be published by Mr. Lane on the 20th. The book will contain a number of Roman poems.

ON Tuesday next, Messrs. Macmillan & Co. will instal themselves in their new premises south of Leicester-square. The tendency of publishers to move westward is as curious as it is marked, and Messrs. Macmillan's move from Bedford-street to St. Martin's Street will seal the title of the neighbourhood of the Charing Cross to be a new publishing centre in London. Messrs. Macmillan's new premises are very extensive, and they have been built and fitted up in a manner worthy of the firm. The building, which has entrances in St. Martin's-lane and Whitcomb-street, stands partly on the site of an old galleried inn, "The Nag's Head," which flourished when Whitcomb-street was called Hedge-lane. The neighbourhood has literary associations with Sir Isaac Newton, Dr. Martin Burney and his daughter Fanny, and others.

A GERMAN translation of Mr. Percy White's novel Corruption is now appearing in the Frankfurter Zeitung. It will afterwards be published in book form.

THE Elizabethan Stage Society announce for their third season the revival of Ford's tragedy, "The Broken Heart"; also of Middleton and Rowley's drama, "The Spanish Gypsy." There will be revived besides a comedy by Beaumont and Fletcher; and Ben Jonson's fragment, "The Sad Shepherd." The first performance of the season will be given on Tuesday evening, November 2, at the Mansion House, by invitation of the Lord Mayor. The play chosen for representation on that occasion is "The Tempest."

HERE is another example of the way dedications should not be written. It appears in front of a new novel, called A Return to Nature:

"To M. M. N.

"We spoke of stars once, madam. My star-lore is but little; but this I know of the star Jupiter, that there are other stars of which some always shine upon his dark side.

"Happy star Jupiter!
"Do you take my meaning, madam, and will you shine upon my dark side, like those kindly stars?"

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

I.—A SOLICITOR.

I HAD just ordered lunch when my solicitor walked into the club dining-room, and sat down by my side. Tregarthen is accounted prosperous in his profession. I remarked that I had just met a certain author in the Strand.

"Who?" said Tregarthen.

I repeated the name.

Tregarthen laid down the menu-card, gave his order, and then turned to me.

"Now, what attitude," he said, "am I expected to assume in the face of this information?"

"Well," I said, "I thought you'd be interested. His book —"

"Oh, he writes books?"

"Of course. You know him by name."

"What did you say his name was?"

Again I repeated it.

Tregarthen looked critically at his cold beef, and shook his head.

"I never heard of him," he said.

"Seriously?" I asked.

"Are you trying to get at me?" said Tregarthen.

"But don't you—well, don't you—try to keep up with current literature?"

"If you mean, do I read current books; well, I don't. Can you suggest any reason why I should?"

"One likes to be in touch with the thought of the day."

"Literary men," said Tregarthen, "have a curiously exaggerated opinion of their importance. Do you suppose that I don't think for myself? Because I do, pretty continually. And why should I pay six shillings to this friend of yours—what is his name?—to do my thinking for me?"

"But don't you feel any curiosity when you see the advertisements of a new novel, with a taking title by, say, Anthony Hope, or Hall Caine, or H. G. Wells, or —"

"Certainly. And if I do I take the opportunity when I am invited out to dinner of asking the girl next me to tell me about the new novel. Girls can generally give you a good idea of the last new novel. And when she has told me about it I am extremely glad that I haven't wasted my time by reading it. I manage to get a pretty good notion of current literature that way. Now and then I read a book—I admit that—but that is only when I take a girl in to dinner who tells me of a plot that doesn't bore me to death."

"Then you depend entirely on the most incompetent of critics?"

Tregarthen ate his cold beef in silence for a few moments.

"Girls are not so silly as they look," he said.

"But don't you want to be amused?" I said; "to see pictures of life, to —"

"I don't depend on novels for that," said Tregarthen. "I don't want silly people to invent situations for me when I've got them ready made every day in my office. Take the case of Blantyre v. Hopkins, for example."

"I never heard of it," I murmured.

"Possibly not," said Tregarthen. "It hasn't got into the papers, because the interesting part of it doesn't come into court. But if a man—your friend, for instance, what's his name?—Anthony—Anthony—Trollope—"

"Hope," I said.

"Well, Anthony Hope, or any of those people, if he can make a story as interesting as Blantyre v. Hopkins, then I'll buy his book. What's more, I'll read it. But he can't."

Tregarthen set down his knife and fork, and looked round to call for his bill. He is a rapid and bad luncher.

"My dear boy," he said, "a solicitor doesn't want a novelist to tell him what life is like."

It struck me that in all probability a good many people do not read the books they are supposed to read. I decided to investigate.

C. R.

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

It is undoubtedly a sad thing for a nation to feel itself morally above its literature. It is by no means necessary for poets and novelists to instruct or to preach; but it should be far from their mission to degrade with the ferocious consistency of the modern French masters. France is not better than any other land, but assuredly for those who know her she is not worse. All these interminable volumes of scandal, documents, vicious gossip, "muflieries" and "rosseries" at first sicken, and then exasperate. The falsity of them is so obvious, so cheap, so irredeemably, vulgarly venal. Suppose, for one moment, what everybody agrees to deny, that life in Paris was what Gyp, Paul Hervieu, Marcel Prevost and Company persist so lugubriously and monotonously in painting, then what remains for them to reveal year after year? The ignoble tale of adultery has been told so often, without poignancy, struggle, romance, or remorse, that now surely it may be conceded there remains not a detail to invent for the readiest wit. We know it all so well. The young viscount who scents himself to pay an afternoon call for the first time on a beautiful and enigmatic marquise between two ages, will be her lover in the French sense of the word before twenty-four hours have elapsed. And then all the old, old details; the bachelor's entresol, the subdued lights, the delicate silks and couches; the double veil, the hired vehicle, the eager entrance and anxious exit. Ever and ever the same details of toilet and gesture, as if the whole wretched business were not more stale than last year's bread, less inviting than the sewer-washed waters of the Seine in its city course.

All this pornography, which, in giving France's reputation to the dogs and foreign contempt, provides a very decent and hard-working body of reporters, who mistake cultivated journalism for literature, and who have the modesty to call themselves "men of letters," which they undoubtedly are, instead of creators, which heaven knows they are far from being, with comfortable incomes—a blessed result rarely obtained by real literature—bids fair to win its own extinction from excess of zeal. Young writers are rising on all sides in violent protest against this eternal servitude of sensuality. Not so long ago M. Maurice Bouchor shook himself free of the gross chains of the famous "Théâtre Libre." His new "Hymn to Venus" might be endorsed by the Social Purity League, and romantic youths could not recite a finer prayer:

"Permet, que le désir, patiemment dompté,
Se transforme en profonde et virile tendresse,
Fais que l'amour en moi devienne la bonté.

Et souffre, en cette nuit que le silence
opresse,

Que sans être—haute par le remords cruel
Je redise le nom, doux comme une caresse
De ma riieuse amie, aux yeux couleur de ciel."

The critics are so struck by this new fresh note of virtue and sentiment in French poetry to-day, that they quietly expect to be projected out of symbolism and every other industrious research after obscene nonsense back into the placid shallows of the morning of romance. "Pon my conscience," one critic exclaims, "I believe the poet of the future will be some amiable young man, who will tell us that the beloved betrayed him, and that he was full of grief."

M. Maurice Pugo (if it were not for Maurice de Saxe and Maurice Barrès, we should be tempted to believe there is a spiritualising influence in the name of Maurice wafted from Belgium) violently attacks, in the worst possible French—which M. Gaston Deschamps likens to a French acquired in German translations—the miserable inadequacy and corruption of the present system of education in France. The State, alas! we learn on all sides, is cynically indifferent to the crude young souls tumbled recklessly by indifferent or ignorant parents into the brutalising mould of its despotism. M. Jean Aicard, in one of his novels, has already passionately lamented the moral and social wrongs of young midshipmen and sub-lieutenants debarred from the innocent delights of romantic engagement and love-marriage, and condemned to waste and stain their youth in degrading ties. M. Art Roë has lifted a virile and impressive voice in behalf of his youthful military comrades, and with an eloquence both tender and martial sketches the note of reform in camp and barrack. And on behalf of French youth of all classes Sully Prudhomme has written:

"Custom in France, where real betrothals are unknown, makes the condition of young lads who respect themselves very difficult from the age of puberty until marriage. A young man is practically left to himself to solve the cruel problem imposed upon his conscience by our social state. How can he yield, without degrading himself, to the most imperious instincts of the senses, of which the heart becomes an accomplice, before he may legally satisfy them? Hence scruples full of anguish, weaknesses, and heroic struggles, all an interior drama. . . ."

"In reading verse in which the combat and sufferings of the twentieth year find discreet but sincere expression, more than one of us will feel the ache in his soul of old wounds. Youth is a difficult age; we do not envy it."

M. Maurice Pugo would lighten this difficult period by the accepted joys of fresh and innocent love, by the excitement of a chosen engagement and an early marriage of inclination. He would suppress the dot, fatal blight of romance in France. This young man would be spared the now obligatory ordeal and consecration of the brutalising Latin Quarter, the squalid bohemianism and the tristeful sprees. He would suppress inheritance as well as the dot, holding that man should work for whatever he obtains and enjoys, and he would reform literature and art. Naturalism he well describes as a solemn and gloomy renunciation of beauty. The popular masters, whether Bourget or Zola, have all equally repudiated man's inalienable right to reverie and aspiration. Psychology he holds to be mere mechanism, and beseeches young writers to turn their back upon venality, commerce, scandal, the basenesses of industry and fabrication. And I think he is not preaching in the desert.

H. L.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOKSHOPS.

WEST CENTRAL.

AT the large shop at Holborn Bars they make much of éditions de luxe. The new twelve-volume edition of Mr. Kipling's works, not yet published, is there offered for subscription. But I hear that the market value of the set has already risen from six guineas, its published price, to nearly nine guineas. Only 1,050 copies are offered to the public, and the few copies not already bespoken will be "held for the rise." The éditions de luxe of Mr. Meredith's and Charles Lever's novels seem to be having a safe, uneventful passage through the bookshops. I noticed that Messrs. Bell & Son's new four-volume edition of Vasari's Lives of the Painters, just published at thirty-six shillings, was well to the front. Of new novels the three most prominent were In Kedar's Tents, The Martian, and St. Ives. The last-named is bound in an almost black cloth and is not ineffective in a shop window. Mr. Bret Harte's Three Partners was also given a good place. Among serious books were Mr. Gardiner's second volume of his History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate and Mr. Andrew Tuer's History of the Horn-Book. Mr. Morris's romance, The Water of the Wondrous Isles, was to be seen in the large paper Kelmscott edition; and all who did not run could read how in the dim wood called Evilshaw—what a foil to Holborn!

"was neither highway nor byway, nor wood-reeve, nor way-warden; never came chapman thence into Utterhay; no man of Utterhay was so poor or so bold that he durst raise the hunt therein; no outlaw durst flee thereto; no man of God had such trust in the saints that durst build him a cell in that wood."

A hundred yards further west a small window makes a good show of St. Ives, and The Martian, and In Kedar's Tents. These seem to be the three stories of the moment. The Christian is still everywhere to be seen, but its climax was reached quickly some weeks ago. Mr. Lang's Dreams and Ghosts, Prof. Dowden's French Literature, and the new Eversley edition of Green's The Making of England, were to be seen in this window. A new cheap edition of Sartor Resartus, put forth by Messrs. Service & Paton, was also given a good chance.

In Oxford-street, between the Tottenham Court-road and Regent's-circus, a large corner shop had all the books of the moment well placed. Unkist, Unkind! and What Maisie Knew were hospitably entreated; The Christian was given the company of The Scapegoat, The Doomed, and The Manxman. Messrs. Nimmo's new six-shilling edition of the "Border Waverley Novels" was in easy view, and—for a surprise—space was found for those fine books of the late Mr. Hamerton, The Intellectual Life and Human Intercourse. A corner shop usually devotes its best window to the books of the moment, and its second best to the books of yesterday and to series of classics. Here may be found very full sets of the "Minerva," "Scott," and "Silver" libraries. The "Mermaid Series" of plays, the Dryburgh "Waverley," and cheap sets of Lytton, Thackeray, Dickens, Ainsworth, and Macaulay.

In a large Strand bookshop all the probable books were so well represented that it seemed unprofitable to take note of them. A less conspicuous feature interested me. This was the immense number of books which are not books. Exclusive of series of guide-books and technical hand-books I noticed the following:

How to Read Faces.	Cooling Cups and Dainty Drinks.
How to Mesmerise.	When was it? A British Chronology.
Chiromancy.	Dainty Dishes.
How to Read Heads.	Character in Faces, Features, and Forms.
Etiquette for Girls.	How to Read Character in Handwriting.
Grammar of Palmistry.	Etiquette of Good Society.
Things not Generally Known.	The Gentlewoman's Handbook of Education.
Curiosities of Science.	Interest Tables.
Popular Errors Explained.	Cobbett's English Grammar.
Familiar Sayings, Phrases, Proverbs, and Family Mottoes.	How to Dance.
The New 6d. Ready Reckoner.	Common Ailments and their Cures.
The Law of Landlord and Tenant.	Practical Instruction in Mesmerism.
Speeches and Toasts.	Cole's Fun Doctor.
The Book of Ready-made Speeches.	Pros and Cons: A Guide to the Controversies of the Day.
The Dream-Book and Fortune-Teller.
The Chairman's Guide.
Two Thousand Familiar Quotations.

These books were priced from sixpence to eighteen-pence, and it is certain that they have their public.

VILLAGE READING-ROOMS.

THE march of culture is too apt to omit villages from its route. It is true that, as a rule, villagers have little time, and less inclination, to indulge in the delights of reading anything beyond the paper; but, although this is the case with the mass, there remain a minority who are genuinely interested in books, in stories, biography, travels, poetry, natural history. It is hard that they should—often if not generally—have such poor literature served out to them.

It seems to be the belief of those who are responsible for the libraries of village reading-rooms that anything is good enough for a tired working man. The periodicals of fifty years ago are piled on shelves for his benefit; he is pestered with theological works of the driest nature, or his intellect—usually a pretty shrewd one—is insulted by little stories, the integrity of whose moral character is considered to atone for the feebleness of their execution. Only by rare chance is a new book of real merit or vigour laid before him. As a general rule, he is kept half a century behind his day. Considering what a quantity of good reading matter is now produced year by year, this is a hard condition of things.

Let us look at an ordinary village reading-room. It is long and narrow. The floor is bare, or partly covered with linoleum. The walls are washed. There are a few pictures: reproductions in colour after Birket Foster, an engraving of Maclise's picture of Wellington and Blucher, three or four botanical charts, the church almanack coloured by hand—probably by some young parishioner not unacquainted with Ministering Children, and a copy of the rules. The rules are always prominent. They fix the subscription—sixpence per month—and name the penalties which follow if it is not paid; they forbid gambling, smoking, bad language, and the removal of books or papers; they state that the hours of opening are 10 to 10, that coffee and cocoa are obtainable from 6 p.m., and so on. At one end of the room is a bagatelle-board. The chairs are of solid wood. On a side table is a pile of back numbers of the Illustrated London News and one or two odd copies of the Sketch. On the mantelpiece are boxes of dominoes, draughts, and chess.

Above these is the library, contained on two long shelves. The books are odd volumes of Chambers' Journal, a complete set of Chambers' Miscellany, two or three Waverley novels, Beeton's Dictionary of Geography, Uncle Tom's Cabin, a few Ballantynes, a volume of Sunday at Home, five or six volumes of Eliza Cook's Journal, and a score more of books, mainly devotional. Such are the attractions of the village reading-room.

It is not remarkable that the room is unpopular, and that country labourers are behind the times. The village is small, but there must be some forty men in it, to say nothing of boys (the minimum age at which one may join is fourteen), who would be glad to have the opportunity of reading something more fresh and modern than most of the books mentioned. A few members may drop in on Saturdays to see the pictures in the new Illustrated London News, and bagatelle exerts some sway; but the shelves are neglected, or their books read and re-read in a kind of stupor. And no wonder! These are not books for 1897. Chambers' Miscellany was an admirable publication in its day, but its day is over. The pity of it is that within a mile of the reading-room are half a dozen large houses wherein superfluous books—good fiction, good poetry, good history, good biography, good travel—are lying in heaps.

AMERICAN PUBLISHING.

SOME INTERESTING FIGURES.

The proportion of English books published in America to the works of native writers has for years appeared to be very large. It has, however, been diminishing ever since the amendment of the copyright laws prevented the flooding of the American market with cheap editions of English books. The American author, relieved of that ruinous competition, is doing much better, and the position at the present moment is seen in the following table of figures, based on an analysis of this autumn's announcements. The national origin of 616 books just published, or just about to be published, in the States is accounted for as follows:

	Of English Origin.	Of American.
Biography . . . . .	32	28
History . . . . .	7	36
General Literature . . . . .	38	52
Poetry . . . . .	5	18
Fiction . . . . .	48	136
Travels . . . . .	12	16
Art and Archaeology . . . . .	12	7
Music and the Drama . . . . .	3	4
Science and Nature . . . . .	4	23
Politics and Economics . . . . .	4	19
Philosophy and Psychology . . . . .	—	15
Theology and Religion . . . . .	22	63
Sport . . . . .	12	—
	199	417

The figures for books on Sport and Philosophy are very curious.

THE WEEK.

THE event of the week has, of course, been the publication of the biography of Lord Tennyson by his son. Another new work of importance is the second volume of Mr. Gardiner's History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate. A critical biography of Albrecht Dürer, by Mr. Lionel Cust, and Private Papers of William Wilberforce, edited by Mr. A. M. Wilberforce, should be noted. New novels, which are very numerous, are catalogued and described elsewhere.

Two books in which history is helped out with fiction may also be mentioned. These are The Diary of Master William Silence and The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell, afterwards Mistress Milton. The following is a complete list of books we have received in the past week:

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- A PRIMER OF THE BIBLE. By W. H. Bennett, M.A. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.
- THE HERODS. By F. W. Farrar, D.D. Service & Paton. 3s. 6d.
- REASONS FOR THE HIGHER CRITICISM OF THE HEXATEUCH. By Rev. Isaac Gibson. George W. Jacobs & Co. (Philadelphia). 50 cents.
- STUDIA SINAITICA, No. VI.: A PALESTINIAN SYRIAC LEXICON. Containing Lessons from the Pentateuch, Job, Proverbs, &c. Edited by Agnes Smith Lewis. C. J. Clay & Sons. 12s. 6d.
- SERMONS PREACHED IN ETON COLLEGE CHAPEL, 1870-1897. By Francis St. John Thackeray, M.A. George Bell & Son. 3s. 6d.

- A CRITICAL AND EXEGETICAL COMMENTARY ON THE EPISTLES TO THE PHILIPPIANS AND TO PHILEMON. By Rev. R. Vincent, D.D. T. & T. Clark (Edinburgh). 8s. 6d.
- BABYLONIAN INFLUENCE ON THE BIBLE, AND POPULAR BELIEFS. By A. Smythe Palmer, D.D. David Nutt. 3s. 6d.
- A HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY IN THE APOSTOLIC AGE. By Arthur Cushman McGiffert, D.D. T. & T. Clark (Edinburgh). 12s.
- THE MASTER'S WATCHWORD. By Rev. Jervis Coats, M.A. James MacLehose & Sons (Glasgow).
- TWO ESSAYS ON THEISM. By Andrew Seth, M.A. William Blackwood & Sons. 2s. 6d.
- A GUIDE TO BIBLICAL STUDY. By A. S. Peake, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.
- THE HOLY BIBLE, CONTAINING THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS (Eversley Series). Vol. I.: GENESIS TO NUMBERS. With an Introduction by J. W. Mackail. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
- THE GOSPEL IN THE EPISTLES. By J. Guinness Rogers, B.A. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON: A MEMOIR. By his Son. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co.
- FRANÇOIS UNDER LOUIS XV. By James Breck Perkins. 2 vols. Smith, Elder & Co.
- A MEMOIR OF WILLIAM PENNELLY OF TORQUAY. Edited by Hester Pengelly. John Murray. 18s.
- UNDER THE RED CRESSONET: ADVENTURES OF AN ENGLISH SURGEON WITH THE TURKISH ARMY AT PLEVNA AND EZZEROUN, 1877-1878. Related by Charles S. Ryan, M.B., and John Sandes, B.A. John Murray. 9s.
- ERAS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH: THE AGE OF THE RENAISSANCE. By Paul Van Dyke. T. & T. Clark. 6s.
- THE HOMES AND HAUNTS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT, BART. By George C. Napier, M.A.
- THE SECRET CABINET OF HISTORY. Translated from the French by W. C. Costello. Charles Carrington (Paris).
- RICHARD HAKLUTT: AN ADDRESS TO THE HAKLUTT SOCIETY. By Sir Clements Markham. Bedford Press.
- THE MAIDEN AND MARRIED LIFE OF MARY POWELL, AFTERWARDS MISTRESS MILTON. Edited by the Rev. W. H. Hutton, B.D. John C. Nimmo. 6s.
- HEROES OF THE NATIONS: ULYSSES S. GRANT. By William Conant Church. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 5s.
- THE STORY OF THE EMPIRE SERIES: THE STORY OF INDIA. By Demetrius C. Boulger. Horace Marshall & Son.
- GOSSIP FROM A MUSEMENT ROOM: BEING PASSAGES IN THE LIVES OF ANNE AND MARY FITTON, 1674 to 1618. Transcribed and edited by Lady Newdigate-Newdegate. David Nutt.
- THE CHILDREN'S STUDY: FRANCE. By Mary C. Rowsell. T. Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d.
- PRIVATE PAPERS OF WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. Edited by A. M. Wilberforce. T. Fisher Unwin. 12s.
- MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS: FROM HER BIRTH TO HER FLIGHT INTO ENGLAND. By David Hay Fleming. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.
- HISTORY OF THE COMMONWEALTH AND PROTECTORATE, 1649-1660. By Samuel Rawson Gardiner, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 21s.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

- ENGLISH MINSTREL. Edited by S. Baring-Gould, B.A. T. C. & E. C. Jack (Edinburgh).
- THE CANTERBURY POETS: THE POETICAL WORKS OF HENRY KIRKE WHITE. Edited, with Biographical Introduction and Notes, by H. Kirke Swann.
- SKETCHES FROM OLD VIRGINIA. By A. G. Bradley. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
- SARTOR RESARTUS. By Thomas Carlyle. Service & Paton. 1s. 6d.
- ALBRECHT DÜRER: A STUDY OF HIS LIFE AND WORK. By Lionel Cust. Seeley & Co.
- THE DIARY OF MASTER WILLIAM SILENCE. By the Rt. Hon. D. H. Madden. Longmans, Green & Co. 16s.
- THE WATER OF THE WONDEROUS ISLES. By William Morris. Longmans, Green & Co. 7s. 6d.
- THE EARTH BREATHE, AND OTHER POEMS. By A. E. John Lane. 3s. 6d.
- LAYS OF IND. By "Aliph Cheem." Tenth edition. W. Thacker & Co. 6s.
- POETICAL GREETINGS FROM THE FAR EAST: JAPANESE POEMS. By K. Florence. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.
- POEMS IN TWO VOLUMES. By William Wordsworth. Reprinted from the original edition of 1807. Edited by Thomas Hutchinson, M.A. David Nutt.

SCIENCE.

- THE PRINCIPLES OF CHEMISTRY. By D. Mendeliëff. Translated from the Russian by George Kamensky. Edited by T. A. Lawson. 2 vols. Longmans, Green & Co. Second edition.

- ALTERNATE-CURRENT WORKING. By Alfred Hay. Biggs & Co. 5s.
- FIRST PRINCIPLES OF ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM. By C. H. W. Biggs. Biggs & Co. 3s. 6d.
- AN ELEMENTARY TREATISE ON THE METRIC SYSTEM OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES. By J. Hamblin Smith, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co.
- SLEEP: ITS PHYSIOLOGY, PATHOLOGY, HYGIENE, AND PSYCHOLOGY. By Marie de Manacéine. Walter Scott. 3s. 6d.

FICTION: NEW EDITIONS.

- OLD MORTALITY, and THE PIRATE. By Sir Walter Scott.
- TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.
- DANISH ARCTIC EXPEDITIONS, 1805-1830. 2 vols. Edited by C. C. A. Gosch. Haklutt Society.
- THE TENTH ISLAND: BEING SOME ACCOUNT OF NEWFOUNDLAND, ITS PEOPLE, ITS POLITICS, ITS PROBLEMS, AND ITS PECULIARITIES. By Beckles Wilson. Grant Richards. 3s. 6d.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

- MRS LANGSHOLME; OR, THE DAY AFTER TO-MORROW. By Mrs. Molesworth. W. & R. Chambers. 5s.
- THE REVELATIONS OF A SPIRIT. By Lily Neville. Edited and illustrated by Anber Melville Jackson. T. Fisher Unwin. 3s. 6d.
- AUSTRALIAN FAIRY TALES. By Atha Westbury. Ward, Lock & Co.
- HOODIE. By Mrs. Molesworth. W. & R. Chambers, Ltd. 3s. 6d.
- THE "ROVER'S" QUEST. By Hugh St. Leger. W. & R. Chambers. 3s. 6d.
- HUNTED THROUGH FLINT; OR, 'TWIXT CONVICT AND CANNIBAL. By Reginald Horeley. W. & R. Chambers. 3s. 6d.

BOYS' BOOKS.

- CHUMS, 1897. Cassell & Co.
- AFLOAT WITH NELSON; OR, FROM NILE TO TRAFALGAR. By Charles H. Eden. John Macqueen.
- THE BOYS OF HUNTINGLEY: A PUBLIC SCHOOL STORY. By K. C. M. Eady and R. Eady. Andrew Melrose. 3s. 6d.

EDUCATIONAL.

- PASSAGES FROM LATIN AUTHORS FOR TRANSLATION INTO ENGLISH. By E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A. Macmillan & Bowes (Cambridge).

NATURAL HISTORY.

- THE TRIBES ON MY FRONTIER: AN INDIAN NATURALIST'S FOREIGN POLICY. By Eha. Sixth edition. And A NATURALIST ON THE PROWL. Second edition. W. Thacker & Co. 6s. each.

MISCELLANEOUS.

- THE ITALIC DIALOGUE. Edited, with a Grammar and Glossary, by R. S. Conway, M.A. Cambridge University Press.
- PISCATORIAL PATCHES. By Martin Pescador. F. V. White & Co. 1s.
- CUBA IN WAR TIME. By Richard Harding Davis. Illustrated by Frederic Remington. William Heinemann. 3s. 6d.
- LUMER. By Camille Flammarion. Translated from the French by A. A. M. and R. M. William Heinemann.
- A QUESTION OF THE WATER OF THE LAND. By Dante Alighieri. Translated by Charles Hamilton Bromby. David Nutt. 2s.
- THE SAVAGE CLUB PAPERS. Edited by J. E. Muddock. Hutchinson & Co. 6s.
- MODERN THOUGHTS ON LIFE AND CONDUCT, and MODERN THOUGHTS ON RELIGION AND CULTURE. Selected and compiled by H. W. Smith. Williams & Norgate. 6s. each.
- GLEANINGS IN BUDDHA-FIELDS: STUDIES OF HAND AND SOUL IN THE FAR EAST. By Lafcadio Hearn. Harper & Bros.
- THE DWELLING-HOUSE. By George Vivian Poore, M.D. Longmans, Green & Co. 3s. 6d.
- THE ANCIENT WISDOM: AN OUTLINE OF THEOSOPHICAL TEACHINGS. By Annie Besant. Theosophical Publishing Society.
- THE KINGDOM OF MANHOOD. By Horace G. Groser. Andrew Melrose. 3s. 6d.

THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

- MACHINERY OF THE UNIVERSE, 2s.; ADDRESSES AND SERMONS 1s. 6d.; PAPAL CONSOLAVES, 1s. 6d.; MISSIONS TO JEWS, 6d.; SHORT READING FOR MOTHERS' MEETINGS, 6d.; BY SARTAL SANDS, 3s. 6d.; MISS CARR'S YOUNG LADIES, 3s.; PARTING WAYS, 3s.; CARRIERS' CART, 2s.; WILD GWH, 2s.; SEASIDE STORY, 1s.; HEROES OF THE CRUISE, 1s.; INTERWOVEN, 1s.; OLD MONSTRAGS' G B-SOW, 1s.; SON OF MAN, 6d.

PUBLISHERS' AUTUMN LISTS.

MESSRS. BLACKWOOD & SONS' ANNOUNCEMENTS
INCLUDE:

"William Blackwood and his Sons," by Mrs. Oliphant; "With the Conquering Turk," by G. W. Steevens; "Darial: a Romance of Surrey," by R. D. Blackmore; "Elements of the Science of Religion," by C. P. Tiele; "The Highlands in 1749," by Andrew Lang; "The Invasion of the Crimea," by A. W. Kinglake, adapted for military students; "The Theory and Practice of Military Topography," by Major J. H. Bowhill; "Principles of Philosophical Criticism," by S. H. Mellone; "Echoes of Olden Days," by Beatrice Harraden; "Peace with Honour," by Sydney C. Grier; "The Arms of the Royal and Parliamentary Burghs of Scotland," by John, Marquess of Bute, K.T.; J. R. N. Macphail, and H. W. Lonsdale; "A Popular Manual of Finance," by Sydney J. Murray; "A Sketch of the Natural History (Vertebrates) of the British Islands," by F. G. Afalo, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S.; "The Later Renaissance," by David Hannay; "Wild Traits in Tame Animals," by Louis Robinson; "Early Fortifications in Scotland: Motes, Camps, and Forts," by David Christison; "The Expansion of the Christian Life," by the Rev. J. Marshall Lang; "The Ancient Church and Parish of Abernethy, Perthshire," by the Rev. D. Butler; "Two Lectures on Theism," by Andrew Seth, M.A., LL.D.; "New Lights on Siberia," by J. Y. Simpson; "Entombed in Flesh," by M. H. Dziewicki; "The Early Relations between Britain and Scandinavia," by Dr. Hans Hildebrand; "A Manual of Agricultural Botany," from the German of Dr. A. B. Frank, translated by John W. Paterson, B.Sc., Ph.D.

MESSRS. LONGMANS, GREEN & Co.'s
ANNOUNCEMENTS INCLUDE:

History and Biography.—"History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate, 1649-1660," by Samuel Rawson Gardiner; "Drake and the Tudor Navy, with a History of the Rise of England as a Maritime Power," by Julian Corbett; "The Life and Letters of Sir George Savile, Baronet, first Marquis of Halifax," by H. C. Foxcroft; "Falklands," by the Author of "The Life of Sir Kenelm Digby"; "The Life of Stonewall Jackson," by Lieut.-Col. G. F. Henderson; "A Memoir of the late Sir Henry Rawlinson," written chiefly by his brother, the Rev. George Rawlinson; "The Life and Letters of Henry Reeve, late Editor of the 'Edinburgh Review,'" by J. K. Laughton; "The Life of Francis Place," by Graham Wallas.

Ecclesiastical Biography and Theology.—"Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, D.D.," by Henry Parry Liddon; "The Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman," by Wilfrid Ward; "Chauncy Maples, Pioneer Missionary in East Central Africa for Nineteen Years," by his Sister; "Aspects of the Old Testament: being the Bampton Lectures for 1897," by Robert Lawrence Otley; "The Perfect Life," by W. J. Knox Little; "The Validity of Papal Claims: Lectures delivered in Rome," by F. Nutcombe Oxenham, with a preface by the Archbishop of York; "The Supernatural in Nature: a Verification by Free Use of Science," by Joseph William Reynolds; "The Service of God: Sermons, Essays, and Addresses," by Samuel A. Barnett.

Romances, Novels, and Stories.—"The Water of the Wondrous Isles: a Romance," by William Morris; "Wayfaring Men," by Edna Lyall; "A Tsar's Gratitude," by Fred J. Whishaw; "Iva Kildare," by L. B. Walford; "Weeping Ferra, and Other Stories," by Margaret L. Woods; "Suffolk Tales, and Other Stories, Fairy Legends, Poems, Miscellaneous Articles," by the late Lady Camilla Gordon; "Early Italian Love-Stories," edited and retold by Una Taylor; "The Pink Fairy-Book," edited by Andrew Lang; "Here they Are! More Stories," written and illustrated by J. F. Sullivan.

Poetry.—"Rampolli: Growths from an Old Root," being translations, new and old, chiefly from the German, along with "A Year's Diary of an Old Soul," by George Macdonald, LL.D.; "Poems," by John Lucas Tupper, selected and edited by William Michael Rossetti; "Wordsworth," edited and selected by Andrew Lang; "Songs in Many Moods," by Nina F. Layard.

MESSRS. CHAPMAN & HALL'S ANNOUNCEMENTS
INCLUDE:

"Unkist, Unkind," by Violet Hunt; "His Chief's Wife," by Baroness Albert d'Anethan; "Bushy," by Cynthia M. Westover; "Stories and Play Stories," by Violet Hunt, Lady Ridley, the Hon. Mrs. Henniker, Joseph Strange, and others; "Sport and Travel in India and Central America," by A. G. Bagot; "Nature and Sport in South Africa," by H. Anderson Bryden; "In Jutland with a Cycle," by Charles Edwardes; "Aquitaine: a Traveller's Tales," by Wickham Flower; "Dante," a Defence of the Ancient Text of the "Divina Commedia," by Wickham Flower; "The Journals of Walter White"; "Chronicles of Blackheath Golfers," edited by W. E. Hughes; "The Art of Painting in the Queen's Reign," by A. G. Temple; "Harbutt's Plastic Method," by William Harbutt; "Modern Architecture," by H. Heathcote Statham; "The Building of the Empire," by Alfred T. Story; "The Song of Solomon," by H. Granville Fall; "What is Life?" by Frederick Hovenden; "Bimetallism Explained," by William Thomas Rothwell; "Selections from the Works of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley, and Keats," with introduction by Oswald Crawford; "Verse Fancies," by Edward Lewis Levetus; Set of Twelve Diagrams, illustrating the Principles of Mining, arranged by F. T. Howard and E. W. Small; "The Manufacture of Boots and Shoes," by F. Y. Golding; "Carpentry and Joinery," by Thomas J. Evans.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS
INCLUDE:

"Social England," edited by H. D. Traill (completion); "Cassell's Family Doctor," by a "Medical Man"; "With Nature and a Camera," by Richard Kearton, illustrated by Cherry Kearton; "Familiar Wild Flowers," by F. E. Hulme, popular edition; "By a Hair-breadth," by Headon Hill; "Cupid's Garden," by Ellen Thorneycroft Fowler; "A Limited Success," by Sarah Pitt; "The Wrothams of Wrotham Court," by Frances Heath Freshfield; "Sentimental Tommy," by J. M. Barrie; illustrated library edition of Works by R. L. Stevenson: "Treasure Island," "The Master of Ballantrae," "The Black Arrow"; "Rogues of the Fiery Cross," by S. Walkey; "The Church of England: a History for the People," by the Very Rev. H. D. M. Spence; "The 'Quiver' Volume for 1897"; "Rivers of the South and West Coasts"; "Pictorial England and Wales"; "The Magazine of Art" Volume for 1897; "The Surprising Adventures of Tuppy and Tue," by Maggie Browne; "Micky Magee's Menagerie; or, Strange Animals and their Doings," by S. H. Hamer; "Little Folks' Christmas Volume for 1897"; "Bo-Peep Yearly Volume for 1897"; "A History of England," by H. O. Arnold-Forster; "This World of Ours," by H. O. Arnold-Forster; "Cassell's Lessons in French," by Louis Fasse; "Applied Mechanics," by John Perry.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS'S ANNOUNCEMENTS
INCLUDE:

"The Flower of the Mind: a Choice among the Best Poems," an Anthology by Alice Meynell; "A Book of Verses for Children," an Anthology by Edward Verrall Lucas; "The Old Rome and the New, and Other Studies," by W. J. Stillman; "The Evolution of the Idea of God: an Inquiry into the Origins of Religions," by Grant Allen; "The 'Inferno' of Dante," translated into English Verse by Eugene Lee-Hamilton; "Tom. Unlimited: a Story for Children," by Martin Leach Warborough; "Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam: a Paraphrase from several Literal Translations," by Richard Le Gallienne; "Real Ghost Stories," a revised reprint of the Christmas and New Year numbers of the "Review of Reviews" of 1891-2, by W. T. Stead; "The Flamp, the Ameliorator, and the Schoolboy's Apprentice," three stories for children, by Edward Verrall Lucas; "Realms of Unknown Kines," Poems, by Laurence Alma Tadema; "Cui Bono?" by Gordon Seymour, the third volume of the "Ethics of the Surface" Series; "Plays Pleasant and Unpleasant," in 2 vols.: I. "Pleasant," II. "Unpleasant," by George Bernard Shaw, with general introduction and a preface to each play; "Convict 99: a Novel," by Marie Connor Leighton and Robert Leighton; "The Sub-Conscious Self and its Relation to Education and Health," by Louis Waldstein; new parts of Mr. Will Rothenstein's "English Portraits," a series of lithographed drawings; "Venice," by Grant Allen; "H.R.H. the Prince of Wales," an account of his career, with over sixty portraits and other illustrations.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & Co.'s ANNOUNCEMENTS
INCLUDE:

"Joseph Arch, the Story of his Life," told by Himself, and edited with an introduction by the Countess of Warwick, with photographic portrait; "Human Sacrifice among the Eastern Jews; or, the Murder of Padre Tomaso," by the late Capt. Sir Richard Burton, and edited with an introduction by W. H. Wilkins, with a portrait by the late Lord Leighton; "Picturesque Dublin, Old and New," by Frances Gerard, and a large number of illustrations by Miss Rose Barton; "B-a-u-t-y Culture," by Miss H. Ellen Browning; the first volume of a new series of works on the Lives of the Leaders of Men, entitled "Peter the Great," by Mr. Oscar Browning, M.A., with illustrations; the second volume of the "Concise Knowledge Library," entitled "Astronomy," by Mr. J. Ellard Gore, Miss Agnes M. Clarke, and Mr. A. Fowler, with 103 illustrations; "The Savage Club Papers—Literary and Art Contributions," by Mr. Arthur Morrison, Mr. G. A. Henty, Lord Charles Beresford, Mr. G. Manville Fenn, Mr. Phil May, and others; "That Tree of Eden: a Study in the Real Decadence," by Nicholas Christian; "The Marie Corelli Birthday Book," with drawings by Mr. G. H. Edwards and Mr. Ernest Prater; "The Household Oracle," by Mr. W. H. Wood, Mr. R. J. Griffiths, Mr. L. D. Powles, Mr. H. Cameron Gillies, Dr. Gordon Stables, Mr. W. E. Carly, Mr. A. J. Payne, and edited by Mr. Alfred H. Miles; "A New Cookery Book on Ancient and Modern Cookery," by Mrs. H. de Salis; "Kings of the Turf: Memoirs and Anecdotes of Owners, Trainers, and Jockeys," with thirty-three portraits; and "The Modern Marriage Market," by Mrs. Flora Annie Steel, Miss Marie Corelli, Lady Jenna, and Susan Countess of Malmesbury. In Fiction: new novels by Mr. Frankfort Moore and Mr. Joseph Hutton; "At the Cross Roads," by Miss F. F. Montrésor; "The Prince of Mischance," by Mr. Tom Gallon; "The Sinner," by "Rita"; "The Ne'er-do-weel," by Annie S. Swan (Mrs. Burnett).

Smith); "A Smile within a Tear," by the Lady Gwendolyn Ramesden; "Dr. Luttrell's First Patient," by Miss Rosa Nouchett Carey; "The Lady Charlotte," by Miss Adeline Sergeant; "By Right of Sword: a Story of Adventure," by Mr. Arthur Marchmont; "A Welsh Singer," by Mr. Allen Raine; "The Blood of the Vampire," by Miss Florence Marryat; "A Knight of the Nets," by Mrs. Amelia E. Barr; "A Lonely Little Lady," by Mr. Dolf Wyllarde, with fifty illustrations by Miss Ida Lovering; "Three Comely Maids," by Miss M. L. Pendered; "The Adventure of the Broad Arrow: an Australian Romance," by Mr. Morley Roberts; "Good Mrs. Hypocrite," by "Rita"; "For Love of a Bedouin Maid," by "Le Voleur"; "The Barn-Stormers," by Mrs. H. N. Williamson; "In our Hours of Ease," by Mr. Frankfort Moore; "The Great Jester," by Mr. Morley Roberts; "The Prince's Diamond," by Mr. E. Hulme Beaman; "The Diamond Fairy Book," with eighty-three illustrations by Mr. H. R. Millar.

DRAMA.

IT has been a full and varied week for the first-nighter. New theatrical enterprises continue to be entered upon, the Avenue and the Royalty being the latest of the smaller houses to open, though generally, in the West-end, managers complain of bad business. With new suburban theatres at every turn—East, West, North, and South—it is not to be wondered at that the flow of suburban playgoers towards what Mr. Hall Caine calls the "Devil's Acre" should be checked. Before the season opened I ventured to warn West-end managers of what was coming. The evil time is already upon them by all accounts, and they have not seen the worst of it yet. But commercial considerations weigh little with the theatrical speculator, who looks upon his business as, what it is, a species of gambling. The result is, that although probably not one-half of the West-end theatres can be expected to pay their way, they are never long without a tenant. When Mr. George Alexander has returned to the St. James's, and the Court Theatre has been re-opened with the new programme there in preparation, every West-end theatre will be occupied.

THE Avenue, under Mr. Fitzroy Gardner's management, tries the triple bill, a class of entertainment which gives the theatre somewhat of the variety of the music-hall. The triple bill has been successful and may be so again, but to achieve that end its constituent parts must all of them be better than those Mr. Gardner has given us. Over the entire Avenue programme as it stands there is the trail of the amateur. The late Sir Charles Young wrote a few fairly good plays, notably "Jim the Penman," but he ranked to the last as an amateur dramatist. In any case he is represented in the Avenue bill by one of the least important of his productions—"The Baron's Wager," a trifle much favoured by amateurs. Mrs. Oscar Beringer, again, who is responsible for the second item, "My Lady's Orchard," is a comparatively new hand, while Messrs. Gayer Mackay and Claud

Nugent, author and composer of "The Mermaids," the musical fantasy which is given the place of honour in the bill, are quite unknown. Unfortunately, Mr. Gardiner cannot lay claim to discovering new talent. His triple bill, in a literary and musical sense, hardly rises above the level of private theatricals; and considering the competition that rages at the West-end, this cannot be deemed an adequate equipment for what has always ranked as one of the least fortunate of the theatres. "My Lady's Orchard" is, however, an interesting proof of the existence of dramatic talent in the Beringer family. Not only does Mrs. Beringer write the play, but her two daughters—Miss Esmé and Miss Vera Beringer—sustain the chief parts in it, the latter being the child-actress who won notoriety in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" seven or eight years ago.

MISS ESMÉ BERINGER, already favourably known as an actress, has a predilection for male characters, which first found expression some little time ago in Romeo. In the present instance she plays a mail-clad knight of the troubadour period, and in this capacity fights a sword and dagger duel with Mr. Brookfield. The performance is remarkable enough as a tour de force, but I must confess to having small sympathy with such exhibitions, which give prominence to the actress at the expense of the play. The Elizabethan dramatists had to content themselves with boys or young men in their female characters, and it does not appear that the public interest in the performance was disturbed by that arrangement. But we are not habituated to Amazon heroes, and if Miss Esmé Beringer wishes to pursue her art with success she may be advised to cultivate a little more sincerity than her present achievement would imply.

THE existence of the child actress is a serious reflection upon the claims of acting to rank as an art. Infant prodigies have been numerous enough on the stage, but one never hears of a Royal Academician or a newspaper leader-writer of tender years. Acting must be much less an art than a natural aptitude, in which intelligence counts for little. Otherwise, how are we to account for Miss Vera Beringer's failure to sustain, as an educated young lady, the histrionic reputation she acquired in her childhood? The fact is, that while she has increased in intelligence, she has outgrown her original aptitude for the stage. At all events, one fails to discover in her acting now any ability beyond that of the average young lady who develops a taste for private theatricals; whereas as a child she excited the wonder and admiration of the playgoing public. At the conclusion of the run of "Little Lord Fauntleroy" Miss Vera was sent back to school, and there apparently she has unlearned most of what she ever knew of acting. It is curious to note how often the infant prodigy fails in after life to redeem the promise of childhood. Perhaps Miss Vera Beringer's worse fault is her voice, which tends to shrillness. To an actress, the importance of a sweet, winning voice can hardly be overrated. No greatness is to be attained without it. Sarah Bernhardt, Eleonora Duse, Ellen Terry, and Ada Rehan, have all that voix d'or to which every chord in the heart of an audience is so responsive. By dint of intonation alone—that is to say, independently of the sense of the words uttered—it is possible to bring tears to the eyes of an auditor, as experiment readily shows. But to that end you must have des larmes dans la voix.

FOR proof of the charm that may lie in the voice, one need only turn to Miss Ada Rehan's Rosalind, now being given at the Grand, Islington, whither Mr. Daly has chosen to take his company this season rather than disturb the run of "The Geisha" at his own theatre adjoining Leicester-square. Conspicuous for its artlessness (in the best sense), its true womanliness, its innocent coquetry, its purity and its general wholesomeness, Miss Rehan's Rosalind has some claim to be regarded as the most delightful that the present generation has seen. The heroines of Shakespeare's comedies are beautiful types, and Miss Rehan appears to have a wonderful affinity for them all. We have still to see her as Beatrice, but unfortunately Mr. Daly's plans do not this year embrace the presentation of any novelty, his company being engaged for the first time in a provincial tour, of which the Grand Theatre, Islington, is a well-known étape.

THE new farce of the present season given at the Strand, the Globe, and the Royalty is not of particularly high quality. "The Purser" is English, "Miss Francis of Yale" is American, and "Oh, Susannah!" is English again. Now English and American farce is nearly always inferior in wit and intellectual resource to French; it tends to buffoonery. In "Miss Francis of Yale" this is especially noticeable, so excellent a comedian as Mr. Weedon Grossmith being condemned to take part in a pillow-fight in a bedroom, this being the climax of the action. "The Purser" is a more refined production. It is concerned with what may broadly be described as amatory life on board a P. and O. liner, and tells its story without any noisy exaggeration. For that reason, however, it declines into the groove of platitude, lacking as it does the wit and the observation of the best French pieces of its class. "Oh, Susannah!" would also be a rather tame story of the misunderstandings resulting from a marriage being kept secret were it not for the comicalities of a hitherto almost unknown actress in the unpromising part of a lodging-house maid-of-all-work. Miss Louie Freear is a genuine low comedian in petticoats. She possesses the instinct of drollery that characterises Mr. Arthur Roberts, with whom, as a born humorist, she is entitled to be classed. The laughter-loving public will look forward to Miss Louie Freear's further appearances with interest.

J. F. N.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"The Poetry of Robert Burns," Edited by William Ernest Henley and Thomas F. Henderson.

To see critics at loggerheads one has only to read the reviews of Messrs. Henley and Henderson's completed "Burns." Two sets of reviewers declare themselves sharply—those who praise and those who blame; but each of these sets is divisible into two. Thus among the laudatory critics we find some who praise with knowledge, others whose praise, though perhaps more extravagant, is less convincing. Of the forcibly eulogistic reviews the Standard's is a good specimen. Clinching a short well-packed article, this critic defends Messrs. Henley and Henderson's severely judicial view of Burns's character as follows:

"'God have mercy on me,' was one of the bitter things that Burns wrote of himself; 'a poor, damned, incautious, duped, unfortunate fool! The sport, the miserable victim of rebellious pride, hypochondriac imaginations, agonising sensibility, and Bedlam passions.' Surely, with such a confession in view, even though there is much that is tender and noble to throw into the opposite scale, Mr. Henley is right in claiming that the poet knew himself as his apologists have never known him and will never know. Neither poverty, disappointment, nor the bitter limitations of his lot are enough to account for the tragedy of such a life. The fierce restlessness of the man was due to his unvanquished conscience, and the rankling sense of the contrast between his moral vision and his moral failure. Such a conclusion may not be acceptable to the more perfervid, not to say idolatrous, fellow-countrymen of a poet who broadened the path of humanity and interpreted its common heart, but justice lies that way, and all of mercy that so great a man need ask."

The Pall Mall Gazette, like the Standard, recognises that the editors' portrait of Burns is based on the one he drew of himself in his moments of complete insight:

"It is the portrait that Burns has drawn of himself in his poems, but which his admirers in the past and even to this day have tried to modify so that he should appear a more respectable person than he ever thought of laying claim to be. . . . With such a man as Burns, who has expressed himself so fully in his poetry and love of his letters, the attempt [to suppress the truth] was doomed to ignominious failure. . . . The result, however, is entirely satisfactory; and although the false Burns suffers, the true Burns is convincingly presented to you."

The Saturday Review says of Mr. Henley's attitude to the poet:

"We confess that it is one with which we find ourselves in almost perfect sympathy. He sees in him a peasant who was a great poet, who wished to be a 'buck,' and he presents him in those lights to us without palliation and without sanctimoniousness. The Common Burns, as Mr. Henley calls the mere object worshipper of a doctored portrait of the poet, will probably give a succession of piercing screams as he perceives illusion after illusion being torn away. Sometimes, perhaps, Mr. Henley is too truculent with the Common Burns, and sometimes he seems to lose the sense of proportion a little. On the whole, for instance, we believe that he has made out a case against that sentimental spectre, Highland Mary, but was she worth the expense?"

This critic finds in Mr. Henley's style something more than the "vigour" detected by some critics, or the "truculence" that has angered others:

"At every turn he lightens the tissue of his disquisition by some phrase or flash of suggestive description which delights the attention. What could be better, for instance, than the little vignette of the wild snatch of song murmured by 'some broken man, in hiding among the wet hags; some moss-trooper drenched and prowling, with a shirtful of sore bones'?"

The Chronicle's critic is less perspicuous and decisive than the foregoing on the question of Burns's character, but he thinks that no rational Burnsian has cause of complaint against Mr. Henley. He finds fault with the violence of Mr. Henley, who "has been at no pains to choose the smooth phrase or the sober-suited epithet which turneth away wrath." Not a few reviewers reproach Mr. Henley for his strong language. "Will nothing," asks the Saturday, "persuade Mr. Henley how much he loses by talking of 'Browning's ridiculous verses,' and 'that irascible, pompous ass, the Earl of Buchan'?"

The Morning Post treads gingerly. It does not so much say things itself as surmise what "devotees of the poet" will say. With the Westminster it represents the first class of those who blame—the timidly hostile. The Westminster says:

"We must confess that there is something about the work of Messrs. Henley and Henderson which occasionally jars. We are no blind admirers of the poet, and are quite ready to admit his faults and failings, but we do not think it was necessary to rake up and give quite such prominence to some of the most shady passages in Burns's life. Mr. Henley—for without any injustice he may be held responsible—gives one the impression that he takes a pride in detailing and discussing the moral offences of the poet. The impression may be quite erroneous, but there it is."

We now reach the outspoken criticisms of Burns's defenders. These gentlemen do not mince matters with Mr. Henley. The Glasgow Herald's critic, after quoting some of his strongly worded passages, such as the one in which he alludes to the poet's "genius for paternity," says:

"Supposing enthusiastic Scotsmen are wrong about Burns—and many of them do talk sad nonsense about him—it is certainly not by such provocative criticism that they are to be reformed. Of course, however, Mr. Henley's estimate of Burns is quite as erroneous as that formed by the commonest Burnsian, and it errs by enormously exaggerating one aspect of the poet's character and career. That Burns's passions were too strong for him, and that they marred his life, no one with any eye to fact will deny; but that lewdness and a faun-like quality were the most prominent features of his genius and character as he is now and will be remembered by the world is an utterance monstrous and morbid in the extreme. . . . That, in fact, his genius should be represented as a kind of sublimation of 'sculduggery,' is one of the strangest instances of perverted taste and judgment that the history of criticism has to show."

But the fiercest reply comes from Claudius Clear, in the British Weekly. Claudius means fight. In his first paragraph he says with horrid calmness—that the book is out. In his second he is suspiciously cordial. In the third he viciously sketches

Mr. Henley's career as a journalist while tucking up his wrist-bands. Then he delivers blow after blow. Here are a few:

"The essay is not upon Burns the man or Burns the poet. It is almost entirely upon Burns the rake. Over the sadder and baser incidents in Burns's career Mr. Henley literally gloats. Every amour is described as particularly as Mr. Henley dares."

"Something . . . should be said of the attack on Mary Campbell. . . . Let it be remembered that we know nothing about Mary Campbell except from Burns himself, and that all he tells us and all she inspired within him makes us believe that she sleeps in a pure grave. We decline to apply to her any of the epithets Mr. Henley has resorted to his slang dictionary for, because she was a woman, because she is now defenceless and dead, because we know that her poet thought of her memory with lingering and sacred tenderness. Of course these reasons are Greek to Mr. Henley, but he must be content to leave room in this planet for those who understand them."

"Mr. Henley's idea of the Kirk of Scotland is that it was in 1759 still offensive enough and still potent enough to make life miserable, to warp the characters of men and women, and to turn the tempers and affections of many from the kindly and natural way. He also speaks of the life of Scotland as made up of theology and fornication, and so forth, and so forth. I can scarcely think that any Scotsman will give himself the smallest trouble to reply to such statements. He will simply say, 'You know nothing of Scotland and nothing of Scottish religion, and no man could ever explain either to you.'"

"Mr. Henley has done his best with the side of Burns he understands. He has shown great industry and he has spared no pains. Scotsmen will take what helps them, and will wish Mr. Henley a better temper and a better understanding. They love Burns and they pity him. They may not love Mr. Henley, but him too they will pity, if they trouble to read him."

We do not know, nor does it concern us, whether Mr. Henley is angry with Claudius Clear; but we cannot help thinking that Claudius must be angry with the Scotsman for not being angry with Mr. Henley. The Scotsman's critic actually writes:

"The truth is, Mr. Henley understands Burns a great deal better than the majority of those who have written about him. . . . Fine as his essay is as a piece of literary history and criticism, it is not less so, rather more so, in its summing up of the life of Burns. Certainly he extenuates nothing; but that is not what he is there for. There have been more sins of this kind done by writers about Burns than can ever be covered by the affectation of charity; and it takes good will and more to make so true a portraiture as his. To seek a comparison from the art of painting, the work is like a picture by Meissonier, so accurate in detail, so much in little space, pathetic and serene. Every word of it is well felt and well written."

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H.; B.; H.H.; B.B.; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

If your stationer does not sell them send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
48, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

		1896.
BEN JONSON	...	November	14
JOHN KEATS	...	"	21
SIR JOHN SUCKLING	...	"	28
TOM HOOD	...	December	5
THOMAS GRAY	...	"	12
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON	...	"	19
SIR WALTER SCOTT	...	"	26
		1897.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON	...	January	2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY	...	"	9
LEIGH HUNT	...	"	16
LORD MACAULAY	...	"	23
ROBERT SOUTHEY	...	"	30
S. T. COLERIDGE	...	February	6
CHARLES LAMB	...	"	13
MICHAEL DRAYTON	...	"	20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	...	"	27
SAMUEL PEPYS	...	March	6
EDMUND WALLER	...	"	13
WILKIE COLLINS	...	"	20
JOHN MILTON	...	"	27
WILLIAM COWPER	...	April	3
CHARLES DARWIN	...	"	10
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON	...	"	17
HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW	...	"	24
ANDREW MARVELL	...	May	1
ROBERT BROWNING	...	"	8
THOMAS CARLYLE	...	"	15
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY	...	"	22
CHARLES DICKENS	...	"	29
JONATHAN SWIFT	...	June	5
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY	...	"	12
WILLIAM BLAKE	...	"	19
SIR RICHARD STEELE	...	"	26
ALEXANDER POPE	...	July	3
DOUGLAS JERROLD	...	"	10
FRANCIS BACON	...	"	17

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C O A

J. NISBET &amp; CO.'S

NEW BOOKS.

THE RIP'S REDEMPTION: a Trooper's Story. By E. LIVINGSTON PRESCOTT, Author of "Scarlet and Steel," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Heartily welcome... always interesting."—Scotsman.
"Mr. E. Livingston Prescott is one of those writers who know 'Mr. Atkins' down to the ground. His novel of military prison life, 'Scarlet and Steel,' which was one of the successes of last season, is now followed by an equally stimulating story."—Daily Mail.

LADY ROSALIND. By Mrs. Emma Marshall. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A FIGHT FOR FREEDOM. By Gordon Stables, M.D., R.N. Illustrated by C. Whymper. Gilt, 5s.

"A fascinating book for boy or girl."—Record.
"Dr. Stables is virile and healthy in all his writing, possessing unbounded enthusiasm for every description of out-door sport."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

HEALTH IN AFRICA. A Medical Handbook, both Scientific and Popular, for Europeans in Central and Southern Africa. By Dr. K. E. CROSS, Medical Officer to the British Central Africa Protectorate. With an Introduction by Sir H. H. JOHNSTON, K.C.B., and numerous Diagrams. 3s. 6d.
"An admirably practical handbook... Will be of the greatest possible use in emergencies to those beyond the reach of medical assistance."—Aberdeen Free Press.

LORD SHAFTESBURY as SOCIAL REFORMER. A New Biography, with fresh Matter. By EDWIN HODDER. 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

THE FAITH of CENTURIES. A Series of Essays and Lectures by well-known Writers and Preachers, relating and explaining in a form both scholarly and popular the Essential Doctrines of the Christian Faith. Edited by the Rev. the Hon. W. E. BOWEN, and containing Contributions from the BISHOP of ROCHESTER, BISHOP FABRY, Archbishop SINCLAIR, Canon SCOTT-HOLLAND, Canon NEWBOLT, Professor RYLE, Rev. J. E. C. WELLDON, and the Rev. T. B. STRONG. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

OLD TESTAMENT SYNONYMS. By Canon GIRDLESTONE. Revised and Re-written from an Earlier Work. Demy 8vo, 12s.

PICTURES of the EAST. A Set of Forty Full-page Original Drawings to illustrate the Life of Our Lord and the Preaching of St. Paul. With Notes and Explanations, by Mrs. RENDEL HARRIS. Imperial 8vo, 8s. 6d. [Shortly.]

CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY. Letters by Sir GEORGE STOKES, Bart. Long fcap. 8vo, 1s.

J. NISBET &amp; Co., LTD., 21, Berner's Street, W.

MESSRS. A. D. INNES &amp; CO.'S

FORTHCOMING PUBLICATIONS.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LETTERS Edited by R. BRIMLEY JOHNSON. Illustrated with Photogravure Portraits of the Writers. Each Volume crown 8vo, half-parchment, gilt top, 6s.

Vol. I. SWIFT, ADDISON, STEELE. With an Introduction by STANLEY LANE-POOLE.

Vol. II. JOHNSON and CHESTERFIELD With an Introduction by Dr. BIRKBECK HILL.
Other Volumes will follow in due course.

THE LIFE of SIR RANALD MARTIN, C.B. By Sir JOSEPH PAYNER, Bart., K.C.S.I., M.D. A Brief Account of the Life and Work of the great Sanitary Reformer in India. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 6s.

TWELVE YEARS of a SOLDIER'S LIFE. The Letters of Major W. T. JOHNSON. Edited by his Widow. Being an Account of the Experiences of a Major in the Native Irregular Cavalry in India and elsewhere. Crown 8vo, cloth, with Portrait, 6s.

THE COLDSTREAM GUARDS in the CRIMEA. By Lieut.-Col. ROSS OF BLADENSBURG, C.B. Being a Sketch of the Crimean War, treating in detail the operations in which the Coldstream took part. With numerous Maps. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY B. DALY COOKING.

A PRIMER of FRENCH ETYMOLOGY. Designed (1) as a Guide for Students who are able to consult larger works; (2) as a Notebook for Teachers; (3) as a Handbook for Examinees, especially in the Cambridge Higher Local Examinations. The Volume contains Chapters on the formation of the French Language, with annotated Specimens selected from various stages of its growth. Royal 18mo, 1s. 6d.

NEW ONE-VOLUME NOVELS.

BY A. E. W. MASON.

LAWRENCE CLAVERING. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY FRED T. JANE.

THE LORDSHIP, the PASSEN, and WE. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY LADY HELEN CRAVEN.

KATHARINE CROMER. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

BY C. M. CAMPBELL.

DELLIE JOCK. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

London:

A. D. INNES, 31 and 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

NEW BOOKS.

IN NORTHERN SPAIN.

By Dr. HANS GADOW, M.A.,
Ph.D., F.R.S.

Containing Map and 89 Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, 438 pp., cloth, price 21s.

"Dr. Gadow fills his pages with shrewd and kindly observation of the people, their habits and ways of living, with vivid records of the sport he enjoyed in the mountains, and with much incidental information concerning the history, language, ethnology, natural history, and antiquities of Northern Spain."—The Times.

THROUGH FINLAND IN CARTS.

By Mrs. ALEC TWEEDIE.

With Map and 18 Full-page Illustrations.

Demy 8vo, cloth, price 15s.

HORÆ SUBSECIVÆ.

By JOHN BROWN, M.D., LL.D.

New Edition, in 3 vols.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. each.

THE NURSE'S HANDBOOK OF COOKERY:

A Help in Sickness and Convalescence.

By E. M. WORSNOP,

First-Class Diplômée of the National Training School of Cookery, South Kensington, and for sixteen years Teacher of Cookery under the London School Board.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 1s. 6d.

A DOZEN WAYS OF LOVE.

By Miss L. DOUGALL,

Author of "Beggars All."

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

BLACK'S SERIES

OF

ENGLISH TEXT-BOOKS.

In small crown 8vo, bound in cloth.

Price ONE SHILLING net per Volume.

Under the General Editorship of L. W. LYDE, M.A.

SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY.

EUROPE. By L. W. Lyde, M.A.

SCHOOL SHAKESPEARE.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

Edited by L. W. LYDE, M.A.

KING LEAR. Edited by Miss Sheavyn.

SIR WALTER SCOTT "CONTINUOUS" READERS.

THE TALISMAN. Edited by W. MELVEN, M.A.

LITERARY EPOCH SERIES.

NINETEENTH CENTURY PROSE.

Edited by J. H. FOWLER, M.A.

NINETEENTH CENTURY POETRY.

Edited by A. C. McDONNELL, M.A.

A. &amp; C. BLACK, Soho Square, London.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S SELECTED AUTUMN ANNOUNCEMENTS.

THE FOLLOWING ARE NOW READY.

THE PRIVATE PAPERS of WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. Collected and Edited, with a Preface, by Mrs. WILBERFORCE, of Lavington. With Photogravure and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of MR. ENDYMION PORTER: sometime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to King Charles I. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. With Photogravure and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s.

MASTERS of MEDICINE. A New Series, edited by ERNEST HART, D.C.L., Editor of the British Medical Journal, each with Photogravure Frontispiece, large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. Vol. I. JOHN HUNTER, by STEPHEN PAGET, with Introduction by Sir JAMES PAGET.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime Brevet Lieut.-Col. on the Staff of His Excellency General Washington. By S. WEIR MITCHELL, M.D., LL.D. "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

THE PRINTERS of BASLE in the FIFTEENTH and SIXTEENTH CENTURIES: their Biographies, Printed Books, and Devices. By CHARLES WILLIAM HECKETHORN, Author of "Secret Societies," &c. Illustrated. Buckram gilt, £1 1s. net.

GREECE in the NINETEENTH CENTURY: a Record of Hellenic Emancipation and Progress, 1821-97. By LEWIS SERGEANT, Author of "New Greece," &c. Map and 24 Illustrations, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SIR WALTER RALEGH. By MARTIN A. S. HUME, Author of "The Courtships of Queen Elizabeth," &c. Maps and Photogravure Frontispiece, cloth, 6s. (Being the First Volume of a New Series entitled "Builders of Greater Britain," Edited by H. F. WILSON, formerly Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.)

"Mr. Hume has written an admirable book.....There is not a dull page in it, and with his skilful telling of it the story of Raleigh's life and of his times reads like a romance." Pall Mall Gazette.

JOURNEYS THROUGH FRANCE. By H. TAINE. Being the Authorised Translation of "Carnets de Voyage." 8 Illustrations, cloth, 7s. 6d.

PRISONERS of CONSCIENCE: a Novel. By AMELIA E. BARR. 12 Illustrations. "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

PACIFIC TALES. By LOUIS BECKE, Author of "By Reef and Palm," &c. With Frontispiece Portrait of the Author and several Illustrations. Second Edition. "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

THE PEOPLE of CLOPTON: a Story of Rustic Love. By GEORGE BARTRAM. "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

THE TEMPLE of FOLLY: a Georgian Romance. By PAUL CRESWICK. Cloth, 6s.

THE TWILIGHT REEF, and other Australian Stories. By H. C. MACILWAINE. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIZA of LAMBETH: a Story of Passion and Poverty. By W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM. Cloth, 3s. 6d.

GLIMPSES into PLANT LIFE. By Mrs. BRIGHTWEN, Author of "Wild Nature Won by Kindness," &c. Profusely Illustrated, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THOSE DREADFUL TWINS: Middy and Bosun. A History of Boyish Frolic. By THEMSELVES. Illustrated, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE FOLLOWING WILL BE PUBLISHED SHORTLY.

THE WORK of CHARLES KEENE. With Introduction and Comments by JOSEPH PENNELL, and numerous Pictures illustrative of the Artist's Method and vein of humour; to which is added a Bibliography of Selected Works, by W. H. CHESSON. The Edition limited to 750 copies (250 of these for America); an ordinary Edition at £3 13s. 6d. net; and 15 copies of a Fine Edition at £15 15s. net.

NOTE.—The Fine Edition consists of an ordinary copy in superior binding, such copy containing an Original Drawing by Keene; also a duplicate set of pulls of the Pictures on India Paper (in Portfolio).

MY LIFE in TWO HEMISPHERES. By Sir CHARLES GAVAN DUFFY, Author of "Young Ireland," &c. Portraits, 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth, 32s.

A LITERARY HISTORY of INDIA. By R. W. FRAZER, LL.B., Author of "Silent Gods and Sun-steeped Lands," "British India" (in the "Nations" Series). Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s. (This work will form the initial Volume of a New Series entitled "The Library of Literary History.")

COMMUNISM in MIDDLE EUROPE in the TIME of the REFORMATION. By KARL KAUTSKY, Editor of Die Neue Zeit, Author of "The Growth of Population and Social Progress," "From Plato to the Anabaptists," &c. Translated from the German by J. L. and E. J. MULLIKEN. Demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

AN ARTIST'S LETTERS from JAPAN. By JOHN LA FARGE. With 49 Illustrations, demy 8vo, 16s.

The STORY of the NATIONS.—NEW VOLUMES:—MODERN FRANCE. By ANDRÉ LE BON, Member of the House of Deputies.—THE FRANKS. By LEWIS SERGEANT, Author of "Greece in the Nineteenth Century." Each, illustrated, and with Indices, bound in cloth, 6s.

LETTERS of DANTE GABRIEL ROSSETTI to WILLIAM ALLINGHAM, 1854-1870. Edited by G. BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L. Illustrated with Photogravures, Lithographs, and other Pictures. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 12s.

THE STORY of MARIE ANTOINETTE. By ANNA L. BICKNELL, Author of "Life in the Tuileries." Illustrated, demy 8vo, cloth, 12s.

TOURGUENEFF and HIS FRENCH CIRCLE: a Series of Letters to Flaubert, George Sand, Emile Zola, Guy de Maupassant, Gambetta, and others. Edited by H. HALPERINE-KAMINSKY. Translated, and with Preface, by Miss ETHEL ARNOLD. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LIVES of GREAT ITALIANS: Dante, Petrarch, Cainagola, Machiavelli, Michael Angelo, Galileo, Carlo Goldoni, Alfieri, Cavour, Victor Emmanuel. By FRANK HORRIDGE. With 8 Illustrations. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE TORMENTOR: a Novel. By BENJAMIN SWIFT, Author of "Nancy Noon." "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

THE OUTLAWS of the MARSHES. By Lord ERNEST HAMILTON. Fully Illustrated. "Unwin's Green Cloth Library," 6s.

MARGARET FORSTER. By the late GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA. With Introduction by Mrs. SALA. Cloth gilt, 6s.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1328.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 20, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

SOTHERAN'S PRICE CURRENT of LITERATURE, No. 568, just published, contains the usual Monthly Selection of Good Books and Important Sets; also Two Remainders of considerable interest to the Liturgist and Antiquary. Post free from H. SOTHERAN & Co., Booksellers, 140, Strand, W.C.; and 37, Piccadilly, W.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. (Established 1819. A large Clientèle in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

IMPORTANT.—PRINTING AND PUBLISHING.

NEWSPAPERS, MAGAZINES, BOOKS, &c.—KING, SELL & RAILTON, Limited, high-class Printers and Publishers, 12, Gough Square, 4, Bolt Court, Fleet Street, E.C., have specially-built Rotary and other fast Machines for printing illustrated or other Publications and specially-built Machines for fast folding and covering 8, 16, 24, or 32-page Journals at one operation. Advice and assistance given to anyone wishing to commence New Journals.

Facilities upon the premises for Editorial Offices, free. Advertising and Publishing Departments conducted. Telephone 65121. Telegraph "Africanism, London."

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Authors' MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Mimes E. & J. PUTZ, 435, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

LITERARY LADY, experienced Typist, desires AUTHORS' MSS. to COPY, at 10d. per 1,000 words. Work neatly and expeditiously done.—"Typist," 27, Strathblaine Road, S.W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK, Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London. TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand. TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100. STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSBOFT, Manager.

THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, N.W.

The Committee have resolved to proceed to the ELECTION of a PROFESSOR of HEBREW at the College forthwith. The subjects will be the Language and Introduction to the Old Testament, Exegesis of the Old Testament, and the Contents of the Bible. Candidates are requested to send 35 copies of testimonials to the Secretary by January 31, 1898. Preference will be given, all other things being equal, to Welshmen and members of the Welsh Presbyterian Church. Commencing salary £170.—Applications to be sent, by December 31, 1897, to the Secretary, The Rev. R. H. MORGAN, M.A., Llanyst, Upper Bangor, N.W.

TECHNICAL COLLEGE, HUDDERSFIELD.—The LECTURESHIP in ART is Vacant. Salary £250 per annum.—Applications must be sent in not later than October 25th to the Principal. Statement of duties will be forwarded on application.—THOMAS THORP, Secretary.

SECRETARYSHIP.—The Council of the Printers' Pension Corporation are prepared to receive APPLICATIONS for the Office of SECRETARY. Candidates not to exceed 45 years of age. Preference will be given to a member of the Printing Trade. Salary £250 per annum. Applications, by letter only, with printed copies of three Testimonials, endorsed "Secretaryship," to be sent to P. J. E. YOUNG, Esq., not later than October 23rd, to the Offices, Gray's Inn Chambers, 20, High Holborn, W.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing Work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Furnival Street, London, E.C.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M. care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Aron Lodge, West Kensington, W.

PHONETICS and ANGLO-SAXON.

Mr. H. SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., LL.D., will begin Courses of Systematic Instruction in the above in MICHAELMAS TERM (beginning about October 20).—For particulars apply to Mr. SWEET, 38, Northam Road, Oxford. Graduated Certificates will be attainable by those who go through a full Course with satisfactory results.

FROGGY; OR, MY LORD MAYOR: a Story of the Trials of Office. By CHARLES JAS. SCOTTER. "As there are numerous personalities herein, I think it well to state that they do not refer to any persons now living.—The Author." London: THE LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., E.C. (Three-and-Sixpence.

On November 1st will be published, price 1s., PART I. OF THE NEW, REVISED EDITION OF AN ILLUSTRATED MANUAL OF BRITISH BIRDS. By HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c. To be completed in Twenty Parts, with about 370 Illustrations. GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row. (Successors to Mr. VAN VOORST.)

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPRON, "Academy" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE. (Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—SCOTT, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS.

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C. Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich. The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE OF ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS. For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost. Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size, 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY FINE ART GALLERY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.	COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.
LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.	N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms. Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited 30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

THE CANTERBURY POETS.

NEW VOLUME.

1s., out or uncut edges; Gravure Frontispiece Edition, 2s.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF HENRY KIRKE WHITE. Edited, with a Biographical Introduction and Notes, by H. KIRKE SWANN.

May also be had in a variety of bindings—Brocade, Roan, &amp;c.

THE CANTERBURY POETS IN ANTIQUE LEATHER BINDING.—A special Selection from the Volume of this Series, issued in an antique leather binding, with a quaint and richly embossed antique pattern (period, sixteenth century), with gilt edges and gilt roll.

For full particulars see List, supplied on application.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS AND ILLUSIONS:

A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.
 "This remarkable little volume."—Daily News
 "Scientific both in method and reasoning. Full of valuable matter for students of the subject."—Sootsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

The PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS

By Prof. TH. RIBOT.
 "A work remarkable both for the extent and minuteness of the psychological study which it devotes to matters hitherto too much neglected, and for the light it throws on these matters by considering them from a new point of view." A valuable and interesting contribution to the literature of psychology."—Sootsman.
 "Professor Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s., 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

The development of the new, or experimental, psychology within the last few years has produced a large amount of remarkable material which has remained unknown except to specialists. This material has been collected by Dr. Scripture in the present volume, and brought into relation with scientific thought. The method of treating the subject is absolutely new. The scholastic distinctions between sensation and perception, the "forces" of attention, memory, &c., are thrown aside, the whole domain of mental life being treated in relation to time, energy, and space. From this point of view Psychology takes on an entirely new aspect, and is seen in its true meaning as an experimental science in closest relation to the physical sciences.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., with Diagrams.

SLEEP: its Physiology. Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACEINE (St. Petersburg).

Deals with the mechanism of sleep, with insomnia, abnormal tendency to sleep, somnambulism, cataplexy, the various anomalies and diseases of sleep, its hygiene, and the regulation of the various influences that control it.

NEW EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s., with Illustrations. SECOND EDITION.

MAN and WOMAN: a Study of Human Secondary Sexual Characters. By HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. FOURTH EDITION, completely Revised.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. Albert Moll.

101st VOLUME OF THE SCOTT LIBRARY.

CRITICISMS, REFLECTIONS, and MAXIMS of GOETHE. Translated, with an Introduction and Biographical Note, by W. B. RONNFELDT. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d. [Now ready.]

This volume contains all that Goethe wrote on the subject of Shakespeare and Byron, and an interesting section dealing with Poetry and the Fine Arts, Goethe's Reflections and Maxims on Life, Character, Art, and Literature (the famous "Sprüche in Prosa"). It is a unique work, presenting as it does in a collected form the most notable of Goethe's utterances on Literature, Art, and Life.

102nd VOLUME NOW READY.

ESSAYS of SCHOPENHAUER Translated by Mrs. RUDOLF DIRCKS, with an Introduction. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt top, price 1s. 6d.

This is a collection of Schopenhauer's most representative Essays, including: Authorship and Style—Education—Reading and Books—Women—Thinking for Oneself—Immortality—Religion—Metaphysics of Love—On Physiognomy—On Suicide—On the Emptiness of Existence, &c.

THE WORLD'S GREAT NOVELS.

Large crown 8vo, illustrated, price 3s. 6d. per Volume.

A series of acknowledged masterpieces by the most eminent writers of fiction. Paper, type, and binding will all be of the most satisfactory description, and such as to make these volumes suitable either for presentation or for a permanent place in the library.

IMPORTANT NEW ADDITION.

1,384 pages, 12 Full-Page Illustrations, including Frontispiece.

LES MISÉRABLES. By Victor Hugo.

Though occupying no less than 1,384 pages, this edition is one volume of Victor Hugo's most famous work will be found quite easy to hold for reading, being printed on a special paper, which, though strong, is extremely light. The book is set up in large, clear type.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

THE COUNT of MONTE-CRISTO. By ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS By ALEXANDRE DUMAS.

ANNA KARÉNINA. By Count Tolstoy.

JANE EYRE. By Charlotte Brontë.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS.

A Second Edition is now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, of Miss VIOLET HUNT'S New Novel UNKIST, UNKIND! cr. 8vo, 6s.

BUSHY:

The Adventures of a Girl.

By CYNTHIA M. WESTOVER.

Illustrated by J. A. Walker.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Ready.]

HIS CHIEF'S WIFE.

By Baroness ALBERT D'ANETHAN.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

[Ready.]

A DAY'S TRAGEDY.

A Novel in Rhyme.

By ALLEN UPWARD,

Author of "Secrets of the Courts of Europe," &amp;c.

With Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

TWO NEW WORKS FOR SPORTSMAN AND NATURALIST.

NATURE AND SPORT IN SOUTH AFRICA.

By H. A. BRYDEN,

Author of "Gun and Camera in Southern Africa," &amp;c.

With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

SPORT AND TRAVEL IN INDIA AND CENTRAL AMERICA.

By A. G. BAGOT,

Late 60th Rifles (Bagatelle),

Author of "Sporting Sketches," &amp;c.

With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Field says: "Highly entertaining.....Can be opened at any chapter with the certainty of finding something amusing."

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

FOUR POETS:

Selections from Works of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Shelley, and Keats.

Edited, with Introduction,

By OSWALD CRAWFORD.

Uniform with "Lyrical Verse, from Elizabeth to Victoria."

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

DANTE:

A Defence of the Ancient Text of the "Divina Commedia."

By WICKHAM FLOWER, F.S.A.

A Critical Consideration of the Story of Bertram de Born, as related by Dante in the Inferno, and a suggested Correction of the accepted Text.

READY NEXT WEEK.

CHRONICLES OF BLACKHEATH GOLFERS.

Edited by W. E. HUGHES,

Late Hon. Secretary of the Royal Blackheath Golf Club.

With numerous Portraits and other Illustrations.

Crown 4to, 51s. net.

CHAPMAN &amp; HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

W. THACKER &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NOTICE.

"John Company" may be now had at the London Libraries and Booksellers'.

"Mr. H. G. Keene's new book, 'A Servant of John Company,' will certainly appear at a moment when India engrosses a more than usually large share of public interest. Anything from the pungent pen of the author of 'Sketches in Indian Ink' is sure to be worth reading."

DAILY NEWS.

A SERVANT OF "JOHN COMPANY."

(The Hon. East India Company). Being the Recollections (50 year) of an Indian Official, by H. G. KEENE, C.I.E., Hon. M.A., Author of "Sketches in Indian Ink," &c. With Portrait and 6 Full-Page Illustrations by W. SIMPSON, of the "Illustrated London News," from Sketches by the Author. Demy 8vo, cloth, gilt top, 12s.

CONTENTS: Posting Days in England—Fighting Fitzgerald—Daniel O'Connell—Reminiscences of the Indian Mutiny—Duelling in the Army, and the part the late Prince Consort took in the Abolition of the same—Agra—Lord Canning—Sir Henry Lawrence—Anglo-Indian Society in the Days of the East India Company—Lord Dalhousie—Sir H. M. Elliot—and other well-known Indian Officials; interspersed with Original Stories and Anecdotes of the Times, and Appendix on the Present Troubles in India.

A NEW WORK ON BRITISH STOCK.

THE BEST BREEDS of BRITISH

STOCK: a Practical Guide for Farmers and Owners of Live-Stock in England and the Colonies. By Professors J. P. SHELDON, late Special Commissioner of the Canadian Government, and JAMES LONG, Author of "British Dairy Farming." Edited by JOHN WATSON, F.L.S. Medium 8vo, boards, 2s. 6d.

A useful and safe guide, written by well-known authorities who are men of science and practical farmers.

A NEW WORK ON TACTICS.

TACTICS: as Applied to Schemes.

By Major J. SHERSTON, D.S.O., F.S.C. (Rifle Brigade), with an Appendix containing "Solutions to some Tactical Schemes," by Capt. L. J. SHADWELL, F.S.C. (Suffolk Regiment), D.A.A.G. for Instruction. Second Edition, Revised and Enlarged, with 7 Maps. Demy 8vo, 9s.

A NEW MEDICAL WORK.

MEDICAL HINTS for HOT CLIMATES

and for Those Out of Reach of Professional Aid. By CHARLES HEATON, M.R.C.S. With Diagrams. Foolscap 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THACKER'S NEW SIX-SHILLING SERIES

OF STANDARD WORKS,

Including History, Biography, Travel, The Ballad Letters and Miscellaneous Literature.

NOW READY.

In crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 6s. each Volume.

RUDYARD KIPLING.—DEPARTMENTAL

DITTIES and OTHER VERSES. Ninth Edition. Printed on antique wove paper, with Frontispiece and several Full-page and smaller Illustrations from Original Drawings by DUDLEY CLAYTON.

"ALIPH CHEEM."—LAYS of IND: Comic, Satirical, and Descriptive Poems, Illustrative of Anglo-Indian Life. Illustrated by the Author, LIONEL JESSUP, R.A. STRENDAL, and others. Tenth Edition.

E. H. A.—A NATURALIST on the PROWL. With 90 Illustrations by R. A. STRENDAL, F.R.G.S., F.Z.S., Author of "Mammalia of India." Second Edition.

E. H. A.—THE TRIBES on MY FRONTIER. An Indian Naturalist's Foreign Police. With 50 Illustrations by F. C. MACRAE. Sixth Edition.

E. H. A.—BEHIND the BUNGALOW. With 23 Clever Sketches by the Illustrator of "The Tribes." 15th Edition.

W. THACKER &amp; CO., 2, Creed Lane, E.C.

---

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

THE FULL PROSPECTUS WILL BE PUBLISHED IN MONDAY'S PAPERS.

---

The List will Open on Monday, October 18th, 1897, and Close on Wednesday, October 20th, 1897.

BLAISDELL PENCILS, LIMITED

(Incorporated under the Companies Acts 1862 to 1893),

FOR THE MANUFACTURE OF

THE BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

---

SHARE CAPITAL - - - - - £100,000.

Divided into 40,000 six per cent. Cumulative Preference Shares of £1 each, and 60,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each, payable 2s. 6d. on application, 7s. 6d. on allotment, and the balance on the 20th November, 1897.

---

Directors:

ALDERMAN ALF COOKE, J.P. (Ex-Mayor of Leeds), Crown Point Printing Works, and Weetwood Hall, Leeds (Chairman).

JOHN MORGAN RICHARDS, 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C., and 56, Lancaster Gate, London, W. (Managing Director).

ARTHUR ESCOTT YOUNG, 24, Longridge Road, London, S.W. (General Manager).

WILLIAM DALLAS ROSS (Managing Director of "Black and White"), London.

N. SCOTT-RUSSELL, 6, Egerton Gardens, London, S.W.

WILLIAM PORTER WARD, 106, Rue de l'Arbre-Béni, Brussels.

Bankers:

LLOYD'S BANK, LIMITED, 222, Strand, London, W.C., and other Branches:

Solicitors:

ASHWELL & TUTIN, Nottingham and London.

Auditors:

MELLORS, BASDEN & CO., 35, St. Swithin's Lane, London, E.C., and Nottingham.

Secretary and Registered Offices of the Company:

SILVANUS ALLEN, Alliance Mills, Stoke Newington, London, N.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

New Illustrated List post free on application.

TWO IMPORTANT BOOKS READY OCTOBER 18th.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S
NEW STORY OF CHILD LIFE.

PRINCESS SARAH

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. With 8 Full-Page Plates and Illustrations in the Text by Harold Copping.

"Princess Sarah" is one of those delightful stories of child life which John Strange Winter can tell so well. It is written in the author's best style, and is worthy of a popularity as great as her "Boobie's Baby" attained.

ETHEL TURNER'S NEW BOOK.

MISS BOBBIE.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. With 8 Full-Page Illustrations and 75 Cuts in the Text by Harold Copping.

"Miss Ethel Turner is fast becoming to the world at large what the authoress of 'Little Men,' &c., was for generations past to America, and to children and grown-up people alike all the world over."—Westminster Gazette.

ETHEL TURNER'S OTHER BOOKS.

THE LITTLE LARRIKIN. 3s. 6d.

SEVEN LITTLE AUSTRALIANS. 3s. 6d.

THE FAMILY at MISRULE. 3s. 6d.

THE LITTLE DUCHESS. 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a BABY. 2s. 6d.

JUST READY.

A NEW BOOK OF FAIRY STORIES.

Profusely Illustrated by A. J. Johnson.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

AUSTRALIAN FAIRY TALES.

By ATHA WESTBURY.

"Delightful tales.... Her power of enchantment is real. Miss Westbury has also the skill to set forth her graceful fancies in attractive form."—Glasgow Herald.

NEW SERIES OF GIFT BOOKS FOR BOYS.

Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s.

The names of the Authors give sufficient guarantee of the literary merits and interest of these books, whilst for value the books will be found unequalled in Copyright Books. Paper, printing, binding, and illustrations are alike excellent.

WELL ILLUSTRATED BY W. S. STACEY AND GORDON BROWNE.

DICKY BEAUMONT. By Arthur Lee KNIGHT, Author of "Jack Trevor, R.N.," &c.

The HEIR of LANGRIDGE TOWERS.

By R. M. FREEMAN, Author of "Steady and Strong," &c.

THE BLACK MAN'S GHOST. By

JOHN C. HUTCHESON, Author of "Picked up at Sea," &c.

The MIDS of the "RATTLESNAKE." By ARTHUR LEE KNIGHT.

THE GOLDEN LAND. By B. L. FARJEON, Author of "Grif," "Bread and Cheese and Kisses," &c.

FRANK ALLREDDY'S FORTUNE.

By Captain FRANKLIN FOX, Author of "How to Send a Boy to Sea," &c.

THE RAJAH of MONKEY ISLAND.

By ARTHUR LEE KNIGHT, Author of "Dickie Beaumont," &c.

THE CRUISE of the "CORMORANT."

By ARTHUR LEE KNIGHT.

LONDON: WARD, LOCK & CO., LTD.,
SALISBURY SQUARE, E.C.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW BOOKS.

THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT.

Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D.,
Editor of 'The Expositor,' 'Expositor's Bible,' &c.

NOW READY.

The FIRST VOLUME, of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of The GOSPEL of ST. MATTHEW, The GOSPEL of ST. MARK, The GOSPEL of ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.; and The GOSPEL of ST. JOHN, by the Rev. Professor MARCUS DODS, D.D.

"The Expositor's Greek Testament" will be on the plan of Dean Alford's Greek Testament, which had a long course of popularity and usefulness in this country. The first volume was published in 1849 and the last in 1861, and the work formed an epoch in Biblical studies in England, although it is now out of date. "The Expositor's Greek Testament" will seek to fill its place, and the Contributors will include the most eminent Biblical Scholars in Great Britain.

The Greek Text will be given with notes and full critical apparatus, and will extend to four volumes. Although the whole work will be completed in about four years, the Editor and the Publishers are unable to bind themselves to definite dates for the appearance of separate volumes.

The price of each volume will be 2s., but for those who SUBSCRIBE IN ADVANCE the price for TWO VOLUMES will be THIRTY SHILLINGS.

A full Prospectus, with specimen sheets, of this important Work is now ready, and will be forwarded on application to the Publishers.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THROUGH LATTICE WINDOWS

By W. J. DAWSON, Author of "London Idylls," "The Makers of Modern England," &c.

THE GIFFORD LECTURES, 1897.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER of the

WORLD. By ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D.,
Professor of Apologetics and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow.

CONTENTS.—The Subject Introduced—Man's Place in the Universe—Theistic Inferences from Man's Place in the Universe—Non-moral Duty, or the Gods of Modern Pessimism—The Worth of Life—The Worth of Man—The Power Making for Righteousness—The Power Working in and for Humanity: Part I. Historic Dawn. Part II. Historic Days—Providence in the Individual Life—Providential Methods: Election—Providential Methods: Solidarity—Providential Methods: Progress by Sacrifice.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MARY QUEEN of SCOTS: from Her

Birth to Her Flight into England:—A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a Few Documents hitherto Unpublished, and an Itinerary. By DAVID HAY FLEMING.

"The work will prove a mine of wealth by reason of its marvellous collection of documentary evidence, much of it for the first time published in an accessible form.... The reader will rise from its perusal feeling probably that for the first time he has fairly got a grip of the essentials in the Marian controversy."—Glasgow Daily Mail

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES of a PHILOSOPHY of

RELIGION. Based on Psychology and History. By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. SEDD.

"It is a fascinating book, it is written with the greatest lucidity, its arrangement is excellent, the book is alive in every sentence, it quivers with the intense emotion of a fine spirit, who has lived through the experience embodied in the book, who has fought his doubts and gathered faith."—Daily Free Press.

8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SILENCE of GOD. By Robert

ANDERSON, C.B., LL.D., Assistant-Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

"This is an impressive book.... Is worthy of the deepest attention of all interested in the important subject of which it treats."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A GUIDE to BIBLICAL STUDY. By

A. S. PEAKE, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.

CONTENTS.—Introductory—Division of the Subject and Order of Study—The Original Languages—Books—Old Testament Introduction—Old Testament Exegesis and History—Old Testament Theology—New Testament Introduction—New Testament History—New Testament Theology.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The CHURCH of ENGLAND BEFORE

the REFORMATION. By the Rev. DYSON HAGUE, M.A.

Dr. HANDLEY C. G. MOULTON says: "As regards the main position of the book, its thesis, so to speak, my own convictions have long taken the general line which it lays down. It is both right and delightful to trace, in the pre-Reformation periods of our Church, the preservation of the central and fundamental deposits of revealed truth, and the often recurring examples of the powerful working of Divine grace in individual saints and servants of God."

SECOND EDITION. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

SOME LESSONS of the REVISED

VERSION of the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. BROOKE FOSB WESTCOTT, D.D., Lord Bishop of Durham.

"The work is marked on every page by the same reverence and the same sympathetic and scholarly insight to which we are accustomed in Dr. Westcott's great commentaries.... Anything which Dr. Westcott has to say needs no recommendation to secure it a wide and respectful hearing. The present work should be in the immediate effects of its influence as important as any that has appeared from him."—Guardian.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, PATERNOSTER ROW, E.C.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS.

SOPHOCLES—THE TEXT of the SEVEN PLAYS. Edited, with an Introduction, by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P., Regius Professor of Greek in the University of Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE REPUBLIC of PLATO. Edited, with Critical Notes and an Introduction on the Text, by J. ADAM, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

THE PHILEBUS of PLATO. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by R. G. BURY, M.A., formerly Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE ITALIC DIALECTS. Edited, with a Grammar and Glossary, by R. S. CONWAY, M.A., Professor of Latin in University College, Cardiff, late Fellow of Gonville and Caius College. In 2 vols. Royal 8vo, 30s.

AN ELEMENTARY COURSE of INFINITESIMAL CALCULUS, for the Use of Students of Physics and Engineering. By HORACE LAMB, M.A., F.R.S., Professor of Mathematics in the Owens College, Manchester. Crown 8vo, 12s.

THEORETICAL MECHANICS. An Introductory Treatise on the Principles of Dynamics, with numerous Applications and Examples, by A. E. H. LOVE, M.A., F.R.S., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge. Demy 8vo, 12s. [Immediately.]

THE WORKS of ARCHIMEDES.

Edited in Modern Notation, with Introductory Chapters, by T. L. HEATH, Sc.D., sometime Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; Editor of the "Treatise on Conic Sections," by Apollonius of Perga. Demy 8vo, 15s.

THE THEORY of GROUPS of a FINITE ORDER. By W. BURNSIDE, M.A., F.R.S., late Fellow of Pembroke College. Demy 8vo, 15s.

STUDIA SINAITICA—N<sup>o</sup> VI.

A PALESTINIAN SYRIAC LECTONARY, containing Lessons from the Pentateuch, Job, Proverbs, Prophets, Acts, and Epistles. Edited by AGNES SMITH LEWIS, with Critical Notes by Professor EBERHARD NESTLE, D.D., and a Glossary by MARGARET D. GIBSON. 12s. 6d. net.

CAMBRIDGE BIBLE for SCHOOLS and COLLEGES.

New Volume.

General Editor for the Old Testament and Apocrypha: A. F. KIRKPATRICK, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew.

THE FIRST BOOK of MACCABEES.

With the Text of the Revised Version. By the Rev. W. FAIRWEATHER, M.A., and J. S. BLACK, LL.D. With Map and Illustrations. 3s. 6d.

PITT PRESS SHAKESPEARE for SCHOOLS.

New Volumes

SHAKESPEARE—KING LEAR. With Introduction, Notes, and Glossary. By A. W. VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE—THE MERCHANT of VENICE. By the same Editor. [In the press.]

PITT PRESS SERIES.

DEMOSTHENES—THE OLYNTHIAC

SPEECHES. Edited by T. R. GLOVER, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, Professor of Latin in the Queen's University, Canada. 2s. 6d.

SOPHOCLES—OEDIPUS TYRANNUS.

School Edition, with Introduction and Commentary by R. C. JEBB, Litt.D., M.P. Second Edition. 4s. 6d. [Nearly ready.]

XENOPHON—ANABASIS. Book III.

Edited with Notes and Vocabulary, by G. M. EDWARDS, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge. 1s. 6d.

BIART—QUAND J'ÉTAIS PETIT.

PART II. Edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by JAMES BOILELLE, B.Sc., L. 2s.

MACAULAY—PITT and CHATHAM

Edited by A. D. INNES, M.A., Oriel College, Oxford. [Nearly ready.]

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
The House of Blackwood ... ..	296
"Scholarly, but Colourless" ... ..	296
The Lafayettes ... ..	298
An Old Diary ... ..	298
For Teachers ... ..	299
From Religion to Irreligion ... ..	299
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	301
EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM: III., THE "NIBELUNGEN LIED" ... ..	302
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: II., A WAITRESS ... ..	303
THE BOOK MARKET:
A Million Copies a Month ... ..	303
The Books that are Selling ... ..	304
THE WEEK ... ..	305
DRAMA ... ..	306
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	307
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	307
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	87-90

REVIEWS.

THE HOUSE OF BLACKWOOD.

Annals of a Publishing House: William Blackwood and his Sons. By Mrs. Oliphant. In 2 vols. (Blackwood.)

THE house of Blackwood have had from the first the peculiarity of contracting intimate personal relations with many of the authors who worked with or for them; and the numerous and durable friendships which resulted are a singular testimony to the merit of these publishers as men. Most people dislike to have money dealings, except of the most definite and formal nature, with their friends; and not many important contributors can put up with editorial rebuffs. Yet there never was a contributor to Maga, except Wilson, the tutelary genius—and not even Wilson in the days of the first Blackwood—who could count with certainty on acceptance, and all were subject to editorial retrenchments. But although the publishers insisted courteously but firmly upon the right to reject and the right to excise, they never imitated the evil fashion of the Quarterlies in inserting paragraphs and altering the author's meaning; and in their money dealings they adhered resolutely to the view of their founder, who treated payment as an accident of the transaction:

"The sentiments which he held on this subject, written I do not remember to what correspondent," says Mrs. Oliphant, "are very strongly expressed: 'I never did, and never will, hold out money in itself as the inducement for men of talents to write for Maga. What I have always been anxious for is that able men should write on such subjects as they themselves felt an interest in, and, we must allow he adds at once, 'never to print any article without paying liberally for it.'"

In short, the Blackwoods spared neither trouble nor money to make their magazine so good that the best men would account it an honour to appear in it. They endeavoured to inspire their contributors with their own zeal for Maga, and this constituted a real bond of union—a sort of comradeship, very pleasant to read of.

These two volumes do not carry the history beyond 1861, when John Blackwood was left in sole charge, three other brothers having died in harness. The first volume relates how William Blackwood was apprenticed to a bookseller, set up a bookshop himself in Edinburgh, became Murray's Scotch agent, issued some few books, and was for a brief, bright moment partner with Murray in publishing The Tales of My Landlord; how in 1817 he attempted a magazine, the Edinburgh Monthly, under the editorship of Pringle and Cleghorn; how it failed, the editors departed; how Maga rose from its ashes, and burst upon the world with the Chaldee Manuscript. This makes up about a fifth of the book. The rest tells of Maga's turbulent youth, explains the genesis of the famous Noctes—an idea of Blackwood's own—and sketches the main contributors. It is an extraordinary record. Scott's success had turned the head of every publisher, the bacillus of authorship had not yet widely extended its ravages, authors were scarce, and publishers—more especially Blackwood—had the wildest expectations of every new aspirant. He sent out into the highways and the hedges to compel men to write for him; but with a shrewdness strangely allied to this rashness, very soon took their measure. If they would not do, good-bye to them. If they did do, he harnessed them to the most wildly jibbing team that ever man held together. Of his chief helpers, there was not one but recommended himself by letting the publisher in for a libel action in his first or second contribution, yet reproaches never seem to have followed; and one and all considered it a mark of genius to be late with their "copy." The magazine used to come out when it pleased Heaven and Professor Wilson; it often came in a double number: it had no really responsible editor, except in so far as Mr. Blackwood had to stand the racket for whatever might appear; in short, it had the disorder of all vigorous growths. Gradually control became centralised and method asserted itself; but the period of which this first volume treats is the period of the veiled council, the symbol of which is the Noctes, written first by a single hand, then sent round to the others for correction and interpolations. It is odd to learn how many of the boisterous convivialities originated in Lockhart's sober seclusion. But the suppers at Ambrose's were a jovial reality for all that.

Of the four chief figures of this group—those who receive a whole chapter apiece—Lockhart was already sufficiently familiar to us, but loses nothing by this new presentment. He was the brain of the party. Hogg also is scarce a novelty, and merits no mercy, the man who calumniated his benefactor, and that benefactor Scott. But even this scarcely deserved a worse punishment than that of vanity mortified to the very quick, and one becomes almost sorry for him. The part which Wilson made him play in the Noctes always galled him—for Hogg did not write the sentiments that are put in his mouth—and it galled him still more when the Ettrick Shepherd remained a figure at Ambrose's board, but had ceased to find acceptance for his work in Maga. Here is a letter from him to Blackwood:

"March 28, 1828.

"At your d-sire I send you an article for the Agricultural Journal, and a poetical epistle for the magazine, though I know as usual it will only be giving the carrier the trouble of bringing them out again; and as you are the only man whoever does me this honour (i.e., of rejecting contributions) the oftener you do it the better; but I want to establish this fact to your own conviction—that our friendship shall not fail on my part.

"I am exceedingly disgusted with the last beastly 'Noctes,' and, as it is manifest that the old business of mocking and ridicule is again beginning, I have been earnestly advised by several of my best and dearest friends to let you hear from me in a way to which I have a great aversion; but, if I do, believe me it shall be free of all malice, and merely to clear my character of sentiments and actions which I detest, and which have proved highly detrimental to me."

Wilson and Maginn alike are revelations to us. Mrs. Oliphant with the utmost justice sets down an admirable portrait of each, but she does not conceal her dislike of Maginn, and she shares that loving tolerance for the Professor which was hereditary in the house. The Blackwoods had good reason to be grateful, for when the founder died scarcely past his prime, and the two sons Alexander and Robert were left in charge, it was Wilson who saw them through. Lockhart had gone to London and the Quarterly, Maginn also was absent and no longer loyal; but Wilson responded to Mrs. Blackwood's unusual appeal—"Oh, Professor, you'll stand by the boys!" But Maga had stood well by the Professor, who owed it to this connexion that he occupied a chair which gave him a handsome stipend and a six months' summer holiday per annum; and it had shielded him from the consequences not merely of his ordinary rash speeches, but of one downright disgraceful act. In August, 1825, he and Lockwood had been staying with Scott at Wordsworth's house on terms of the closest friendship. In the next number of Maga, Wilson, contrary as it would seem to his very convictions, and in sheer wantonness, attacked both Scott's poetry and Wordsworth's. In the same article he described an Irish Member of Parliament, Mr. Martin, as a jackass, and Mr. Martin threatened an action demanding the writer's name. Wilson, who with all his big frame had no vigour and was continually imagining himself ill and complaining of nerves, broke down utterly:

"To-day only I got your packet, it having lain at a farmhouse at some distance for at least two days. On reading your enclosures I was seized with a trembling and shivering fit, and was deadly sick for some hours. I am somewhat better, but in my bed, whence I now write. All this may be needless, but it is the case; and I am absolutely an object of any true friend's commiseration. To own that article is for a thousand reasons impossible. It would involve me in lies abhorrent to my nature. I would rather die this evening. Remember how, with Hunt, I was most willing to come forward [this was another libel action brought on by his intemperance in the same year]; here it is death to do so. I am absolutely not in my right mind to-night. I wish well to all mankind, and am incapable of dishonour. This avowal would be fatal to my character, my place, to existence. Say nothing to me that could add to my present misery" (p. 282).

"Lying and dishonour are death to me," he writes, and practically begs the publisher to get the lying done by deputy. Maginn, meanwhile in London, was trying to take the blame on himself, and interviewing Martin. He got him to dinner, and—"we Irish know how to talk to each other"—pacified him by promise of an apology in the next number. "He said he understood you were a d—d decent man, but that you ought to take care of what you got your people to write (true enough, entre nous). And here is the conclusion to the long letter:

"I think I did a good job for you. As I cannot offer to give people champagne at my own expense, I charge you the bill which, like Falstaff's, is rather heavier in the drinking than in the eating. It amounts in all to £3 7s., with which I debit you."

Poor Captain Shandon. A letter describing Mrs. Maginn's call on young Blackwood is worthy of Thackeray.

That name reminds one to pass to the second volume, annals rather of the publishing house than of Maga. Thackeray represented their great mistake: the young Blackwoods refused an early offer from him of what seem to have been "Roundabout Papers." But it was to Thackeray, as a close friend, that John Blackwood wrote later on, anent a new author, "who looks very like a first-class passenger"—the timid person whom Lewes introduced as George Eliot. Interesting as the pages concerning her are, they are not so good as those which show Bulwer Lytton—long a pillar of Maga—in a very amiable light; and not a tenth part as amusing as the wonderful epistles and doings of Samuel Warren.

"What say you," writes the author of Ten Thousand a Year, "to a review by me of Dickens's new book on America—a fair, prudent, and real review—bearing in mind my own position as a sort of honourable yet fearless rival of his? I have just read forty pages. I could make it a first-rate affair. . . . If you can rely on my judgment and tact, I can."

"In the description of the voyage out is to be found, in my opinion, a perfect specimen of Dickens's peculiar excellences and faults. . . . These last I should touch on in a manly and delicate and generous spirit. Rely on Sam Warren. I will do him good, and will make himself acknowledge me a high-minded rival, a real friend. . . ."

"Oh, what a book I could have written!! I mean, I who have not only observed, but reflected so much on the characters of the people of England and America."

Coleridge, De Quincey, and Galt all figure characteristically; so does Landor, naturally furious because in an article of his after the names Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, the editor had inserted "and Wilson." Poor Christopher! But the pathos of oblivion touches many of these pages, which record not failures, but forgotten successes. Not less interesting, however, than the authors are the publishers themselves; Alexander and Robert, who succeeded their father; John the younger brother, ablest of the sons, who established the branch in Pall Mall, for a while an active centre of literature; and Major Blackwood, father of the present Mr. William Blackwood, who after twenty years' service in the Indian Army came home to take his share in the firm's counsels. All of them show the same courtesy and kindness; all criticise, not as literary men, but as lovers of books who well know what a book should be. Not a single note is signed by any Blackwood that has not a curiously familiar tone to those many who have received letters from the headquarters of Maga.

These somewhat random notes and extracts may give, perhaps, a general idea of the masses of information contained in these two bulky volumes. They can, however, give no idea of the skill with which Mrs. Oliphant has grouped and selected the immense correspondence. Her final revision would doubtless have removed a few needless repetitions, but these do not affect the readableness of the whole. The great length—1,000 large pages—has not seemed long, and it is surprising how the heterogeneous elements have been wrought into a really continuous narrative. Two things have made this possible: the central interest afforded by Maga, and the extraordinary persistence of character in the firm. The book is a history of Maga and a history of the Blackwoods—if it is possible to separate the publishers who made the magazine and the magazine which made the publishers. Maga no longer holds the field triumphant and unassailable; but she is in no way superannuated or superseded, as has become more or less the fate of her rivals, the Buff and Blue and Yellow. How potent was the energy of her youth will be felt by everyone who reads this history of her. The impression is easily verified by turning to one of the old numbers, perhaps the only productions of a distinctively party and political organ which after three generations remain fresh and readable.

It is a history which must have been pleasant to write, for it is a history of few defections and many loyalties. The errors of Maga, which were flagrant and many, are neither concealed nor condoned, but they are related along with her triumphs and her virtues by one who gave her the love and service of a lifetime, and whose fortunes—as more than one pathetic passage relates—were connected at the happiest and saddest moments with those of the magazine. Mrs. Oliphant received her first proofs from Maga on her wedding morning. She surmounted the struggle of her early widowhood by an unlooked-for success in its columns; and the last book of so many that she wrote was this narrative—a most fitting conclusion to her varied career.

"SCHOLARLY, BUT COLOURLESS."

A History of French Literature. By Edward Dowden. (W. Heinemann.)

As a painstaking, well-written volume Prof. Dowden's History of French Literature may freely be commended. Honest industry is always admirable, and is a worthy object in itself. But the book cannot be described as an artistic achievement, nor does it at any time rise above the level of sober, mediocre, and readable matter. This is partly due to the stupendous effort to comprise so vast and varied a subject into a single volume, but still more to the fact that Prof. Dowden as a critic is not equal to the task he has undertaken. Taine has spoiled us for commonplace treatment of such a subject. We want a temperament, an imagination, a quality of interpretation as sweeping, as penetrative, a mind as robust and original, as that of the unique historian of English literature. There is nothing but genius lacking to prevent even a single volume from being a masterpiece, but for that the writer must have an individuality, a judgment not to be confounded with that of the man over the way, a commanding distinction of style.

Now, Mr. Dowden writes well, but his style is that of the lettered crowd. Given a capacity for reading and writing, a hundred writers of the same scope and learning might sign their names to his work without mortal reader feeling bound to interpose in his behalf. And when you have lamented the undistinguished monotony of these 428 pages, without a single flash of inspiration, without a lively touch of temper or caprice, without a smile or frown, without a ray of light or charm, without a trace of originality, there remains the critic for consideration. As a historian of French literature, Mr. Dowden shows himself accurate, fair, and conscientious. He has condensed as far as possible, and crammed as much as he could of the big and little into such space as naturally forbids free breathing and the necessary expansion of individual genius. This makes his history an excellent guide-book for beginners, or for those who have no fancy for closer acquaintance with the subject, who are content to distinguish roughly between the work of Froissart and Villon without any ardent desire to explore either. This is always laudable industry, and for such reason Mr. Dowden's work has its just measure of utility.

Criticism takes us into depths beyond the writer's capacity. True, the quality of our British critical work has rarely been commanding. An eminent French writer has said that there is no such thing as criticism understood in England, and certain it is that so far as literature is concerned we still await our Sainte-Beuve, our Taine; we await even lesser lights, critics of the force and subtlety of Weiss, Jules Lemaitre, and Anatole France. The French critic proves himself more than a worker—a creative artist in his domain. Mr. Dowden, like the average British critic, is content to say what all the world would say, precisely in the way that all the world would say it. He is not subtle, not suggestive—to win pardon for his lack of depth and penetration, and accumulation of defects; he is contentedly shallow and obvious. This is how he sums up the spirit of courtly literature:

"In general, the poems of the Épopée courtoise exhibit much of the brilliant external aspect of the life of chivalry as idealised by the imagination; dramatic situations are ingeniously devised; the emotions of the chief actors are expounded and analysed, sometimes with real delicacy; but in the conception of character in the recurring incidents, in the types of passion, in the creation of marvel and surprise, a large conventional element is present. Love is independent of marriage, or, rather, the relation of wedlock excludes love in the accepted sense of the word: the passion is almost necessarily illegitimate, and it comes as if it were an irresistible fate; the first advance is often made by the woman; but though at war with the duty of wedlock, love is conceived as an ennobling influence prompting the knight to all deeds of courage and self-sacrifice. Through the later translation of the Spanish Amadis des Gaules something of the spirit of the mediæval romances was carried into the chivalric and pastoral romances of the seventeenth century."

It is only when we come to surprising personalities and eccentric genius that we realise the amiable banality of Mr. Dowden's work. That he should be content to walk us through "les lieux communs" when engaged upon the mere documentary portions of his great task, well and good. Genius itself might be pardoned for nodding over Guillaume de Lorris and Jean de Meung; but Froissart, but Villon! here, surely, are individualities to arrest the readers! Here are delightful occasions to dive underneath the historic wave and bring up pearls of observation and characterisation. Work here may be brilliantly explained by character, moment, race, and environment. Yet neither the quaint and garrulous Froissart nor the double soul of Villon—tender, mournful, pious, and resigned; immoral, ruffianly, and lying—reach us with any vividness of conception. Mr. Dowden makes mention of Villon's "intensity of personal quality," but his business is to make it more evident to us. He laments the tendency to create a Villon legend, but neglects to point out that nothing in all French poetry, before or since this classical vagabond's time, has reached the full and perfect beauty of much of his verse. Many details should have been sacrificed, that the general reader, to whom the book is addressed, might spend another page on this mysterious and unique image of viciousness and innocence, of depravity and engaging childishness, drunken reprobate, repentant soul, and at bottom sweet-natured and harmless child, all in committing every crime of the calendar.

Mr. Dowden is too preoccupied in chaining the mere sequence of work to note or hint at the thousand and one influences that beget, modify, and limit production. He makes no effort to evoke atmosphere and environment. The history of a literature, to fulfil the entirety of its purpose, should in a measure prove the history of racial evolution. It should not be less than a coloured, suggestive, vital revelation of a nation's inner history and development. So many things conspire for and against the production of books that in themselves seem apart and independent. It is this atmosphere, these exterior and seemingly remote influences, that we miss in this colourless, if scholarly, book. Light and air should travel freely about the imagination, and instead we are confronted with the dull list of national bookshelves. We crave some vivid presentment of society, we desire to captivate, on palpitating wings of evocation, the tone of thought, of sentiment, to recall the radiant vitality of a vanished hour, hear some echo of the murmur of the thrilled past, gather from exterior details some notion of the interior man whose intellectual work we are invited to consider.

It seems ungracious to cavil at so much evidence of labour, and one would willingly congratulate the public on its results; but it is disconcerting to find so little in it to praise or quarrel with. The traveller in search of the picturesque or the grotesque is not satisfied to find himself upon an even plain with never a hill or hollow in view; and the true combatant is equally charmed by a windmill to tilt against or an altar to pray before. In this department, as in every other department of letters, it does not suffice to classify with accuracy and express oneself with lucidity; the rarer faculties of seeing, feeling, and thinking are necessary as well. And one wonders in dismay what the precise object of such an undertaking can be when all the best of French literature may be studied piecemeal in excellent monographs both in English and in French. Its utility seems to consist in reference, and in this case the achievement may be described as considerably below the labour, since a slim catechism or dictionary would just as well have served.

Turn to p. 166, and read Prof. Dowden's extremely commonplace analysis of Polyeucte, and then open M. Jules Lemaitre's third series of the Impressions du Théâtre, and read M. Sarcey's lecture at the Odéon on Corneille's tragedy. We do not suggest that classical tragedy should be treated in a serious book in this flippant and delightful way. But underneath the modern flippancy, the charming lightness of touch and cynical explanatory smile, the mobile arch of brow and bright gesture of the lecturer, which M. Lemaitre makes us feel and see (a tone and attitude more seemingly suited to a discussion on the modern plays of Meilhac), what penetration, what originality and surprise of view, what youth and reality infused into an old subject! Why has Prof. Dowden never for one moment deviated from the dull academical manner, shut his eyes upon the mechanical superficialities of training, and struck a personal note to help us to a little good-humour at least? His Corneille is the sort of thing most of us left behind us with our schooldays. That he might have succeeded had he lent himself to the newer method may be gathered by his concise description of La Rochefoucauld's maxims as "a collection of medals struck in honour of the conquests of cynicism." But happy sentences like this do not abound. On the next page he returns to the hackneyed definition of La Rochefoucauld's work and character.

Mr. Dowden's summing up of Racine's characteristics is more telling than any of his former judgments. True, Racine is an easier, because a more sympathetic, subject than Corneille. He is the dramatist of profound and complex love, and his more modern genius offers an occasion to be interesting. Prof. Dowden points out the audacity that underlies the exquisite suavity of his style, the rare effects of his simple vocabulary, the delicacy and music of his verse, and the dignity of his treatment. But why not support his criticism by the analysis of some illuminating quotations? As a fact, the entire book rolls to its unexciting end unaided by quotation, and the analyses are so cursory and slight as to afford us no pleasure whatever. Even in the pages referred to about Racine, "sensible" is the most enthusiastic adjective at our disposal. And in a mere synopsis, such figures as Montaigne and Bossuet should stand out in finer relief, demand a profounder insight and a more brilliant handling, if even dismissed in a couple of pages, than here bestowed upon them. Indeed, the entire seventeenth century could not well be more inadequately represented than in the hundred and few pages here given to it.

As a compiler of mere facts and the placid announcer in the long defile of historic names the writer is at his ease. No undue demand is made upon his imagination, and we cannot cry out at his lack of freshness, hence our ability to plod our way through well-written pages that simply remind us of half-forgotten names. It is only when vividly remembered figures start into view and familiar landmarks revive old reveries and delights that our patience is tried. We would have the author of Vert-Vert more deferentially treated, and something more is due to Marivaux and the Abbé Prévost than Prof. Dowden appears to believe. Voltaire, Rousseau, and Diderot have been so well done elsewhere that there is little left to be said about them. It is hardly necessary to tell a schoolboy that "Rousseau was essentially an idealist, but an idealist whose dreams and visions were inspired by the play of his sensibility upon his intellect and imagination, and therefore he was the least impersonal of writers"; but it is well to weigh upon the fact that Rousseau restored to French prose "colour, warmth, and the large utterance which it had lost."

Prof. Dowden has even found the means of making the amazing and dazzling figure of Beaumarchais a mere lifeless name. Chérubin himself, that prince of impudent and adorable pages, is overlooked. But how many are overlooked in this volume where better men might have been spared? Prof. Dowden canters along the dusty road of acknowledged glory, and has no word or recognition for less obvious celebrity. The ostentatious Chateaubriand figures in all his legendary egotism; Mme. de Staël in the flames of Napoleonic wrath, turbaned and persecuted; but we hear nothing of Laclos, who, as the master of the mundane and psycho-physiological novel of to-day, merits a nod. It is something to be responsible for the fiction of M. Bourget, who traces the particular turn of his talent to the influence of "Liaisons Dangereuses."

From Lammenais to Sainte-Beuve nothing luminous or fresh is said.

Still it must be admitted, in the writer's words, "that no one can pretend to know the whole of a vast literature. He may have opened many books and turned many pages; he cannot have penetrated to the soul of all books, from the Song of Roland to Toute la Lyre."

THE LAFAYETTES.

The Household of the Lafayettees. By Edith Sichel. (Archibald Constable.)

The value of such a history of a great family, in addition to any interest which may arise from the historical portraiture, lies in insisting upon the earlier revolution within the noblesse, and the genuine moderation of the earlier republicanists. Lurid and inaccurate sketches of the great event have become so common that its profoundly logical sequence, its inevitableness, are lost sight of. The men whose faces we see through the confusion are, in a way, types of character, and in them virtue and vice work themselves out to a conclusion with a rapidity which seems almost theatrical. Here, for some dozen years, the dramatic held festival, and in reading the tale of it we seem to be looking at the naked bones of human character.

The author is at her best in her rough bird's-eye surveys of the period, especially of that time which immediately preceded the Terror. It was an age of theory run mad, of sensibility and noble emotions, of endless posing as "friends of man" and "children of nature." It was a time full of a sort of spectral life, when men and women sought always some new thing, and coquetted pleasantly with words and feelings which were some day to be their death. But the high spirit, the generosity and the very flightiness had one effect—they produced a society of fascinating women. At no time were the great ladies so powerful. Their follies ruled the world, their airs and graces were embodied in a preposterous system of etiquette, and in their new pose of earnestness they dared to meddle with science, the State and the Church. It is a cruel tale to read, for over these butterflies even then was hanging the shadow of death. They were, many of them, saints in the truest sense, and beneath the folly lay a deep kindness and courage. Mme. de Tessedé, the Voltairean, the apostle of sensibility, who, when in England, paid a visit to the grave of Richardson and lay for a long time sobbing, met poverty and exile with a Spartan heroism and a more than Spartan cheerfulness. Still stranger was the Maréchal de Noailles, who, says Miss Sichel,

"had many habits, equally innocent, impious, and inconvenient. She kept up a constant correspondence with the Virgin Mary, posted her letters in a dovecot, and never suspected that it was her priest who answered them. 'What familiarity,' she once exclaimed: 'this little bourgeoisie of Nazareth addresses me as "Dear Maréchal de la troisième ligne"!'—but I must remember that she is my Saviour's mother (here she bowed her head), 'and after all she does come of the Royal House of David.' Sometimes her whims took a less extravagant form, as when she insisted that all her elderly grand-nephews should be painted as cupids and distinguished from middle-class loves by having the Order of Malta represented on their shoulders. But even while we laugh there rises before our eyes a vision of the same lady, borne in a tumbrel, with uncomplaining dignity, to the scaffold."

It was with the young aristocrats of the period that the theory of the Revolution arose:

"Excited to liberty by philosophical writings and speeches," wrote the Comte de Ségur, "we wished to enjoy in one breath the favours of the Court, the pleasures of the town, the approval of the clergy, the affection of the people, the applause of the philosophers, the renown of littérati, the favour of ladies, the esteem of virtuous men."

It was a large ideal, soon to be pitifully broken, but it gave rise to a certain vague rhetorical type of character. From such a class Lafayette arose, and in a way he is its best example. A highly respectable soldier, he distinguished himself first in the American War and returned to Paris to be admired. In the early days of the Revolution he seemed to be the most prominent figure. He became commander-in-chief of the National Guard, and for a little time directed the affairs of the nation. But life became too complex for him, stronger men arose, and he was driven with all his excellent sentiments into exile. After a weary time in Prussian and Austrian prisons, he returned to Paris to find Napoleon at the head of affairs. The two men did not agree, and Lafayette went into retirement. He played some little part in the expulsion of Charles X. and the establishment of Louis Philippe. But his work was over, and at his country dwelling he ended his days in peace.

An amiable, honourable man, but one very far short of greatness. He was at his best as a soldier; as a statesman he had neither strength nor wisdom. He was all his life dominated by hazy abstract ideas which made him diffident in action. Liberty was his chief fetish, and he wasted his time in that most barren of all strifes, the discussion of the best form of government. He incessantly talks of "the lovely name of liberty," and we are told that "he did not suffer the Red Indians to escape, but addressed them eloquently in their native tongue, and converted a feathered chief to the love of liberty." He had a craving for a certain theatrical effect, and posed incessantly on his curvetting white horse. He overestimated his own importance, till even the friendly John Adams is driven to declare, "Lafayette will think himself the one person necessary." On the whole, a kindly, high-spirited, ineffective man, at once too romantic and too stupid. He had the misfortune to be cast among men of far greater power, to whom his fineness of nature was repugnant. Talleyrand despised him heartily. Mirabeau, the old "swallow of formulas," found him impossible, and hit off his weakness in a perfect nickname. To the fierce men of the Terror this Cromwell-Grandison was an inconsiderable aristocrat, and to Napoleon he was an obstinate, well-meaning visionary. Yet one cannot but admire the man, for he believed so heartily in himself and his vague ideals, and he shaped his course so honestly on his beliefs, that at times he rose into the heroic.

Miss Sichel's work is interesting, though not without faults. In a general survey of the period she is excellent, but when she has to trace the career of Lafayette himself her desire for brisk narrative lands her in a jerky, breathless style. She is too fond of a heavy antithesis, and now and again there is a trace of the spread-eagle in her sentiment. This leads her to the fault of over-emphasis. We can welcome an honest enthusiasm, but surely in such sentences as the following there is a lack of good sense: "Lafayette was free by the grace of Napoleon; it was as when Sindbad the Sailor burst the sealed casket and let loose the genius who was destined to defy him"; and "It is said that our greatest deeds are unconscious; Napoleon never knew that he had taught Lafayette experience." Again, were Hyde and Clarendon two different people, as p. 100 declares? But apart from such blemishes the work is vigorous and attractive, and, if for nothing else, we must be grateful for the portrait of Adrienne de Lafayette, surely a heroine even in an age of great-hearted women.

AN OLD DIARY.

The Journal of Countess Françoise Krasinska. Translated from the Polish by Kasimir Dziekonska. (Kegan Paul.)

THIS is a quaint little book, full of a delicate, old-fashioned charm. It is quite in keeping with the portrait of the diarist by Angelica Kauffman, in which she appears as a slim high-waisted creature, with a sidelong glance of the eye, and a dark curl elegantly disposed over a white shoulder. Françoise Krasinska was a daughter of the Korwin Krasinski family, and had the honour to become, through her daughter, Marie Christine, the ancestress of the ducal House of Savoy, and so of the present royal House of Italy. The journal begins when the writer was sixteen, with the marriage of her elder sister, and ends with her own clandestine marriage, two years later, to the Duke of Courland, afterwards an unsuccessful candidate for the Polish throne. The young lady is clever with her pen, and describes her home and the curious feudal life she led there in a fresh and entertaining manner. The unconscious picture which she draws of vivacious girlhood, trammelled in the ceremonial of a petty eighteenth century court, is delightful.

"The courtiers often tell me I am the handsomest, but I am sure I do not see it; we all have the bearing becoming young ladies of high station, the daughters of a Staroste; we are straight as poplars, with complexions white as snow, and cheeks pink as roses; our waists, especially when Madame ties us fast in our stays, can be, as they say, 'clasped with one hand.' In the parlour before guests we know how to make our courtesy, low or dégagé, according to their importance; we have been taught to sit quiet on the very edge of a stool, with our eyes cast down and our hands folded, so that one might think we were not able to count three or were too prim even to walk out of the room easily. But people would think differently if they saw us on a summer morning, when we are allowed to go to the woods in morning gowns and without stays, puffs, coiffures, or high-heeled shoes: Oh! how we climb the steep hillsides, and run and shout and sing, till our poor Madame is quite out of breath from running and calling after us."

As girls will, Mdlle. Franulka gives full details of her sister's wedding, preserving for us many curious customs, like flies in amber, in her artless narrative. The bride is set to wind a skein of tangled silk, in order to prove whether she has sufficient patience for the trials of married life. She performs the task to perfection, and even Matenko, the court fool, can find no room for criticism. In the wedding wreath are fastened a ducat with the date of the bride's birth-year, a bit of bread for good luck, and a lump of sugar to sweeten the future. She is without jewels, for every jewel worn on the wedding-day must be paid for afterwards with a vial of tears. At midnight comes the ceremony of the "Cap." Let Mdlle. Franulka describe it:

"A stool was placed in the middle of the room, the bride sat down, and the bridesmaids began to undo her hair, singing in plaintive voices the old song, 'Ah, we are losing you, Basia.' Then my honoured mother removed the rosemary wreath and the Woivodine Malachowska put in its place a big lace cap. It seemed Basia was costumed for fun, and I should have laughed had not her eyes been overflowed with tears. The cap is very becoming to her, which, they say, is a sign that her husband will love her very much. I am sure he will; he could not help it, she is so good."

How full of sensibility it all is.

Mdlle. Franulka succeeds to her sister's dignity as "Mdlle. Staroste," and to the two pillows and the silk coverlet which are the outward sign of that dignity. Then her own love troubles begin. The first suitor will not do, and he receives the Polish equivalent for the American "mit-ten"; that is to say, a goose with black gravy is served at dinner in token of refusal. But Mdlle. Franulka, although she talks much about her "honoured Mother" and her "gracious Parents," has a pretty will of her own. Presently she falls in love with the Duke of Courland, and he, who is much her superior in rank, proposes to marry her secretly, without the knowledge of his father, the King, or of the all-powerful minister, Brühl. The young lady's parents reluctantly consent, and the wedding takes place—shorn of its ceremonies and with many forebodings. One is sorry to learn that the forebodings were justified, and that the marriage entered into with so many tears and heart-beatings was not a very happy one. But it is a vivid, palpitating bit of life that M. Dziekonska has rescued for us from the archives of history.

FOR TEACHERS.

Teaching and Organisation. By P. A. Barnett, and Others. (Longmans.)

THIS book will doubtless attract the wide and careful attention which it deserves. As such a work should be, it is the joint production of various hands; and its different sections in combination cover pretty well the whole field of secondary education, ranging as they do from the claims of Greek verse composition to the merits of the latest hat-peg. For practical value, however, the gem of the collection is the chapter on "Organisation and Curricula," by the Head Master of the City of London School. With much that Mr. Pollard has to say most schoolmasters will be in entire agreement; and even those who are not prepared to accept some of the more drastic changes he recommends, will approach with respect and weigh with deliberation the strongly, but temperately, expressed convictions of one of the most experienced and distinguished schoolmasters of the day. The articles on Ancient and Modern History very properly insist on the concomitant use of maps, models, and illustrations. The last are now, to some extent, procurable in this country, but maps worthy of the name and models cannot be obtained except from abroad. The ideal educational map at present appears to be one in which all the natural features and nearly all the place-names are left out. This economy of information is supposed to render it "clearer and less confusing," and doubtless also popular in the eyes of the schoolboy. The argument would apply with added force to a blank sheet of paper. For our part, we have never been able to realise the value of maps that do not fulfil the purpose for which maps presumably exist. From the Historical Atlases published in England it is impossible to show the learner why a march took this direction instead of that, or how the course of a campaign was regulated by physical obstructions or facilities. Maps should partake much more of the character of pictures than they do; and an inspection of the sensibly conceived and beautifully executed plans in the Companion Atlas to Siborne's Waterloo Campaign will show that the prevailing belief that the highest class of cartography can be produced only in France and Germany is erroneous. In Mr. Miall's interesting paper on "The Teaching of Science" we catch the echo, sometimes even light upon the ipsissima verba, of his charming little volume, entitled Thirty Years of Teaching, which we had the pleasure of noticing recently. Dr. Abbott's chapter on "The Teaching of English Grammar" could only have been written by Dr. Abbott, as Dr. Dukes's chapter on "Health and Physical Culture" could only have been written by Dr. Dukes. To the former we should like to add that W. B. Hodgson's Errors in the Use of English (Edinburgh: David Douglas) would be found extremely useful for class-teaching. "Why," asks Mr. Morris, "should the drawing lesson be almost entirely occupied in practising the drawing of forms which have little or no connexion with the other subjects taught in school?" There is no reason why it should. The drawing-work can easily be dovetailed into the ordinary class-work, and made subservient to the classical, historical, geographical, or science lessons: Greek and Roman antiquities, mediæval arms and armour, battle-plans, fortifications, mapping, botany, and so forth, will furnish abundant material. Mr. Sidgwick on "Form Management" is, as usual, interesting, though here and there we are dead against him; as, for instance, in his condemnation of place-taking, which after a scholastic experience of thirty years as boy and master we still swear by; and we see no force in a single one of the arguments he urges against the system, while some of his advice to the novice-master we consider entirely pernicious and subversive of the tottering ruins of class-room discipline that yet survive. We are relieved to see that later in the book this ill-counsel is somewhat counterbalanced by Mr. Buckle's more judicious attitude. The other chapters, excellent though many of them are, do not call for detailed comment: perhaps the most noteworthy are those on "English Literature," by the editor; on "Classical Teaching and Specialisation," by the Head Masters of Haileybury and Clifton respectively; and on "Furniture, Apparatus, and Appliances," by Mr. W. K. Hill. There is a supplementary paper on "Organisation and Curricula in Girls' Schools," by the Head Mistress of the Queen's School, Chester. All that is needed to round off the book is a full bibliography of works on pedagogics, an addition which the editor may perhaps see his way to making in a subsequent issue.

FROM RELIGION TO IRRELIGION.

The Silence of God. By Robert Anderson, C.B., &c. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

A SHORT and concise book by the Assistant Commissioner of Police, written from what may, without offence, be described as the ultra-Protestant standpoint. Dr. Anderson insists much on the dogma of justification by faith and is entirely opposed to sacerdotal pretensions. As for the "silence" of God, or His apparent indifference in the presence of crimes like the Armenian massacres, he accounts for it by supposing that the age of miracles, or of Divine interference with the ordinary course of things, was past when the Jews rejected the Gospel—a period which he apparently makes coincide with the beginning of St. Paul's mission to the Gentiles. Satan, he holds, is not the author of sins of the flesh, but only of spiritual error: "the pursuit of religious systems, which honour man and dishonour Christ."

Dr. Anderson complains with some bitterness, that while books attacking the Christian faith receive ample notice from the secular press, those written in defence of it are passed over with slight comment. But what would he have? Does he not see that a book dealing with such subjects as his own cannot be discussed at length without taking up one or other of the many sides which the questions raised in it present? To do so would be an impertinence in a journal not published in the interest of a particular Church or sect, and would be resented by all those of its readers who did not happen to be of the same way of thinking as the reviewer.

Outlines of a Philosophy of Religion. By Auguste Sabatier. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

IN this book the Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology at Paris gives a sufficiently exhaustive account of the evolution of religion in general, of Christianity in particular, and of the dogmas of the latter in face of modern philosophy and theories of knowledge. He is, he tells us, religious because he is human, Christian because 'Christianity is the perfect and supreme religion in the world,' and Protestant because in Protestantism alone can he "enjoy the heritage of Christ without placing his conscience under an external yoke." The book is well translated by the Rev. T. A. Seed.

History of Dogma. Vol. III. By Dr. Adolph Harnack. (Williams & Norgate.)

IN the present volume of this most valuable and scholarly work, Dr. Harnack treats of a period of great importance to the Church, but one in which her history is, as he confesses, very obscure. With the end of the second century the struggle with the great Gnostic sects of Hadrian's reign was nearly over, and the doctrine that the Second Person of the Trinity is the Logos or Word of God had become, in the author's words, "the central dogma of the Church." Yet the exact state of the Church's faith at the time of her alliance with Constantine is not very apparent, and it is perhaps more for this reason than for any other that Dr. Harnack is compelled to begin the second division of his History of Dogma with St. Athanasius, whose influence on the creed of the succeeding centuries he declares to be second only to that of St. Augustine. This may be so, but the space at our disposal prevents our discussing it. An appendix on Manichæism, short but giving full weight to the new material provided by Kessler, will prove interesting to those who know the great part which this heresy secretly played in the evolution of doctrine, especially in post-Reformation times.

Bases of Religious Belief. By Charles Mellen Tyler, D.D., &c. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.)

WITHIN the space of less than 250 pages, Dr. Tyler here gives a summary sketch of the evolution of religious belief which, according to him, culminates in a faith that can perhaps be best described as Christianity without dogmas. He has evidently read much on the subject—he is, by the way, Professor of the History of Religion at Cornell—and summarises both well and clearly. In fact, with a little alteration, the book might be made into a class-book, giving not only the principal theories of the origin of religion, but also a key to the nomenclature which the youngest of the sciences has adopted. It is a pity that with so many excellent gifts, Dr. Tyler has allowed himself a latitude in the spelling of proper names which we have noticed of late in the books of other American scholars. Prof. Tiele, of Leyden, is here mentioned as "Thiele," M. Girard de Rialle as "Gerard de Rialhe," and Prof. Maspero as "Count G. Maspero." Carelessness in such matters is apt to make a reader distrust an author's accuracy in others of more importance.

The Non-Religion of the Future. By Marie Jean Guyau. (Heinemann.)

LAST on our list comes M. Guyau's L'Irreligion de l'Avenir—a title of which his translator seems to be somewhat afraid. M. Guyau is no mere railer at Christianity. In fact, he says, and shows throughout that he has taken the saying to heart, that there is a fanaticism of irreligion as reprehensible as the fanaticism of religion. But he has brought himself to the conclusion that the old faiths are dead or dying, and that none other are likely to arise in their place. Hence he sets himself to consider what will be the future of the world when religion is withdrawn from it, and he finds the prospect to be one not for ecstasy but for sober hope. Woman, he thinks, will acquiesce in the disappearance of religion, "in proportion as an intellectual and æsthetic education is supplied to her"; voluntary associations for intellectual, moral, and æsthetic purposes will take the place of churches, and the individual may even, through some interfusion of personalities not yet discovered, come to approve of the extinction of his own consciousness. All this is dilated upon with the clearness and point which French writers of a certain class seem to have at their command; but the book is far too long, and covers too wide a field. As to M. Guyau's conclusions, we should like before accepting them to be satisfied as to his premises. Is it so certain that no new form of religion will be invented? And if faith is really moribund, is its state worse than it was immediately before the Christian Era or the Protestant Reformation?

FROM CROWDED SHELVES.

Waverley. By Sir Walter Scott. "The Temple" Edition. With a Bibliographical Note by Clement K. Shorter. In 2 vols. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

MESSRS. DENT & Co., already renowned for their dainty and delightful publications, have never done anything better than this, the initial work of their Temple edition of the Waverley novels. Judging by the two volumes of Waverley before us, the forty-eight novels, which will follow at intervals of a month (cost you two shillings apiece), bound in green limp lambakin leather, printed upon a thin but tough opaque paper, of a size that can be slipped into the pocket, no volume more than half-an-inch in thickness, will, indeed, be a possession of delight. Mr. Shorter's bibliographical note is compact with information, Mr. Herbert Railton's drawing of Melrose Abbey is well-designed and reproduced, Mr. McDougall's title-page borders are quite pleasing, and the photogravure portrait of the Great Unknown excellent. We have but one complaint, and that is the pseudo-book-plate—at once useless and disfiguring. For the rest, a definitive edition, if ever there was one.

The Spectator. New Edition in Eight Volumes. The Text Edited and Annotated by G. Gregory Smith. With an Introductory Essay by Mr. Austin Dobson. (J. M. Dent & Co.)
Another Edition in Eight Volumes. Edited by George A. Aitken. Vol. I. (John C. Nimmo.)

WE cannot give unqualified praise to Messrs. Dent's new edition of the Spectator. It is excellent in intention. The paper could not be improved, nor the type, which is thick, clear, and black. But the effect is one of crowding. There is too much type to the page. The inside margins are so narrow that two pages of type facing each other almost run into one. The theory of margins has, indeed, been set at naught. It is a pity, for in every other respect the volume before us is admirable. Especially do we admire the neat binding in blue art canvas, with a backing of coarser undyed canvas. Mr. Austin Dobson's task was to him an easy one, and in his send-off essay he blends ease and erudition in his accustomed happy vein. The text is that of the revised edition of 1712-15, and the original spelling and lavish use of capitals are retained.

It is not a little odd that, after the Spectator has for many years been obtainable only in one-volume editions or in second-hand sets of an earlier day, it should now receive flattering attention from two firms of publishers. Not less elaborate than Messrs. Dent's edition is the one which Mr. Nimmo has begun to issue. This also is in eight volumes. But the two editions offer a complete contrast in their appearance. Messrs. Dent's edition is small and antique; Mr. Nimmo's is large and modern. The old spelling and capitals are here banished, and the book gives few suggestions of the eighteenth century aspects of the Spectator. Some will miss these suggestions and a certain snugness which Messrs. Dent generally achieve in their reprints. Others will welcome the clarity, the unaffectedness of Mr. Nimmo's edition, and the matter-of-factness of its brown buckram binding. Mr. George A. Aitken is sponsor to this edition.

The Secret Cabinet of History. By Doctor Cabanès. Translated by W. C. Costello. (Paris: Carrington.)

THE outward form, no less than the contents, of this book inevitably make us think of Browning's "scrofulous French novel" with its "grey paper and blunt type." Dr. Cabanès' notion of secret history comprises unpleasant medical details concerning Louis Quinze and Louis Seize, Marie-Antoinette, Marat, Talleyrand, and others. There may have been some reason for writing the book; there was none for translating it, for any historian likely to use it to profit would certainly be able to read it in the original.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

Only eighteen novels have been published during the past week. Quite enough to pick and choose from, but small in comparison to former weeks of this prolific season. The list includes no work of supreme interest; but The Two Captains is a good Clark Russell; and there are at least four new stories by lady novelists of some reputation.

THE TORMENTOR.

By BENJAMIN SWIFT.

Some interest attaches to this novel, owing to the high praise given to its predecessor, Nancy Noon, by Mr. J. M. Barrie during his American tour. Mr. Benjamin Swift, whose baptismal name, we believe, is Paterson, is a Scotsman, and lives in Glasgow. He has another novel (The Destroyer) ready. (T. Fisher Unwin. 288 pp. 6s.)

A SPANISH MAID.

By L. QUILLER-COUCH.

We are favourably inclined to A Spanish Maid, for it was accompanied by a cheery little note from the publishers saying that the leaves had been cut for convenience in reviewing. Others, please copy. It opens on the wide plains of Spain (Spain is the fashion now in fiction), and there we meet the distracted Teresa. Her mother is dead, and as for her father: "Go back to that devil and his tribe? Go back and be of his people? Go back to be a tortured slave? I will not go." No, Teresa goes to a much nicer place—the West of England—to the peasants and fishermen who talk in dialect, which is not at all like Teresa's heroics. The book is dedicated "To my Teacher," and Miss Quiller-Couch has certainly caught something of A. T. Q. C.'s clear-cut fly-away style. (Service & Paton. 302 pp. 6s.)

THE TWO CAPTAINS.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

A typical Clark Russell, with a moving plot and plenty of incidents. "Young man," said the old salt to the narrator, "if ever you put my yarns into print, let them take the form and character of Mr. Dana's book, Two Years Before the Mast—that incomparable log-book." Hence this full-bodied story. It includes some spirited pictures. (Sampson Low & Co. 423 pp. 6s.)

SUNSET.

By BEATRICE WHITBY.

Miss Beatrice Whitby has written several novels. Her Awakening of Mary Fenwick will be remembered for a certain cleverness, and, indeed, Miss Whitby has the uncommon gift of drawing commonplace people; in this story of domestic life she again displays this gift. The opening chapter, introducing us to a lonesome little girl in her nursery, is true to life, and tempts the discerning reader to continue. (Hurst & Blackett. 351 pp. 6s.)

THE MAKING OF A PRIG.

By EVELYN SHARP.

A delicate, humorously touched little novel by the author of that book of clever fairy tales called Wynns. Miss Sharp contributed stories to the Yellow Book, and has a graceful, if not a very profound, talent. (John Lane. 410 pp. 6s.)

THE BUILDERS.

By J. S. FLETCHER.

By the author of When Charles the First was King. It is no part of Mr. Fletcher's intention in The Builders to make the world laugh. The Builders is serious and solemn, with a deal about the Yorkshire peasants, in which county the scene is laid. Philip met a lady in a railway carriage. She was reading. "He took the book from her hand, and glanced at the title. He laid it down with something of a shudder." Then said Philip: "The Bible is open to all. If men and women were satisfied with that, nobody would write such books as the one you are reading." (Messrs. Methuen 335 pp. 6s.)

SWEET REVENGE.

By F. A. MITCHELL.

This is one more romance of the American Civil War, that fearful cradle of romance. It is exciting enough by all appearance. "Hands up!" These are the two first words in the story, and the last two are "My sweetheart!" (Harper & Brothers. 248 pp.)

LIFE'S WAY.

By SCHUYLER SHELTON.

Mr. Shelton's name is strange to us, but his opening chapters, introducing us to a Berlin boarding-house, make easy reading. A young American student, Philip Seymour, becomes the table-neighbour of an American girl; and at the same meal sends a thrill, all unwittingly, through the heart of a shy young concert-singer, another new arrival. It is the business of Philip Seymour's life to enjoy himself; and he does—with interruptions. (Bentley & Son. 269 pp.)

HIS FAULT, OR HERS?

By the author of A High Little World. This is a story of chapel-going life in a country town, of faith and love tried to the uttermost. A story that might please Mark Rutherford's readers. (Bentley & Son. 281 pp.)

BROKEN ARCS.

By CHRISTOPHER HARE.

This is a West Country chronicle, and many of the characters speak the vernacular. Now, some like dialect in a story; others do not. For those who do we offer a taste. There is plenty more of the dish:

"'Tidden nar' a bit o' good for I to go churnen, mother. It do seem as if thik there butter wur bewitched, for I caan't get 'en to come no ways!"
'Tell 'ee what, Susie, tidden the butter as be hag-rod.'

(Harper & Brothers. 317 pp. 6s.)

THE FREEDOM OF HENRY MEREDYTH.

By M. HAMILTON.

By the author of McLeod of the Camerons, A Self-denying Ordinance, and Across an Ulster Bog. A story of a divorced husband, and what he did with his freedom. Perhaps it is rather the story of what other people did with it—notably his daughter Vivien and Alison Carnegie, his cousin and former love, whose only failing is an inordinate desire "to manage people entirely for their good." (W. Heinemann. 287 pp.)

TEMPTATION.

By GRAHAM IRVING.

The story of a woman over-persuaded, but with an extraordinary development in the plot by which she saves her child from the slur of illegitimacy. (Ward, Lock, & Co. 246 pp.)

FAITH, HOPE, AND CHARITY.

By JOHN LE BRETON.

Three emotional short stories designed to illustrate the three Graces. (John Macquenn. 288 pp.)

BY A HAIR'S BREADTH.

By HEADON HILL.

A vigorous story of the Russian secret police—"the dreaded Third Section"—and their dealings with "the gentry of the knife and bomb." A tissue of mystery and incident. (Cassell & Co. 307 pp.)

HIS CHIEF'S WIFE.

BY BARONESS A. D'ANOTHAN.

"The next moment the British Ambassador, in his riding breeches, appeared from the door of the drawing-room that opened on to the verandah." But he is only the British Ambassador to the Court of Brazil, in which country the scene is laid. The society is of the best Brazilian brand, and lest you should chuckle to think the characters are copied from life, the authoress appends a note to say that they are "purely and entirely from the imagination." (Chapman & Hall. 298 pp. 6s.)

THE SILVER FOX.

BY MARTIN ROSS AND E. CE. SOMERVILLE.

A bright and slangy story that people with nothing else to do will read through at a sitting. It opens at Hurlingham, where a coterie of the smart are foregathered. The silver fox is a sort of fox "that no one had ever seen before"—a beast of bad luck that smiled and showed its teeth, and sometimes turned into a "whitey silvery sort of t'ing." (Laurence & Bullen. 195 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE GREAT K. AND A.

TRAIN ROBBERY.

BY PAUL LEICESTER FORD.

This story has been a success in America, where also Mr. Ford's earlier story, The Honourable Peter Stirling, was well received. "K. and A." is short for Kansas and Arizona railroad, and the "holding up" of Overland No. 3 is the subject of an exciting story. (Sampson Low & Co. 200 pp.)

IVY KILDARE.

BY L. B. WALFORD.

Dear us! How time flies! This is Miss Walford's fourteenth novel. It tells the story of a matrimonial problem, and is written in that light-hearted, colloquial manner in which the wise discuss matrimonial and other problems. Miss Walford is of the school of the great Frenchman who observed, when the clouds were heavy about his head: "I have had my good days. I have had my bad days. These are bad days. They will pass like the rest." (Longmans & Co. 332 pp. 6s.)

REVIEWS.

THE LAST STEVENSON.

St. Ives. By Robert Louis Stevenson.
(William Heinemann.)

There is never another novel, perhaps, of the picaresque order which begins in a manner so taking and so gallant, to decline upon issues so disappointing, as this of St. Ives, the last posthumous work of Robert Louis Stevenson. At the outset, we are confronted, it is true, by the staggering supposition that a Frenchman, nurtured in France, who had never set foot in Britain until he was conveyed thither as a prisoner of war, is able, nevertheless—not only to write his memoir in Stevensonian English, a licence which might pass but—to use both the Scotch and English idiom and accent so perfectly that none whom he met in his travels should suspect his nationality, save upon one insignificant occasion; and this, at a time when his life depended upon the preservation of his disguise. But, setting aside this objection as insuperable, the initial adventures of the romantic Mr. St. Ives are brilliantly invented, and are told in vivid or swift narrative. The captivity in Edinburgh Castle—that "medieval fortress, high placed and commanding extraordinary prospects, not only over sea, mountain, and champaign, but actually over the thoroughfares of a capital city, which we could see blackened by day with the moving crowd of the inhabitants, and at night shining with lamps"—the business with Miss Flora Gilchrist, the duel in the dark with the Maréchal des logis, obscene but staunch, and the night escape—all this is very good. But, from this point onwards the reader grows more and more uneasily conscious of a certain hollowness and a lack of continuity in the narrative, until St. Ives comes to Amersham Place, where his rich uncle lies a-dying, and where a frantic and perfectly egregious cousin makes his highly melodramatic appearance, when the pleasure of credence, of illusion, is possible no longer. By this time, the persons of the history are removed without the confines of the familiar and dear world of romance into a strange and distorted atmosphere; and henceforward, until the writer lets fall his pen, the story wavers and wanders like a troubled dream. The suicide buried at the cross-roads, in Chap. xi., might have been earthed at the Antipodes for all he has to do with the plot of St. Ives. The business of Mr. Buchhell Fenn, the covered cart, and the death of the Colonel, intrude upon the narrative like a separate story; and had none of it taken place, the fortunes of Mr. St. Ives would be never a penny the worse. The introduction of the unaccountable freethinker in Durham city is merely futile, as it stands, and the adventure of the runaway couple is worse than irrelevant—is thinly wrought of tinsel and fustian. And if we turn to the characterisation, we find the valiant and resourceful prisoner no sooner freeing himself, than he becomes the bewildered prey of circumstance, blown hither and thither by every wind of chance. To compare Mr. St. Ives, even at his best, with such a commanding figure as (let us say) D'Artagnan, is surely to play the wanton with the traditions of literature; but, at his worst, St. Ives is no better than a dancing-master gone astray. And Miss Flora Gilchrist, at first a creature so natural, lively, and charming that she lights up the page as we read, presently comes to behave like the finikin miss of vulgar fiction; while, as to her aunt, what single attribute, save her gold quizzing-glass, has the "terrible British old maid" of the Castle in common with the clever, kindly, shrewd old Scotchwoman of Swanston Cottage?

Now, as it is the critic's ungrateful task to indicate blemish and defect amid shining qualities of merit, so it is but common justice in him towards the memory of an artist who was above all things loyal to his art, to suggest a simple and sufficient explanation of the inequality and apparent declension of Stevenson's posthumous work. Stevenson, the romancer, built himself in his life-time a high place in literature—a place peculiar and apart; a delicate palace of crystal where he sleeps enshrined, careless of the menacing leaguer of Time. That he was able to do so, he owed largely to the fortunate conditions under which he worked, ever following his fancy according to her whim and pleasure. For, since he was never compelled to write directly for money, nor stressed for want of time, he could brood and delay and cast aside, resume and revise and revise again, at his leisure; and so, while the conditions demanded by his particular genius remained he was enabled to attain what measure of perfection was possible to him. Remove these special and fortunate conditions—prevent the evolutionary process—and Stevenson's work becomes, not only unconvincing but impossible. Had the opportunity of perfecting his work not been denied to him, it is not to be supposed for a moment that the irrelevant episodes of the suicide, the covered cart, and the rest, would not have been woven into the design, or bodily omitted. Recalling Kidnapped and The Master of Ballantrae (to name but these only), we know that by process of time and travail St. Ives would maintain his reputation, Miss Flora her wit and charm; that we should no longer be distressed by the double image of the duenna, and that the monstrous cousin and the unnatural foot-boy would assume the speech and lineaments of humanity.

But in Weir of Hermiston and the latter part of St. Ives, the brouillon in clay, which should have been laboriously perfected in the privacy of the studio, is dragged into the common sunlight. I think it is a pity; I think it unfair, from an æsthetic point of view, to the dead artist. But there is the work for good or ill; and considering it, we may behold the maker absolved from reproach; and may fall to admiring, if we will, the excellence of the several parts, however superfluous they may prove to the whole. The transfixion of the poor old suicide makes an excellent page of gruesome description; the encounter with Burchill Fenn is a brilliant piece of invention set in a curious, dreamlike, haunting atmosphere. And the meeting with Sir Walter Scott, who rides into the story and out again in the most natural way, is tactfully and very pleasantly done. (One may remark in passing that Sir Walter refers to the "licentiate Lucius" [p. 69]. Who is the licentiate Lucius? Is it possible that Sir Walter meant el licenciado Pedro Garcias?) But, above all, let us remark the artist's reward for a life's austere devotion to the form of his art. For, whatever the matter about which Stevenson, the athlete in letters, is pleased to employ himself, the style of his performance never fails to compel admiration. There is always the style; the clean, vigorous, eloquent English, coloured like a picture, stirring like a piece of music; and whatever Stevenson said, or failed to say, literature is enriched in that he said it as he did.

And this reflection leads naturally to the consideration of the six topsy-turvy chapters with which Mr. Quiller-Couch has had the temerity to conclude St. Ives. Mr. Quiller-Couch is no beginner; he has written several stories; and by this time he should have recognised his proper limitations. Had he discreetly declined a task for which he is totally unfitted, it would have been better both for Stevenson and the British public, and infinitely better for Mr. Quiller-Couch. Beside the Stevensonian diction, Mr. Quiller-Couch's inept and exclamatory collocation of sentences cuts a deplorable spectacle; and to pass from music equable and gay to discords so dismal as these is to prostrate the intelligence. As for the story, it is merely impossible. Moreover, it is open to the gravest doubt (at least) if such expressions as "up to the knocker" (p. 242) and "guying the whole show" (p. 260) were extant in the year of grace 1814.

Indeed, to conclude St. Ives thus formally is wholly unnecessary; the end is foreshadowed from the beginning; and any termination is highly gratuitous. Rather than hearken to another, which of us would not retire into the solitary chamber of his imagination, there to finish the story for himself?

* * * * *

What Maisie Knew. By Henry James.
(Heinemann.)

I have read this book with amazement and delight: with amazement at its supreme delicacy; with delight that its author, in spite of such discouragement as may come from lack of popular acclaim, retains an unswerving allegiance, to a literary conscience that forbids him to leave a slipshod phrase, or a single word out of its appointed place. As admirers of Mr. James foresee—and Mr. James has a devoted band of admirers, who follow every line that he writes—the bare outline of the story is of the simplest. The plot concerns itself with Mr. and Mrs. Beale Farange, who, when the story opens, have just been divorced. Maisie, the small daughter, is to spend six months alternately with either parent, between whom, in point of conduct, there is scarcely a pin to choose. Soon Beale enters into relations with Maisie's governess, and ultimately marries her, while Mrs. Farange unites herself to Sir Claude. The fact of Maisie's existence is the link which connects the quartette, and finally Maisie "brings together"—so, in her simple way, she puts it—her two step-parents, who enter upon an informal connexion. Between the four Maisie is bandied about; her parents use her each to spite the other; her stepmother uses her "to save appearances"; and Sir Claude, in his vacillating way, really loves the child. But to state the plot of one of Mr. James's books is to state next to nothing. He deals not in events, but in events as they mirror themselves in the thoughts, the fleeting impulses, of his characters. By a rare psychological intuition, he lays bare the under side of his story. And in this book the whole sordid drama of petty jealousy, rancour, wantonness, and vacillation plays itself out for the amusement of Maisie. You follow the story through the mind of Maisie; you see and hear only what Maisie saw and heard; and yet, such is the combined humour and pathos of the presentment, you know so much more than Maisie could possibly know, though Maisie had her childish moral arithmetic, whereby she could put two and two together:

"It was in the nature of things to be none of a small child's business, even when a small child had from the first been deluded into a fear that she might be only too much initiated. Things there were in Maisie's experience so true to their nature that questions were almost improper; but she learned, on the other hand, soon to recognise that patient little silences and intelligent little looks could be rewarded from time to time by delightful little glimpses."

And so Maisie knew quite a number of things; she knew what it meant to "bolt," that people must not be "compromised," that affairs are in their nature "involved," and that things should be "regular"; and she had her own theories to account for the facts of her experience. Here is a short scene between Sir Claude and Maisie in a Boulogne café, a scene which has all the delicate charm of which Mr. James is master. Sir Claude has asked Maisie if she will throw over Mrs. Wix, her governess, one of the best characters in the book, and stay on with him and the lady who had forfeited her right to be Mrs. Beale. "May I think?" says Maisie.

"There was but one thing Maisie wished to do, and after an instant she expressed it: 'Have we got to go back to the hotel?'"

'Do you want to?'

'Oh, no.'

'There's not the least necessity for it.' He bent his eyes on his watch; his face was now very grave. 'We can do anything else in the world.' He looked at her again almost as if he were on the point of saying that they might, for instance, start off for Paris. But even while she wondered if that were not coming he had a sudden drop. 'We can take a walk.' She was all ready, but he sat there as if he had still something more to say. This, too, however, didn't come; so she herself spoke:

'I think I should like to see Mrs. Wix first.'

'Before you decide? All right—all right.' He had put on his hat, but he had still to light a cigarette. He smoked a minute with his head thrown back, looking at the ceiling; then he said: 'There's one thing to remember—I've a right to impress it on you: we stand absolutely in the place of your parents. It's their defection, their extraordinary baseness, that has made our responsibility. Never was a young person more directly committed and confided.' He appeared to say this over at the ceiling, through his smoke, a little for his own illumination. It carried him, after a pause, somewhat further. 'Though, I admit, it was to each of us separately.'

He gave her so, at that moment and in that attitude, the sense of wanting, as it were, to be on her side—on the side of what would be in every way most right and wise and charming for her—that she felt a sudden desire to show herself as not less delicate and magnanimous, not less solicitous for his own interests. What were these but that of the 'regularity' he had just before spoken of? 'It was to each of you separately,' she accordingly with much earnestness remarked. 'But, don't you remember, I brought you together?'

He jumped up with a delighted laugh. 'Remember? Rather! You brought us together; you brought us together. Come!'"

There are many living writers who can write dialogue that is amusing, convincing, real. But there is none who can reach Mr. James's astonishing skill in tracing dialogue from the first vague impulse in the mind to the definite spoken word. Certainly there is no living writer who has achieved the feat which Mr. James has here achieved, in analysing and purifying the baser passions of our nature by passing them through the pure mind of a little child.

* * * * *

The Twilight Reef. By Herbert C. MacIlwaine.
(T. Fisher Unwin.)

This book consists of three stories of Australian life: "The Twilight Reef," a story of gold hunting, not inappropriate at this time; "The Poet of Dead Horse Flat," a satire on fashions in literature, recalling faintly The Birthplace of Podgers; and "The Decivilisation of Mr. Smyth," the spirited and entertaining account of a muscular Christian and his adventures. From a purely literary point of view the first story is, perhaps, the best, but the third is certainly the most interesting and agreeable. Fascination always attaches to the quiet scholarly man who on occasion can thrash a bully, and a good fight is ever to be desired. The fight between the Rev. Cyril Wells-Smyth and Ted Cullen, bullock puncher, is an excellent piece of work. It begins well, proceeds well, and ends well. It begins thus. Mr. Smyth had unconsciously scared and enraged a drove of bullocks with his umbrella. Cullen, after quieting them with blows and threats, turned to the parson:

"What brings the likes of you out here among men, frightenin' cattle with your blasted town glummary—hay?"

The parson was slight and trim. The sickening hollow blows on the bullocks' heads, and the language, had left him boiling. He looked up sternly from under his enormous pith helmet at the bullock puncher. 'It was quite unintentional, as you are very well aware; and your language is abominable,' he said.

Cullen lowered himself to a level with the parson, and with a hand on each knee minced ferociously 'Ow—aw! Look at that now. Quite unintentionable; he grinned and nodded furiously round the gathering audience. 'And you'd frighten hell out of a man's bullocks, would you? And you're that gordinously politeful that you're shocked when he rips an' cusses. Fancy that! You're a pretty little parlour tabby cat what's lost its hearthrug, that's what you are—and here's a collar for you.'

During the delivery of his peroration Cullen plucked away the offending umbrella, tore out the handle and the frame, and with his last words he drew the burst cover down over the head of the unresisting parson, and replaced the pith helmet at a raking angle."

The fight followed. The rest of the story is well told, though perhaps a little over violent. Mr. MacIlwaine has the true narrative gift.

CHATTO &amp; WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

SARAH TYTLER'S NEW NOVEL.

THE WITCH-WIFE. By Sarah Tytler, Author of "The Macdonald Lass," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ERNEST GLANVILLE'S NEW NOVEL.

TALES from the VELD. By Ernest Glanville, Author of "The Golden Rock," &c. With 13 Illustrations by M. Nisbet. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Oct. 21.]POPULAR ASTRONOMY. By J. Rambosson. Translated by C. B. PITMAN. With 10 Coloured Plates and 63 Woodcuts. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. [Oct. 21.]THE FRENCH REVOLUTION (Constituent Assembly, 1789-91). By JUSTIN HUNTLY MCCARTHY. Vols. III. and IV. (completing the work). Demy 8vo, cloth extra, 12s. each.WESTMINSTER. By Sir Walter Besant. (Uniform with the Cheap Edition of "LONDON.") With Etched Frontispiece and 120 Illustrations by W. Patten. Cheaper Edition. Demy 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d. "The volume is a delightful one, and having read it one walks through Westminster with new eyes." Speaker.THE LIFE OF J. M. W. TURNER, R.A. By Walter THORNBURY. With 8 Illustrations in Colours and 2 Woodcuts. Cheaper Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Soon after the publication of the first edition of my 'Life of Turner,' I received a kind letter from Mr. Ruskin, which contained the following passage:—'I have just received and am reading your book with deep interest. I am much gratified by the view you have taken and give of Turner. It is quite what I hoped. What beautiful things you have discovered about him!'—EXTRACT FROM PREFACE."

A HISTORY OF OUR OWN TIMES from 1880 to 1897.

By JUSTIN MCCARTHY, M.P. Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. (Uniform with the LIBRARY EDITION of the First Four Volumes.)

"This up-to-date appendix to a brilliant and deservedly popular work is wholly admirable, and lacks none of the high qualities which have been so universally applauded in the preceding volumes. The volume is worthy of its predecessors, and forms an invaluable contribution to later Victorian history." World.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. each.

DEAN SWIFT'S CHOICE WORKS in PROSE and VERSE.

With Memoir, Portrait, and Facsimiles. [Oct. 21.]

THOMAS HOOD'S CHOICE WORKS in PROSE and VERSE. With Life, Portrait, and 200 Illustrations.CHARLES LAMB'S COMPLETE WORKS, including "Poetry for Children" and "Prince Dorus." With 2 Portraits and a Facsimile.RICHARD BRINSLEY SHERIDAN'S COMPLETE WORKS With Life, Anecdotes, and 10 Full-Page Illustrations.ARTEMUS WARD'S COMPLETE WORKS. With Portrait and Facsimile.MY CONTEMPORARIES in FICTION. By David ChristieMURRAY, Author of "Joseph's Coat." Crown 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d. "The little volume is from first page to last full of keen, sound, informing criticism, the literary style of its setting forth being of itself a delight."—Punch.SHAKESPEARE the BOY. With Sketches of Home and School Life, Games and Sports, Manners and Customs. By Dr. W. J. ROLFE. With 42 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "The whole book is well worth reading."—Full Mail Gazette.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

PETER'S WIFE. By Mrs. Hungerford. [Oct. 21.]"If one is tired, and wants a book which is a thorough rest, but which will be quite sure not to send one to sleep, there is nothing pleasanter to read than a good novel by Mrs. Hungerford."—Queen.THREE PARTNERS; or, the Big Strike on Heavy Tree Hill. By BRET HARTE. With 8 Illustrations by J. Gulich."It is admirably told and has a skilfully developed conclusion."—Sooterman.JETSAM. By Owen Hall."Those who have agreeable recollections of Mr. Owen Hall's novel, entitled 'The Track of a Storm,' will not be disappointed with his latest story. The technique of 'Jetsam' is excellent, and the subject is one which readily attracts the reader."—Athenaeum.THE TRACK of a STORM. By Owen Hall."The book is one which will willingly be laid down between its first and last chapters, for its events are worth the telling, and the telling is well done."—St. James's Gazette.INTERFERENCE. By B. M. Croker, Author of "Diana Barrington." "A delightful story, fresh and unflagging."—Standard.THE CITY of REFUGE. By Sir Walter Besant. With a Frontispiece by F. S. Wilson."We should be surprised if this new romance from Sir Walter Besant's pen does not prove one of his most popular."—Daily News.THE QUEEN'S CUP. By G. A. Henty."May be idiomatically described as 'taking the cake' in respect to the variety and sensational character of the adventures recorded in its pages."—Daily Telegraph.DR. RUMSEY'S PATIENT. By L. T. Meade and Clifford Halifax, M.D."A clever author and a clever specialist between them have constructed a little romance that will gladden the heart of a jaded novel-reader in search of something new."—St. James's Gazette.A RACING RUBBER. By Hawley Smart."He is undoubtedly unequalled as a recorder of sporting life, manners, and matters." Saturday Review.THE ORUCIFORM MARK. By Riccardo Stephens, M.B."There is abundant ability in this book; and it may be read by either of two classes of readers—the reader who wants plot and sensation, and the reader who wants description and analysis." Westminster Gazette.A WOMAN INTERVENES. By Robert Barr. With 8 Illustrations by Hal Hurst."The book is so exciting, so full of movement and change and suspense, that it must be read twice—the second time for the many wise and witty things Mr. Barr has to say about life and people."—Unity Fair.

STEVENSON'S LAST NOVEL.

WEIR of HERMISTON. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s."Great with a greatness alike of conception, of arrangement, and of language. From the wealth of rich achievement and richer promise that is in this posthumous volume, it is impossible to draw any other conclusion than that the finished 'Weir of Hermiston' would have been the supreme outcome of its author's genius, a book to be numbered among the few precious books of the century."—Daily Mail.

LONDON: CHATTO &amp; WINDUS, 111, ST. MARTIN'S LANE, W.C.

MACMILLAN & CO'S
NEW BOOKS.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON:

A Memoir.

By his SON.

With Photogravure Portraits of LORD TENNYSON, LADY TENNYSON, &amp;c. Facsimiles of portions of Poems, and illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscombs Gardner, &amp;c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

'CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS'

A Story of the Grand Banks.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Illustrated by I. W. Taber. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF MISS KINGSLEY'S

TRAVELS IN WEST AFRICA.

CONGO FRANCAIS, COCISOO, and CAMEROONS.

By MARY H. KINGSLEY.

Second Edition. Abridged. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

2 vols., extra crown 8vo, 17s. net.

PHILOSOPHICAL LECTURES and REMAINS of

RICHARD LEWIS NETTLESHIP, Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford. Edited, with a Biographical Sketch, by Professor A. C. BRADLEY and G. R. BENSON. With Portraits.

Extra crown 8vo, 8s. 6d. net.

A HANDBOOK of EUROPEAN HISTORY, 476-1871.

Chronologically Arranged. By ARTHUR HASSALL, M.A., Student, Tutor, and formerly Censor of Christ Church, Oxford.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES. New Volumes.

Edited by Professor BURY, Trinity College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

PHILIP II., of SPAIN. By Martin A. S. HumeWILLIAM the SILENT. By Frederic Harrison. [October 19.]

JOURNALS of DOROTHY WORDSWORTH Edited by

WILLIAM KNIGHT. With Etched Portraits and Vignettes. 2 vols., globe 8vo, 10s. [EVERSLEY SERIES.]

SECOND SERIES NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY (Second Series), selected from

the best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language, and arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 2s. 6d. net; First and Second Series, gilt backs, in box, 5s. net.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW VOLUME.

MISS MOUSE and HER BOYS. By Mrs. Molesworth

With Illustrations by Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6d.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

IN a PLAIN PATH. Addresses to Boys. By the Rev.

W. J. FOXELL, M.A., B.Mus. (Lond.), Minor Canon of Canterbury Cathedral.

Crown 8vo, 16s.

THE RUINS and EXCAVATIONS of ANCIENT ROME.

A Companion Book for Students and Travellers. By RODOLFO LANCIANI, D.C.L. (Oxford), LL.D., Professor of Ancient Topography in the University of Rome. With numerous Illustrations and Maps.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A HISTORY of ROME for BEGINNERS from the Foundation of the City to the Death of Augustus. By EVELYN S. SHUCKBURGH, M.A., late Fellow of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. With Illustrations and Maps.

MACMILLAN &amp; CO., LTD., ST. MARTIN'S STREET, LONDON, W.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1897.

No. 1328, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 15 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Office: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THIS book season more than ever are we confronted by the English book printed in America. The cunning way in which the American Copyright Law compasses the destruction of English printers is worth more attention from our own law-makers than it has ever got. To be copyrighted in America a book must be printed there. No plates or sheets sent from England will be protected from the pirate. Such is the rule; and the working out of it is that English publishers, instead of producing an English and an American edition of a book, find it cheaper to print one in America only, and to import it, though they pay the American printer far better than they pay his English brother.

With the social results of this alienation of English trade we need not deal; but we may at least protest, in the name of book-lovers, against the very undistinguished appearance of many of the books that come to us from the printing presses of the United States. Take the case of Mr. Aubrey de Vere's Reminiscences, for instance, issued this week. The reader does not need to look for the American imprint—it is proclaimed to him by the flat and monotonous appearance of the printed page. And the disadvantage is the author's as well as the reader's; for the book is somehow made to look a dull one, and merely to handle it is to harbour an iniquitous prejudice against what it contains.

TALKING of English and Scottish printers (some of whom, on the contrary, make a dull book look brilliant at first sight by their clear and almost radiant type-work), a word needs to be said as to the increase of trivial errors in the text. Messrs. Constable, for instance, whose compositors are the glory of their craft, appear to be in need of a strengthening of their readers' department. A few months ago attention was called to the defacement of the édition de luxe of a great novelist sent out by their firm with a number of trifling inaccuracies; and now it teases us in Stevenson's St. Ives to come on similar imperfections. The mere omission of quotation-marks at the end of a quotation, as at the foot of page 14, is annoying; and there was room, especially in the case of a book deprived of the author's own care of revising, for that friendly mark of interrogation opposite obvious slips of grammar which makes every author, as Browning frequently proclaimed, the debtor of the printer's-reader.

"WHAT a prolific fellow he is!" was an exclamation Tennyson once made on hearing Browning's name. There is in the Tennyson Memoir a note from Tennyson to Browning, showing that this idea was really almost the predominant one in the Laureate's attitude towards his great contemporary. When Red Cotton Nightcap Country came to him, he wrote:

"My dear R. B.,—My wife has just cut the leaves. I have yet again to thank you, and feel rather ashamed that I have nothing of my own to send you back, but your muse is prolific as Hecuba, and mine, by the side of her, an old barren cow.—Yours ever, "A. T."

Elsewhere the length of a poem of Browning's has a mark of exclamation, and the fear that he cannot be "popular" is uttered as a genuine apprehension by one to whom popularity meant so much.

BROWNING, when he wrote his lines about Fitzgerald, wrote as a husband; but he had a score to settle with Fitz on his own account. Throughout the Tennyson memoir Fitz is seen as a lover of Tennyson's poetry who loathed Browning's. Not all the dashes in the world can obscure the identity, for instance, of the man who is under remark in the following characteristic paragraph of a letter from Fitz to the Laureate: "I see — has another of his uncouth works out. I call him the Great Prophet of the Gargoyle School. In France they have a man equally disagreeable to me, Victor Hugo. I think it partly is because of the beautiful things that have been done from the time of the Greeks to A. T., and so those who can't do them better prove their originality by descanting on the ugly; and they have their day." They have.

CONTROVERSIES about the true inwardness of the "Rubāiyāt" of Omar Khayyām have been as many, and perhaps as futile, as those about the "Canticles" by King Solomon. Behind the praise of women and of wine, in each case, a mystical allegory is supposed to lurk. On that assumption only was the Song of Solomon included—and rather hesitatingly included—within the canonical books of the Bible; and a suspicion has lingered in many minds that the turn given by Fitzgerald, who does not rank high among Persian scholars, and who took amazing liberties also with the Latin author he translated, is not really that intended by the Persian poet of centuries ago. Now that two new translations are in the press the plain English reader may be put nearer Omar's mind. Mr. Le Gallienne, if we may gather from the specimen verses already published, follows Fitzgerald in both the metre and the rendering. By Mr. Edward Heron-Allen, a Persian and Arabic scholar, we have promise of "a literal translation." Mysticism, however, is not easily caught in the toils of even "literal translations"; and it must be plain that Fitzgerald's noble numbers, far more than the Persian's philosophy of life, made the poem beloved by modern men, and put it into a circulation as popular as the rather high price of its editions permits it to be.

A SMALL snug affair, refreshing rather than refulgent, was the dinner given on Tuesday night by the Vice-Chancellor at Oxford to Dr. Murray, Mr. Henry Bradley, and others who are helping to produce the Historical English Dictionary. Dr. Murray gave a résumé of the undertaking, which dates from 1875. He is now in the middle of it, and hopes that 1910 will see this great work finished; or, with luck, 1908.

WE regret that by pure inadvertence we did not acknowledge the source of the figures we gave last week in our "Book Market" columns, showing the proportion between American and English books now being issued in America. These figures had been carefully and specially compiled for The Author, and to this paper our acknowledgments are now given.

AMONG the Clarendon Press books almost ready for publication may be mentioned Hindu Manners, Customs, and Ceremonies, by the Abbé Dubois, translated from the author's later French MS. by Mr. H. K. Beauchamp; a new volume of "Sacred Books of the East"; and a critical volume on The Odes of Keats, with a Memoir, by Mr. A. C. Downer.

"G. R." writes: "Mr. Edward Maitland, whose death, at the age of seventy-three, has recently been announced, is known to the present generation chiefly as the friend and biographer of Anna Kingsford, M.D.; though half a century ago he was hailed as a writer of great promise, and his fame as the author of The Pilgrim and the Shrine was considerable. Born at Ipswich, and brought up in the strictest of evangelical sects (his father and one of his brothers were clergymen), he graduated at Cambridge with the intention of taking orders, but fortunately discovered in time that his theology was too pronounced in the direction of extreme Liberalism. Abandoning the idea, he wrote the autobiographical novel above mentioned, which Tinsley published, and took himself off to California. He became one of the band of 'forty-niners,' and remained abroad in the continents and isles of the Pacific, from America passing to Australia, until the intended year of his absence had grown into nearly ten years, and he had experienced 'well-nigh every vicissitude and extreme which might serve to heighten the consciousness, toughen the fibre, and try the soul of man.' Returning to England in 1857, he devoted himself to literature, into which, however, nothing of the trade element was permitted to intrude. Everything he wrote must minister to and represent a step in his own 'unfoldment.' Of all his literary contemporaries, perhaps Maitland was most intimate with and best appreciated by Lord Houghton and Sir Francis Hastings Doyle. He reviewed, and very well too, in the Athenæum from 1869 to 1873 or thereabouts. His book By-and-Bye, an historical romance of the future, issued in 1873, was the means of his meeting Mrs. Kingsford, who found herself so much in sympathy that she wrote proposing an interchange of ideas; and so began an association for the sake of a high and earnest work, an association which lasted, according to Maitland's belief, beyond the span of ordinary existence. . . . Since the death of his colleague in 1888, he lived only to accomplish the work of writing her Life, a truly prodigious undertaking. That work finished, he collapsed mentally and physically. His friend, Colonel Currie, then removed him from the studios in Thurloe-square, where he had lived alone (his only child being an army surgeon on foreign service), and for many months nursed him with tenderest care until the end, which came on Saturday, October 2, at Tonbridge, Kent, where his remains have been interred. Possessed of the physique of a giant, of great intellectual powers, of an excellent style and indefatigable industry, it is strange how little he has left of permanent value to English literature. His career may be compared, in many respects, with that of Laurence Oliphant. Immersed in what has been called the spiritual movement, he was eclectic to a fault, and abandoned 'theosophy' while claiming to be a reincarnation of the soul that was in John the Baptist; similarly, he dissociated himself from spiritualism so-called, though it is in evidence that he, by means of private mediums, evoked the shade of Mrs. Kingsford whenever, after her demise, he needed instructions about carrying on the work of social reform and hermetic philosophy to which they had jointly devoted their lives."

LOVERS of Scott and Stevenson—that is to say, a vast number of people—would have been grieved had the "Hawes Inn," at Queensferry, been destroyed in the fire that attacked it on Tuesday night. This fine old inn figures in Scott's Antiquary and in Stevenson's Kidnapped; in the one case receiving Monkbarons and in the other David Balfour under its roof. The fire broke out in one of the cellars, fortunately beneath a recently added portion of the building. Blue-jackets from H.M.S. Caledonia and ready volunteers from the neighbourhood were forthcoming, and the damage, though considerable, was confined to the non-historical portions of the inn.

A WRITER in the American Bookman de scribes an interview he had with Dr. George Macdonald at Bordighera last winter. He found Dr. Macdonald very vigorous. "Most fine days see him on his tricycle on Bordighera roads. He talked of the new Scottish novelists. He considered Mr. Barrie to be the foremost of them all, and had been especially charmed with The Little Minister and Margaret Ogilvy. He also recognised 'Ian Maclaren's' 'humour and pathos,' and Mr. Crockett's 'verve and vigour.' Of himself Dr. Macdonald said: 'I shall be seventy-two before the year ends, and that's far on; it's about time to be going Home.'"

AN amusing tale comes from Lyons. A group of literary men in that city are about to try to elevate French literature by decidedly novel means. These gentlemen think that the mediocrity of contemporary literature arises from the happy-go-lucky way in which writers go to work, each choosing his own genre; the result being an infinite number of petty successes, but no progress. The idea is to offer encouragement to writers to achieve great things in particular directions. Committees will be formed, each committee devoting itself to the task of raising up a brilliant writer of a certain stamp.

For example. These Men of Lyons are of opinion that an Edgar Allan Poe is a "felt want" in French literature of to-day—and yet at this moment an Edgar Allan Poe may be eating his heart out, unrecognised, in the corner of a brasserie. Well, he must be found, patted on the back, aided, and published. This will be the task of the "Comité Edgar Allan Poe." The committee is not rich; the Poe discovery fund does but amount to about £12; but the committee is quite hopeful, and promises by the end of next year to bring the Poe of the future into the light of day.

THE Atlantic Monthly is proud of forty years' existence, completed this month. The editor recalls the circumstances under which the magazine was started. It was on April 29, 1857, that Longfellow wrote in his journal: "Lowell was here last evening to interest me in a new magazine, to be started in Boston by Phillips and Sampson. I told him I would write for it if I wrote for any magazine." A week later he made the following entry: "Dined in town at Parker's, with Emerson, Whittier, Motley, Holmes, Cabot, Underwood, and the publisher Phillips, to talk about the new magazine the last wishes to establish. It will no doubt be done; though I am not so eager about it as the rest."

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER was another member of the original staff, and in Pickard's biography of the poet we read: "At a dinner given by Mr. Phillips, the publisher, in the summer of 1857, there were present Longfellow, Emerson, Whittier, Lowell, Holmes, Motley, Edmund Quincy, and other writers of high reputation. The plans of the new magazine were discussed and arranged at this dinner. Mr. Underwood nominated Lowell as editor-in-chief, and his name was received with enthusiasm. Holmes suggested the name The Atlantic Monthly. The success of the enterprise was assured from the start, and a new era in American literature was inaugurated." Of the fourteen writers of articles in the body of the first number of the Atlantic Monthly, only three, the editor tells us, are living.

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

III.—THE "NIBELUNGEN LIED."

SAVE by a heaven-born poet, who should perform on the Teuton epic the miracle which Edward Fitzgerald performed on Omar Khayyám, the "Nibelungen Lied" could only be represented for Englishmen in prose—such Biblical prose as that into which Mr. Andrew Lang and his adjutor rendered Homer. The thing has been done for us at last. Mr. Dent is the publisher, and a woman, Miss Margaret Armour, is the translator. The book is admirably got up, with illustrations after the manner of old wood-engraving, by Mr. McDougall. Truth to say, these illustrations are weak as figure-drawing, though charming as decoration. But "the play, the play's the thing;" and I congratulate Miss Armour on her achievement. She has, say cognoscenti in German, taken serious and indefensible liberties of omission and commission with the difficult and sometimes diffuse text of the original. Moreover, she is apt to be too stiffly and crowdedly archaic—overdoing her admirable model, Mr. Lang. Yet, get only a little used to this, and her version will grow on you as a thing of spirit and picturesqueness. It is hardly gear for woman to meddle with, this hirsute old German epic; yet this woman has made of it better work than most men could do—an English narrative which holds you and strikes sparks along your blood. I, like thousands more, cannot read the crabbed Mediæval German; but in this translation I have exulted over genius, authentic genius, brought home to me in my mother tongue.

There is no space here to analyse the tale: an epic Homeric in primitive directness of narrative, but brooded over by the fierce spirit of the murky North. Homeric are the repetitions of set epithet; Homeric the simple pathos; more than Homeric the joy of battle; Homeric the overlaying of an earlier story with the manners of a later budding civilisation. But there is no Homeric imagery; the narrative is utterly direct, and, when the poet strikes an image, he iterates it with naïf pride in his discovery. "A fire-red wind blew from the swords"; "They struck hot-flowing streams from the helmets"—this image is made to do duty with child-like perseverance in many forms. With simple delight he dwells on details of attire, rich, yet primitive, costlily barbaric. The men's robes are of silk, gold-inwrought, and lined with—what think you?—fish-skins! Sable and ermine and silk adorn the damsels, bracelets are over their sleeves: but no pale aristocracy this of Burgundy. "Certes, they had been grieved if their red cheeks had not outshone their vesture." Very quiet and plain are the poet's grieving pictures, a lesson to the modern novelist, with his luxury of woe. They make no figure as elegant extracts; but in its place every simple line tells. Kriemhild is borne from her slaughtered lover's coffin in a swoon, "as her fair body would have perished for sorrow." No more; and one asks no more. But it is in battle that this truly great Unknown finds himself, and sayeth "Ha! ha!" among the trumpets. Unique in all literature is the culmination of this epic of Death. Kriemhild, the loving woman turned to an Erinny by implacable wrong, has invited all her kindred of Burgundy to the court of her second husband, Etzel the Hun. With them comes dark Hagen, the murderer of her first husband, Siegfried the hero unforgotten. On him she has vowed revenge; and her trap draws round the doomed Burgundians. The squires of Gunther, the Burgundian King, she has lodged apart: with them abides Dankwart, the brother of Hagen. In the hall of Etzel's castle Gunther and his nobles sit in armour, feasting with the Hunnish King and Queen: the little son of Etzel and Kriemhild, Ortlieb, is summoned in, and wanders round among the stranger guests. Fatal sits Kriemhild, watching her netted prey, expecting the signal which shall turn the feast to death. It comes; in other manner, and to other issue than she dreams. Arms clang on the stairs: the door flies wide, a mailed and bloody figure clanks in terrible. It is Dankwart. The Huns have set upon King Gunther's squires and slain them to a man; he has fought his way through the hostile bands, alone. At those tidings, grim Hagen springs erect, and mocks with fierce irony:

"I marvel much what the Hunnish knights whisper in each other's ears. I ween they could well spare him that standeth at the door, and hath brought this court-news to the Burgundians. I have long heard Kriemhild say that she could not bear her heart's dole. Now drink we to Love, and taste the King's wine. The young prince of the Huns shall be the first."

To the overture of that dusky mockery the Burgundians rise. "With that, Hagen slew the child Ortlieb, that the blood gushed down on his hand from his sword, and the head flew up into the queen's lap." Up the hall and down the hall pace the terrible strangers, slaying as they go: Etzel and Kriemhild sit motionless, gazing on the horror. At last they fly: the doors are barred, and the Burgundians pass exterminating over all within. It is but the beginning. All the country round flocks to Etzel's summons. Troop after troop of Huns win into the dreadful hall; but from the dreadful hall no Hun comes back. "There was silence. Over all, the blood of the dead men trickled through the crannies into the gutters below." In the midst of a magnificently imagined crescendo of horror and heroism, death closes in adamant on the destined Burgundian band. I am almost tempted to say that it is the grandest situation in all epic. And of the dramatic force with which it is related there can be no question.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

II.—A WAITRESS.

SHE had cleared away the lunch, and the rattle of crockery had departed down the long passage of the country inn, and subsided into the kitchen at the end. The day was rainy; I was dull; and strolling out with my pipe into the passage I found her on the seat by the cupboard, where they kept the candles by which we lighted ourselves to bed. She was reading; or rather, she was turning the leaves of a book. I saw at a glance it was The Spoils of Poynton, which I had lent her. For she had waited upon me carefully and well, and had remarked that her hobby was reading.

"You don't like it, I'm afraid," I said.

She glanced up, and put the book down on the table by her side, when it rested upon another book which I had lent her—a work by Mrs. L. T. Meade.

"I can't make it out," she said; "it's all about furniture."

"That's true," I said. "But human emotions may have inanimate objects for their centre, mayn't they?"

I don't think she quite understood; for her eyes wandered to the book underneath The Spoils of Poynton, and she began fingering it.

"That's a lovely book," she said. "I'd like to read that over again, if you can spare it."

I picked it up—The Way of a Woman.

"Oh, yes, I can spare it," I said. "But, tell me, do you read much?"

"Well, there isn't much time in the summer and autumn, but when we're slack in the winter, I read—oh, lots! There's plenty of books in the lib'ry, and I'm over there—well, you might call it every day. They've got East Lynne. I've read East Lynne three times—no, four times. And there's one part where I always cry. Isn't it silly?"

"And what about Marie Corelli?" I asked. "Have they got her in the library?"

"I don't think I've seen it," she said.

"But The Sorrows of Satan?" I began.

"Oh, that's a lovely book," she said.

"I've read that. Don't you think it's nice?"

"Yes, awfully nice," I said. "And Edna Lyall?"

She looked doubtful.

"We Two, you know?"

"Yes, We Two. I love that."

"Well, that's Edna Lyall."

"I thought you said We Two," she said.

"But Edna Lyall wrote it."

"Oh," she said, drawing out the latest work of Mrs. L. T. Meade, and opening it tenderly at chapter one.

"Tell me," I said, "what sort of a novel you really like? because that's the sort of novel I want to write."

"Oh, all sorts; I don't know," she replied.

"There must be a heroine?"

She nodded decidedly.

"And a hero?"

She nodded again, and I thought I caught the ghost of a blush.

"And they must be parted, and then meet again, and marry; or perhaps one of them should die, and the other never marry anyone else for ever?"

"That would be a nice story," she said.

"Well, but The Spoils of Poynton?" I began.

"Oh, that's all about a silly old house, and furniture," she said.

"But don't you like sketches like—well, Tales of Mean Streets—those realistic stories of low life in the East-end of London?"

"Oh, I don't care to read about low people."

"You like tales about people in your own rank of life, or even higher?"

She thought a moment, and, with her hand upon Mrs. Meade's work,

"Yes, I think that's it," she said.

She looks upon a story, I suppose, not from the outside, as a work of art, a presentment of another life than her own, but rather as a suggestion of what her own life might be with a little more money and the requisite hero. I did not put it to her in this way, for fear she should not understand me. But I think that is what it comes to.

THE BOOK MARKET.

A MILLION COPIES A MONTH.

A PARAGRAPH or two went round the Press some months ago drawing attention to the large circulations enjoyed by certain unheard of magazines in America. The capital instance was a magazine called Comfort. In giving a list of these successful periodicals the Chap-Book said: "We have never seen a copy of Comfort, nor heard its name upon the lips of any human being." Since then a representative of the Chap-Book has interviewed the editor of Comfort. This gentleman admits that the success of the magazine is due to the fact that it appeals to the half-educated. Comfort was founded, and is still owned, by Mr. W. H. Gannett, who started without experience and with very small capital. In nine years he has raised the circulation to more than a million copies a month.

This achievement must excite the curiosity of editors the world over; and we quote the following particulars. Said Mr. Gannett to his interviewer:

"I saw that there were plenty of publications for thoroughly educated people. The Atlantic Monthly, Century, Harper's, and Scribner's, to say nothing of dozens of less pretentious ones, were filling this field well. But there was not one made for and adapted to the tastes and requirements of the 'mighty middle classes.' My aim was, and has always been, to make a publication for this immense constituency. I thought that my constituency would compare with that of the Atlantic Monthly about as the number of university graduates compares to the great mass of American readers, and the circulation of such a periodical as I had in mind ought to be correspondingly great."

The report continues:

"From the first number to the present time he has worked on these lines, and soon the paper, never seen in a great city, became a household word in the country home, the factory, the village store, and the mining camps of the West."

Circulation was pushed in every conceivable way except the ways that other publishers were following. Never having been a publisher, he did not know how to get into the beaten tracks if he had wanted to do so. When the circulation had reached a hundred thousand, it was so scattering that almost every county in the United States was represented. The genius of the business man rather than the experience of the publisher kept the circulation on the increase.

"One new scheme followed another, always with the idea of pleasing the new subscriber, and thereby making him a medium of getting another. All the time the paper was made to suit the people who lived outside of the great cities. Their tastes were studied and their wants gratified in the contents as far as possible.

As to the contents of this successful magazine, we read:

"The idea of adaptability and fitness predominates. A story, a sketch, or an editorial paragraph is considered in connexion with its adaptability to the requirements of 'our people.' A glance at the editorial page will best illustrate this point. The July issue discusses 'The Four Hundredth Anniversary of the Discovery of the Continent by John Cabot,' 'Ability to Become Interested in Many Things as a Source of Pleasure,' 'Summer as a Playtime,' 'Preserving the Beauty of our Highways,' 'Marring the Beauty of Nature by Advertisements on Rocks,' and 'The Deaths and Principles of Adams and Jefferson.' The August issue discusses 'August as the Former Month of College Commencements,' 'August Vacations,' 'Publication of the New Translation of Omer,' 'Making the New Tariff,' 'Names of Books,' 'Books about Spain and Russia,' and 'Probable Use of Electricity in the Kitchen.' Each one of these articles is written with the idea of being pleasing and entertaining to any one who can read and understand the English language. And while this is true, no one can be found too learned to enjoy every paragraph. There is not a French or Latin quotation, and no mystifying references. Then through it all runs a pronounced vein of patriotic Americanism."

These facts derive a certain special interest from the circumstance that a new popular journalistic enterprise is on foot in this country. Stories is to be the title of a new weekly paper, similar in outward appearance to Answers, which is about to be launched with, it is said, a capital of three-quarters of a million pounds behind it. According to the British Weekly, it will emanate from a syndicate which will publish a long series of weekly papers and monthly magazines. In explanation of this venture the British Weekly says: "It is an open secret that a short time ago Mr. Hooley offered a million and a half for Sir George Newnes' business, but meeting with a refusal, he has decided to start a number of publications similar to those which have been so successful in the hands of Sir George Newnes and others."

THE BOOKS THAT ARE SELLING.

We publish lists of the books that are most in demand in London and various large towns. The Memoir of Lord Tennyson is named in every list except those of Brighton and Reading. (Our Reading correspondent sadly reports: "Very little solid reading done in this town.") It is significant that Lord Roberts's Forty-one Years in India still figures in these reports; nor is the sale of Nansen's book so dead as some may think. The novels in demand are those we should expect. Of light books, not fiction, Mrs. C. W. Earle's Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden is in high favour. In Criticism there is a good demand for Prof. Dowden's History of French Literature.

A Strand correspondent writes: "A great improvement in trade during the last fortnight, principally owing to the colleges and schools. Lord Tennyson's Life is selling beyond our expectations. Du Maurier's Martian, although having a steady sale, cannot be compared with the demand for Trilby."

Dublin says: "A great demand for the Memoir of Lord Tennyson; it will be the book of the season."

Newcastle-on-Tyne: "Business up to average, in spite of Engineers' Lock-Out, which has caused slackness in trade generally in Newcastle."

LONDON (STRAND).

FICTION.

The Christian. By Hall Caine.
St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
The Invisible Man. By H. G. Wells.
Life of Lambeth. By W. S. Maugham.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
History of the Horn Book. By Andrew Tuer.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.
History of Our Own Times. Vol. V. By Justin McCarthy.

Life of Sir Walter Raleigh. By M. A. S. Hume.

POETRY, ESSAYS, AND CRITICISM.

Selected Poems. By George Meredith.
Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden. By Mrs. C. W. Earle.
The New Fiction, and Other Essays. By H. D. Traill.
Studies in Two Literatures. By Arthur Symonds.
Lilliput Lectures, and Easy Lessons and Essays on Conduct. By W. B. Randa.
New Essays Toward a Critical Method. By J. M. Robertson.

TRAVEL.

Fire and Sword in the Soudan. By Slatin Pasha.
The Massacre in Benin. By Capt. Bolaragon.

THEOLOGY.

Bennett's Primer of the Bible.
The Gospel in the Epistles. By Guinness Rogers.
St. Paul. By Prof. W. M. Ramsay.

LONDON (LEICESTER-SQUARE).

FICTION.

St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
What Malsie Knew. By Henry James.
The Invisible Man. By H. G. Wells.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

A Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
St. Francis of Assisi. By Canon Knox-Little.
Life of Sir Walter Raleigh. By M. A. S. Hume.
Hannibal. By W. O'Connor Morris.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

Selected Poems. By George Meredith.

LONDON (SLOANE-STREET).

FICTION.

The Christian. By Hall Caine.
The Skipper's Wooing. By W. W. Jacobs.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.

POETRY.

Selected Poems. By George Meredith.

TRAVEL.

Farthest North. By F. Nansen.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Two Reports).

FICTION.

The Christian. By Hall Caine.
The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
In Kedar's Tents. By Seton Merriman.
St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
Lawrence Clavering. By A. E. W. Mason.
On the Face of the Waters. By Mrs. Steel.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
History of Our Own Times. Vol. V. By Justin McCarthy.

Life of Nelson. By Capt. Mahan.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.
Johnson's History of Europe in the 16th Century.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

Tennyson's Poems.
Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden. By Mrs. C. W. Earle.

Selected Poems. By George Meredith.

THEOLOGY.

Dean Farrar's Books.

DUBLIN.

FICTION.

The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
The Christian. By Hall Caine.
The Choir Invisible. By James Lane Allen.
St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
The Massacres. By Ouida.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.
St. Francis of Assisi. By Canon Knox-Little.
Life of Nelson. By Capt. Mahan.
Life of General Grant. By W. Conant Church.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

The New Fiction, and Other Essays. By H. D. Traill.
Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden. By Mrs. C. W. Earle.
History of French Literature. By Prof. Dowden.
English Literature and the French Revolution. By Prof. Dowden.

TRAVEL.

Fire and Sword in the Soudan. By Slatin Pasha.

THEOLOGY.

Ancient Hebrew Tradition. By Prof. Hommel.
Westcott's Some Lessons of the Revised Version of the New Testament.

CAMBRIDGE.

FICTION.

St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
The Christian. By Hall Caine.
In Kedar's Tents. By Seton Merriman.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate. Vol. II. By Prof. Gardiner.
History of French Literature. By Prof. Dowden.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

The Age of Tennyson. By Hugh Walker.
Selected Poems. By George Meredith.
Verses and Fly-Leaves. By C. S. Calverley.
Modern Mythology. By Andrew Lang.

TRAVEL.

Farthest North. By F. Nansen.

THEOLOGY.

Vincent's Philipians and Philemon.
Bennett's Primer of the Bible.
Westcott's Some Lessons of the Revised Version of the New Testament.
Ecclesiastics. Translated by Cowley and Neubauer.

BRIGHTON.

FICTION.

In Kedar's Tents. By Seton Merriman.
The Martian. By George Du Maurier.
The Christian. By Hall Caine.
The Old, Old Story. By R. N. Carey.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Forty-one Years in India. By Lord Roberts.
History of Our Own Times. By Justin McCarthy.
History of the Church of England. By H. O. Waddell.

POETRY, ESSAYS, CRITICISM.

Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden. By Mrs. C. W. Earle.
Temple Classics.

BRISTOL.

FICTION.

St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.
In Kedar's Tent. By Seton Merriman.
The Christian. By Hall Caine.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate.
Vol. II. By Prof. Gardiner.

TRAVEL.

Bigelow's White Man's Africa.

READING.

FICTION.

The Choir Invisible. By James Lane Allen.
What Maisie Knew. By Henry James.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

The Jubilee Book of Cricket. By Prince Ranjitsinhji.
History of the Church of England. By H. O. Wakeman.

BIRMINGHAM.

FICTION.

The Christian. By Hall Caine.
Many Cargoes. By W. W. Jacobs.
In Kedar's Tent. By H. S. Merriman.
The Chevalier D'Aurillac. By S. Levett-Yeats.
St. Ives. By R. L. Stevenson.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

Memoir of Lord Tennyson. By his Son.
St. Francis of Assisi. By Canon Knox-Little.
History of the Commonwealth and Protectorate.
Vol. II: 1649-1660. S. R. Gardiner.

ESSAYS AND CRITICISM.

Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden. Mrs. C. W. Earle.
A History of French Literature. By Prof. Dowden.

THE WEEK.

AN interesting week. It will be seen that History and Biography are strongly represented in our list. The most solid item under these heads is the two concluding volumes of Mr. Justin H. McCarthy's The French Revolution. Less exacting is Mr. Henry B. Wheatley's Historical Portraits, a handsomely illustrated account of the chief paintings of this class scattered in public and private collections about the country. Then we have histories of China and South Africa; two or three chronologies; and biographical-historical works such as The Life and Letters of Mr. Endymion Porter, gentleman of the bed-chamber to the Merry Monarch. In pure biography and autobiography may be noted The Recollections of Aubrey de Vere; Verdi, Man and Musician (with special reference to his English experiences); The Autobiography of Madame Guyon (the first full translation into English of this remarkable book); and Prof. Knight's definitive edition of The Journals of Dorothy Wordsworth. Somewhat apart in History stands The Secret History of the Oxford Movement, by Mr. Walter Walsh. The cheap—that is to say the twenty-five-shilling—edition of Mr. Aymer Vallance's Life of William Morris is issued this week.

Under Essays and Criticism we have an essay on Style by Mr. Walter Raleigh, An Attic in Bohemia by Mr. E. W. Lacon

Watson (a collection of literary papers), and Certain Personal Matters by Mr. H. G. Wells.

Under Poetry we have, perhaps, the book of the week. This is Mr. Palgrave's second series of English Lyrics in the "Golden Treasury" series. Also Minuscule (Lyrics of Nature, Art, and Love), by Francis W. Bourdillon.

Children's books begin to load our table. Mr. Andrew Lang's Pink Fairy Book, Mr. Joel Chandler Harris's Aaron of the Wild Woods, and Mr. Edward A. Parry's The First Book of Krab: these promise peace and laughter to the nursery.

Two important works, under the heading Art, are Mr. Reginald Blomfield's A History of Renaissance Architecture in England, 1500-1800, and Mr. Albert Hartshorne's Old English Glasses.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

AD LUCAM; OR, THE ASCENT OF MAN THROUGH CHRIST. By Rev. Algernon Barrington Simson. Gardner, Darton & Co. 6s.
OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY FOR SCHOOLS. By Rev. T. H. Stokoe, D.D. Part III. The Clarendon Press. 2s. 6d.
THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT. Edited by the Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, M.A. Vol. I. Hodder & Stoughton.
THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER OF THE WORLD. By Alexander Balmain Bruce, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 7s. 6d.
NATURAL CAUSES AND SPIRITUAL SERMONS. By Henry Maudsley, M.D. Kegan Paul. 12s.
OUR CHURCHES, AND WHY WE BELONG TO THEM. By Eleven Writers. Service & Paton. 6s.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

THE LIVES OF THE SAINTS. By the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, M.A. New edition. Vols. VII. and VIII. John C. Nimmo.
THE CENTURIES: A CHRONOLOGICAL SYNOPSIS OF HISTORY ON THE "SPACE-FOR-TIME" Method. Second edition. West, Newman & Co.
ROME, THE MIDDLE OF THE WORLD. By Alice Gardner. Edward Arnold. 3s. 6d.
SIXTY YEARS A QUEEN. Harmsworth Bros., Ltd.
LIFE AND LETTERS OF MR. ENDYMION PORTER. By Dorothea Townshend. T. Fisher Unwin. 12s.
RECOLLECTIONS OF AUBREY DE VERE. Edward Arnold.
JOURNALS OF DOROTHY WORDSWORTH. Edited by William Knight. 2 vols. Macmillan & Co. 10s.
MASTERS OF MEDICINE: JOHN HUNTER, MAN OF SCIENCE AND SURGEON. By Stephen Paget. T. F. Unwin. 3s. 6d.
VERDI: MAN AND MUSICIAN. By Frederick J. Crouse. John Milne. 7s. 6d.
THE COLDESTREAR GUARDS IN THE CRIMEA. By Lt.-Col. Ross of Bladenburg. A. D. Innes & Co. 6s.
HISTORICAL PORTRAITS. By Henry B. Wheatley, F.S.A. George Bell & Sons. 10s. 6d.
THE GLASGOW ATHENÆUM: A SKETCH OF FIFTY YEARS' WORK (1847-1897). By James Lander. St. Mungo Press (Glasgow).
THE SECRET HISTORY OF THE OXFORD MOVEMENT. By Walter Walsh. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.
THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. Vols. III. and IV. By Justin H. McCarthy. Chatto & Windus. 12s. each.
AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF MADAME GUYON. Translated in Full by Thomas Taylor Allen. 2 vols. Kegan Paul. 21s.
HISTORY OF SOUTH AFRICA (1652-1795). By George M'Call Theal. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.
A HISTORY OF CHINA. By Rev. J. Macgowan. Kegan Paul.
LIFE IN NORTHERN IRELAND DURING THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY. Walter Scott, Ltd.
CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN OPINION OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION. By Charles Downer Hazen, Ph.D. The John Hopkins Press (Baltimore).
FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES: KIRKCALDY OF GRANGE. By Louis A. Barbé. Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.
A HANDBOOK OF EUROPEAN HISTORY, 476-1871. Chronologically arranged. By Arthur Hassall, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 8s. 6d.

A HISTORY OF CHINA. By the late S. Wells Williams, LL.D. Sampson Low.
WILLIAM MORRIS: HIS ART, HIS WRITINGS, AND HIS PUBLIC LIFE. A Record by Aymer Vallance. George Bell & Sons. 35s.

ESSAYS, POETRY, CRITICISM.

DANTE: A DEFENSE OF THE ANCIENT TEXT OF THE "DIVINA COMMEDIA." By Wickham Flower, F.S.A. Chapman & Hall.
STORIES OF FAMOUS SONGS. By S. J. Adair Fitz-Gerald. John C. Nimmo. 7s. 6d.
SUFFOLK TALES AND OTHER STORIES, FAIRY LEGENDS, POEMS, AND MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES. By the late Lady Camilla Gordon. Longmans, Green & Co.
STYLE. By Walter Raleigh. Edward Arnold. 5s.
IN THE CHOIR OF WESTMINSTER ABBEY: A STORY OF HENRY PURCELL'S DAYS. By Emma Marshall. Seeley & Co.
THE SPECTATOR. With an Introduction and Notes by George A. Aitken. In 8 vols. Vol. I. John C. Nimmo.
CERTAIN PERSONAL MATTERS. By H. G. Wells. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd.
MINUSCULE: LYRICS OF NATURE, ART, AND LOVE. By Francis William Bourdillon. Lawrence & Bullen, Ltd.
RAMPOLI: GROWTHS FROM A LONG-PLANTED ROOT, BEING TRANSLATIONS, NEW AND OLD, CHIEFLY FROM THE GERMAN; ALONG WITH A YEAR'S DIARY OF AN OLD SOUL. Longmans, Green & Co.
AN ATTIC IN BOHEMIA. By E. W. Lacon Watson. Elkin Mathews. 3s. 6d.
THE GOLDEN TREASURY OF ENGLISH LYRICS. Second Series. By Francis T. Palgrave. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.
ADMIRALS ALL, AND OTHER VERSES. By Henry Newbolt. Elkin Mathews. 1s.

ART.

A HISTORY OF RENAISSANCE ARCHITECTURE IN ENGLAND, 1500-1800. By Reginald Blomfield, M.A. Vol. I. George Bell & Sons.
OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. By Albert Hartshorne. Edward Arnold.

SCIENCE.

THE SCIENCE OF ETHICS, AS BASED ON THE SCIENCE OF KNOWLEDGE. By Johann Gottlieb Fichte. Translated by A. E. Kroeger. Kegan Paul.

EDUCATIONAL.

HANDBOOKS OF ENGLISH LITERATURE: THE AGE OF TENNYSON. By Hugh Walker, M.A. George Bell & Sons. 3s. 6d.
A JUNIOR LATIN SYNTAX. By J. A. Stevens, B.A. Blackie & Son. 8d.
A COMPREHENSIVE FRENCH MANUAL. By Otto C. Näf, M.A. Blackie & Son. 3s. 6d.
A COMPLETE COURSE OF FRENCH COMPOSITION AND IDIOMS. By Hector Bay. Blackie & Son. 3s. 6d.
THE CAMBRIDGE BIBLE FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES: THE FIRST BOOK OF MACCABEES. Edited by W. Fairweather, M.A., and J. Sutherland Black, LL.D. Cambridge University Press. 3s. 6d.
RUSKIN REVISED, AND OTHER PAPERS ON EDUCATION. By R. J. Muir, M.A. Oliver & Boyd (Edinburgh).
A PRIMER OF WORDSWORTH. With a Critical Essay. By Laurie Magnus, B.A. Methuen & Co.
PANTOLIA: A SECOND BOOK OF GREEK TRANSLATION. By H. B. Hartley, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d.
NOTES ON GREEK AND LATIN SYNTAX. By G. Buckland Green, M.A. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.
SAINT COLUMBA: FIFTY YEARS OF ST. PETER'S COLLEGE, RADLEY. By Rev. T. D. Rasker, M.A. James Parker & Co.
MACMILLAN'S ELEMENTARY LATIN-ENGLISH DICTIONARY. By Rev. G. H. Null, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
AN HISTORICAL GREEK GRAMMAR. By A. N. Jannaris, Ph.D. Macmillan & Co. 25s.
FRENCH IDIOMS AND PROVERBS: A COMPANION TO DES HUMBERT'S "DICTIONARY OF DIFFICULTIES." By De V. Payen-Payne. Second edition. David Nutt. 2s. 6d.
PITT PRESS SERIES: QUAND J'ÉTAIS PETIT. By Lucien Biart. Adapted for Schools. Cambridge University Press. 2s. KING LEAR. Edited by A. W. Verity, M.A. Cambridge University Press. 1s. 6d. XENOPHON'S ANABASIS. Book III. Edited by G. M. Edwards, M.A. Cambridge University Press. 1s. 6d. THE OLYMPIAN SPEECHES OF DEMOSTHENES. Edited by T. R. Glover. M.A. Cambridge University Press. 2s. 6d.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CELTIC DOCTRINE OF RE-BIRTH. By Alfred Nutt. David Nutt. Vol. II.
THE WISDOM AND RELIGION OF A GERMAN PHILOSOPHER: BEING SELECTIONS FROM THE WRITINGS OF G. W. F. Hegel. Edited by Eliz. S. Haldane. Kegan Paul. 5s.

NATURE AND SPORT IN SOUTH AFRICA. By H. A. Bryden. Chapman & Hall. 6s.
 WITHIN SOUND OF GREAT TOM: STORIES OF MODERN OXFORD. B. H. Blackwell.
 THE AGNOSTIC ANNUAL, 1898. Watts & Co. 6d.
 NOTES OF THE MARGINS: BEING SUGGESTIONS OF THOUGHT AND ENQUIRY. Five Essays by Clifford Harrison. George Redway. 5s. net.
 FACSIMILES OF ROYAL, HISTORICAL, LITERARY AND OTHER AUTOGRAPHS IN THE DEPARTMENT OF MANUSCRIPTS, BRITISH MUSEUM. Edited by George Warner, M.A. Third series. By Order of the Trustees.

CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

THE PINK FAIRY BOOK. Edited by Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
 THE GIANT CRAB, AND OTHER TALES FROM OLD INDIA. Retold by W. H. D. Rouse. Illustrated by W. Robinson. David Nutt. 3s. 6d.
 BUSHY; OR, THE ADVENTURES OF A GIRL. By Cynthia M. Westover. Chapman & Hall. 6s.
 STORIES FOR CHILDREN IN ILLUSTRATION OF THE LORD'S PRAYER. By Mrs. Molesworth. Gardner, Darton & Co. 3s. 6d.
 THE FIRST BOOK OF KEAB: CHRISTMAS STORIES FOR YOUNG AND OLD. By His Honour Edward Abbott Parry. David Nutt. 3s. 6d.
 AARON IN THE WILD WOODS. By Joel Chandler Harris. BEEB MORTAL. By Ben Marlas. T. Fisher Unwin.
 VINCE THE REBEL; OR, THE SANCTUARY IN THE BOG. By G. Manville Fenn. W. & R. Chambers. 5s.
 POPPY. By Mrs. Isla Sitwell. T. Nelson & Sons. 3s. 6d.
 "SISTER": A CHRONICLE OF FAIR HAVEN. By E. Everett-Green. T. Nelson & Sons. 5s.
 AN EMPEROR'S DOOM; OR, THE PATRIOTS OF MEXICO. By Herbert Hayens. T. Nelson & Sons. 5s.

NEW EDITIONS.

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY. By J. M. Barrie. Forty-third Thousand. Cassell & Co. 6s.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.

THE CHILD'S OWN MAGAZINE. Sixty-fourth Volume. THE HOME BLESSING. Vol. I. YOUNG ENGLAND. Vol. XVIII.

CLASSICAL.

PHILETUS OF PLATO. Edited by Robert Gregg Bury, M.A. Cambridge University Press.
 THE REPUBLIC OF PLATO. Edited by James Adam, M.A. Cambridge University Press.

BOUND MAGAZINES.

THE CENTURY ILLUSTRATED MONTHLY MAGAZINE. May, 1897, to October, 1897. Vol. 54. The Century Co. 10s. 6d.
 ST. NICHOLAS. May, 1897, to October, 1897. Vol. 24. The Century Co. 8s. 6d.

DRAMA.

ALTHOUGH the smartest, the lightest, and probably, to a certain class, the most entertaining of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's plays, "The Liars" does not exhibit its author in a new light, or mark a new epoch in his work. It ranks with "The Case of Rebellious Susan" and "The Physician," which were also written for Mr. Charles Wyndham and the Criterion company. Mr. Jones has discovered that a good deal of human nature revolves round the seventh commandment; also that the man of the world, having arrived on the table-land of life, sees love, licit and illicit, in a truer light, and recognises more clearly the obligations of the citizen towards society than when he was twenty-five. These views he would call the result of observation, and he has been busily engaged for a year or two past in submitting them to the public in dramatic form. No doubt the author of "The Middleman" and "The Crusaders" is fully alive to the advisability of letting the characters of a play tell their own story, and follow out their destinies in accordance with the principles of dramatic art. Nevertheless, there is seldom absent from his work a certain preachiness which conveys the impression that, if he had not found his vocation on the stage, he would have sought it in some latitudinarian pulpit. "The Liars" bears the aspect of farce, but after the curtain has fallen the spectator perceives that he has been tricked into listening to a moral exhortation in four acts.

It is an unfortunate title that Mr. Jones has bestowed upon the latest heir of his invention. "The Liars" is a harsh term. It does not sound well at the dinner-table, where plays are now so much discussed. She would be a bold young lady who would ask a new acquaintance, at a venture, whether he had seen "The Liars." Nor has this title even the questionable merit of accuracy, since most of the dramatis personæ are engaged not so much in perverting the truth as in trifling with it, and that not for sordid ends of their own, but in order to cover up a young wife's "indiscretion" from the scrutiny of an inquisitive husband. "Fibbing" or "tarradiddling" would be nearer the truth than lying as applied to the proceedings of Lady Jessica Nepean and her Belgravian "set." As for the author's observation of life, I am afraid it can only be regarded as relatively true. He looks at the vices of society with his hand to his eyes, seeing only what it is good for the English dramatist to see. Moreover, Lady Jessica's much-talked-of "indiscretion" looks, vulgarly speaking, like a put-up job with all its circumstances exaggerated for the purposes of farce. Is it conceivable that an officer and a gentleman should be so lost to a sense of the social proprieties as openly to compromise a lady of his acquaintance, and when challenged on the point by his friends, to avow his intention of carrying her off from her husband if he can? It is true that Mr. Jones makes this fire-eater an African hero, fresh from the suppression of slavery on the Gold Coast. But still — Again, is it conceivable that such a couple would allow their most private affairs to become the common talk of a gossiping circle of friends without making the smallest attempt at concealment?

To inquire thus, however, in the case of farce is to inquire too curiously. Mr. Jones is too clever a craftsman to suppose that his moral exhortation is enough for the Criterion public, or, indeed, any public which pays its money at the doors in order to be amused, and which remembers that it can get its moral exhortation on Sunday for nothing. At the cost of plausibility, Lady Jessica's "indiscretion" must be made public property for the purpose of being wrapped up in a more or less transparent cloud of mendacity, which is intended to be the amusing feature of the case. In the production of this all the indiscreet heroine's friends participate — Lady Rosamund Tatton, "Dolly" Coke, "Freddie," Mrs. Crespin, and the rest, with the ubiquitous Sir Christopher Deering, Mr. Wyndham's character, towering morally above them as the middle-aged, calm, level-headed, tolerant, patronising man of the world, the exponent of common-sense morality, and the composer of all the strifes and troubles of his little world. Yes; it is impossible to accept Mr. Jones's Belgravian microcosm as in any degree typical of society at large. It fits too closely the Criterion company. Its great merit is that it is entertaining.

THE lying sets in early in the first act, thence steadily proceeding crescendo till the middle of the third, and as it is Mr. Wyndham's peculiar function to save the liars from themselves, it will be understood that he has his hands pretty full all the time. If Mr. Jones's wit did not ensure the success of the play, Mr. Wyndham's acting would — for Sir Christopher is a magnificent part in the hands of this polished and versatile comedian. The dramatic theme is really of the slightest. In her husband's absence from town Lady Jessica has agreed to dine with her admirer en partie fine. The arrival upon the scene of a prying brother-in-law nips the affair in the bud, added to which Sir Christopher himself puts in an appearance in the interests of morality, and the problem then arises, how the wife's indiscretion is to be explained away to the jealous husband. Before an adequate string of falsehoods has been agreed upon, the dreaded explanations are called for, and the third act sees half-a-dozen of the crème de la crème of Belgravian society floundering from one tarradiddle into another, under the husband's cross-examination, until in the end a desperate recourse is had to truth by the guilty couple themselves. The cloud of mendacity being dispelled by a breath as soon as it has served its purpose, Mr. Jones steps forward with his moral, which is delivered by Mr. Wyndham, in the fourth act, in the form of a sermon of almost regulation length, which, unlike most sermons, succeeds in converting the sinners to whom it is addressed. "It won't work" is the prosaic, but not ineffective, line of argument adopted by Sir Christopher with the headstrong couple who, at this advanced period of the play, are still bent upon eloping, and it is then — too late, however, for his evening's amusement to be spoiled — that the spectator becomes aware that Mr. Jones has all the time been preaching.

It is a telling sermon enough, "The Liars," albeit in some minds it may leave an unpleasant souvenir. During a great part of its course the atmosphere is more than sulphurous. From the acting point of view, however, it is a showy piece, and not only Mr. Wyndham, but Miss Mary Moore, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, Miss Sarah Brooke, Miss Janet Steer, Mr. Vane-Tempest, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Thalberg, and others are charged with picturesque odds and ends of character. All through, the house is kept more or less in a ripple of merriment. Evidently Mr. Jones does not collect his good things in his note-book. They spring spontaneously from the situation and the character; which, after all, is the best sort of dramatic writing.

J. F. N.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

STEVENSON reviewed St. Ives on his own account. "St. Ives," he wrote a little more than four years ago, "will, to my mind, not be wholly bad. It is written in rather a funny style, a little stilted and left-handed—the style of St. Ives; also, to some extent, the style of R. L. S. dictating. St. Ives is unintellectual and, except as an adventure novel, dull. But the adventures seem to me sound and pretty probable; and it is a love-story."

"So far the author," says the Times:

"What can the critic add? To begin with, there is much virtue in Stevenson's 'except,' for there is not a dull page in the book. The historical novel has been much with us of late, but neither Stevenson himself nor any one else has given us a better example of a dashing story, full of life and colour and interest; stuffed with hairbreadth 'escapes and sudden, wild alarms; and seasoned with just enough historical detail to lend an added air of actuality to every scene."

The brightness and quick, picaresque movement of St. Ives are generally recognised. Mr. Edmund Gosse, writing in the St. James's Gazette, says that as a book for boys St. Ives "is in every way calculated to charm them with its hairbreadth escapes, its prodigal effusion of blood and gold, its gaiety and its gallantry." Yet Mr. Gosse's review is one of the least favourable to the book. "As a serious production of one of the most sedulous and punctilious of modern writers"

"it must be confessed that it bears evidence of fatigue and even of relinquishment of effort. Had it not been for Weir of Hermiston, we must have decided that Stevenson's powers, worn out by infirmity and exile, were on the wane. But we know that this was not the case. How, then, is St. Ives to be explained? Only, I think, by the supposition that it marked a dividing of the ways, and that it was to be the latest expression of a mood which Stevenson had outgrown. It is often found that, just before a great writer is about to take entirely new ground and a fresh lease of genius, he writes in his earlier method with a languor that is quite unaccountable."

The Chronicle says: "It would be an ill compliment to call it one of the finest of his works, but for our part we find it one of the most fascinating." The Standard critic writes in the same critical tone: "The narrative is nowhere quite so concentrated, the effects are not so vivid, or heightened by quite so brilliantly fastidious and telling a choice of words, as in Stevenson's earlier works."

The Pall Mall Gazette thinks the story

"will not, perhaps, add anything to its author's reputation, for it exhibits, in essentials, nothing which will be new to his readers; but it will add more than one portrait, and more than one striking fresco, to the gallery of fiction that will probably last. . . . Goguelat, from the moment he comes on the scene to his 'cheerful and blasphemous farewell,' is admirable. Dudgeon is another vivid sketch. The Major is well drawn, so are Chevenix, Romaine, so are Alsin and the scoundrel Burchell Fenn—'John Bull stripped, naked, his greed, his usuriousness, his hypocrisy, his perfidy of the backstairs all swelled to the superlative.'"

Mr. Quiller-Couch's completing chapters are, as a rule, favourably noticed. "It is due," says the Pall Mall, "to Mr. Quiller-Couch to say that he has done creditably what most people would have found it impossible to do at all." The Chronicle says: "As Mr. Stevenson has somewhere confessed that he 'could make nothing of the Cornish character,' we presume that the invention of the brig Lady Nepean and her crew must be entirely Mr. Couch's. It is undeniably effective."

THE critics, while taking strong exception to some of Mr. Murray's judgments, applaud his honesty. The Times thinks Mr. Murray's appreciations are "curiously unequal," but "generous and sincere." In the course of the review we read:

"So far his critical equipment is sound enough, albeit rather slender and negative, and it again serves him in good stead when it enables him to perceive that 'Mr. J. M. Barrie is a captain among workmen, and there is little fear that in the final judgment of the public and his peers he will be huddled up with Maclaren and Crockett, as he sometimes is to-day.' But what shall be said of the critic who brackets Mr. Meredith with Mr. Hall Caine among the 'living masters,' and who speaks of Dickens, his own avowed master, whom we all still admire and love, even though we may have ceased to worship him, as though he were almost akin to Shakespeare? This kind of thing comes rather ill from a crusader against puffery and hysteria, and makes it difficult to understand how a critic whose perspective is so liable to distortion can write so well as Mr. Christie Murray does of Mr. Thomas Hardy."

The St. James's Gazette accuses Mr. Murray of exaggerating the place of the novel in literature. With this and other reservations the St. James's critic has high praise for the book. "The tone of it could scarcely be amended; it is frank, kindly, honest," &c. The writer concludes with mingled praise and blame:

"On the whole, this is a book which can have none but a wholesome effect, and we should like to make a knowledge of it incumbent on all budding reviewers. Later on, when they had learned that it was foolish and wicked to compare Mr. Crockett and 'Ian Maclaren' with Sir Walter Scott, we should take them aside and whisper that this is not all the lesson they have to learn. We should point to the pages dedicated here to Mr. Henry James, and suggest that they offer the very ideal of what should not be said about a highly original and delicate talent urging its way against the tide of the time. We should invite them to read a little more French than Mr. Murray seems to have enjoyed, and to believe that there are other foreign novelists than the immense M. Zola, who bulks so big on the pages before us. But all this would not prevent us from thanking the author once more for a sane and entirely honest volume."

As regards the new Scottish writers, another critic, "O. O." of the Sketch, thinks that Mr. Murray has been needlessly severe on them. Mr. Murray alleges that they have been compared favourably with Sir Walter Scott, but "O. O." writes:

"I have never heard of any critic who put any of the writers named above Sir Walter Scott. I have never known of any who ever compared them as equals. . . . The criticism of contemporary journalism is, indeed, often very poor; much of it is as poor as Mr. Christie Murray's own criticism. However, critics and editors retain a degree of sanity, and that has prevented them exalting any recent writer to the level of Sir Walter Scott."

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN UNAUTHORISED TRANSLATION.

3, Rue Bars, Paris: Oct 12, 1897.

Will you kindly allow me to state that the translation by Henrietta Izo'd of the essay on Talmud by my husband, Arsène Darmesteter, is quite unauthorised? No communication has been made with regard to the matter, either to the publisher of the Reliques Scientifiques, the book in which the article appeared, or to myself.

One would hardly think that the American copyright law would be regarded by American subjects as altogether replacing the wider law of courtesy between a translator and the author, or his representative.

HELENA ARSÈNE DARMESTER.

"LONDON SIGNS AND INSCRIPTIONS."

45, Evelyn Gardens: Oct. 11, 1897.

While thanking your reviewer for his kindly criticism of my book on sculptured signs and inscriptions, I venture to point out that it was originally published in 1893, and that the present issue is not a second edition, but a reprint in cheaper form. To my regret, I therefore had no opportunity of revising it or of adding fresh material.

PHILIP NORMAN.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 382, OCTOBER, 1897, 8vo, price 6s.

1. ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir.
2. FRIDTJOF NANSEN and the APPROACH to the POLE.
3. PRECIOUS STONES.
4. The WARFARE of SCIENCE with THEOLOGY
5. IDEALS of ROMANCE
6. THE IRISH LAND QUESTION.
7. LIFE and WORKS of HAMERTON.
8. The PLAIN of THEBES.
9. "OUR OWN TIMES" and OXFORD LIBERALS.
10. The INTERNAL CRISIS in GERMANY.

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D., and REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D.

No. 48, OCTOBER, 1897, price 5s.

1. Articles.
CANON LAW in ENGLAND. By Professor Maitland, LL.D. III. William of Drogheda, and the Universal Ordinary.
VENETIAN DESPATCHES on the ARMADA and its RESULTS. By E. Armstrong.
The ADMINISTRATION of the NAVY from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By J. R. Tanner. II.
The UNSTAMPED PRESS, 1815-1836. By J. Holland Rose.
HEINRICH VON TREITSCHKE. By J. W. Headlam.
2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. Notices of Periodicals.—5. List of Recent Historical Publications. 6. Index.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO.,
London, New York, and Bombay.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

		1896.
BEN JONSON	...	November	14
JOHN KEATS	...	"	21
SIR JOHN SUCKLING	...	"	28
TOM HOOD	...	December	5
THOMAS GRAY	...	"	12
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON	...	"	19
SIR WALTER SCOTT	...	"	26
		1897.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON	...	January	2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY	...	"	9
LEIGH HUNT	...	"	16
LORD MACAULAY	...	"	23
ROBERT SOUTHBY	...	"	30
S. T. COLERIDGE	...	February	6
CHARLES LAMB	...	"	13
MICHAEL DRAYTON	...	"	20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR	...	"	27
SAMUEL PEPYS	...	March	6
EDMUND WALLER	...	"	13
WILKIE COLLINS	...	"	20
JOHN MILTON	...	"	27
WILLIAM COWPER	...	April	3
CHARLES DARWIN	...	"	10
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON	...	"	17
HENRY WADSWORTH LONG- FELLOW	...	"	24
ANDREW MARVELL	...	May	1
ROBERT BROWNING	...	"	8
THOMAS CARLYLE	...	"	15
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY	...	"	22
CHARLES DICKENS	...	"	29
JONATHAN SWIFT	...	June	5
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY	...	"	12
WILLIAM BLAKE	...	"	19
SIR RICHARD STEELE	...	"	26
ALEXANDER POPE	...	July	3
DOUGLAS JERROLD	...	"	10
FRANCIS BACON	...	"	17

THE BLAISDELL
SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL.

Ask for the BLAISDELL SELF-SHARPENING PENCIL at any stationer's. The BLACKLEAD PENCILS are made in 5 Grades: H.B.; H.; B.; H.H.; B.B.; finest Bavarian Lead, equal to the highest quality of Artists' Pencils. COLOURED CRAYON PENCILS in Blue, Red, Yellow, Green, and Black, tough and smooth, rich in colour.

If your stationer does not sell them send 1s. for set of sample pencils to—

BLAISDELL PAPER PENCIL CO., LTD.,
48, HOLBORN VIADUCT, LONDON, E.C.

EPPS'S COCOAINE.

COCOA-NIB EXTRACT.

(TEA-LIKE.)

The choicest roasted nibs (broken-up beans) of the nature Cocoa on being subjected to powerful hydraulic pressure give forth their excess of oil, leaving for use a finely flavoured powder—"Cocaine," a product which, when prepared with boiling water, has the consistence of tea, of which it is now, with many, beneficially taking the place. Its active principle being a gentle nerve stimulant, supplies the needed energy without unduly exciting the system. Sold only in labelled Tins.

GEORGE NEWNES, Limited,
PUBLISHERS.

THE LIBRARY OF USEFUL STORIES.

THE STORY of GERM LIFE:
Bacteria. By H. W. CONN. With 24 Illustrations.
1s. [Just Published.]

Previous Volumes, 1s. each.

THE STORY of the EARTH'S ATMOSPHERE. By DOUGLAS ARCHIBALD, M.A. With 44 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the WEATHER. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 47 Illustrations.

THE STORY of FOREST and STREAM. By JAMES RODWAY, F.L.S. With 27 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the CHEMICAL ELEMENTS. By M. M. PATTISON MUIR, M.A.

THE STORY of EXTINCT CIVILIZATIONS of the EAST. By R. E. ANDERSON, M.A., F.A.S. With Maps.

THE STORY of ELECTRICITY. By J. MUNRO. With 100 Illustrations.

THE STORY of a PIECE of COAL. By E. A. MARTIN, F.G.S. With 38 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the SOLAR SYSTEM. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 28 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the EARTH in PAST AGES. By Prof. H. G. SEELEY. With 40 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the PLANTS. By Grant ALLEN. With 49 Illustrations.

THE STORY of PRIMITIVE MAN. By EDWARD CLODD. With 88 Illustrations.

THE STORY of the STARS. By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S. With 24 Illustrations.

THE NEW LIBRARY.

LAVERGRO: The Scholar — The GYPSY — THE PRIEST. By GEORGE BORROW. 530 pp., crown 8vo, printed on antique woven paper, cloth extra, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

"No man's writings can take you into the country as Borrow's can. It makes you feel the sunshine, see the meadows, smell the flowers, hear the skylark sing, and the grasshopper chirp. Who else can do it? I know of none."—THEODORE WATTS.

Previous Volumes, 2s. 6d. each.

VISIT to MONASTERIES of the LEVANT. By the Hon. ROBERT CURZON, Jun. (Baron de la Zouche). With Sketch Map and Illustrations. "One of those fascinating books of travel which have taken a place in permanent literature."—Times.

THACKERAY'S CHRISTMAS BOOKS. Mrs. Perkin's Ball, Our Street, Dr. Birch and His Young Friends, Rebecca and Rowena, The Kicklobury on the Rhine, The Rose and the Ring. In 1 vol. "Another welcome reprint."—Morning Post.

NORTH and SOUTH. By Mrs. Gaskell. A New Edition. 450 pp., crown 8vo. "Capital edition of a charming story."—Manchester Courier.

SHAKESPEARE'S HEROINES: Characteristics of Women—Moral, Poetical, and Historical. By Mrs. JAMESON. "The most charming of all the works of a charming writer."—Blackwood's Magazine.

THE CHRISTIAN YEAR; Thoughts in Verse for the Sundays and Holy Days throughout the Year. By JOHN KEBLE.

PIONEER WOMEN in VICTORIA'S REIGN. Being Short Histories of Great Movements. By EDWIN A. PRATT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "A survey given with great skill and effect."—Times. "His chapters on Women's Work in Emigration and in Medicine are admirable."—Pall Mall Gazette.

ENGLAND'S HISTORY, as Pictured by Famous Painters. An Album of 280 Historical Pictures. Edited by G. A. TEMPLE, F.S.A. Oblong 4to, cloth extra, gilt leaves, 10s. 6d.

THE THAMES ILLUSTRATED. A Picturesque Journey from Richmond to Oxford. By JOHN LEYLAND. With 164 Full-Page Illustrations, and 170 smaller Sketches in text. Demy 4to, cloth extra, gilt leaves, 10s. 6d.

THE VICTORIAN ERA READER. A Graphic Record of a Glorious Reign. By R. E. ANDERSON, M.A. Profusely Illustrated, and with Photographic Portrait of the Queen. 2s.

SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND.

MESSRS.

ARCHIBALD CONSTABLE & CO.'S
LIST.THE SELECTED POEMS OF GEORGE MEREDITH.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"These selected poems are a literary treasure."—Scotsman.

RICHARD FEVEREL.

By GEORGE MEREDITH.

(Constable's New Popular 6s. Edition.)

"Is there any more exquisite love-idyll in the language than that of 'Richard Feverel'?"—Daily Chronicle.

RHODA FLEMING. [Ready next week.]

Just published, at all the Libraries and Bookstalls.

ODD STORIES.

By FRANCES FORBES-ROBERTSON.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE HOUSEHOLD OF THE LAFAYETTES.

By EDITH SICHEL.

Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

Illustrated from Contemporary Pictures and Prints. "We scarcely know any book that presents a more vivid picture of the French Revolution."—Glasgow Herald. "Full of interesting material very industrially collected."—Times.

THE KING'S STORY-BOOK.

Being Historical Stories Collected in Illustration of the Reigns of the English Monarchs from the Conquest to William IV.

Illustrated by Harrison Miller, and from Contemporary Pictures. Over 500 pp., crown 8vo, 6s.

IN CONSTABLE'S HISTORICAL NOVEL SERIES.

Edited by E. LAURENCE GOMME.

LORD LYTTON'S

HAROLD, the Last of the Saxons.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MACFARLANE'S

CAMP OF REFUGE.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RICHARD BAIRD SMITH.

The Leader of the Delhi Heroes in 1857.

Private Correspondence of the Commanding Engineer during the Siege, and other interesting Letters hitherto Unpublished.

By Colonel H. M. VIBART, R.E.

Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

SOME OBSERVATIONS OF
A FOSTER-PARENT.

By JOHN CHARLES TARVER.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Sound common sense."—Pall Mall Gazette. "A book which will be of great practical use to parents."—Educational Review.

NEW POEMS.

By FRANCIS THOMPSON. 6s. net.

"The essential poetry of essential Christianity."—Academy.

Next week will be published THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN, a retelling of old Stories of the Celtic Wonder World, by FIONA MACLEOD, Author of "The Mountain Lovers," "Green Fire," &c., illustrated by Sunderland Rollinson, or. 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.; and also LONDON RIVERSIDE CHURCHES, by A. E. DANIELL. Profusely Illustrated by Alexander Ansted. Imp. 16mo, 6s.

2, WHITEHALL GARDENS, WESTMINSTER.

Literature

Edited by
H. D. TRAILL.

Published by
THE TIMES.

VOL. I. No. 1.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1897.

PRICE
SIXPENCE.
REGISTERED AS A NEWSPAPER.

"THE TIMES" OFFICE,
PRINTING HOUSE SQUARE, E.C.
OCTOBER 1, 1897.

The addition of a new weekly journal to the number already in existence is, no doubt, a step which may fairly be thought to call for some explanation. Nor perhaps will it be sufficiently explained by the further statement that this new journal is to be specially dedicated to Literature. For most, if not all, of the general reviews, so called, deal more or less largely with literary subjects, while there are also weekly papers which, though reserving a certain portion of their space for a record of the progress of science, art, and drama, devote the greater part of it to the criticism of books. But from the weekly press there issues no periodical—or none at any rate of the critical order—which takes Literature, and Literature alone, as its theme, which gives its individual space and directs its undivided attention to Literature in all its aspects, and in its relation to all the matters and interests which are connected with its name.

It is the aim of the Proprietors in publishing "Literature," under the editorship of Mr. H. D. Traill, to supply this want, and it is their hope to make it essentially the organ of the literary classes in the widest sense of the term. Books, alike and equally in their relation to the world of authors, of publishers, and of readers, will be its exclusive concern; and no effort will be spared to win recognition for it as an impartial and authoritative organ of literary criticism and a comprehensive and trustworthy medium of literary intelligence.

Although published from "The Times" Office, it will be in its criticisms and opinions entirely independent of "The Times"; its title has been selected with the special purpose of indicating the width of its scope, and is designed to denote the fact that its functions will not be exclusively critical. For, though "Literature" will consist mainly of reviews of books, it will invite correspondence on, and will itself deal with, any literary subject either of permanent or of current interest to the writing, publishing, or reading world.

The Republic of Letters should know no conflict either of nationalities or parties, and, if it is impossible to hope for absolute freedom from national prepossessions and political prejudices, yet an honest attempt will, at least, be made to deal with the best literature of every country on its literary merits alone. Arrangements will to this end be made for keeping the English public regularly advised of the current book production of the principal European countries and of the United States, and a place will be found—not in any special department of "Literature," but side by side with its criticisms of English works—for reviews of the more important volumes issuing from the Continental and American Press.

Every book received will be recorded among the publications of the week in the fullest possible manner—the title, the author, the publisher, and the size, number of pages, and price of each book being given in a classified index.

But books will be selected for review by the Editor solely according to his judgment of their literary value, and it is hoped—though it cannot, of course, be definitively promised—that the space allotted to them will enable every important work to be dealt with within three weeks of its publication.

The vast and ever-swelling flood of volumes issuing from the press has immensely enhanced the difficulty of the contemporary critic's task. On the one hand, it is his duty not only to render an account of all the works produced by authors of admitted merit, or even of what is not always the same thing—established reputation, but also to see that no work of promise by an unknown or obscure writer shall, so far as diligence and discernment can prevent it, pass without appreciative notice; and the due performance of these two functions in a day when "everybody writes," and many more than in former days write well enough to raise expectations as to their literary future, has already led, and will probably continue to lead, to a progressive multiplication of the number of reviews. On the other hand, it is strongly felt by the projectors of "Literature" that the practice of indiscriminately reviewing, or at any rate "noticing," every book which issues from the press is one which, by the stimulus which it affords to the production of worthless work, is tending seriously to the degradation of literary standards and to the confusion and disgust of readers. This result they desire, as far as possible, to avoid.

As regards the critical contents of "Literature," the rule of anonymity will be generally observed. That rule, however, may be occasionally suspended in cases in which special circumstances appear to suggest the expediency of so doing; and every endeavour will be made to find room for the proper expression of any views under the signature of any correspondent.

While the Editor will be always glad to receive, and give his best consideration to, any communication of a literary character which may be submitted to him, he cannot hold himself responsible for the return of MSS.; but he will use his best efforts to return all such as are found unsuitable for publication, provided they reach the office of "Literature" accompanied by stamped addressed envelopes.

It is proposed to publish weekly, or as often as the occasion may arise, a Bibliography on some topic of current interest, in order to furnish the reader with a list of all the works which can be consulted on the subject.

SPECIAL NOTICE TO PUBLISHERS.

The Editor, being equally desirous of avoiding either hasty criticism or unnecessary delay in reviewing books, particularly requests that EARLY ADVANCE COPIES may be sent whenever possible, and, to avoid premature mention, that, together with the price, THE DAY OF PUBLICATION BE STAMPED ON THE TITLE-PAGE. Parcels of Books should be addressed—The Editor, "Literature," Printing House Square.

Any Books which may not be selected for Review will so far as possible be held at the disposition of the Publishers for two months, after which they will be otherwise disposed of.

It will further be of great assistance if Publishers will send lists of books they intend publishing, as well as any news relating to their publications likely to be of interest to the Literary world.

The first number of "Literature" will appear on the 23rd October. It will be published every Saturday, price 6d., and will be posted to any address in the United Kingdom at 7s. 1d. per quarter, or 28s. 2d. per annum; or to any foreign address at 8s. 2d. per quarter, or 32s. 6d. per annum. It may be ordered of any Newsagent, or of The Publisher, "Literature," Printing House Square, London, E.C.

It will consist of from 24 to 34 pages of literary matter, the number varying according to the activity of the publishing season and the importance of the books to be reviewed.

An American Edition, containing precisely the same literary matter, will be published in New York by Messrs. Harper and Brothers.

Advertisements for insertion in the European Edition should be addressed to The Advertisement Department, "Literature," Printing House Sq., London, E.C. As a very large number of copies will be printed of the first six numbers, it is requested that Advertisements should be sent in as early as possible.

SUBSCRIPTION FORM.

THE PUBLISHER,—Herewith remittance for £ ..... Kindly forward "LITERATURE" regularly to the following address for ..... months:—

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

UNITED KINGDOM.											Abroad.
Three months ...	...	...	...	...	...	£0	7	1	...	...	...	£0	8	2
Six months ...	...	...	...	...	...	0	14	1	...	...	...	0	16	3
Twelve months ...	...	...	...	...	...	1	8	2	...	...	...	1	12	6

MESSRS. BLISS, SANDS & CO.'S AUTUMN LIST.

READY, NOVEMBER 3.

CHRIST AND HIS MOTHER IN ITALIAN ART.

Edited by JULIA CARTWRIGHT (Mrs. ADY).

With an Introduction by Rev. ROBERT EYTON, Canon of Westminster.

Subscriptions can now be received for the above Work.

Prospectuses can be obtained at any Bookseller's.

Specimen Plates can be viewed at the Publishers' Offices, or at Messrs. Lemer cier's Gallery, 35, New Bond Street, W.

Price on Subscription, £8 8s.; on Publication, £10 10s.

SPORT.

THOS. HAYDON.—SPORTING REMINISCENCES. Dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. the EARL of HOPETOUN, P.C., G.O.M.G., &c. With Frontispiece Portrait of the Author. Large crown 8vo, price 6s. [Ready November 11.]

G. F. UNDERHILL.—HUNTING, and PRACTICAL HINTS for HUNTING MEN. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]

A NEW ART WORK.

GREEK ART on GREEK SOIL.

By JAMES M. HOPPIN, Professor of the History of Art in the Yale University.

With 12 Illustrations.

Price 7s. 6d.

[Ready shortly.]

A NEW MILITARY WORK.

APPLIED TACTICS. By Major GRIFFENKE-L.

Translated by A RETIRED OFFICER. With 5 large Maps in pocket at end of book, and 2 Coloured Maps inserted in the volume. Square demy 8vo, price 8s. net. [Ready November 11.]

This important Work has, by command of the Japanese War Office, been Translated into Japanese.

It has also recently been Translated into French.

CHILDREN'S GIFT-BOOK.

ANDERSEN'S FAIRY TALES. By HANS CHRISTIAN ANDERSEN. A Verbatim Reprint from the First and Second Editions. With 16 New Full-Page Illustrations by W. H. Robinson. Price 2s. 6d. [Now ready.]

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

CHLOE: a Novel. By DARLEY DALE, Author of "The Village Blacksmith." Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 6s. [Now ready.]

GEORGE MALCOLM: a Novel. By GABRIEL SETOUN, Author of "Robert Urquhart." Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 6s. [Now ready.]

IN YEARS of TRANSITION: a Novel. By SAMUEL GORDON, Author of "A Handful of Exotics." Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 6s. [Ready October 18.]

A WEEK of PASSION: a Novel. By EDWARD JENKINS. Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 6s. [Ready October 25.]

RECENTLY PUBLISHED NOVELS.

MALLERTON: a Novel. By A. B. LOUIS. Large crown 8vo, cloth extra, gilt top, price 6s.

LAD'S LOVE: an Idyll of the Land of Heather. A Novel. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "Bog-Myrtle and Peat," &c. Illustrated by Warwick Goble. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

MR. PETERS: a Novel. By RICCARDO STEPHENS, Author of "The Cruciform Mark." Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

ROBERT URQUHART. By GABRIEL SETOUN, Author of "Sunshine and Haar" and "Barncraig." Third Edition. Large crown 8vo, deckle edge, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

BELINDA'S BEAUX, and other Stories. By ANABELLA KENEALY, Author of "Dr. Junet of Harley Street," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

THE ADVENTURES of JOHN JOHNS: a Novel. By FREDERIC CARREL, Author of "The City." Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

A TALE of the THAMES: a Novel. By J. ASHBY-STERRY, Author of "A Naughty Girl," "The Lazy Minstrel," &c. With Illustrations in Verse by the Author, and 15 Illustrations in Black and White by W. Hatherell, R.I. Large crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, price 6s.

BOOK-LOVERS' CLASSICS.

TWO NEW VOLUMES SHORTLY TO BE ADDED TO THIS VERITABLE EDITION DE LUXE.

* THE SENTIMENTAL JOURNEY. By LAURENCE STERNE. With over 80 New Illustrations by T. H. Robinson. Price 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.

* THE SCARLET LETTER. By NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE. With 8 New Full-Page Illustrations by T. H. Robinson. Price 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.

* The above Works are all re-set from new type, with title-pages in red and black, designed by J. Walter West, and are printed on choice paper, and bound in two styles:

(a) Cloth extra, gilt lettered on back, gilt top, and gilt panel on front, price 2s. 6d.

(b) Cloth extra, gilt lettered on back and front, gilt edges, and profusely decorated with gold on front and back, price 3s. 6d.

WRITE FOR A CATALOGUE OF THE BEST AND CHEAPEST REPRINTS IN THE WORLD.

London: BLISS, SANDS & CO., 12, Burleigh Street, Strand, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1329.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 20, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. [Established 1819. A large Clientele in all parts of the East.]

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 34, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C. desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for all the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MONTHLY CUMULATIVE INDEX to PERIODICALS. Indexes Subjects, Authors, Titles, Book Reviews, and Portraits. Specimen copy free.—Public Library, Cleveland, Ohio.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

LITERARY LADY, experienced Typist, desires AUTHORS MSS. to COPY, at 10d. per 1,000 words. Work neatly and expeditiously done.—"Typist," 27, Strathaine Road, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER.—GREAT BARGAIN £9 FOR £3.

Send for full particulars of above Splendid Machine, sold through liquidation. Quite new and perfect. A most beautiful, strong, practical machine. Anyone can learn in half an hour.

Messrs. KING, SELL, & RAILTON, WHOLESALE STATIONERS, 12, Gough Square, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M. care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

A THOROUGH Practical Horticulturist will be willing to arrange TERMS with any Publication for a SERIES of ARTICLES on any BRANCH of SCIENTIFIC or PRACTICAL HORTICULTURE.—T. H. S., 2, Primrose Cottage, Temple Ewell, near Dover.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.
(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1896. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Cranborne Road, Fulham, S.W.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 56, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

SALES BY AUCTION.

LIBRARY of the late ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Esq., Glasgow.

In the CROWN HALLS, 98, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW, on 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th, and 9th NOVEMBER, commencing each day at 12 o'clock prompt.

PUBLIC SALE of the FINE COLLECTION OF 3,000 RARE SCOTTISH HISTORICAL & ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS

(formed with great care and judgment by the late ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Esq. Sold by order of Messrs. MACDONALD & KINLAID, Writers, Agents for the Trustees.)

MORRISON, DICK & McCULLOCH will SELL by AUCTION as above. On view on Monday, 1st November, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on forenoon of each day of sale. Catalogues price 1s.; or post free on receipt of 12 Stamps on application to the Auctioneers, 98, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE (A CONSTITUENT COLLEGE of the UNIVERSITY of WALES).

The Council invites APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK.

Applications and testimonials should be sent on or before TUESDAY, NOVEMBER the 23rd, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Secretary and Registrar. University College, Cardiff, October 19th, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN CLASSICS.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above appointment. Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than SATURDAY, the 6th of NOVEMBER. The Candidate elected will be required to enter upon his duties as soon as possible. Further particulars may be obtained from

GEO. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

COACHING and VISITING TEACHERS.

Members of the UNIVERSITY ASSOCIATION of WOMEN TEACHERS, all fully qualified and EXPERIENCED University Women (Cambridge Triposes, including Double Firsts, Oxford Final Honour Schools, London M.A. and B.Sc.), are OPEN to ENGAGEMENTS.

SUBJECTS:—Mathematics, Classics, Literature, Philology, Medieval and Modern Languages, History, Economics, Mental and Moral Science, Natural Science.

LOCALITIES:—London, Cambridge, Oxford, Dorchester, Tunbridge Wells, Liverpool, Manchester, Bristol and neighbourhoods.

PREPARATION for Degree, Scholarship, and other Examinations. Classes taken at Schools. Great experience also in CORRESPONDENCE TUITION.

Hon. Sec., 48, Mall Chambers, Kensington, W.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPERON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilized world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to the care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS, 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 4, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

On November 1st will be published, price 1s., PART I. OF THE NEW, REVISED EDITION OF AN ILLUSTRATED MANUAL OF BRITISH BIRDS. By HOWARD SAUNDERS, F.L.S., F.Z.S., &c. To be completed in Twenty Parts, with about 370 Illustrations. GURNEY & JACKSON, 1, Paternoster Row. (Successors to Mr. VAN VOORST.)

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of

PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS

OF FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

N.B.—Two or Three Friends may unite in ONE SUBSCRIPTION, and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,

30—34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 341, BROMPTON ROAD S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW WORKS.

NOW READY.

MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From her Birth to her Flight into England. A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a few Documents hitherto Unpublished, and an Itinerary. By DAVID HAY FLEMING.
 "This is the best book yet written upon Mary, Queen of Scots.....This volume is a credit to Scottish scholarship, a model for historic biography, and a book that will bear reading more than once, for it is full of excellent matter well expressed."—Manchester Guardian.
 "The work will prove a mine of wealth by reason of its marvellous collection of documentary evidence, much of it for the first time published in an accessible form.....The reader will rise from its perusal feeling probably that for the first time he has fairly got a grip of the essentials in the Marian controversy."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS. By W. J. DAWSON, Author of "London Idylls," "The Makers of Modern English," &c.
THE EXPOSITOR'S GREEK TESTAMENT. Edited by the Rev. W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, M.A., LL.D., Editor of the Expositor, "Expositor's Bible," &c.

The FIRST VOLUME, of 880 pages, handsomely bound in buckram cloth, consists of The GOSPEL of ST. MATTHEW, The GOSPEL of ST. MARK, The GOSPEL of ST. LUKE, by the Rev. Professor A. B. BRUCE, D.D.; and The GOSPEL of ST. JOHN, by the Rev. Professor MARCUS DODS, D.D.
 "The Expositor's Greek Testament" will be on the plan of Dean Alford's Greek Testament, which had a long course of popularity and usefulness in this country. The first volume was published in 1849 and the last in 1881, and the work formed an epoch in Biblical studies in England, although it is now out of date. "The Expositor's Greek Testament" will seek to fill its place, and the contributors will include the most eminent Biblical scholars in Great Britain.
 The Greek Text will be given with notes and full critical apparatus, and will extend to four volumes. Although the whole work will be completed in about four years, the Editor and the Publishers are unable to bind themselves to definite dates for the appearance of separate volumes.

A FULL PROSPECTUS OF THIS IMPORTANT WORK IS NOW READY, AND WILL BE FORWARDED ON APPLICATION TO THE PUBLISHERS.

The price of each volume will be 28s., but for those who SUBSCRIBE IN ADVANCE the price for TWO VOLUMES will be THIRTY SHILLINGS.

"The book may be cordially recommended to students of the Greek Testament, to whom it will unquestionably prove an immense boon."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES of a PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. Based on Psychology and History. By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Authorised Translation, by the Rev. T. A. SEED.
 "It is a fascinating book, it is written with the greatest lucidity. Its arrangement is excellent, the book is alive in every sentence, it quivers with the intense emotion of a fine spirit, who has lived through the experience embodied in the book, who has fought his doubts and gathered faith."—Aberdeen Free Press.

THE GIFFORD LECTURES, 1897.—Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER of the WORLD. By ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D., Professor of Apologetics and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow.
 "His lectures are excellent literature, and will add to the reputation he already enjoys as a scholar and theologian."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

SIDELIGHTS from PATMOS. By GEORGE MATHESON, M.A., D.D., F.R.S.E., Minister of the Parish of St. Bernard's Edinburgh.

8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE SILENCE of GOD. By ROBERT ANDERSON, C.B., LL.D., Assistant Commissioner of Police in the Metropolis.
 "This is an impressive book.....Worthy of the deepest attention of all interested in the important subject which it treats."—Aberdeen Free Press.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A GUIDE to BIBLICAL STUDY. By A. S. PEAKE, M.A. With an Introduction by the Rev. A. M. FAIRBAIRN, D.D., Principal of Mansfield College, Oxford.
 "It may only be added in commending the work as evidently well fitted for the purposes for which it is intended, that it is written in a spirit of unquestionable reverence."—Scotsman

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

THE RITSCHLIAN THEOLOGY and the EVANGELICAL FAITH. By Rev. Prof. JAMES ORR, M.A., D.D. A new Volume of "The Theological Educator."

Fcap. 8vo, white and gold, 3s. 6d.

PERSONAL FRIENDSHIPS of JESUS. By J. R. MILLER, D.D., Author of "Making the Most of Life," "Things to Live For," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE CHURCH of ENGLAND BEFORE the REFORMATION. By the Rev. DYSON HAGUE, M.A.
 "In view of modern ecclesiastical controversies the work is at once instructive and timely."—Christian World.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHRONICLES of the PARISH of TAXWOOD. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. With Eight Illustrations.

NEARLY READY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE POTTER'S WHEEL. By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (Ian Maclaren), Author of "The Mind of the Master," "Beside the Bonnie Brier Bush," &c.
[Ready Monday.]

Imperial 8vo, 15s.

ON the THRESHOLD of CENTRAL AFRICA. A Record of Twenty Years' Pioneering in the Upper Zambesi, among the Banyai and Barotsi. By FRANCOIS COILLARD, Paris Evangelical Mission. Translated and Edited by C. W. MACKINTOSH, with Photogravure Portrait and numerous Illustrations from Photographs by the Author.

Crown 8vo, 6s., cloth.

DAVID LYALL'S LOVE STORY. By the Author of "The Land of the Leal."

Fcap. 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth.

A DOCTOR of the OLD SCHOOL. By IAN MACLAREN. With numerous Illustrations by Frederick C. Gordon.

Royal 32mo, cloth, in a neat small volume, 3s. 6d.

THE IAN MACLAREN YEAR-BOOK. Daily Readings from the Works of IAN MACLAREN.

Small folio, in neat box, 2s. 6d.

IAN MACLAREN KALENDAR. With Illustrations and Illustrative Borders.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., cloth elegant.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES. Collected from the British Weekly by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL. Printed in red and black.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIFE'S LOOK-OUT. The Autobiography of Sydney Watson.

Crown 8vo, 5s., cloth.

THE CLERICAL LIFE. A Series of Letters to Ministers. By JOHN WATSON, D.D., Prof. MARCUS DODS, D.D., Prof. JAMES DENNEY, D.D., Principal T. C. EDWARDS, D.D., W. ROBERTSON NICOLL, T. G. SELBY, T. H. DARLOW, M.A.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE MUSIC for the SOUL. Daily Readings for a Year, from the Writings of Rev. ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D. Selected and Arranged by Rev. GEORGE COATES.

LONDON: HODDER & STOUGHTON, 27, PATERNOSTER Row, E.C.

 On NOVEMBER 1st will be issued the FIRST MONTHLY PART, price 6d., of a

NEW MAGAZINE for YOUNG PEOPLE

Harper's Round Table

A SIXPENNY MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR YOUNG PEOPLE

The Stories will be from the pens of the best Authors, illustrated by notable Artists.

---

There will be Three Serials :

THE ADVENTURERS, by H. B. Marriott Watson

FOUR FOR A FORTUNE, by Albert Lee

THE COPPER PRINCESS, by Kirk Munroe

In addition to this Fiction, short and long, there will be Practical and Instructive Articles ; Narrative and Descriptive Articles ; Articles on Hunting, Fishing, and Sport of every kind ; Articles of Travel and Exploration ; and Articles on any number of interesting subjects.

MONEY PRIZES.

MONEY PRIZES.

HARPER'S ROUND TABLE will offer Money Prizes for Competitions in Short Stories, Camera Clubs, Comic Sketches, &c. The particulars and conditions governing these contests will be given in the November Number. This periodical will appear promptly on the first day of each month, clad in a cover designed by WALTER CRANE.

---

HARPER & BROTHERS, 45, ALBEMARLE STREET, LONDON, W. ; AND NEW YORK.

JOHN LANE'S LIST.

READY OCTOBER 22nd.

THE COMING of LOVE, and Other Poems.
By THEODORE WATTS-DUNTON. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

READY SHORTLY.

WHEN ALL MEN STARVE: showing how England hazarded her Naval Supremacy and the Horrors which followed the Interruption of her Food Supply. By CHARLES GLEIG. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE FAIRY CHANGELING, and Other Poems. By DORA SIGERSON (Mrs. CLEMENT BROOKER). Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

JUST PUBLISHED.

THE HAPPY EXILE. By H. D. Lowry, Author of "Make Believe" and "Women's Tragedies." With 6 Etchings by E. Philip Pimlott. (Arcady Library, No. 5.) Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE TREE of LIFE: a Novel. By Netta SYBETT, Author of "Nobody's Fault." Cr. 8vo, 6s.

NOW READY.

DERELICTS: a Novel. By W. J. Locke, Author of "At the Gate of Samaria." Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Mr. Locke tells us his story in a very true, a very moving, a very noble book.... If anyone can read the last chapter with dry eyes we shall be surprised.... 'Derelicts' is an impressive, an important book.... 'Yvonne' is a creation that any artist might be proud of." Daily Chronicle.

MAX: a Novel. By Julian Croskey. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"We are reminded at times of the methods of Mr. George Moore and at other times of Mr. Gissing, but these memories are never to the disadvantage of Mr. Croskey.... The opium scenes impress us as by far the best of their kind in English fiction." Daily Chronicle.

DEATH, the KNIGHT, and the LADY: a Ghost Story. By H. DE VERE STACPOOLE, Author of "Pierrot." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"Almost, if not entirely, worthy of the elder Hawthorne." Daily Chronicle.

A CHILD in the TEMPLE: a Novel. By FRANK MATHEW. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.
"A very delicately-wrought story, a very charming piece of literature." Daily Chronicle.

MIDDLE GREYNES: a Novel By A. J. DAWSON. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"Mr. Dawson proves himself a sure and powerful writer.... There is not a dull line in the book." Whitehall Review.

OEILIA: a Novel. By Stanley V. Matower, Author of "The Mirror of Music." Crown 8vo, 6s.

SYMPHONIES. By George Egerton. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE QUEST of the GOLDEN GIRL: a Romance. By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE. 6s.

PATIENCE SPARHAWK and her TIMES: a Novel. By GERTRUDE ATHERTON. 6s.

KING NOANETT: a Story of Devon Settlers in Old Virginia and the Massachusetts Bay. By F. J. STIMSON. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by Henry Sandham. 6s.

THE EARTH BREATH, and other Poems. By A. E. Square 32mo, 3s. 6d. net.

SELECTED POEMS of JAMES CLARENCE MANGAN. With a Biographical and Critical Preface by LOUISE IMOGEN GUINEY. Crown 8vo, 5s. net.
"The whole manner of the best poems is so startlingly like that of Edgar Poe that it is difficult to resist the suspicion that Poe somehow came across specimens of them, and turned the discovery to account with his usual unscrupulousness and power." Academy.

LYRICS. By John B. Tabb. Uniform with the Author's Poems. Square 32mo, 4s. 6d. net.

"After George Herbert, Robert Herrick, and Christina Rossetti it is not easy to think of a poet who has turned his devotion to a better account in verse than Mr. John B. Tabb.... His verse is always refined and his thought elevated. His book will be prized by lovers of devotional verse." Manchester Guardian.

POEMS. By Colonel John Hay. American Ambassador at the Court of St. James's. Including "Pike County Ballads." Authorised Edition, with Photogravure Portrait after Hollyer. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

CASTILIAN DAYS. By Colonel John Hay. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net.

THE FLIGHT of the KING: a Full, True, and Particular Account of the Escape of his Most Sacred Majesty King Charles II. after the Battle of Worcester. By ALLAN FEA. With 16 Portraits in Photogravure and nearly 100 other Illustrations. 21s. net.
"Puts to shame nine out of ten of the fashionable historical novels of the day." Daily Telegraph.

NEW ESSAYS TOWARDS a CRITICAL METHOD. By JOHN M. ROBERTSON. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.
"Mr. Robertson shows himself to be a sound and judicious critic." Pall Mall Gazette.

THE BODLEY HEAD, Vigo Street, London, W.

MESSRS. LONGMANS &amp; CO.'S LIST.

NEW STORY BY EDNA LYALL

NOW READY, crown 8vo, price 6s.

WAYFARING MEN.

By EDNA LYALL, Author of "Donovan," "Doreen," &amp;c.

COMPLETION OF THE LIFE OF DR. PUSEY.

LIFE of EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY, D.D. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D. Edited and Prepared for Publication by the Rev. J. O. JOHNSTON, M.A., Principal of the Theological College, Cuddesdon; the Rev. ROBERT J. WILSON, D.D., late Warden of Keble College; and the Rev. W. C. E. NEWBOIT, M.A., Canon and Chancellor of St. Paul's. With Portraits and Illustrations. 4 vols., 8vo. Vol. IV., 18s. * Vols. I. and II., 30s. Vol. III., 18s.

NEW VOLUME OF S. R. GARDINER'S "COMMONWEALTH."

HISTORY of the COMMONWEALTH and PROTECTORATE, 1649-1660. By SAMUEL RAWSON GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D. Vol. II. 1651-1664. With 7 Maps. 8vo, 51s.

NEW ROMANCE BY WILLIAM MORRIS.

THE WATER of the WONDROUS ISLES. By WILLIAM MORRIS, Author of "The Earthly Paradise." Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

"We may suppose that this is the last word of that true artist and courageous man who has left the world enriched in so many diverse ways—enriched, above all, by hope and by the example of his courage. Of his work in prose it is, perhaps, his masterpiece, for all the master's characteristics are here, and are at their best." Daily Chronicle.

THE Bampton Lectures for 1897.

ASPECTS of the OLD TESTAMENT: being the Bampton Lectures for 1897. By ROBERT LAWRENCE OTTLEY, M.A., successively Student of Christ Church and Fellow of Magdalen College, sometime Principal of the Pusey House. 8vo, 18s.

CHAUNCEY MAPLES, D.D., F.R.G.S., Pioneer Missionary in East Central Africa for Nineteen Years, and Bishop of Likoma, Lake Nyasa, A.D. 1896: a Sketch of his Life, with Selections from his Letters. By his SISTER. With 2 Portraits and a Map. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

RAMPOLLI: Growths from a Long-Planted Root. Being Translations New and Old, chiefly from the German, along with "A YEAR'S DIARY of an OLD SOUL." By GEORGE MAC DONALD, LL.D. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE DIARY of MASTER WILLIAM SILENCE: a Study of Shakespeare and of Elizabethan Sport. By the Right Hon. D. H. MADDEN, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Dublin. 8vo, 16s.

THE DWELLING HOUSE. By GEORGE VIVIAN POORE, M.D., Author of "Essays on Rural Hygiene." With 38 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ESSAYS on RURAL HYGIENE. Second Edition. With 6 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

THE BOOK of DREAMS and GHOSTS. By ANDREW LANG. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"In addition to such old favourites as the Tyrone and Wesley ghosts, Mr. Lang gives us some excellent new stories." Manchester Guardian.

MR. LANG'S CHRISTMAS BOOK FOR 1897.

THE PINK FAIRY BOOK. Edited by ANDREW LANG. With 67 Illustrations by H. J. Ford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

NEW NOVEL BY MRS. WALFORD.

IVA KILDARE: a Matrimonial Problem. By L. B. WALFORD, Author of "Mr. Smith," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MEMORIES and FANCIES: Suffolk Tales and other Stories, Fairy Legends, Poems, Miscellaneous Articles.. By the late Lady CAMILLA GURDON, Author of "Suffolk Folk-lore." Crown 8vo, 6s.

SONGS in MANY MOODS. by NINA F. LAYARD; and The WANDERING ALBATROSS, &c.: Poems. By ANNIE CORDER. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 382.—OCTOBER, 1897.—8vo, price 6s.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| 1. ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir.              | 6. THE IRISH LAND QUESTION.             |
| 2. FRIDTJOF NANSEN and the APPROACH to the POLE | 7. LIFE and WORKS of HAMPTON.           |
| 3. PRECIOUS STONES.                             | 8. THE PLAIN of THEBES.                 |
| 4. THE WARFARE of SCIENCE with THEOLOGY.        | 9. "OUR OWN TIMES" and OXFORD LIBERALS. |
| 5. IDEALS of ROMANCE.                           | 10. THE INTERNAL CRISIS in GERMANY.     |

THE ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, D.C.L., LL.D., and REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D.

No. 48.—OCTOBER, 1897.—Price 5s.

1. Articles.
CANON LAW in ENGLAND. By Professor MAITLAND, LL.D. III. William of Drogheda, and the Universal Ordinary.
VENETIAN DESPATCHES on the ARMADA and its RESULTS. By E. ARMSTRONG.
THE ADMINISTRATION of the NAVY from the RESTORATION to the REVOLUTION. By J. R. TANNER. II.
THE UNSTAMPED PRESS, 1815-1836. By J. HOLLAND ROSE.
HEINRICH VON TREITSCHKE. By J. W. HEADLAM.
2. Notes and Documents.—3. Reviews of Periodicals.—4. List of Recent Historical Publications.—5. Index.

LONGMANS, GREEN & CO., London, New York, and Bombay.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S LIST.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE.

A new Volume begins with the November Number of

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4d. each Number. Annual Subscription, 16s.

Some of the principal features for the coming year:—

TENNYSON AND HIS FRIENDS

The Poet's Life at Farringford, Isle of Wight.

THE CENTURY will publish in November and December some highly interesting sketches of Lord Tennyson, his wife, brothers and other members of his family and his more intimate friends. Tennyson's residence of "Farringford" is described in these papers; and unpublished reminiscences are given from several among those who enjoyed the companionship of the poet. The articles will be profusely illustrated, and are published with the consent of the present Lord Tennyson.

A New Novel of New York Life.

"GOOD AMERICANS"

By Mrs. BURTON HARRISON.

"GALLOPS"

Sketches of the Horse as a Member of Society.

By DAVID GRAY.

"The Ride of His Life."

"The Parish of St. Thomas Equinus."

"How the F.B.L. was Stumped." "Braybrooke's Double Event Steeplechase."

A New Novel by Dr. S. WEIR MITCHELL.

THE ADVENTURES OF FRANÇOIS

Foundling, Adventurer, Juggler, Fencing-Master, and Servant
During the French Revolution.

MAXIMILIAN IN MEXICO

A Woman's Reminiscences of the French Intervention.

By SARA Y. STEVENSON.

The November Number will be Ready on the 26th.

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE

THE NOVEMBER NUMBER (FIRST OF A NEW VOLUME) CONTAINS:

TENNYSON AND HIS FRIENDS

Mrs. Cameron, her Friends, and her Photographs. Tennyson, Watts, Taylor, Herschel. By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

THE STORY OF CHITRAL

The Heroic Defence for Seven Weeks by the British Garrison of Fort Chitral on the Indian Border. By CHARLES LOWE. Illustrated by R. CATON WOODVILLE.

ANDRÉE'S FLIGHT INTO THE UNKNOWN

Impressions and Photographs of an Eye-Witness. By JONAS STADLING.

AN INTERVIEW WITH SULTAN ABDUL HAMID

By the Honourable A. W. TERRELL, lately United States Minister at Constantinople.

&c. &c. &c. &c. &c. &c.

BY SIR ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S.

THE FOUNDERS of GEOLOGY.

A Series of Lectures by Sir ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S., Hon. D.O.L. Ox., &c. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE MAKERS of MODERN ROME.

In Four Books. 1. HONOURABLE WOMEN NOT A FEW. 2. THE POPES WHO MADE THE PAPACY. 3. LO POPOLO; and the Tribune of the People. 4. THE POPES WHO MADE THE CITY. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Illustrated by Henry P. Riviere, A.R.W.S., and Joseph Pennell. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES.

New Volumes. Edited by Professor BURY, Trinity College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

PHILIP II. of SPAIN. By Martin A. S. HUME.

WILLIAM the SILENT. By Frederic HARRISON.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

THE RALSTONS. By F. Marion CRAWFORD.

CASA BRACCIO. By F. Marion CRAWFORD.

SECOND SERIES NOW READY.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY (Second

Series), selected from the best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language, and arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 2s. 6d. net. First and Second Series, gilt backs, in box, 8s. net.

Illustrated by Rosie M. M. Pitman.

UNDINE. By F. De La Motte Fouqué.

With Sixty-three Illustrations, Initials, Chapter Headings, and Tailpieces by Rosie M. M. Pitman. Extra crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6s.

MRS. MOLESWORTH'S NEW VOLUME.

MISS MOUSE and her BOYS. By

Mrs. MOLESWORTH. Illustrated by L. Leslie Brooke. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 4s. 6d.

Globe 8vo, 3s. 6d.

IN A PLAIN PATH. Addresses to

Boys. By the Rev. W. J. FOXELL, M.A. (Lond.), Minor Canon of Canterbury Cathedral.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

LIFE and LETTERS of DEAN

CHURCH. Edited by his daughter, MARY C. CHURCH. With a Preface by the DEAN OF CHRIST CHURCH. Globe 8vo, 5s. [Eversley Series.]

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON:

A MEMOIR. By his Son.

With Photogravure Portraits of LORD TENNYSON, LADY TENNYSON, &c.

Facsimiles of portions of poems, and illustrations after pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscoe Gardner, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

'CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS'

A Story of the Grand Banks.

By RUDYARD KIPLING. Illustrated by I. W. Taber

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"That Mr. Kipling has drawn a picture of the 'banker's' life which no living writer could surpass is beyond dispute. . . . We must hasten to admit the humanity of 'Captains Courageous' and to take some account of the insurpassable sketches which here and there give ornament to it."

In 2 vols, globe 8vo, 10s.

POEMS of THOMAS HOOD. Edited, with Prefatory Memoir, by ALFRED AINGER. Vol. I, Serious Poems; Vol. II, Poems of Wit and Humour. With Vignettes and Portraits. [Eversley Series.]

MACMILLAN & CO. (LIMITED), ST. MARTIN'S STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND.

By J. H. CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland," &c. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.
 "Those who shrink from the hard scientific aspect and the cacophonous would-be Latinity of many works with titles of this kind need have no fear that these pleasant, gossip papers will be too severely botanical for them..... The reader will be hard to please, be he but a lover of nature, who does not find these pages interesting and full of charm."—The Times.

AFLOAT with NELSON; or, From

Nile to Trafalgar. By CHARLES H. EDEN, Author of "George Donington," "Queer Chums," &c., &c. With 10 Full-page Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.
 "A book of charming romance, based on facts, full of stirring episodes in the life of the nation's great naval hero, Nelson, that will fire the blood of every Briton, old or young. This book will be very suitable as a gift book to any one seeking the same for a young friend."—The Admiralty and Horse Guards' Gazette.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A SINLESS SINNER: a Novel. By

MARY H. TENNYSON, Author of "The Fool of Fate," "A Cruel Dilemma," &c. Crown 8vo.
[Ready October 27.]

A GIRL'S AWAKENING: a Novel.

By J. H. CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland." With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo.
 "A pretty and idyllic study is 'A Girl's Awakening.' Mr. Crawford's feeling for nature stands him in good stead, and the background of his picture in the Scottish village is harmoniously fitted with the central figures, Alan Forde and his companions, as one of George Eliot's own drawings."—Athenaeum.

POSSESSED of DEVILS. By Mrs.

HAROLD E. GORST. Crown 8vo.
 "It would be impossible to convey a better idea of this book than by quoting the few first and very frank lines of its introduction: 'This is a story of a woman for whom I offer no apology, whose character and morals it is impossible to defend, whose sentiments were abominable, whose principles were "nil".....but who, nevertheless, was in very truth a woman.'.....One may not endorse Mrs. Gorst's thesis, and yet acknowledge that she has exposed it with considerable talent.....The story ends with an unexpected and thrilling climax."—Morning Post.

A DRAWING-ROOM CYNIC. By

LORIN KAYE, Author of "Her Ladyship's Income." Art canvas, gilt top, crown 8vo.
 "In Lorin Kaye's brilliant novel, 'A Drawing-room Cynic,' the author sets out a plan—engaging in its simplicity—by which woman may bring a backward lover to the point."—ELLA HERWORTH DIXON in The Lady's Pictorial.
 "A witty, cynical, whimsical writer is the author of this most captivating story. 'A Drawing-room Cynic' is so much better a novel than the reader is likely to come across for some time, that he will find it advisable to begin it again when he has reached the end, for the book is a gallop from start to finish, and during the race he must miss some of the excellent things of which the story is full."—Queen.

THE WOOING of AVIS GRAYLE.

By CHARLES HANNAN, Author of "Chin Chin Wa," "The Captive of Peking," &c. Crown 8vo.
 "Since Sir William Brandon on the Bench was confronted by Paul Clifford in the dock by that master of romance the first Lord Lytton, we have not had so strong a situation in the same order as that of the husband of Avis Grayle and his sworn friend."—World.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

THE FATE of WOMAN: a Novel.

By FRANCIS SHORT, Author of "Val Constable's Career." Crown 8vo.
[Now ready.]

By the Author of "Miss Tudor."

FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY: a

Novel of the Graces. By JOHN LE BRETON. Crown 8vo.

"A powerful book, which can scarcely fail to interest and to impress everyone who reads it."—Scotsman (First Review).

THE RED PAINTED BOX: a Novel.

By MARIE CONNOR LEIGHTON, Author of "The Harvest of Sin," &c.; Joint-Author of "Convict 99," &c. Crown 8vo.

"It is only at pretty long intervals that stories so full of baffling mystery and powerful interest as 'The Red Painted Box' issue from the press. With cunning art the author weaves her plot, and the reader follows its windings with absorbed attention, spurred on from point to point by the pleasant but deluded belief that he or she has solved the mystery."—Scotsman.

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, W.C.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON &amp; FERRIER'S LIST.

THE RELIGION OF SHAKESPEARE.

Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN and

RECUSANT. By Rev. T. CARTER. With a Prefatory Note by Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.
 The SPECTATOR says: "Mr. Carter confines himself practically to a single inquiry—What was the religion of Shakespeare's father?—and he arrives, by arguments which seem to us convincing, at a conclusion opposed to that usually accepted. Of Shakespeare's own theological views he wisely says nothing, but is content to establish that the greatest of all poets was brought up in a Puritan home. Moreover, in the course of his investigation, he produces a great deal of matter that illustrates admirably the religious history of England under Elizabeth. Mr. Carter has by a clear-headed historical investigation added definitely to our knowledge about Shakespeare himself."

Volume I., now ready, price 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND SOCIAL PROGRESS:

A Sociological Study of Foreign Missions.

By JAMES S. DENNIS, D.D.,

Author of "Foreign Missions after a Century."

In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with upwards of 100 Full-Page Reproductions of Original Photographs.

The BRITISH WEEKLY says: "There is probably no volume in which there may be found so full and complete a survey of the work actually accomplished by Christian missions in the amelioration of the social conditions of mankind."

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

With Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

A HANDFUL OF SILVER.

By L. T. MEADE,

Author of

"A Girl in Ten Thousand," &c., &c.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES

Price 1s. 6d. each; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

NEW VOLS. NOW READY.

KIRKCALDY OF GRANGE.

By LOUIS A. BARBÉ.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

By Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s. 6d.

THE PLAGIARIST: a Novel. By WILLIAM MYRTLE.

LIBRARY EDITION, in 3 vols., large crown 8vo, art buckram, price 22s. 6d., with 160 Illustrations.

HOGARTH'S WORKS. With Life and Anecdotal Descriptions of the Pictures by JOHN IRELAND and JOHN NICHOLS.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, price 3s. 6d.

AFTER PENTECOST, WHAT? By the Rev. JAMES M. CAMPBELL, Author of "The Christ in Man." A Discussion of the Doctrine of the Holy Spirit in its Relation to Modern Christological Thought.

Large crown 8vo, price 5s.

THE GIST of JAPAN: the Islands,

their People, and Missions. By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M., Ph.D., of the Lutheran Mission, Saga, Japan. With 8 Full-page Illustrations.

"Besides giving a very full and succinct account of the progress of missionary work in Japan this book can be read with benefit by anyone wishing to become closer acquainted with this interesting country, its people and their beliefs and customs."—European Mail.

Popular Edition, Revised, with 16 Full-page Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

CHINESE CHARACTERISTICS. By

ARTHUR H. SMITH, D.D.

"The best book on the Chinese people."—Examiner.

MR. HAY HUNTER'S NEW STORY.—Price 3s. 6d.

JOHN ARMIGER'S REVENGE. By

P. HAY HUNTER, Author of "James Inwick," and Joint-Author of "My Ducats and my Daughter."

"The characterisation is excellent, the dialogue is brisk and humorous, and some of the situations are deeply pathetic."—Daily Mail.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS' PUBLICATIONS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND HIS SONS.

THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

Vols. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

Some London Press Opinions.

Athenaeum.—"A most interesting record of the doings of a famous publishing house." Spectator.—"The most interesting literary memoirs which have been published for many a day." Graphic.—"I have given enough of these remarkable volumes to show the reader what a mass of interesting and varied matter they contain.....Their literary, historical, and human value are incontestable." St. James's Gazette.—"A work which will rank among the masterpieces of modern biographical literature..... It reads like an admirable story, and is of far greater interest than most novels." Morning Post.—"The most valuable of recent contributions to the literary history of the period with which it deals." Pall Mall Gazette.—"Affords many a glimpse dessous les cartes in some of the most exciting literary episodes of the century." British Weekly.—"We do not hesitate to say that this, Mrs. Oliphant's last book, will outlive all the rest.....A book which cannot be criticised, a book which we can only give thanks for, a book of books." Daily News.—"The volumes bear the impress of some of Mrs. Oliphant's most remarkable qualities." Times.—"There are delightful disclosures of character.... Charming biographical glimpses." Globe.—"A permanent addition to the literary history of the century."

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND HIS SONS.

THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

Vol. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

Some Provincial Press Opinions.

Scotsman.—"Stirring and memorable achievements in letters and politics come to the light.....Mrs. Oliphant has bestowed her best work on a worthy subject." Manchester Guardian.—"It is impossible to give the reader any adequate idea of the wealth of these volumes in literary anecdote. Half the famous names of the century pass across these pages." Glasgow Herald.—"A fascinating chapter of literary history." Aberdeen Free Press.—"From start to finish they are written in the most captivating style, racy, humorous, piquant, full of sage experience and catholic sympathy." Liverpool Daily Post.—"Who so would revel in quaint anecdotes of all the literary celebrities whose names have come down to posterity with more or less of lustre, let him betake himself to these volumes." Western Morning News.—"In a great measure the history of English literature in one of its brightest and most eventful epochs." Yorkshire Post.—"More romantic and fascinating than the best of her excellent novels."

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND HIS SONS.

THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS.

By Mrs. OLIPHANT.

Vols. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Gold and Dross .....	317
St. Francis of Assisi .....	318
Elizabethan Manners and Pastimes .....	319
India, Social and Political .....	320
Birds, Flowers, and Trees .....	321
The Ascendency of the Novel .....	322
BRIEF MENTION .....	323
NOTES AND NEWS .....	325
EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM: IV., THE WITHHELD POEMS OF TENNYSON .....	328
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: III., A NOVELIST .....	327
PARIS LETTER .....	327
SOME BOOKMEN OF YESTERDAY .....	328
THE BOOK MARKET .....	329
THE WEEK .....	330
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED .....	330
CORRESPONDENCE .....	331
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED .....	332
FICTION SUPPLEMENT .....	31-36

REVIEWS.

GOLD AND DROSS.

Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics. Selected from the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language, and Arranged, with Notes, by Francis T. Palgrave, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Second Series. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE first series of The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics has become an almost national possession. With a few surprising omissions, and a larger number of surprising inclusions, it, nevertheless, brought together a selection of English lyrical poetry which every household was happy in possessing. With the poetry of the past an anthologist has, to a certain degree, his work already done for him. The public has made judgment: it is for him to execute it. For this task Mr. Palgrave had aptitude; and he had, too, the advice of his friend, Lord Tennyson. We do not make Tennyson a party to the omission of Keats's "Grecian Urn" and the "Kubla Khan" of Coleridge from the First Edition of the former volume, for we know, from the recent Memoir, that he did not even support the omission of Byron's "Isles of Greece." Still, he "kindly supervised" the First Series, according to the dedication of the Second. This volume, then, though it comes from the same honoured editorial hand, comes to us with a difference. We wish we could renew, in its regard, the gratitude given over a long course of years to Mr. Palgrave for his first gift. But that is impossible. The present selection will only baffle and distress everybody who believed, as we did, in Mr. Palgrave's preparedness for his task. Its sins of omission and of commission alike are mortal and past blotting out.

Mr. Palgrave tells us that even in his earlier volume, which reached down to the lyrics of 1850, he wished to include "the later-risen of our stars." That plan proved impossible. Hence this volume, which is set forth as containing a selection of "the finest work of our greater Victorian poets, so far as my choice may have been happy." Such is the programme at first; but it becomes modified, a little later in the Preface, by allusions to the difficulty of judging the work of "later singers whose course is not yet run"—a difficulty which, in our opinion, the critic lives to face.

"Many, indeed, and bright," says Mr. Palgrave, "are the blossoms springing up among us, though nightshade and yewberries be not absent. It were, however, presumption if we attempted with the microscope of criticism to classify these growths, or decide whether they belong to the children's 'Adonis Garden' of cut flowers, or the true immortal amaranth."

But this is precisely the "presumption" on which the very existence of the anthologist depends. He is there to make the choice; and his occupation is gone if high poetry has not its acknowledgment from him, be the poet living or dead. We could, however, understand if we did not approve the programme apparently indicated by Mr. Palgrave. Strange to say, however, it is not his programme after all. The sentence quoted appears to be but a sop thrown out in a preface, otherwise also slightly unintelligible, to the omitted poets. Mr. Palgrave has included, as a matter of fact, living men—a living Duke—among his immortals. The first name on his index is that of the present Duke of Argyll. A little lower down we come on Sir Lewis Morris. One specimen of Sir Lewis's muse suffices; but we are treated to two specimens in the case of a Mr. R. Wilton. The name being unknown to us, we turned, "impatient as the wind," to hear a new voice coming to us with the commendation of Mr. Palgrave. This is what it said:

"ON A PHOTOGRAPH.

"Since through the open window of the eye
The unconscious secret of the soul we trace,
And character is written on the face,
In this sun picture what do we decry?
An artless innocence, and purpose high
To tread the pleasant paths of truth and grace,
To tend each flower of duty in its place,
Smile with the gay and comfort those who sigh.
Dear maiden, let a poet breathe a prayer
That God may keep thee still in all thy ways,
Spotless in heart as those [thou] in face art fair;
And may the gentle current of thy days
Make music even from the stones of care,
And murmur with an undersong of praise."

Such a verse has no place in an anthology of "best poems in the English language" of any period, least of all of this. In so saying we express no mere preference, but a critical certitude. In such an anthology we must have only poems that we can recur to again and again, "heart-remembered song." Nobody will wish to read this luckless sonnet a second time. Mr. Palgrave himself has shirked the task, or he had not have printed it with the error we have marked.

Then, there is Mr. Aubrey de Vere, from whose voluminous writings Mr. Palgrave has rather cleverly succeeded in choosing some lines that are no more poetry than are his prose "Recollections." Yet Mr. Palgrave, in this case at least, might have had a guide to replace that which impelled or restrained his hand in its earlier efforts. One lyric, for instance, by Mr. Aubrey de Vere, has elicited from Mr. Swinburne some memorable praise:

"I know of no lyric to be matched against that [one of Sir Henry Taylor's] for charm and sweetness, except that of Mr. Aubrey de Vere's, which is the one lyrical poem in our language not written by Shelley, yet possible or even likely to be taken for Shelley's by a perfect judge and faithful student of the supreme lyric poet of England."

There is a ring about that, whether you like it or not, better than poor talk about the "presumption" of judging contemporary poetry, which you then do go on to judge, and judge amiss. Of the representation of another living poet, Mr. Frederick Tennyson, by four poems, we should have no need to remark were not that insertion stamped by Mr. Palgrave's omissions as a mere exercise of personal love for the Tennysons. For think what those omissions are! There is room for "George Douglas Campbell, eighth Duke of Argyll," and none for Mr. Meredith, in this inn, that hangs the lyre for its sign. Inside its parlours you shall search in vain for others of high name too; for Mr. W. E. Henley, Mr. Austin Dobson, Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. T. E. Brown, Mr. W. B. Yeats, Mr. William Watson, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. Frederick Myers, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mrs. Meynell—but the list is too long to be taken to its just limits.

Again, if we go backward with Mr. Palgrave, and take the case of "Those great dead of the Victorian line,

Who passed, who passed, but cannot pass away,
For England feels them in her blood like wine,"

we are not any more at our ease in his company. There are the familiar melodies of Tennyson, of course; but with them, and as if they ranked beside them in the anthologist's mind, are a large proportion of those later poems all made up of the Laureate's manner, but lacking his magic. The number of the Tennyson poems is twenty-three. Coventry Patmore has a representation of ten; Browning, of fourteen; Mrs. Browning, of nine; Matthew Arnold, of thirteen; Rossetti, of twelve; his sister, of fifteen; William Barnes, of nine; Walter Savage Landor and Dobell (iniquitously), of only one; R. S. Hawker and Jean Ingelow (inadequately), of also only one; Lord Houghton, of six; and Arthur O'Shaughnessy, of seventeen! These, with the exception of the last name, are names of note. Their work could not by any possibility be omitted from the volume; and, as to the particular judgment used in the selections made from it, if we differ, as we usually do from Mr. Palgrave, we may agree to differ. The anthologist who could parley with Lord Houghton while he cuts Sydney Dobell off with a shilling, is not our anthologist; but he may, perhaps, be somebody's. But in his inclusion of Mr. O'Shaughnessy, we venture to say he is nobody's but his own. To have inserted one piece, say, the "Song" on p. 203, where he is at his best, had been adventurous enough; it could pass in a book where six pieces of Lord Houghton's kept it company, though it could not be borne in a book where, too, Landor has only one poem, and "Rose Aylmer" not that. It is not merely that there are seventeen pieces, vague in sense and void even of sound, by this very minor singer—a greater number than we get of Rossetti's or Browning's—but that some of them are interminably long. One piece, for instance, "In Love's Eternity," has twelve mortal verses, of which this is a sample:

"Ah, yes! but your love was a fair magic toy
That you gave to a child, who scarce deigned
To glance at it—forsook it for some passing joy,
Never guessing the charm it contain'd;
But you gave it, and left it, and none could destroy
The fair talisman where it remain'd."

If this piece had been cited in illustration of the most wretched versification and the most jostling syllables allied to vapid fancy in Victorian verse, we could have been at one with Mr. Palgrave. Instead, he gives it triumphantly to sign his belief that "Arthur O'Shaughnessy's metrical gift seems to me the finest, after Tennyson's, of any of our later poets." We leave the matter with no solution, for none offers itself. It cannot be a joke. We must, therefore, suppose it to be a whim.

Coming to the names of less-known poets among those who have passed away, we have from Mr. Palgrave a selection as remarkable of its kind as that earlier seen in the case of living poets. You would think it difficult to match the exclusion of Mr. Meredith and the inclusion of the Mr. Wilton already noted. But Mr. Palgrave is equal to the feat. He gives us verses by Mr. Thomas Ashe, Mr. John Clare, Mr. Alfred Domett, Mr. Johnson-Cory, Mr. Kendall, Prof. Romanes, Mr. Charles Whitehead—and none by Robert Louis Stevenson. There is no verse by these included men that we care to quote—they have not a single line of poetry to their unremembered names. We are led to presume, at times, that the verses have been selected, not with any view to their poetical quality, but because they set forth some moral truth or illustrate some amiable domesticity. But great poetry has done it greatly; and there was great poetry to be got from Victorians who are not here. There was poetry, too, which, if it was not great, was expert, delicately poised, clearly cut, and alive; but it is missing from these pages; and the reader of Mr. T. Ashe's "Old Jane," for instance, is left to wonder why, if that sort of sentiment is wanted, it is not given in the words of a real master-in-little, such as Mr. Locker-Lampson, another absentee, for example.

Let us not end, however, on the irritation that the book provokes by the double and dismal failure of its contents to fulfil the promise of its title-page. To get out of our ears the eighth-rate verses we here encounter, we recall some of those omitted poems to which allusion has been made, and pass them on to the reader. Here, for instance, is that lyric by Sir Henry Taylor (and he, too, has no place in the new Golden Treasury) which Mr. Swinburne mentions in company with Mr. De Vere's—we give the two lyrics together. The first is the song that Elena sings at the opening of the Fifth Act of "Philip van Artevelde":

"Quoth tongue of neither maid nor wife
To heart of neither wife nor maid,
'Lead we not here a jolly life
Betwixt the shine and shade?'"

"Quoth heart of neither maid nor wife
To tongue of neither wife nor maid,
'Thou wagg'et, but I am worn with strife,
And feel like flowers that fade.'"

And this is the lyric of Mr. Aubrey de Vere:

"When I was young, I said to sorrow,
'Come, and I will play with thee.'
He is near me now all day,
And at night returns to say,
'I will come again to-morrow,
I will come and stay with thee.'"

"Through the woods we walk together,
His soft footsteps rustle nigh me.
To shield an unregarded head
He hath built a winter shed;
And all night in rainy weather
I hear his gentle breathings by me."

To the lines of these two poets, shining in the praise of their brother poet, we add, of our own motion, two among the briefest poems which no Victorian anthology should endure to be without—golden poems against the dross of this misnamed "Golden Treasury." The first is "The Celestial Surgeon," by Robert Louis Stevenson:

"If I have faltered more or less
In my great task of happiness;
If I have moved amongst my race,
And shown no glorious morning face;
If beams from happy human eyes
Have moved me not; if morning skies,
Books, and my food, and summer rain
Knocked on my sullen heart in vain:
Lord, Thy most pointed pleasure take,
And stab my spirit broad awake;
Or, Lord, if too obdurate I,
Choose Thou, before that spirit die,
A piercing pain, a killing sin,
And to my dead heart run them in!"

With the bare quotation of a second poem we bring to a head our protest against Mr. Palgrave's omissions. This might be "The Cradle" of Mr. Austin Dobson, or "The Bristol Figure" of Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse, or another, and yet another—they crowd into memory gay and fast—but it shall be these lovely lines of Mr. W. E. Henley:

"When you are old and I am passed away—
Passed, and your face, your golden face, is gray—
I think, whate'er the end, this dream of mine,
Comforting you, a friendly star will shine
Down the dim slope where still you stumble and stray."

"So may it be: and so dead Yesterday,
No sad-eyed ghost, but generous and gay,
May serve you memories like almighty wine,
When you are old."

"Dear Heart, it shall be so, under the sway
Of death the past's enormous disarray Lies hushed and dark. Yet though there come no sign,
Live on well pleased: immortal and divine,
Love shall still tend you, as God's angels may,
When you are old."

A GREAT SAINT.

St. Francis of Assisi: his Times, Life, and Work. By W. J. Knox Little, M.A. (Isbister & Co.)

CANON KNOX LITTLE has written an excellent book; and yet an Anglican divine can never be a thoroughly satisfying biographer of a Roman Catholic saint. The ideal biographer, from one point of view, is the humanist sceptic, such as Renan, who makes a clean sweep of the "miraculous" or "supernatural" as the inevitable delusion of certain minds and times, but who takes an enthusiastic delight in the beauty, the humanity, the greatness of the natural man and his story. A notable instance of such treatment is Mrs. Cunninghame Graham's Life of Saint Teresa. From another point of view, the ideal biographer is the wise and learned Roman Catholic, whose faith is identical with his hero's, but who writes with an historical sense and a sense of humour, as well as with an eye to edification. These, it may be urged, are extremes; surely the via media, the aurea mediocritas, of a prudent Anglicanism were preferable? Not so; for it implies an incessant bringing of questions to the test of an irrelevant standard, or at least of a standard frequently inadequate for the purpose. For example: Canon Knox Little writes with a firm faith in spiritual influences and manifestations, powers and attributes, operative in the material world. His theology and philosophy allow him—if, indeed, they do not compel him—to believe in the possibility of miracle and vision throughout the entire time and space of Christianity. He is critical, and can recognise here a pious legend, there an afterthought or late tradition, basing his judgment upon just such grounds as a Roman Catholic would use. But when it comes to a question of distinctive Roman dogma the case is altered: Anglicanism being for an Anglican writer a priori true, he is bound to reject miracles or visions which affirm Romanism. Yet the evidence may bear every mark of authenticity. Thus, St. Francis, having asked in a vision a great favour of Christ, received that favour, but was bidden by Christ to go to "My Vicar," the supreme earthly authority, for its earthly ratification. It is impossible for Canon Knox Little to believe that Christ should call the Pope His Vicar: he can only say, "There can be little doubt of the bona fides of St. Francis in his belief in this," and there leave the matter. But that is precisely what a Renan would say of any vision of St. Francis: it is what a sympathetic Nonconformist would say of any vision which testified to sacramental and sacerdotal doctrine. To accept no miraculous occurrence which is incompatible with the writer's own tenets, while accepting those which are reconcilable, is to introduce an element of private judgment, which induces historical and theological chaos. "To write the history of a religion, a man must have believed it once, but believe it no longer": that famed saying of Renan has its portion of distorted truth. We would rather say he must either believe entirely or entirely disbelieve. But partial belief is full of peril to the historian of a church or the biographer of a saint. Canon Knox Little shows an admirable and most gracious delicacy of tone and touch, yet throughout his pages we are forced to remember, if we have awhile forgotten it, that he is not at one with St. Francis as Newman or Ozanam was at one. There is a rich sympathy, but not a full sympathy. He cannot sympathise with the Francis who held that from the pre-eminence of the Pope "flows the whole strength of the mystical body, and all power proceeds," and who bids his brethren "be ever faithful and submissive to the prelates and priests of the Holy Roman Church."

The three features of St. Francis upon which the writer most insists are his common sense, his statesmanship, and what, for want of a better phrase, we may call the beauty of his holiness—his joyousness, courtesy, delicacy, graciousness, those notes of the Franciscan spirit. Upon this last feature one could not dwell too long, especially in this our un-Franciscan day, when even "The Lady Poverty" is vulgarised and "pauperised."

"Oh, is this she

Whom Francis met, whose step was free,
Who with Obedience carolled hymns,
In Umbria walked with Chastity?"

He was enamoured of life in its pleasant looks and ways, as a thing to be treated with decencies of respect: Nature has her rights and claims upon our "courtesy," our reverence, and regard. The birds, the flowers, the rain and dew, light and air, are parts of the Divine Beauty made sensible to us; great wonders, delights, and standing miracles of the Divine Love; between them and us should be exchanges of recognition. About to be tortured by the ghastly surgery of the Middle Age, he appeals to the red-hot iron: "Brother fire, you are the most fair of creatures; be good to me; you know how I have loved you; be courteous, then, to-day!" For he would not see ugliness in anything but sin, and the beauty of the world was honourable in his eyes, a thing both adoring and adored. A gaiety and merry ardour of soul were to him the Christian disposition: innocence and gratitude making melody unto the Lord. His heart "dances with the daffodils" and carols with the lark; his bruised and bleeding body thrills with joy for the brightness of the sun, the freshness of the waters, and he becomes God's minstrel straightway. To this sincere and saintly Rousseau, this catholic and apostolic Wordsworth, a "return to nature" formed the very riches of his poverty: he was more radiantly one with Nature than Thoreau or Whitman. More simply and sweetly even than Blake, he saw "heaven in a wild flower." Well might Dante, celebrating "those lovers"—Francis and Poverty—sing of "La lor concordia, e i lor lieti sembianti, L'amore a maraviglia, e'l dolce sguardo";

for Francis and his first fellows seem to us, upon their Umbrian hills, in all their ascetic self-discipline and self-denial, more goodly and blithe than the fair Greek horsemen of the Parthenon; more exhilarating and exultant in their infinite content, more perfect in their rapture. Yet each said daily, what Saint Teresa was to sing later, "que muero porque no muero": each felt, what Izaak Walton felt at the nightingale's song, "Lord, what music hast Thou provided for the saints in heaven, when Thou affordest bad men such music on earth!" and longed to fit himself for the perfection of which earth's excellence was the shadow. They solved the apparent antagonism between ascetic penance and natural joy: the Jesuits of the Middle Age, they made religion winning, while they kept it stern. They liberated the "little people," the poor ones of the world, from self-contempt, from the dismal squalor and tedium of sins, from sick despair and lassitude, "putting a new song" in their mouths, and setting before their eyes the new vision of the beauty of holiness. Wilful sadness, which "is named in surplised schools, Tristitia," or the kindred sin of Acedia, which Saint Bernard calls animi quidam languor et torpor, was banished by the simple Franciscan fervours and noble innocences: Francis was a "saviour of society," leavening it with love. "Upon his lips, as with a child's cry," says Leo XIII., "sweetly murmured the young speech of his own land": everything about him seems marvellously and deliciously fresh, new, young, radiant, like the first flashing waters of a mountain spring: "the dew of his birth is of the womb of the morning." Arthur Hallam was well warranted in asserting that "... by the institution of the Mendicant Orders, a fresh impulse was given to the human heart, ever parched and dying of thirst when religion is made a mockery. St. Francis has a claim upon our literary gratitude, rather more substantial, though less precise in form, than his reputed invention of the versi sciolti. It seems clear that the spirit awakened in Italy, through his means and those of St. Dominic, prepared the Italian mind for that vigorous assertion of Christianity as the head and front of modern civilisation, the perpetually presiding genius of our poetry, our art, and our philosophy."

Upon the Saint's common sense and statesmanship, his practical abilities and originating or controlling aptitudes, Canon Knox Little has wise words to say. Few forms of condescension to a saint are so irritating as the patronage which pats him on the back for his " quaintness," his "picturesqueness," his æsthetic value generally; a saint, in this kind of appreciation, is a harmless lunatic who exists to set going pretty legends, a pious fool of charming imbecility. So we have St. Teresa constantly described as hectic and hysterical, a crazy ecstatic, swooning from vision into vision, hopelessly overstrained and unbalanced; whereas she was an Elizabeth, a Maria Theresa, a Catharine of Russia, in her practical energies and dominating supremacy of will, with a sense of humour that verges, to the modern mind, upon irreverence. And so with St. Francis. His consuming faith, filled with "the folly of the Cross," flung him upon ventures which would seem midsummer madness to the average vestryman or churchwarden; but, he succeeded. The story of his foundation is a record of his instinctive capacity for direction, management, decision. There is no trace in him of the fanatic, ever in excesses and extremes. His very asceticism, so horrifying to Matthew Arnold, was always under the control of his discretion; his mortifications never passed into an Hindu luxury of self-torture, nor would he suffer it in others. Like most of the genial, smiling, caressing saints, all gentleness and mirth toward others, he was severe and pitiless to himself, to his own body, "Brother Ass"; but he was nothing of a groaning, insensate devotee, with Manichean instincts. Gaudeamus was his word, when his discipline was bloodiest. In all his dealings with others, from popes to peasants, he displayed tact and address of the kind which would have made him a worthy successor to his father's business; and such tact, like every other natural gift of his first youth, he consecrated to his work for souls and sinners. He was, indeed, "seraphic"; but that is not quite the same thing as fanatic, nor was the yearning of his face a straining after the moon.

Written independently of M. Sabatier's Life, Canon Knox Little's stands well by its side; less minute, but scarce less trust worthy, and written with an equal grace and restrained fervour of style. Divers points of controversy occur to us, but none of prime importance; for upon such debated matters as the Stigmata and the Portiuncula Indulgence we are in complete agreement with the Canon, who finds the weight of evidence in favour of the accepted traditions. It is interesting to note that M. Sabatier, who in his Life entirely discredited the evidence for the latter, has since, upon the production of fresh evidence, given in his complete adhesion. One point, not Christian but classical, may be worth a word. Canon Knox Little writes, that Propertius was born at Bevagna, the ancient Mevania. Nine towns have been assigned to him for his birthplace; but after studying the twenty pages upon the patrie de Properce in the Etudes sur Properce of M. Plessis, we feel that that scholar is right when he says: "De ces discussions je conclus pour ma part, avec presque tous nos contemporains, que Properce est né à Assise, ou tout auprès d'Assise." It is pleasant to associate Assisi with Propertius and St. Francis, as we associate Aquino with Juvenal and St. Thomas. The universal fame of Assisi began "ferre agoo in seynt Fraunceys tyme," as Piers Plowman says of charity among friars: but the charity of St. Francis would not grudge the wild, sad Pagan poet a place among the great Assisienses.

ELIZABETHAN MANNERS AND PASTIMES.

The Diary of Master William Silence: a Study of Shakespeare and of Elizabethan Sport. By the Right Hon. D. H. Madden. (Longmans & Co.)

GREAT men of law have ere this day unbent the bow in Shakespearean criticism. Lord Campbell wrote a learned treatise on "Shakespeare's Legal Acquirements," and now comes Mr. D. H. Madden, Vice-Chancellor of Dublin University and ex-Attorney-General of Ireland, with a goodly volume for the illustration of yet another side of that marvellous personality which has tasked the wits of three centuries in its imperfect appreciation. Truth to say, the discovery that Mr. Madden has cast his study of Elizabethan sport into a narrative form, and has professed to draw that narrative from the diary of a Shakespearean character, may well at the first sight inspire some alarm. This way has lain the ruin of many a promising reputation—Landor's, notably. But then Mr. Madden has done the thing so well, with such absolute discretion, with such a determination not to offend or to affront the impossible competition, and at the same time with such an admirable humour and such a double portion of the master's spirit, that fears are soon dismissed, and the surrender to the writer's fantasy is complete. The thread of story, indeed, is of the slightest, a little love intrigue, after the manner of the Fenton and Anne Page motive in the "Merry Wives of Windsor," just serving Mr. Madden as an excuse for the introduction of his delightful and vivid pictures of Elizabethan manners and Elizabethan pastimes.

In sober seriousness he sets himself to describe a number of typical incidents of Elizabethan sport, with horse, hawk, and hound, in each case carefully explaining the technicalities and terminology used, and supplying a wealth of illustration both from Shakespeare's plays and from contemporary writers, such as William Turberville and Gervase Markham. This task he performs with admirable precision, but without pedantry. His weight of learning sits upon him lightly, like a flower. The information he gives you is exact and exhaustive, but it is given in literary form, and not after the fashion of a dictionary or encyclopædia.

The number of critical and biographical points which Mr. Madden raises in connexion with Shakespeare and sport is very large. We can here only deal with a few of them. Of Shakespeare's intimate acquaintance with sport—with some sports, at any rate, since for horse-racing and for angling he does not seem to have cared—there can be no doubt. The language of sport is always on his lips, in season and out of season. It furnishes his similes, colours his metaphors, and gives point to his puns.

"His mind was at all times so possessed with images and recollections of English rural life, that he refrained not from attributing a like possession to men of all sorts and conditions, regardless of time, place, or circumstance. Prospero sets on his spirits in hunter's language, by names well known in Gloucestershire kennels. Ulysses compares Achilles sulking in his tent to a hart keeping thicket. The fallen Cæsar suggests to Antony a noble hart, whose forest was the world, bayed and slain by blood-stained hunters. Titus Andronicus proclaims a solemn hunting after the fashion of Gloucestershire. Egyptians, Athenians, and Romans are intimately acquainted with the coursing matches of Cotswold. Roderigo of Venice and Pandarus of Troy speak the language of English sportsmen. Theseus hunts the country round Athens with hounds as thoroughly English as was the horse of Adonis. The flowers of Warwickshire blossom in every clime, and we encounter in the most unlikely places the familiar characters of rural life—under a pent-house at Messina, in the cottage of a Bohemian shepherd, and in the hall of an Italian noble."

Every Elizabethan playwright spoke to some extent the language of sport, but Mr. Madden thinks that we can discern in the nature of Shakespeare's sporting allusions a particular and intimate knowledge of kennel, mews, and stable quite beyond his fellows. Ben Jonson gets it all up from book; Shakespeare writes with the easy assurance of practical knowledge earned in boyhood beside wood or stream. Upon this fact Mr. Madden proceeds to base a criterion or test by which the genuine work of Shakespeare may be distinguished from that of other men in whom this particular cunning of woodcraft is not to be found. Among these, as fortune will have it, are the four men whose writing most needs disentangling from his: Marlowe, Greene, Kyd—though Ben Jonson did call him "Sporting Kyd"—and Fletcher. The test, we think, is a genuine and a useful one, and Mr. Madden applies it with ingenuity. In a highly interesting appendix he points out the manner in which, when re-writing old work, such as The Taming of a Shrew or The Contention of York and Lancaster, Shakespeare is constantly modifying the sporting imagery, correcting it, amplifying it, making it life-like. Here is an admirable example:

"In the First Part of the Contention the Queen has a hawk on her fist:

'Queen.—My lord, how did your grace like this last flight?

But as I cast her off the wind did rise,
And 'twas ten to one, Old Ione had not gone out.

'King.—How wonderful the Lordes workes are on earth,

Even in those silly creatures of His hands!

Vncle Gloster, how his youre hawk did sore,
And on a sodaine soute the Partridge downe!

'Suffolk.—No maruele, if it please your Maiestie,

My Lord Protector's Hawke done towre so well;

He knowes his maister loues to be aloft."

"This was not to Shakespeare's mind. Partridge-hawking might be good sport, but high-flying emulation is best illustrated by the 'mountey,' when a cast of haggard falcons are flown at the heron or mallard, and not by the downward swoop of the falcon on the partridge. And so he re-wrote the passage thus:

'Queen.—Believe me, lords, for flying at the brook,

I saw not better sport these seven years' day:

Yet, by your leave, the wind was very high;

And, ten to one, old Joan had not gone out.

'King.—But what a p int, my lord, your falcon made,

And what a pitch she flew above the rest!

To see how God in all His creatures works!

Yea, man and birds are fain of climbing high.

'Suffolk.—No marvel, an it like your majesty,

My lord protector's hawks do tower so well;

They know their master loves to be aloft,

And bears his thoughts above his falcon's pitch."

This is good criticism, acute and fruitful, and there is much of this kind in the book. But, after all, the best thing there is not the criticism. It is the breezy out-door temper of the thing, the contribution to the understanding of the out-door side of the most out-door poet the world has ever seen. This, more than the subtle criticism, more than the fulness of learning, more than the fine literary style, is what leads us to give Mr. Madden's book such a special welcome and to place it on the shelf among the choicer interpreters of the great dramatist.

INDIA, SOCIAL AND POLITICAL.

The North-Western Provinces of India: Their History, Ethnology, and Administration. By W. Crooke. (Methuen & Co.)

SINCE his recent retirement from the Bengal Civil Service, Mr. Crooke has displayed an almost phenomenal literary activity in connexion with those parts of the Indian Empire with which he has been so long and so honourably associated. His monumental work, in four large volumes, on The Tribes and Castes of the North-Western Provinces and Oudh (Calcutta, 1896) was followed early in the present year by The Popular Religion and Folklore of Northern India, a first and much smaller edition of which had appeared in Allahabad in 1894. And now we have to notice a most comprehensive and satisfactory treatise on one of the largest and most densely peopled political divisions of British India. It covers even more extensive ground than might be gathered from the title, as in the North-Western Provinces is now included the former kingdom of Oudh—at least, for all administrative purposes. Hence, the total area of the region under consideration exceeds 107,000 square miles, with a population rapidly approaching fifty millions. Moreover, many historical and social questions are discussed which have a direct bearing on other parts of the Peninsula. Such are, for instance, the Hindu and Muhammadan religions, the institution of caste, land tenure, fiscal matters, Aryan, Jât, and Rajpût migrations, none of which subjects could be treated with exclusive reference to any particular division of the country. The consequence is that Mr. Crooke has given us a book, which may without exaggeration be described as a thoroughly trustworthy essay on all the more important political and social questions directly or indirectly affecting the past and present administration of the whole of India. But it must be added that the work suffers somewhat from this all-embracing character. Notably the geographical and historical parts, which occupy the first two chapters, are, perhaps necessarily, dealt with in a summary way, and, in fact, have been introduced only for the purpose of explaining "the environment of the people." But viewed as a whole, we have nothing but praise for a work, the study of which leaves the impression that the Government of India would be immensely facilitated were some of the more intelligent members of the Civil Service to follow Mr. Crooke's example by embodying their experiences in similar volumes after retiring from their official career. Another excellent result of such a practice would be the gradual removal of the widespread ignorance, which continues to prevail in England, regarding the social and economic conditions, as well as the political relations, of the Indian Empire. How few, for instance, are aware that the re-marriage of widows is the rule and not the exception, even where the Hindus are predominant, and consequently that the status of widows is not such a crying grievance as is commonly supposed.

"The prevailing belief that nearly all Hindu widows remain celibate for the rest of their days is utterly opposed to the facts. Recent inquiries show that out of a population of 40,000,000 of Hindus, 9,000,000, or 24 per cent., prohibit widow marriage, while 30,000,000, or 76 per cent., both permit and even encourage the practice. It need hardly be said that widow marriage is freely permitted by Muhammadans. As a matter of fact, among all but the very highest castes, every young widow finds another mate, and the levirate or custom by which the younger brother-in-law takes over the widow of his elder brother widely prevails. This rule of widow marriage is a most important factor in the development of the country. It would seem, for instance, that in very unhealthy tracts, such as Eastern Bengal, the offspring of virgin brides is barely sufficient to make up for the wastage by disease and maintain the population. In such parts of the country only those areas in which widow marriage prevails show a rapidly increasing population" (p. 228).

Take, again, the caste system, which is assumed to be based on racial or religious grounds, and to be as rigid as the laws of the Medes and Persians. But Mr. Crooke is able to show that, on the contrary, the basis of caste "was not ethnical, but occupational," that it has little to do with religion, but is mainly determined by the avocations of the people, while the castes themselves are in a constant state of flux and segmentation.

"Caste, in short, is in the main based on function, as was the case among the Egyptians and the Perso-Aryans. At the outset there were in all probability two main divisions of the people—the Vaisyas or "settlers," and the Sûdras, or helot serfs. It was not till a much later period that the privilege of connubium between these two classes was lost. Out of them two great functional groups—the Brâhman, or Levite, and the Râjput, or landholder—were evolved. . . . But though the basis of caste is probably, in the main, occupational, any grouping of the existing castes, according to occupation, is out of the question. Only quite a minority of Brâhman devote themselves exclusively to the study of the law and the scriptures, or to other religious duties. Many are agriculturists, domestics, or clerks, serve in the army or in the police, or engage in trade. The vast majority of the Râjputs are not landowners. There is no identity of occupation characteristic of the Vaisya or Sûdra groups" (pp. 202-4).

On the question of race Mr. Crooke agrees with many recent ethnologists, who hold that the Aryan element never was numerous in the Peninsula, and that the general spread of the Aryan (Sanskrit) language, religion and culture, was the result partly of conquest and partly of the superior intelligence, enterprise, and religious zeal of the Aryan intruders from the north-west. Anthropometric measurements, of which copious tables are given in his Tribes and Castes, show that there has been a general fusion of all the racial elements—Aryan, Lohitic or Mongoloid, and "Negritic or Dravidian." Here the ethnologist will notice the omission of a Kolarian element, although a Kolarian stock language fundamentally distinct from all others is still spoken by the Santâls and many other aboriginal groups on the Vindhya uplands between the Ganges basin and the Deccan. Perhaps even more surprising is the extension of the term "Dravidian," and its identification with the negro race, which is supposed to have reached the Peninsula either from the Iranian plateau, or more probably from Africa, at a time when the two regions were still connected by continuous land across the Indian Ocean. But the ethnical problems raised by these views could not be profitably discussed in this place.

Of more immediate interest, taken in connexion with the recent troubles in Poona, are the author's sensible remarks on the dangers likely to arise from an unbridled native Press. It is argued by our fanatical Little Englanders that the papers printed in the vernaculars have only a local influence, and hence cannot be regarded as a serious threat to the established order. But we are here reminded by Mr. Crooke that these papers are conducted by "a class of discontented, semi-educated men, who are a standing reproach and almost a menace to the administration. . . . It is easy to say that the circulation of these papers is small, and their influence slight among the illiterate masses; but it cannot tend to the well-being of the country that the acts of its rulers should be habitually misrepresented, and its officers constantly vilified with practical impunity" (p. 155).

Then follows a long quotation from a late official report, concluding with the remark that "it is difficult to believe that the uninterrupted and increasing circulation of newspapers, habitually imputing to the Government of India the basest designs, and to its officers the most unscrupulous conduct, can fail in course of time among a very ignorant people, such as are the masses here, to create a strong feeling of hostility to a Government which is confidently, and as far as they can see, without contradiction, stated to be animated by such motives, and served by such subordinates."

The book is provided with an index, a rather too crowded map of the North-Western Provinces, and several illustrations of native types from photographs supplied by officials of the Rurki College.

BIRDS, FLOWERS AND TREES.

Curiosities of Bird Life. By Charles Dixon. (George Redway.)

Glimpses into Plant Life. By Mrs. Brightwen. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

Familiar Wild Flowers. By F. Edward Hulme. Series 2, 3, 4 and 5. (Cassell.)

Epping Forest. By E. N. Buxton, Verderer. Fourth Edition, revised. (Edward Stanford.)

Mr. Dixon's sub-title is as follows, "An Account of the Sexual Adornment, Wonderful Displays, Strange Sounds, Sweet Songs, Curious Nests, Protective and Recognitory Colours, and Extraordinary Habits of Birds." It reads like a mediæval title-page, and had it been a full account the volume might have been swollen into a library. The author is an old hand—a pre-Jefferiesian open-airist, who has long ceased to do anything better or worse than we expect. Prolonged study has filled him with ornithological lore, which he sets forth in a tranquil pedestrian style that seldom becomes bad or swells into turgid prose poetry. Much of the present volume is after the manner of the once popular and familiar Rev. J. G. Wood, the author of Homes without Hands, and many other works that had a great vogue in their day, and do not go unread even now. Mr. Dixon, however, is less of a compiler, and has had opportunities of observing the birds of many lands. Thus his book is not likely to disappoint those who have a long acquaintance with his work. At all events, it provides a solid bulk of innocent and useful reading, with just enough of scientific thought to take away the reproach of babblement. It is very near being literature and very near being science—so near that one is reluctant to say decidedly how it falls short. On the question of migration Mr. Dixon writes with authority—and his other themes are invariably treated with knowledge and intelligence.

In her Wild Nature won by Kindness, Mrs. Brightwen proved herself an admirably sincere and pleasant writer on the simpler aspects of out-door life. By this time her tame doves, the half-tame squirrels in her park, the small pensioners fed in her garden, must be familiar to many a household. Her latest book is one of the clearest and easiest introductions to the science of botany that we have ever met. It deals with what is usually deemed the driest and most forbidding part of the subject at which the enthusiastic beginner grinds impatiently, longing to get over it and roam with a tin box in search of specimens. But here there is no grind. With the charm of unaffected simplicity Mrs. Brightwen unfolds the mysteries of roots, tree-stems, leaves, pollination, fertilisation, fruit, germination, and so on, contriving all the time to be lucid and attractive. To each chapter is affixed a list of specimens to be procured, and to a country girl with an intelligent curiosity and fields and woodlands to roam in the book should be very welcome. Those who master it will be in a very advantageous position for beginning more serious study. Nor does Mrs. Brightwen forget that she is writing for girls whose nature is to use their fingers in the fashioning of what is beautiful and ornamental. Her work abounds in hints for such occupations; witness the designs in feathers explained in a previous volume, and in this the instructions to skeletonise leaves and mount them on wire. The book deserves the highest praise.

Youngsters have long been in need of a really good and moderately cheap handbook to wild flowers. Large works, such as that of Sowerby, costing, as it does, something like twenty pounds, are too cumbrous and expensive. The less pretentious volumes—of which Miss Jane Pratt's is an excellent example—are not sufficiently exhaustive for the collector, and the smallest urchin nowadays is on collection bent. Mr. Hulme, we fancy, has scarcely hit upon the right lines. He appears to think, not unnaturally, that the letterpress is the main thing, and has turned out his two pages and a half to each plant with religious uniformity. But it would require a very attractive writer indeed to succeed brilliantly in keeping up the interest, and he is more of a botanist than a writer. Indeed, he is reduced to sad straits occasionally to fill up space when, like Rosalind's lovers, he is "gravelled for lack of matter." Thus you turn up the Sallow and are informed that the real name of Melancthon was Schwarzerd, which signifies black earth; that Erasmus was originally yclept Gerard, but called himself Desiderius Erasmus; that Didoens became Didonæus and Lobel Lobelius; and much else of the same kind, good to know indubitably, but as much connected with broom or mushrooms or Cromwell's bones as with sallow. His flights of word-painting are more excusable. But the picture is the main thing, and the publishers may fairly be congratulated on their success in this particular. A large number of the coloured figures could be named at sight; it is not so in every case, but that is a misfortune common to all but the very best natural history books—books of birds and beasts, as well as flowers. Had the pictures been accompanied by only as clear and business-like a description of each as was likely to afford a cue to identification, the series would have gained in value. We shall quote a characteristic sentence from the article on furze, to show how much our author needs pruning and condensing:

"It is a common saying among country folk that when the furze is out of flower kissing is out of season, whence we are of course given to understand that as at almost all times some few blossoms at least may be met with, such a token of affection can rarely be ill-timed."

This might have been written by the esteemed Mr. Barlow himself!

There is not a more admirable book of its kind than Mr. Buxton's Epping Forest, and the fourth edition contains several important contributions not to be found in its predecessors. Mr. Buxton, in a chapter on forest management, answers the uproar raised two or three years ago by showing that the felling in Monk's Wood and elsewhere was practically confined to the removal of certain old pollards that were an eyesore to the landscape-lover and a hindrance to the growth of natural wood. He is as much averse as any of his newspaper critics to trimming and clearing the forest into the garden-like neatness of a town park. Mr. Cole, the curator of the new museum at Chingford, contributes a well-written and delightful paper on entomology, which replaces the list of moths and butterflies in the third edition. To his grief the surrounding gamekeepers are so severe on the birds of prey that the insect eaters, freed from their natural check, have increased so much as to menace the very existence of some species of insects. Dr. Cooke, the well-known specialist on fungi, gives a list of the more important species; he also adds a welcome chapter on pond life. Other additions are by Mr. Holmes, on geology, and Dr. Woodward, on prehistoric man and the animals he hunted. It will thus be seen that a large portion of the book is new. And yet we could wish that more of it were recast. It still contains too much topography; one is sceptical as to the fact of any human being making the attempt to follow out the full score of elaborate itineraries, whose description occupies a third of the volume. In the matter of history it would have been interesting to note some of the literary associations of the Forest. To name but a few, here Keats listened to the nightingale—he was often at Epping; Dickens tramped the glades when he stayed at Chigwell; Tennyson found inspiration under its beeches; Jefferies came to study wild life. And then there was Dick Turpin and the Waltham Blacks and the friends of Lavengro—are visitors not as much interested in these as, say, the camps at Loughton and the Wake Arms?

THE ASCENDENCY OF THE NOVEL.

Essays on the Novel as Illustrated by Scott and Miss Austen. By Adolphus Alfred Jack. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. JACK'S study of Thackeray created an impression in his favour. It was felt that a discriminating and well-equipped critic had come among us. This promise his new book generously fulfils. The winds of criticism have, no doubt, swept through and through Scott; the chambers of his great literary house have been swept and garnished; for nearly three generations Miss Austen has been the wonder and admiration of the "literary classes," Scott himself among them; and it might be urged that little that is new remains to be said of the genius of either. There are, however, in literature standards of excellence too often lost sight of in these scrambling days of "booms" and big circulations, and to these Mr. Jack's book indirectly calls attention by appraising the novel from the heights reached by two great writers selected from the remotest poles of the literature of the imagination. In making his selection, therefore, he was obeying a wise instinct, although his book, judged from the standpoint of the careless reader who confuses literary criticism with biographical detail, may seem disappointing. In limiting his survey to Scott and Miss Austen, with whose works all educated people are familiar, Mr. Jack has thoughtfully afforded us leisure and opportunity for checking his statements.

"Nowadays," he observes, "everyone is a novelist. This is a heightened way of stating what criticism has of late years iterated, that all our present creative literary talent goes to the making of novels." Fiction, in fact, if it have not dethroned the drama, has driven it from the place it once held. As an active influence the stage is scarcely moving forward. It cannot keep its eyes on objects of an abiding interest. Meanwhile, all the imagination, all the artistic intelligence of the nation is devoted to the production of the novel." There is no doubt some exaggeration in this statement, because Mr. Jack thinks that "poetry, lacking sustenance, has lost its vitality." If this be granted, it can hardly be denied that the novel has won all along the line. Its present ascendancy, at all events, is indisputable, nor is it easy to foresee any popular force likely to remove it from its pre-eminence, although "nine-tenths of the great imaginative work of the world has been done in other forms." In literature as in biology it is the fittest which survive. Fiction has conquered because it has proved itself the readiest and most convenient form of appealing to the emotions and interests of the modern world.

In his introductory chapter, Mr. Jack investigates the processes influencing the imagination until it manifested itself in the novel:

"Some degree of civilisation, some touch of cultivation is necessary before the savage can rise to the conception of a lie; it is so much easier to tell the truth. . . . In an early society a narrative of no consequence will almost certainly be truthful. . . . The temptation to tamper with the truth will obtrude itself first upon those who deal with weighty affairs. The poet and the teller of sagas will be the first to feel it, since it is they who are the narrators of heroic actions. The poet who addresses himself to the task of narrating truthfully the heroic lives of the ancestors of his race or the myths, not myths to him, which detail the heroic deeds of early gods, will soon encounter the difficulty that some of the actions of which he has heard are not heroic at all, or at least not sufficiently heroic for consistency with the rest. His temptation will be to exaggerate the less notable incidents, to heighten them, to bring them in line with the others, and this device he or his successors will employ with increasing freedom till a large element of fiction has intruded itself within their work."

In fact, by the natural process of idealisation the clumsy legend grows into artistically elaborated fiction. The drama, with a similar legendary origin, has followed a similar course. But at last, when the stock of fabled tradition became exhausted, the storyteller was compelled to invent his own material. Almost all early English romances had a legendary basis. As Mr. Jack observes, "the 'Morte d'Arthur' is no more a fictitious tale than the 'Iliad' or the 'Æneid.'" The modern novel is the growth of a complex civilisation which demands a far more flexible form to satisfy it than the epic poem; or the drama with its obvious limitations. The novel may not be the noblest form of literary expression, but, from the popular point of view, it is the fittest; and it can claim an evolution which certainly does not detract from its dignity.

In his sympathetic review of Scott Mr. Jack does not pass over the numerous blemishes—the result of haste, carelessness, or inattention—which mar so many pages of the "Waverley Novels"; but few writers will dispute his opinion of that great writer's magnificent achievement.

"He is," he writes, "always to be compared with the best; he could do as well as anybody whatever he attempted, and he has attempted and achieved far more than any other English novelist has either achieved or attempted."

Between the art of Scott and of Miss Austen there is a wide gulf. No novelist had a narrower range than the authoress of Pride and Prejudice; yet it has had scope enough to raise her among the immortals. Of the atmosphere in which the most delicate of literary miniaturists grew up Mr. Jack gives a masterly analysis. "To have," as she phrased it, "good principles, to accept the views of other people, to drink tea, and to talk a good deal of harmless gossip, this was the sum and end of human perfection." Such a gospel is not calculated to carry an author far, yet with all its "tabby" restrictions it has given Miss Austen a throne as sure as Scott's own.

BRIEFER MENTION.

The Exploits of Miles Standish. By Henry Johnson. (Sampson Low, Marston & Co.) THIS is rather a trivial bit of book-making. Miles Standish was born at Standish—which Mr. Johnson actually derives from Stand-anaught or Stand-at-nothing—in Lancashire, fought at Ostend, married, went to Leyden, fell in with Bradford and others, and accompanied them on the Mayflower expedition. This is in substance all that Mr. Johnson has to tell us of the first thirty-six years of his hero's life. "In dealing with this period," he tells us, he "has used the license of probability and inference to supply the deficiency of accredited facts." A most intolerable way of writing biography! Standish's later history is, of course, entirely merged in that of the colony; and here Mr. Johnson cooks up once more the familiar story of the planting of New England, as it is told in Governor Bradford's MS. and in the score or so of modern histories catalogued at the end of the book. We object also to the mildly facetious vein in which it pleases Mr. Johnson to write. His prose chapter after Longfellow, on the wooing of Priscilla Alden, is a monumental example of how not to do it.

A Memoir of William Pengelley, of Torquay, F.R.S., Geologist. Edited by Hester Pengelley. (John Murray.)

WILLIAM PENGELEY was one of the self-taught men whose laborious accumulation and sifting of geological facts have done much to build up the structure of the modern science. A brief memoir of so useful and honourable a career might have had its place beside that of Robert Dick of Thurso. The ponderous volume now before us is hardly, we think, justified. That Pengelley met Mr. P. H. Gosse and his son Edmund, "a nice boy," or that Prince Nicholas of Russia, who was one of his pupils, said when leaving, "I shall often think of Mr. Pengelley," is surely not worth recording for the benefit of the world at large. There are too many personalia, too many semi-humorous stories of a geologist's encounters with open-mouthed natives, too many letters detailing discoveries which by this time have found their proper place in some treatise or other. The débris of scientific investigations is not material for biography, and the real merit of the man is dwarfed beneath his monumental cairn. The most interesting part of the book is the estimate of Pengelley's geological work contributed by Prof. Bonney.

The Pink Fairy-Book. Edited by Andrew Lang. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS volume having been preceded by the Blue, the Red, the Green, and the Yellow Fairy-Books, it is not to be wondered at that its quality is inferior, although Mr. Lang has gone far afield, and offers us between these covers stories from Japan, from Sicily, from Denmark, and from Africa. Andersen has again been called upon to lend humour and grace to the heterogeneous mass, but having already given of his best to the colours aforementioned, he is not too well represented here. "The Goblin and the Grocer" is a morality possessed of very little attraction for any child; and although "The Fir Tree" is included, Mr. Lang imperils his readers' pleasure, and thereby exceeds his duty as an editor, by appending to it the comment: "Here our Danish author ends. This is what people call sentiment, and I hope you enjoy it!" "The Snow Queen," however, finds a place in a new and pleasant translation by Miss Alma Alleyne, and children who know "Big Claus and Little Claus" will be interested in "The Cunning Shoemaker," a Sicilian variant. Mr. Lang, by the way, is, we are glad to say, not above hinting at a moral of his own. "We cannot all be young, alas! and pretty and strong," he writes at the end of his preface; "but nothing prevents us from being kind, and no kind man, woman, or beast or bird ever comes to anything but good in these oldest fables of the world." Mr. H. J. Ford's illustrations are well chosen, his idea of a Tanuki being particularly satisfactory, while the sister who dropped toads as she talked is a jewel.

Memories and Fancies. By the late Lady Camilla Gurdon. (Longmans & Co.)

THIS is a collection of the occasional writings by a gifted lady. It is necessarily a piece of patchwork, but there are many pleasant, and a few really excellent, things therein. A bundle of Suffolk stories, most of which appeared in the Speaker, comes first. The influence of Miss Wilkins is plainly perceptible, but we cannot say more for them than that occasional odd scraps of character come to light. Nor have the miscellaneous stories, the verses, or the "Grown-up-fairy tales" any particular merit. But the half-dozen literary essays are admirable. Lady Gurdon was a charming essayist; her style was graceful, flexible, and well-bred, and she could be grave and light by turns; she possessed rare sweetness, and was stored with kindly philosophy. We should not regret it if her essays and a few of the "Fugitive Pieces" formed a tiny volume by themselves, to the exclusion of the rest of this book.

Sketches from Old Virginia. By A. G. Bradley. (Macmillan & Co.)

OLD VIRGINIA means for Mr. Bradley the Virginia of the fifteen years or so following the war, when slavery was dead, but a generation brought up among the traditions of slavery still survived. It was an age of transition: the old semi-feudal civilisation of the ante-bellum period had fallen into decay—indeed, it had begun to fall into decay, owing to bad farming and impoverished soil, long before the cataclysm—and the newer democratic modes of life had not yet succeeded in asserting themselves. Like all ages of transition, it was full of eccentric and picturesque elements; and it is by these landmarks, human and architectural, that Mr. Bradley's imagination and sympathies have been touched. He has lived for many years in Virginia, and he abounds in information upon its social, agricultural, and sporting aspects; unfortunately, he lacks the lightness of touch and the variety of material which alone could make such a book really entertaining. As a magazine article each of these papers, in Macmillan or Blackwood, was good padding; in bulk they weary with a somewhat tedious iteration. Mr. Bradley observes, but not very freshly or vividly; he has humour, but it is humour of a rather mild brand. His solid information on tobacco-growing or the negro question is interesting, but here, also, he repeats himself too often. It is curious, however, to learn that the term "nigger" is seldom used by well-bred Southern men, and never by ladies. The man who will get most enjoyment from Mr. Bradley is probably the sportsman.

Greece in the Nineteenth Century. By Lewis Sergeant. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THIS might have been a very valuable book, but, unfortunately, Mr. Sergeant does not write on Greece as a judge, but as a very strenuous advocate. The foundation of the work was published in volume form in 1878, when the Eastern Question was at its previous acute stage, but the book has been largely re-written and considerably added to. The introductory chapter deals with the European crisis of the present year, and is devoted to asserting that not only Turkey, but also all the Powers—Great Britain, as a matter of course—have been in the wrong all through, and Greece only in the right. Since the man in the asylum declared that all the rest of the world was mad and he alone sane, but that being in a minority of one he had been shut up, there has been no such wholesale indictment by an individual or a nation of the rest of the world. This determined bias does away with all authority in Mr. Sergeant's book, and the one-sidedness of his advocacy causes the reader to experience a feeling of revulsion against the Greeks and their cause. Curiously enough, Mr. Sergeant has a very just appreciation of the work done at Berlin in destroying the Treaty of San Stephano; but this is because he sees that Pan Slavism, the great enemy of Panhellenism, was most unjustly aggrandised by that instrument. The chapters dealing with the history of Greece at the beginning of the century are letter, and in treating of the War of Independence Mr. Sergeant regrets the selfishness, cruelty, vanity, and incompetence of the men who should have led Greece to victory. It is just these defects, and, it might be added, the want of honesty, among her politicians, which have, greatly to the injury of the Western nations, made Greece so feeble a bulwark against the encroachments of the Slavs. The ideal Greece would be a strong centre of Hellenic and Western ideas in the Levant, but the country has unhappily refused to play the part. Mr. Sergeant has written an urgent plea for what we fear must be regarded as a lost cause, but if one takes account of his personal bias, Greece in the Nineteenth Century will throw many useful sidelights on the past and present in the East of Europe.

England and India: a Record of Progress during a Hundred Years, 1785-1885. By Romesh C. Dutt, C.I.E. (Chatto & Windus.)

MR. R. C. DUTT is probably the most distinguished native member of the Indian Civil Service. Appointed after open competition in 1871, he has risen to the high posts of Commissioner of a Division and member of the Legislative Council of Bengal. He is also known as the author of A History of Civilisation in Ancient India, which shows wide research and scrupulous fairness of statement. No living man ought to be better qualified, from experience, learning, and sympathy, to write a record of the progress of India during the last hundred years. Unfortunately, he has not done so in the volume before us, which is at once too small and too big. On the one hand, it purports to give, in 160 pages, a comparative study of administrative reform in India and in England; while, on the other, it tells English readers practically nothing that they do not already know. There is some novelty, we admit, in the main idea: that liberal and humanitarian movements in this country have exercised their influence on the government of our great Eastern dependency. But, unfortunately, we are here told a great deal more about the movements in England than about their effect in India. Far more valuable is the concluding chapter, in which the author deals with the circumstances of the present day, criticising with candour, and suggesting amendments of the political machine. As one remedy for the poverty of the country, he proposes an extension of the permanent settlement, on the ground that Bengal has been proved to resist famine better than the other provinces. While not averse to his conclusion, we cannot concede his premise. During the recent drought the destroying angel has not been careful to avoid permanently settled tracts; while the temporarily settled province of Lower Burma has never known a failure of the crops. No one with a knowledge of Madras would suggest that the duration of a settlement had much to do with agricultural prosperity.

Library Construction, Architecture, and Fittings. By F. J. Burgoyne. (George Allen.) THE immense increase in the number of public libraries during the last few years, both in England and America, has been accompanied by considerable controversy as to the methods of library administration, and by a vast ingenuity in the invention of labour-saving appliances. Mr. Burgoyne has thought it well to bring together, for the information of a wider public, some of the conclusions which the experience of experts in this matter has dictated. He has performed his task with minute care, with wide knowledge, and in a commendably practical spirit. In the first part of the book he discusses the principles on which the architecture of a library should rest, and explains the various types of bookshelves, indicators, ladders, and the like, which have proved of service in simplifying and quickening the distribution of books. In the second he describes the arrangement of the principal libraries of two continents. If anything, perhaps Mr. Burgoyne is a trifle too practical. We fully agree with him that the convenience of readers should be made the first consideration, and that the inevitable result of making a library into a show place is to interfere with that convenience. The Boston Public Library is adorned with beautiful frescoes by Puvis de Chavannes and others, and the crowd of sightseers is intolerable. But, still, we think that a little more attention to æsthetic effect in the designing of library fittings would have no such ill results. And, after all, your steel shelves and patent racks are detestably ugly. On the other hand, we should have been glad of some indication of the cost of the many and ingenious devices which Mr. Burgoyne describes and figures. A chapter on private libraries might also have been added with advantage. But what Mr. Burgoyne has not done is very little in comparison with what he has done. His book should be invaluable, not only to librarians, but also to those architects to whom the designing of libraries falls, and who often know very little about the actual working of the buildings they construct.

Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral. Arranged by the late Henry Bradshaw, and edited by Christopher Wordsworth. Part II. (Cambridge University Press.)

IT is several years since the publication of Part I. of this work, containing the text of the Liber Niger of Lincoln Cathedral, with an introduction by Henry Bradshaw. The present part, which extends to two goodly fasciculi, contains a vast number of Customs and other documents from Lincoln, together with sets of illustrative Statutes from Lichfield, Hereford, York, and other sources. Henry Bradshaw, alas! that burning light of English scholarship, is gone; but his mantle rests upon Canon Wordsworth, who fully maintains his colleague's reputation for precise and profound learning. The work is a storehouse of facts for pundits of ecclesiastical history, and many sections of it, notably the record of Bishop Alnwick's visitation of the cathedral in 1437, have their interest for the lighter student of manners also. Pathetically quoting Henry Bradshaw's remark about "the poison of an index," Canon Wordsworth gives us a magnificent and most valuable one.

The Registers of John de Sandale and Rigaud de Asserio. By Francis Joseph Baigent. (Hampshire Record Society.)

THE earliest episcopal registers at Winchester are those of John de Pontissara (1282-1304) and Henry Wodeloke (1305-1316). Mr. Baigent found it more convenient to deal first with the less bulky volumes which come third and fourth in the series. These he has printed in extenso, with careful biographical notices of the two bishops, and a liberal supplement of illustrative documents. The Registers extend from 1316-1323, and contain principally episcopal licenses and mandates, letters dimissory and records of ordinations and of institutions to benefices. We have nothing but praise for the care and industry with which the editor has performed his task. The Hampshire Record Society appears to be hardly up to time with its issues, as this is nominally the volume for 1893.

Publications of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge.

WE have received a large batch of these—fifteen volumes in all. Heroes of the Chitral Siege appeals to boy patriotism, and in no way shirks the encouragement of the military feeling. The deeds of Colonel Kelly, Sir George Robertson, Major Townshend, Captain Campbell, and Lieutenants Gurdon and Harley, are fully recounted. The Machinery of the Universe is a small book of 120 pages, in which Mr. A. E. Dolheur explains how all phenomena are caused by various forms of motion. Boys will enjoy trying the easy experiment of making smoke rings. They will revel, too, in the attempt to make their smoke rings do the fourteen queer things of which the author says they are capable. A little book on The Papal Corclaves is interesting and moderate in tone. Then we have more than half-a-dozen stories for children and young girls. The Parting Ways, a love-story with lights and shades and a happy ending, is from the pen of Mrs. Newman, a writer not unknown to young people. Miss Carr's Young Ladies is a story of mission work, told with considerable humour, and ending with a wedding on Easter Sunday. By Surtal Sands, a story of shipwreck and smuggling on the Isle of Man coast, by Edward N. Hoare, may be trusted to keep a boy out of mischief until he has finished it. Similarly, an unquiet little girl can be steadied by making her a present of Wild Gown, by Marie A. Tassell. This is a story of schoolgirl life.

The Architectural Review. Vol. I. (Effingham House, Strand, W.C.)

THIS handsome volume, completing the first half-year in its history, augurs well for the future of the Architectural Review. Type and illustrations are alike excellent, and the literary matter is such as to attract readers who have only a nodding acquaintance with architectural matters. The student of London, for instance, will do well to go to this volume and its successors for information.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

THE event of the week is the publication of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's new story. For the rest we will content ourselves with remarking that the output for the past seven days amounts to thirty works of fiction, in addition to a number of stories for boys and girls.

CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS.

BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Mr. Kipling's longest story, already familiar to the readers of Pearson's Magazine. It is mainly about the sea, particularly about the hardy and independent sailor-men who fish for cod on the grand banks of Newfoundland. The story is slight, telling of a millionaire boy who falls overboard from a liner, is picked up by the crew of the We're Here, and carried against his will to the fishing ground. It abounds in technicalities and vigorous character drawing, and is well illustrated. (Macmillan & Co. 243 pp. 6s.)

LOCHINVAR.

BY S. R. CROCKETT.

The latest work of this high-spirited, productive writer, completing his first round dozen of books. Here are some of the chapter headings: "The Duel at the Inn of Brederode"; "Haxo, the Bull, Interferes"; "The Prince of Orange"; "The Street of the Butchery"; "The Breaking of the Prison"; "The Battle on the Dunes"; "The Good Ship Sea Unicorn"; "The Isle of Bliss"; "The Leaguer of Dunkeld"; "Within the King's Mercy." Lochinvar has illustrations by Mr. Frank Richards, and a map by the author. (Methuen & Co. 446 pp. 6s.)

WAYFARING MEN.

BY EDNA LYALL.

Edna Lyall's thousands of readers are trained to patience. She vouchsafes a new story only after an ample interval of time has lapsed since the last. Wayfaring Men is a novel of dramatic life, and is dedicated to the Profession, as actors call it. In Donovan it was shown that an atheist may be also a gentleman: here Edna Lyall would do the same service for the actor. The motto, from Emerson, runs:

"Every man's task is his life-preserver. The conviction that his work is dear to God, and cannot be spared, defends him."

(Longmans & Co. 452 pp. 6s.)

THE LAUGHTER OF JOVE.

BY HELMUTH SCHWARTZE.

"At lovers' perjuries they say Jove laughs"—this line from Romeo and Juliet is the origin of Mr. Schwartz's intensely modern story. The hero is one who takes life seriously. He sins and repents through 356 pages, and then enters a monastery. (Grant Richards. 6s.)

SECRETARY TO BAYNE, M.P.

BY W. PETT RIDGE.

Mr. Pett Ridge's public know what to expect. For gloom, neuroticism, psychology they go elsewhere. His new story opens in Paris, with a view of the departure of a youth visiting London for the first time. There he becomes secretary to a Member of Parliament, falls in love, and sees London life freshly. You are carried to the end easily, and left in a good temper. (Methuen. 308 pp. 6s.)

A PRINCE OF MISCHANCE.

BY TOM GALLON.

Mr. Gallon's first book was a tender little story in the Dickens tradition, called Tatterley. He now follows it with A Prince of Mischance, a more ambitious and intricate attempt. The prince is a Greek who is brought up in an English professor's family. The contrast between the young Greek's character and that of Arthur Paddison, an English boy, affords the writer many of his opportunities. (Hutchinson & Co. 361 pp. 6s.)

THE KING WITH TWO FACES.

BY M. E. COLERIDGE.

A breathless romance in the style of Dumas, by the author of The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus. "Four horses, saddled and bridled, stood ready." This note of haste and emergency is well kept up. Pageants glow and pistol shots flash through these pages, and melodrama is exhausted. We gather, however, that the story is founded on facts in Mr. Nisbet Bain's Gustav III. and his Contemporaries. (Edward Arnold. 421 pp. 6s.)

CUPID'S GARDEN.

BY ELLEN THORNEYCROFT FOWLER.

A book of pleasant, straightforward stories about conventional people. The first, "An Old Wife's Tale," has the merit of giving the reader a complete surprise in its last sentence, and in "Priscilla Hawthorne" the same ingenuity of plot has a like result. (Cassell & Co. 296 pp.)

A DAUGHTER OF STRIFE.

BY JANE HELEN FINDLATER.

This story opens in 1710. Anne Champion, a pretty straw-plaiter, has a lover—Surgeon Sebastian Shepley—at the wars in Flanders. Enter a friend of her lover's, who, struck with her beauty, suppresses the message he has brought from Surgeon Shepley. Instead of delivering it, he represents Shepley to have married a Dutch girl. He is believed, and thus the possibilities of the story are soon grasped. (Methuen & Co. 284 pp. 6s.)

THE WITCH WIFE.

BY SARAH TYTLER.

This story is laid in Scotland in the last decade, when the belief in witches lingered still in that country. It opens with the birth of a "lad-bairn" to Randal Drummond, the laird of Glenferroch, and the arrival of "Sonsie Sibbie"—a fine young woman of strange moods and uncommon abilities—to be his nurse. A witch-burning scene is one of the incidents of the story. (Chatto & Windus. 280 pp.)

KATHERINE CROMER.

BY HELEN CRAVEN.

Lady Kitty Cromer is pursued by an English lord and an Italian opera-singer, and she is clever enough and uncertain enough to make the chase very interesting to the reader. On her marriage her best friend can only exclaim, "I wonder how it will work?" The reader must form his own opinion on that point. (A. D. Innes & Co. 334 pp.)

THRO' LATTICE-WINDOWS.

BY W. J. DAWSON.

Mr. Dawson is a clergyman, and his Idylls of London and Story of Hannah may be remembered. Here he gives us a series of carefully drawn village episodes, welded into a continuous story. The wickedest man in Barford, one Dexter, is the first character introduced, and he plays a leading part in this drama of chapel and tea-meetings. (Hodder & Stoughton. 293 pp.)

THE IRON CROSS.

BY R. H. SHERARD.

Mr. Sherard confesses to such a feeling of embarrassment with regard to the title of this story that he asked Mr. Hall Caine to choose it for him. The Iron Cross is the result. The scene is laid in the Landes; the hero is a young Englishman, an author; and there are mysteries and adventures in plenty. (C. Arthur Pearson. 311 pp. 3s. 6d.)

PRINCESS SARAH.

BY JOHN STRANGE WINTER.

The latest work of the author of Bootle's Baby. That old favourite is, indeed, to some extent provided with a sequel in the story called "Mignon;" and in "Halt!" we are again shown the sentimental soldier. The other stories have that briskness and spirit which is associated with John Strange Winter's writings. The book is illustrated. (Ward, Lock & Co. 296 pp.)

CONCERNING CHARLES ROYDANT.

By PIERRE LE CLERCQ.

A wild story, dealing with occult matters, and having a theatrical element. (Digby & Long. 347 pp. 6s.)

GEORGE MALCOLM.

By GABRIEL SETOUN.

A story of Scottish life, by the author of Sunshine and Haar. Pathos and humour of the kind to which we are accustomed in Kailyard fiction alternate. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 348 pp. 6s.)

JAN: AN AFRIKANDER.

By ANNA HOWARTH.

The scene is laid in Africa, but not the Africa of raids and companies. The story moves placidly forward till Jan commits suicide, "and all that was left of Jan was that solitary grave in the veldt." Jan's friends were faithful, and they had vigilant minds, for "in summer suns and winter frosts, in the bright noonday of youth and the serene evening of old age," and also "in many an hour of silent thought, or of sweet communion, they kept his memory green." (Smith, Elder & Co. 319 pp. 6s.)

THE SON OF A PEASANT.

By EDWARD McNULTY.

Mr. McNulty's first book was called Misther O'Ryan. In this, his second, he offers another story of Irish life, wherein comedy and tragedy, fun and seriousness, are closely mingled. (Edward Arnold. 342 pp. 6s.)

A HANDFUL OF SILVER.

By L. T. MEADE.

Mrs. Meade is well known by this time as a writer of equable fiction. Her books neither surprise nor disappoint. A Handful of Silver is a fair specimen. It is concerned with the ruffled progress of true love, and ends by bringing the two right young people together and marrying off the obstacle to another. There are mystery, too, and self-sacrifice, and many of the best ingredients. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier. 316 pp. 3s. 6d.)

DOWN BY THE SUWANEE RIVER.

By AUBREY HOPWOOD.

This is a story of life in Florida. Florida is a comparatively new region to the novel-reader, but things seem to happen there very much as in other districts where the colonist-novelist lays his plot. In this story there are lawlessness, and riding, and love-making, and signs that the author admires Bret Harte and yet possesses vigour of his own. (Kegan Paul & Co. 282 pp. 6s.)

NETHERDYKE.

By R. J. CHARLETON.

Another tale of the Forty-five! Mr. Charleton, whose previous novels include The Picture of the King and The Honourable Jim, follows convention in telling the story in the first person. Among the chapters are: "A Mysterious Stranger comes to Netherdyke"; "The Priests' Chamber"; "Bonnie Prince Charlie"; and "Dark Culloden's Fateful Day." (Edward Arnold. 306 pp. 6s.)

THE SON OF THE CZAR.

By JAMES M. GRAHAM.

An historical romance of the days of Peter the Great and Alexis, his son. Four hundred and ninety-eight teeming pages of intrigue and Russian names. On the first page we meet with a Count Tolstoi, possibly an ancestor of the present one. If before the end the reader sighs for a taste of his descendant's quality, the wish is pardonable, and no slight to Mr. Graham. (Harper & Brothers. 6s.)

BARBARA BLOMBERG.

By GEORGE EBERS.

George Ebers reminds us of some ancient star actor, who pays periodical visits to a capital to play new parts, but always in the old convention. Doubtless Barbara Blomberg finds admirers in Germany, but the palates of British readers are somewhat spoiled for the pedestrian archaeological romance. This time the author of Cleopatra and Joshua has chosen the period of the Emperor Charles. (Sampson Low & Co. 2 vols.)

A CREEL OF IRISH STORIES.

By JANE BARLOW.

There are ten stories to this creel, one being considerably longer than the others. It is enough to say that these gentle, sympathetic Irish sketches are by the hand that wrote Irish Idylls. (Methuen & Co. 322 pp. 6s.)

OUR PAYING GUESTS.

By MRS. CHARLES TERROT.

More short stories—fluent and trivial. (Digby, Long & Co. 235 pp. 6s.)

THE DUKE AND THE DAMSEL.

By RICHARD MARSH.

Mr. Richard Marsh seems to produce a novel every week. Here he tells us how a worldly widow set to work to marry off her two daughters, just withdrawn from a convent, and how she fared in the attempt to dispose of them. Two disguised aristocrats, one a duke, play leading parts in the story. (C. Arthur Pearson. 248 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE ZONE OF FIRE.

By HEADON HILL.

Mr. Headon Hill is another industrious producer. This is a military love-story, laid in Egypt. The first chapter opens at the Empire Music Hall, during a ballet, shortly after the death of General Gordon. The story promises to be impossible and interesting. (C. Arthur Pearson. 425 pp. 6s.)

BEACON FIRES.

By HEADON HILL.

Again Mr. Headon Hill, with these short stories appealing to the patriotism of Englishmen. The first is concerned mainly with Napoleon's attempt to invade England, but more directly with smaller matters, and, like the other tales in the book, is compact of the loves of English lads and lasses, the deeds of coastguards and smugglers, the hangings of spies, and the confusion of all Frenchmen. Gallant reading. (Ward, Lock & Co. 304 pp.)

THE KING'S OAK.

By ROBERT CROMIE

"The King's Oak" is the first of five short stories. "Mr. Markham's Private Secretary" is less political than it sounds. The "Rev. Alexander M'Intosh" tells of the relations between that gentleman and a remote Ulster-Scots congregation. (George Newnes, Ltd. 130 pp. 1s.)

A MODERN ATALANTA.

By MAUD J. VYSE.

A collection of childish short stories, with a silly preface. (Kegan Paul & Co. 240 pp.)

JOB HILDRED, ARTIST AND CARPENTER.

EDITED BY ELLEN F. PINSENT.

This story is of a Lincolnshire lad who is put to be a carpenter, and takes to painting, and is loved, and fails to make of Art a bread-winner. A sad story with a good deal of dialect. (Edward Arnold. 260 pp.)

REVIEWS.

Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker. By S. Weir Mitchell.
(T. Fisher Unwin.)

Hitherto historical romance has found its ablest practitioners in this country, but one lays down Hugh Wynne with the conviction that our present artists in this genre must look to it if an American writer is not to step ahead even of them. Dr. Weir Mitchell's story may be pronounced excellent entertainment: it is a full-blooded narrative, rich in stirring incident, in shrewd delineation of character, and most pleasantly—and, considering its title, unexpectedly—rich in charm and mellowness. It has breeding and courtesy.

It may be said at once that the influence of Thackeray and of Stevenson is perceptible in the book. Again and again we come upon suggestions of Esmond and The Virginians—the period is that of the latter novel, and Washington is again prominent—and often there are turns and phrases that seem to proceed from familiarity with the author of Catriona and Kidnapped; but this is no more than to say that Dr. Weir Mitchell has studied in good schools. Stevenson himself played the "sedulous ape" to great personal advantage: Dr. Mitchell's equipment is too considerable for any stigma to rest upon him because he has not been equally successful in eliminating all direct traces of his exemplars. Dr. Mitchell's own qualities should be insisted upon.

The story is that of the War of Independence at the end of the last century, from the point of view of a young Philadelphia Quaker turned soldier. It begins with schooldays and ends in a glance backwards over happy married life, and so far is conventional, and commendable (as the Quakers say) to the public that has bought so many editions of Lorna Doone. On the way there are good fighting, good duelling, and many perilous enterprises, and fine scenes in old Philadelphian mansions, and imprisonment, and fair women, and brave men. But there is more too. There is a genuine flavour of the past; the reader has glimpses of early Pennsylvanian Friends, and the ample, leisurely life they led, and there are excellent portraits to add to his gallery. Aunt Gainor, the strong-minded old Whig gambler, is a full-length of much merit. Aunt Gainor disliked Quakers and hated Tories. Hence she naturally took to her bed on hearing that a number of officers had been quartered in her mansion. Her nephew, Hugh, sought to condole with her:

"I assured my aunt that, fortunately, these were gentlemen, but she was inconsolable, declaring herself ill, and that Dr. Rush must come at once.

'But,' I said, 'he has gone with all the Congress to York.'

'Then I shall die,' moaned my aunt.

At last, knowing her well, I said, 'Is it not too sad?'

'What's that? What?'

'Mr. Howe has taken Mrs. Pemberton's carriage and the pair of sorrels for his own use.'

At this my Aunt Gainor's large face reappeared, not as melancholic as before, and I added, 'Friend Waln has six to care for, and Thomas Scattergood has the Hessian chaplain and a drunken major. The rest of the Friends are no better off.'

'Thank the Lord for all His mercies!' said Miss Wynne.

'And Mr. Cadwalader's house on Little Dock-street Sir William has.'

'A pity that, Hugh. The fine furniture will pay for it, I fear. I think, Hugh, I am better, or I shall be soon.'

'They talk of the meeting over the way for a barrack, Aunt Gainor.' Now this was idly rumoured, but how could one resist to feed an occasion so comic?

'I think I shall die contented,' said Miss Wynne."

The foregoing extract is proof enough to the experienced novel-reader that Aunt Gainor Wynne is a "find."

The heroine, Darthea Peniston, is more elusive; but she has continuous charm. Hugh was first drawn to her when, at their first school, Darthea cried at the brutality shown him by the school-master. In the following passage where, in after years, Hugh reminds her of this scene, we have an example of the author's skill in dialogue. Hugh is riding Lucy his mare, and Darthea sits behind him clinging to his waist, having just been rescued from an accident. Darthea speaks:

"'You were very silent just now, Mr. Wynne. A penny is what most folks' thoughts are bid for, but yours may be worth more. I would not stand at a shilling.'

'Then give it to me,' said I. 'I assure thee a guinea were too little.'

'What are they?'

'Oh, but the shilling.'

'I promise.'

'I seem to see a little, dark-faced child crying because of a boy in disgrace —'

'Pretty?' she asked demurely.

'No, rather plain.'

'You seem to have too good a memory, sir. Who was she?'

'She is not here to-day.'

'Yes, yes!' she cried. 'I have her—oh, somewhere! She comes out on occasions. You may never see her; you may see her to-morrow.'

'I was to see her often. My shilling,' I said.

'That was only a jest, Mr. Wynne. My other girl has stolen it for remembrance of a lad that was brave and —'

'He was a young fool! My shilling, please.'

'No, no!'

At this I touched the mare with my spur. She, not seeing the joke, pranced about, and Miss Darthea was forced to hold my waist for a minute.

'The mare is ill-broke,' she cried. 'Why does she not go along quietly?'

'She hates dishonesty,' I said.

For stronger meat, for descriptions of battle and the like, the reader must seek the book, where he will find plenty, done excellently well with spirit and right feeling. The foregoing quotations have been chosen principally to show that the fine graces are also within Dr. Mitchell's compass. A story of adventure and prowess, ringing with steel, is not a very difficult feat, especially at this moment; but the author who can bring to the task not only enthusiasm for stirring deeds, but also tenderness and delicacy, a feeling for character, and a well-bred style, should be taken very warmly by the hand. This Dr. Mitchell does.

In Kedar's Tents. By Henry Seton Merriman.
(Smith, Elder & Co.)

I have read few novels of recent years that interested me so much as With Edged Tools, so that it is saying a good deal to say that In Kedar's Tents has not disappointed. Mr. Merriman shows the same faculty for presenting picturesque incident and picturesque character, and he has got rid of a certain staginess which disfigured many parts of his earlier work. But the plot remains conventional and arbitrary, and, though the book carries one along, at the end comes a revulsion of incredulity. Up to a certain point two main strands in the story are dexterously twisted together, but the book does not terminate when the first strand comes to an end, and the remaining one is unduly spun out.

Sir John Pleydell's son has been killed in a Chartist riot, and Sir John comes to Spain to get his revenge upon the slayer who has fled there. He addresses himself to General Vincente, the mainstay of Queen Christina and terror of the Carlists, but in Vincente's English aide-de-camp, Frederick Conyngham, he is amazed to discover the man he wanted. Now this Conyngham, a young Irish barrister, had taken another man's guilt upon him in the matter. With this Quixotic temper, it is not surprising that, directly he lands in Spain, he should consent to deliver secretly the letter which a mere stranger hands to him for Julia Barenna. Larralde, the stranger, is Julia's lover, but he is also a Carlist, and the letter is a political document of the utmost weight. So that when Conyngham is detected in the act of trying to hand it to Julia he has to swear that it was a love-letter, and thereby bitterly offends Estella Vincente, whom he loves. The rest of the book is the story of that letter. Conyngham loses it, and Larralde, who believes that he has played false, tries to assassinate him. Larralde wants the letter for the plot's sake and his own safety. Conyngham wants it to clear himself with Estella. Sir John Pleydell naturally leagues himself with Larralde. But—and here is the weakness—when the attempt to kidnap Conyngham has failed, and Sir John Pleydell is aware of the truth—that Conyngham is no sharer in his son's murder—strand the first comes to an end; and so logically does strand the second; for Estella Vincente has every reason to believe in Conyngham, whom she loves and trusts, yet she insists on sight of the letter and will not be content with his word. However, the story has to go on, that the letter may produce its crop of conspiracy, and General Vincente has to deal with the people of Toledo, who try to murder the Queen Regent. The General is, perhaps, the most striking figure in the book. Here he is:

"He pressed Conyngham's hand in both of his, which were small and white, looked up into his face, stepped back, and broke into a soft laugh. Indeed, his voice was admirably suited to a lady's drawing-room, and suggested naught of the camp or battle-field. From the handkerchief which he drew from his sleeve and passed across his white moustache a faint scent floated on the morning air."

Conyngham, in travelling up from Algeciras, had fallen in with some Carlists smuggling ammunition: the Guardias Civiles met the party. This is how the General treats the incident:

"'The guide, Antonio-something-or-other, died, as I understand.'

'Well, yes; if you choose to put it in that way,' admitted Conyngham.

The General raised his eyebrows in a gentle grimace expressive of deprecation, with, as it were, a small solution of sympathy, indicated by a moisture of the eye, for the family of Antonio-something-or-other in their bereavement.

'And the other man? Seemed a nice fellow enough,' inquired Conyngham.

The General raised one gloved hand as if to fend off some approaching calamity.

'He died this morning—at six o'clock.'

Conyngham looked down at this gentle soldier with a dawning light of comprehension. This might after all be the General Vincente whom he had been led to look upon as the fiercest of the Spanish Queen's adherents.

'Of the same complaint?'

'Of the same complaint,' answered the General softly."

Father Concha, the old priest, is excellent; so is Concepcion Vara, Conyngham's volunteer servant. Quite as good in quite another vein is the humorous sketch of Julia Barenna's mother—a stout, devout, and delightfully inconsequent old lady.

I wonder Mr. Merriman does not try his hand at the theatre. He has the dramatist's eye for telling episodes, and a finely dramatic touch for dialogue. He has also the dramatist's view of motives. For what reasons, except those of stage exigency, should General Vincente, in the last scene but one, have refused to allow his soldiers to fire from behind cover, and gone in with the sword-point against an armed mob? Indeed, the whole episode of the Queen Regent's escape and the fight in Toledo is not elucidated.

* * * * *

The Tormentor. By Benjamin Swift.
(T. Fisher Unwin.)

We have most of us known some individual in whom the ordinary ardours of youth were replaced by a cold, intellectual curiosity, a prurient desire to spy into other people's souls. Suppose such an individual, possessing an electric quickness of penetration, reinforced by a ready imagination for all shameful possibilities in his neighbours—suppose him to have, besides this equipment for detective psychology, a mesmeric power of compelling people to tell him what common prudence, common decency, and the bare instinct of self-preservation would bid them keep secret; the result of his curiosity is power; he is placed in a position to conduct ethical experiments. For my own part I do not care about such fantastic suppositions; as for the whole history of Mr. Jacob Bristol, "The Tormentor," who morally vivisects his fellows, I say, with Horace, Incredulus odi. However, there is no doubt that Mr. Benjamin Swift is a clever man, he is known to be young, and we may hope for better. As it stands there is not a human being in the book who acts intelligibly except the boy Paul. The women are simply women in general, humanised, not individualised; Dr. Muster is agreeably sketched, but his surrender to Bristol is, as I said, inconceivable and incredible. Lord Sother and his sister are a pair of caricatures, as ridiculous as the absurd dialect which the uneducated people are made to talk. As for Mr. Bristol himself, he has so much human nature that he is forced to yield to the most imperious of passions. Well, if he had that much of the aboriginal in him, at least he would have found something more natural to utter as he went under the ice in the finish than "Death is so emphatic." I take it he would have gasped and fought like the most natural of us.

Altogether a most annoying book, yet with brains enough behind it to render it worth taking seriously. A quotation should justify me. After his plunge into mere intoxication with Jessie, Bristol, who had meant to live the life of pure intellect, was holding himself as well as herself in great disdain:

"But his repudiation of it all was not accompanied by theological scruples of any sort. It was only the recoil of an intellectual nature out of the mess of instinct. . . . His excavations about the very roots of life were carried on in another way. 'I see,' he said, in the midst of his own recoil, 'that what you call ethics may really have its beginnings in physical disgust. It is our injured æsthetic sense that starts moral progress. Have I done wrong? Obviously no, but civilisation says obviously yes, and civilisation is always quarrelling with nature. Civilisation has triumphed only in making it all very ugly and inconvenient. But a man doesn't require the world's help to discover the delusion of his feeling. I have discovered it already.'

Had he? Not yet fully, because, as he both knew and felt, an emotion half-satisfied is wilder than ever. 'Believe me,' he said, 'the sense of Beauty—I see I have some of it after all!—requires a repetition of instances. It is the tragedy of marriage. A sense of carnal loveliness, really alive, must pass from type to type. Nature is distinctly absurd. Desire passes to nausea, and nausea to desire. . . . I am passing back to . . . Fan.'

There you have, first of all, a paradox about the genesis of ethics: worthless, of course, if taken seriously, but quite amusing as a thing to play with; and, secondly, the familiar

"Love's a fire that needs renewal
Of fresh beauty for his fuel."

of innumerable poets, put, as we must all put the old truths or half-truths, into touch with the language of the moment. But the measure of a novelist is not his ability to concoct epigrams, but his power to render human nature, and there is mighty little human nature in this book.

* * * * *

The Pomp of the Lavillettes. By Gilbert Parker.
(Methuen & Co.)

Mr. Gilbert Parker remains true to Canada; and this story is woven round the last abortive rising in French Canada. The hero is one Tom Ferrol—the Honourable Tom Ferrol—the younger son of an Irish peer. His abilities

"lay in a splendid plausibility, a spontaneous 'blarney.' He could no more help being spendthrift of his affections and his morals than of his money, and many a time he had wished that his money was as inexhaustible as his emotions."

In short, Tom Ferrol is just a pleasant, irresponsible blackguard. He stays with the Lavillettes, who are bent on reviving the departed glories of the family, flirts with one daughter, who is married, and becomes secretly engaged to the other—Christine. Being penniless, and, as I said, a blackguard, he fills his purse by waylaying his prospective brother-in-law, who has five thousand dollars as sinews of war against the British. Thus does Tom Ferrol mediate:

"Well, it's stealing, or it's highway robbery, no matter how one looks at it," he said to himself. "I wonder what's the matter with me. I must have got started wrong somehow. Money to spend, playing at soldiering, made to believe I'd have a pot of money and an estate, and then told one fine day that a son and heir, with health in form and feature, was come, and Esau must go. No profession except soldiering, debt staring me in the face, and a nasty mess of it all round. I wonder why it is that I didn't pull myself together, be honest to a hair, and fight my way through? I suppose I hadn't it in me. I wasn't the right metal at the start. There's always been a black sheep in our family, a gentleman or a lady, born without morals, and I happen to be the gentleman this generation."

Well, Ferrol gets the dollars, marries Christine, and the rebellion breaks out. And, as Ferrol is in the last stage of consumption, he takes an opportunity of redeeming himself by his death, somewhat after the manner of Sydney Carton. The story is told in Mr. Gilbert Parker's slap-dash, straight-from-the-shoulder style; and there are some good sketches of the scenes in the toy rebellion. There is, moreover, a most exciting fight between Ferrol and a bear, with which a former lover of Christine's had shut him up in a barn, and here Mr. Parker is at his very best. But to most readers—and certainly to me—the novel is spoiled by the absence of any character on whom respect may fasten. Christine is merely a passionate little animal, and horribly vulgar as well, while Ferrol, besides being a blackguard, drinks enough whisky to kill half a dozen men, and has only one lung left. I do not think even Christine would have fallen violently in love with a man who spits blood at every tenth page.

* * * * *

Unkist, Unkind. By Violet Hunt.
(Chapman & Hall.)

Unkist, Unkind is written in a quiet vein. This book contains a good plot, well-defined and well-contrasted characters, and some happy bits of landscape on Northumberland moors, which give a pleasant atmosphere. The story is an old-fashioned one of the murder order, and is told by a companion. There is an eerie sense of coming tragedy from the moment when Lady Darcy visits the crystal gazer, and is warned against a woman with "stridden" eyes. Presently the "stridden" eyed woman turns up in the house of Sir Anthony Ercildon. She practises necromancy, and is otherwise uncanny:

"She sat opposite me, with her elbows propped on the table, and looked at me obliquely from under the shelter of her broad white eyelids, that she never completely raised. There was some peculiarity about the eyes they veiled, which I made up my mind to notice by daylight. Surely they differed slightly in colour? She had short, reddish hair that curled a little, but not much, and fell about her ears like that of a Cavalier page. Her skin was of the dazzling, and I think disagreeable, whiteness that sometimes goes with red hair. It reminded me of an unwholesome plant that shoots up tall and white in a cellar where no light is. But her arched eyebrows were several shades darker than her hair, and her thin red lips looked the redder for contrast with her paleness. It was a strange, enigmatical face, an almost animal face, and yet a sensitive and refined one: blunt, but subtle in an uncomfortable way. The low forehead, the long clever nose, the broad eyelids with their cruel droop, the hard chin, the large rather uncertainly curved mouth, made a countenance that I should not care to look on for long, but yet should unaccountably return to gaze at. I have seen that combination of passion and astuteness in some of the faces of the women in Italian Renaissance pictures, and I don't like it or trust it."

What drove Lady Darcy to Crawlaw Tower, and how the prophecy of evil worked itself out, I do not propose to reveal; but the reader may be assured that Miss Hunt will manage to give him a thrill or two.

J. M. DENT &amp; CO.

THE WAVERLEY NOVELS OF SIR WALTER SCOTT.

A NEW EDITION in 48 volumes, pott 8vo, printed on thin paper suitable for the Pocket.

With Portraits and Photogravure Frontispieces by HERBERT RAILTON. Decorated Title-Page by W. B. MACDOUGALL.

Cloth, 1s. 6d. net; limp leather, 2s. net. (See Special Prospectus.)

OVER 30,000 COPIES SOLD.

QUO VADIS. By Henryk Sienkiewicz. Trans- lated by JEREMIAH CURTIN. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. net

 "Sienkiewicz in this story has proved himself one of the master spirits of our time."
 "An exceptionally good novel."—Times. [Graphic.
 "It is a novel which rivals any of Tolstoi's."—St. James's Gazette.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE CHOIR INVISIBLE."

SUMMER in ARCADY. By James Lane Allen.

Fcap. 8vo, 3s. net.

BY F. ANSTEY, AUTHOR OF "VICE VERSA," &c.

BABOO JABBERJEE, B.A. With about 30 Full-

Page Illustrations by J. BERNARD PARTRIDGE. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

BY SYBIL AND KATHARINE CORBET.

ANIMAL LAND WHERE THERE ARE NO
PEOPLE. With an Introduction by ANDREW LANG. Small oblong crown 4to, 2s. 6d. net.

"An exceptionally delightful picture book."—Spectator.

THE FALL of the NIBELUNGS.

Translated from the German by MARGARET ARMOUR, and Illustrated by W. B. MACDOUGALL.

With 16 Full-Page Drawings, &c.

Small fcap. 4to, printed upon Rough Antique Paper, 6s. net.

F. acids Thompson in the "Academy" says: 'I congratulate Miss Armour on her achievement.....In this translation I have exulted over genius, authentic genius, brought home to me in my mother tongue.'

"An admirable version."—Glasgow Herald.

BY HOUSTON STEWART CHAMBERLAIN.

RICHARD WAGNER. Translated from the German by G. AINSLIE HIGHT, and Revised by the AUTHOR. With numerous Photogravures, Colotypes, Facsimiles, Full-Page and Text Illustrations. Demy 4to, £1 5s. net.

"The illustrations are beautiful as well as plentiful, and the book is one of deep interest and great weight."—Times.

BY ÉMILE LEGOUIS.

The EARLY LIFE of WILLIAM WORDSWORTH,
1770-1798: a Study of the Prelude. Translated by J. W. MATTHEWS.

With a Prefatory Note by LESLIE STEPHEN, and a Photogravure Portrait of Wordsworth. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

"The work will appeal strongly to all lovers of Wordsworth and all students of literature in this country."—Times.

"M. Legouis has written a book which must interest the English reader, and may even make a few more French readers learn English."—Academy.

PICTURESQUE BURMA: Past and Present.

By Mrs. ERNEST HART. Illustrated with about 10 Photogravures, and about 70 to 80 Reproductions from Original Photographs, and Drawings, Maps, &c. Royal 8vo, 21s. net.

"A vivid series of travel sketches."—Times.

"The most useful and interesting description of Burma that has yet appeared." Pail Mall.

THE SPECTATOR.

A NEW EDITION in 8 vols., with an Introductory Essay by AUSTIN DOBSON. The Text Annotated and Edited by G. GREGORY SMITH, of Edinburgh University.

With a Photogravure Portrait in each Volume.

Fcap. 8vo, dull gilt top, quarter canvas, cloth sides 3s. net per volume.

"In short we have for the first time a reprint of the first scarce edition, or rather a reprint that is formally as well as totally satisfactory."—Times.

CATALOGUES ON APPLICATION.

ALDINE HOUSE, E.C.; AND 67, ST. JAMES'S STREET, S.W.

SERVICE &amp; PATON'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW BOOK BY DEAN FARRAR.

THE HERODS.

By F. W. FARRAR, D.D., F.R.S.

Crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

WOMEN of the OLD TESTAMENT.

By Rev. R. F. HORTON, M.A., D.D.

The above form Vols. I. and II. of

The Popular Biblical Library:

A Series of Volumes on Biblical Subjects, Written by Able and Well-known Scholars. [Other volumes in preparation.]

OUR CHURCHES, AND WHY WE BELONG TO THEM.

Being a Volume on the Present Position of the Principal Churches of Great Britain, Written by Prominent Representatives of each.

By Canon KNOX-LITTLE, Preb. WEBB-PEPLOE, Drs. HORTON, GLOVER, W. ROSS TAYLOR, &c.

Extra crown 8vo, price 6s.

"A volume of great interest."—W. E. GLADSTONE, Oct. 8, 1897.

NEW NOVEL BY L. QUILLER COUCH.

A SPANISH MAID.

Crown 8vo, price 6s.

A NEW AND HANDSOME EDITION OF

THE LADY OF THE LAKE.

By Sir WALTER SCOTT.

Fully Illustrated by C. E. BROOK, with an Introduction by ANDREW LANG.

Full gilt side and gilt edges, extra crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.; also in full French morocco, price 7s. 6d.

NEW EDITION OF

NATHANIEL HAWTHORNE'S ROMANCES.

Edited by Dr. MONCURE D. CONWAY,

And with Illustrations by F. H. TOWNSEND.

Crown 8vo, gilt top, price 3s. 6d. net each volume.

Just published, Vol. II.

THE HOUSE OF SEVEN GABLES.

Recently published, Vol. I.

THE SCARLET LETTER.

"Promises to be the first adequate edition of Nathaniel Hawthorne's works." Pail Mall Gazette.

NEW VOLUMES JUST ADDED TO THE

ILLUSTRATED ENGLISH LIBRARY.

Profusely Illustrated. Crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d. each.

- |   |   |
|---|---|
| 10. ROB ROY. Illustrated by F. H. TOWNSEND.     | 13. THE PIRATE. Illustrated by E. J. SULLIVAN.            |
| 11. VANITY FAIR. Illustrated by CHRIS. HAMMOND. | 14. THE NEWCOMES. Illustrated by CHRIS. HAMMOND.          |
| 12. OLD MORTALITY. Illustrated by SIDNEY PAGET. | 15. THE BRIDE OF LAMMERMOOR. Illustrated by FRED. PEGRAM. |

"Charmingly illustrated."—Magazine of Art.

"Exquisitely printed."—Black and White.

"Tastefully bound."—Westminster Gazette.

SERVICE & PATON, 5, HENRIETTA STREET, LONDON, W.C.

SMITH, ELDER &amp; CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

On October 27. In 2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

The Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Edited, with Biographical Additions,
By FREDERIC G. KENYON.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION OF MRS. BROWNING'S WORKS.

Early in November. Complete in 1 volume, with Portrait and Facsimile of a "Sonnet from the Portuguese." Large crown 8vo, bound in cloth, gilt top, 7s. 6d.

The Poems of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

*. This Edition is uniform with the Two-Volume Edition of Robert Browning's Complete Works

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF "THE GREY LADY."

On October 26. With 12 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREY LADY. By Henry Seton Merriman, Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," "In Kedar's Tents," &c.

CHEAP POPULAR EDITION OF "MARCELLA."

On October 28. Crown 8vo, bound in limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

MARCELLA. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. Cheap Popular Edition.

Immediately. SECOND EDITION. Small crown 8vo, bound in white cloth, 4s. 6d.

FRIENDSHIP'S GARLAND. By Matthew Arnold.

POT-POURRI from a SURREY GARDEN. By Mrs. C. W.
EARLE. With an Appendix by Lady CONSTANCE LYTTON. Sixth Edition.
Large Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

From the SPECTATOR.—"Space fails to show the excellence in every department of Mrs. Earle's practical advice; but no woman who loves her house, her garden, and her children should fail to read this book."

DEEDS that WON the EMPIRE. By the Rev. W. H.
FITCHETT. With 12 Plans and 18 Portraits. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In November.]

TWELVE YEARS in a MONASTERY. By Joseph
McCABE, late Father Antony, O.S.F. Large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Immediately.]

NEW NOVELS.

THIRD EDITION. Crown 8vo, 6s.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,
Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," &c.

PUNCH.—"A story by which Mr. Merriman more firmly establishes a still fresh but brilliant reputation. . . . The tale is full of adventure, and, happily, it is carried on by real men and women."

Mr. JAMES PAYN in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—"It is a book which no one will lay down who has begun it."

JAN: an Afrikaner. By Anna Howarth. Crown 8vo, 6s.
[Just published.]

ONE of the BROKEN BRIGADE. By Olive Phillipps-WOLLEY, Author of "Snap," "Gold, Gold in Cariboo," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A wholesome, stirring, lovable book—one of those stories which you read and keep to read again."

CORNHILL MAGAZINE for November.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.—CONTENTS.

THE ENGLISHMAN'S CALENDAR
(November).

THE GREAT STORM of 1703: an Anniversary Study. By HENRY HARRIS.

TENNYSON in IRELAND: a Reminiscence. By ALFRED PERCEVAL GRAVES.

THE SEPOY REVOLT at DELHI, MAY,
1857: a Personal Narrative.—Part III.
(Conclusion.) By Colonel E. VIBART.

THE GENESIS of GOLDFIELDS LAW
in AUSTRALIA. By ROLF BOLDR-WOOD.

SIR BOYLE ROCHE. By C. LITTON
FALKNER.

THE THOUGHTS of CLARA GOODALL.
By Mrs. FULLER MAITLAND.

SIR CHARLES MURRAY'S AD-
VENTURES with the PAWNEES.

THE REDEMPTION of the "FRIENDS ADVENTURE." By WALTER WOOD.

THE HUMOROUS SIDE of CLERICAL
LIFE. By the Rev. STEWART F. L.
BERNAYS.

A ROMANCE of BARKER'S BUILDINGS.
By Miss ADA L. HARRIS.

PAGES from a PRIVATE DIARY.

ONE APRIL MONTH. Chapters I.-III.
By A. H. BERNIS.

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

C. ARTHUR PEARSON'S NEW NOVELS

THE ZONE OF FIRE.

By HEADON HILL,
Author of "Guilty Gold," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

This is an exciting story of adventure with our troops in the Soudan, and should prove of especial interest in view of recent events.

THE DUKE AND THE DAMSEL.

By RICHARD MARSH,
Author of "The Devil's Diamonds," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

In this story Mr. Richard Marsh devotes himself to a series of light comedy incidents, relieved by a few touches of strong feeling.
The scene is laid at Monte Carlo, and the whole tale is a study of modern men (and women) and manners.

THE IRON CROSS.

By R. H. SHERARD,
Author of "Rogues," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

Mr. Sherard has laid the scene of this story in an old French village, and deals with a search for hidden treasure in a thoroughly novel and interesting way. The mystery of the hidden treasure is well maintained up to the last chapter.

THE RAID OF THE "DETRIMENTAL."

Being the true History of the Great Disappearance of 1862. Related by several of those implicated and others,

And now first set forth by the EARL of DESART.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"Cleverly written and replete with original interest.....Unique, and entirely out of the common run of fiction."—Public Opinion.

"Lord Desart's book is certainly the most amusing novel that has been produced by the present House of Peers."—Glasgow Herald.

"We can assure the reader that he will not have a dull moment during the perusal of this fantastic romance, nor will his curiosity as to the final fate of the 'Detrimental's' living cargo be satisfied before the last page."

Glasgow Daily Mail.

JOHN OF STRATHBOURNE.

By R. D. CHETWODE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"A stirring 'romance of the days of Francis I.'.....it is exceedingly well told, and the interest is sustained on every page."—Scotsman.

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS'S LOVE AFFAIR.

By J. MACLAREN COBBAN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

"Mr. Maclaren Cobban has dipped his pen in the same ink-bottle used by Mr. Anthony Hope, and I think with quite as much success. 'The Prisoner of Zenda' was not more charming than is 'Her Royal Highness's Love Affair.'"

Morning Leader.

"One of the most entertaining stories we have read for many a day.....a delightfully brisk and wholly enjoyable piece of humorous phantasy."

North British Daily Mail

C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1897.

No. 1329, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

THE EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE first edition of Lord Tennyson's Life, consisting of five thousand copies, having been entirely exhausted, a reprint is in hand and will be ready in the course of a few days. Meanwhile the biography has galvanised both quarterlies into extraordinary activity. The biography is the text of a long and careful article in both the Quarterly and the Edinburgh.

FOR no apparent reason, the new Quarterly passes seventeen minor poets under hurried review. The seventeen begin with Mr. Kipling, and end with Mr. Alfred Austin, and between them come Mr. W. S. Gilbert, Mr. Bridges, Mr. Watson, Sir Edwin Arnold, Mr. Dobson, Mr. Lang, Mr. Francis Thompson, Mr. John Davidson, Mr. Le Gallienne, Mrs. Meynell, Mr. Walter (!) Ernest Henley, Mr. H. D. Traill, Mr. Ashby Sterry, Mr. G. R. Sims, and Mr. Clement Scott. Why some of these singers should be dragged into the light of day, only to be breathlessly despatched into retirement again, we cannot imagine.

MR. LANG, for example, is judged as a poet purely on his Ballades in Blue China (1888), while a little piece of verse by his friend Mr. Dobson, inserted in that volume, is cited as a specimen of Mr. Lang's own flawlessness of form. This is both careless and misleading. Since Ballades in Blue China appeared, Mr. Lang has written the verse in Grass of Parnassus and Ban and Arrière Ban. That is to say, he has written "Twilight on Tweed" and "In Memoriam, H.B.," and the sonnets on Burnaby and Homer, and other pieces that might be mentioned—all of which entitle him to more respect than the Quarterly Review tenders. With some of the critic's decisions we do not quarrel; but it is hard to see Mr. Gilbert ranked higher as a poet than Mrs. Meynell, Mr. Bridges, and Mr. Henley; and the Quarterly is the last place where, of old, one would have expected to find a parody of the methods of Mr. Ashby Sterry, Mr. Sims, and Mr. Clement Scott.

Is anything wrong with English printing? We are led to ask the question by casually noticing that a new novel of Messrs. Hutchinson's has been printed in Holland, and that Edna Lyall's new story, Wayfaring Men, which proceeds from the house of Longman, has been printed from wretched American plates. Most novels, it is true, are but for a day, but that is no reason why they should be badly prepared.

AT the time of the appearance of the one-volume edition of Mr. Austin Dobson's poems, containing all that he deems most valuable, it is not inappropriate to give figures denoting the popularity of this sweet but low-voiced poet. Old World Idylls has reached its eleventh thousand; At the Sign of the Lyre, its eighth; and the three illustrated volumes, The Ballad of Beau Brocade, Proverbs in Porcelain, and The Story of Rosina are respectively in their twelfth, seventh, and tenth thousand.

A LADY has set to music some of the poems from Mr. Stevenson's Child's Garden of Verses, and Mr. Crockett has supplied an introduction to the book. Frankly, we do not like Mr. Crockett's introductions. At a romance of adventure we consider him an able hand, but an introduction demands a gift of self-effacement which he does not possess. He writes:

"In part payment of kindly debt, I write this foreword to one or two of Mr. R. L. Stevenson's loveliest child-songs, set to sweet and fitting music. Stevenson I am prepared to uphold at all times, and writing upon any subject. 'I mark,' he wrote of some review article supposed by him to be mine—'I mark your hand in the So-and-So, and am grieved with your monstrous ingratitude in the matter of the "Foot-note to History"—meaning, I suppose, that this book had been discriminated from the general meed of praise and objected to by the critic. But the reproach was not mine. The article was written by some clansman less loyal than I. For to this day I am as ready to stand an examination upon the relations of Malietoa and Matafaa and the misdeeds of the Germans upon Samoa as on Allan himself, or upon the connexion of the superfluous honesty of Jim Hawkins's mother with the Scotch school of philosophy."

Now, this surely is not the way to prepare the reader for a collection of Mr. Stevenson's child-verses.

THE book, which bears the title Song Flowers (Gardner, Darton & Co.), is, however, interesting, apart from the music, for its illustrations by Mr. Gordon Browne. Mr. Charles Robinson's charming pictorial fancies, suggested by these poems, are well known. A comparison of the work of the older and more matter-of-fact artist is interesting. Mr. Stevenson once said, "I must write a book for Gordon Browne to illustrate; he always puts me in good-humour with my people."

EACH autumn seems now to produce its own naturalist. Last year brought forth Mr. Hilaire Belloc, with new and engaging facts about beasts for the delectation of bad children. This year Mr. Lang introduces us to Miss Sybil Corbet et al four, who offers facts concerning a region to which she alone has entrance. Her book is called Animal Land (J. M. Dent & Co.), and this is her own account of that locality: "Animal land where there are no People is quite near, only you can't see it. It is a kind of Garden Cage, with the North Pole and the sea always roughling and wavy. In the summer they like to be hotter and hotter, and in the winter colder and colder. They live by the North Pole and in the leafy places near. It is always light there, always day; they climb the Poles and always play. That is Animal Land."

FROM the foregoing description, dictated by Miss Corbet to her mother, one would suppose the book to be a kind of unofficial appendix to Dr. Nansen's great work. The pictures of the various creatures, drawn by Miss Corbet from hints supplied by the naturalist, suggests that the influence of Mr. Edward Lear has been felt in the Corbet nursery. We have the Kank, an animal that lives in the forest, eats hay, and comes every morning up to the front door; the Didd; the Wuss, an animal that turns its back and eats snakes; the Jumma, an animal that likes chocolate and rabbits, and is a little blingey; the Junn, an animal that makes friends very easily; the Pokiban; the Joox, an animal that growls, and eats cabbages and beans; and the Toop. A quaint and original company.

NEW editions of Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking-Glass are announced by Messrs. Macmillan. Lewis Carroll has written new prefaces, and Sir John Tenniel's drawings are to be printed from new electrotypes. This issue will bring Alice in Wonderland to its eighty-sixth, and Through the Looking-Glass to its sixty-first, thousand.

IN that section of the American Book Buyer which is reserved for notes and queries, a poem has been attributed to one George Cooper. We do not know the poem, of which the first line runs:

"There came to port the other night," but it is interesting to read the humorous claim to the authorship thereof which is urged by Mr. George C. Cable, the writer of Old Creole Days. He says, in a note to the editor of the section:

"I have an impression that it was Coopered by quite another George. My impression is that it was written by myself twenty-seven years ago, on the occasion of the birth of my first child. If you can't take my word for it, I can show you the child. I am not a frequent versifier, and never should have prized this bit if it had not immediately, upon its first publication (in the New Orleans Picayune), begun a mad career of getting stolen—like 'Helen of Troy' and others. It is only three days since I wrote to a Chicago publishing house to say that it was not written by Mortimer M. Thompson, as accredited in a volume called The Humbler Poets. Let me tell you, even the humblest poet 'will turn.' And I wish my conscious or unconscious trespassers would give this much-stolen trifle a respite. Zounds, man! have I done nothing else worth stealing? It's mortifying."

MR. ANSTEY'S Tinted Venus appeared so long ago in Mr. Arrowsmith's Bristol Library, and was presented in so transitory a guise, that to many persons it will be, in its new form, a new book. The story is among the best book-farces that exist—than Vice Versé less comic, but than The Fallen Idol, its other companion, more. To the new edition, which Messrs. Harper and Brothers issue, Mr. Bernard Partridge supplies pictures. Mr. Partridge has before illustrated Mr. Anstey more happily, but these will suffice, although Leander Tweddle, as the artist conceives him, differs from our own mental picture of that pitiable dresser of hair.

THERE seems to be some pleasant difference of opinion as to the original and correct text of the epigram, "This world's a city full of streets." It will be remembered that our reviewer advanced a version of it which he considered "undeniably superior" to that adopted by Mr. Aubrey Stewart, in his recently published English Epigrams and Epitaphs. The Dundee Advertiser, referring to the two versions, says:

"There is, perhaps, a better version than either. It is inscribed on a mural tablet in Elgin Cathedral burying-ground, and from its date, early in the seventeenth century, may be regarded as the original:

"This world is a citie full of streets,
And death is the mercat that all men meets.
If life were a thing that money could buy,
The poor could not live, and the rich would not die."

A Dundee correspondent now tries to cap the Dundee Advertiser's version. In sending us the above cutting he writes:

"I have a large jug, one gallon capacity, with what may be a better version of 'This world's a city' than the supposed original in Elgin Churchyard; at least, as far as rhythm goes, and, perhaps, the sentiment. It was brought from Newcastle more than fifty years ago by my father, a shipmaster. Herewith is exact copy, and I notice that 'where' in the second line the h has been dropped, English-like, and 'were' substituted for 'where'! My version is this:

"The world's a city with many a crooked street,
And death's a market-place were all men meet!
If life was merchandise which men could buy,
The rich would live, the poor alone would die."

A NEW feature of The Lady's Realm, a magazine whose scope is sufficiently explained in its title, will be a series of love-songs, translated by Sir Edwin Arnold from various languages, among them being the Japanese, in which tongue, as a recent event proves, he is a skilled wooer. The originals will be printed side by side with the English versions, in order, we suppose, that the ladies who read this periodical may satisfy themselves of the accuracy of the translation.

THAT quiet little quarterly review of all the arts, The Dome, ventures this month to traffic with colour. As an accompaniment to an appreciation of the Japanese artist Hiroshige by Mr. Charles Holme, two examples of his work are given in colour. They are, of course, much reduced, but are, none the less, very pleasing.

Chapman's Magazine will in future contain one or more articles by expert writers on subjects of immediate social, literary, or general interest. The first of these articles will be from the pen of Mr. Andrew Lang, on "The Bookselling Question," and will deal, from the literary and public point of view, with the important scheme lately propounded in the interest of the Bookselling Trade, and now being considered officially by authors, publishers, and booksellers.

THE recently projected Hampstead Annual will be published in November. Among the contributors will be Sir Walter Besant, Canon Ainger, Dr. Horton, Mr. Arthur Waugh, Mr. H. W. Nevinston, and Mr. Frederick Wedmore. The editor is Mr. Ernest Rhys.

Poems of the Love and Pride of England, the volume of patriotic verse which Mr. Frederick Wedmore and his daughter have been preparing for nearly two years, is now practically ready for publication, and will be issued by Messrs. Ward & Lock in very tasteful form, with a title-page of special beauty. It is believed that not a single living poet of any real importance who has written patriotic verse will be found absent from the volume, while the poets of earlier generations are to be represented by some of their least-known, as well as by their most familiar, efforts.

THE Fine Art Society, of 148, New Bond-street, London, will recommence their special exhibitions with a collection of autograph letters and literary MSS. In many cases not merely single letters will be shown, but volumes of letters, as, for instance, those of Tasso, Locke, Sterne, Pope, Johnson, and Shelley. Among the original MSS. will be Keats's Endymion and Lamia, and works by Sir Walter Scott, Southey, Moore, Goldsmith, and Cowper. Autograph letters of a number of royal personages are also to be shown, together with those of authors, painters, warriors, statesmen, divines, musicians, and actors.

MR. GRANT RICHARDS has just ready for publication a work on which Mr. Grant Allen has been engaged intermittently ever since he left Oxford: The Evolution of the Idea of God: an Enquiry into the Origins of Religions. The greater part of this volume is new, but certain chapters have been already published in the form of review articles in the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews.

THE special winter number of The Studio, to be ready early in November, will consist of an inquiry into Children's Books and their Illustrators, written by Mr. Gleeson White, and illustrated by a large number of examples by various artists.

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

IV.—THE WITHHELD POEMS OF TENNYSON.

"THE artist is known by his self-limitation," said Tennyson; and he righteously condemned the publication of "chips from the workshop" of poets. Yet his son, in the recent biography of his father, has published a number of poems and lines which Tennyson withheld from the public. They prove, by Tennyson's own rule, that Tennyson was an artist. The only value of their publication is to show how little we lose, how much we gain, by such self-limitation; and to impress upon young poets the necessity of using like self-denial. The first thing needful to notice is the very early "Coach of Death." It has not a foreshadowing of the coming Tennyson in style, yet it contains the argument of "The Vision of Sin." The gaunt traveller, the thin-shanked host, are all there; but in style it is a youthfully wanton following of Burger and his German kin. His early University residence yields two fragments, both of which anticipate his maturer style: the one in description, the other in political utterance. But the earliest complete poem of importance is "Anacaona." His characteristic love of new and musical metrical combinations first shows itself in this. I referred but lately, in one of these essays, to the resemblance between Mangan and Edgar Poe in their treatment of the iterative refrain. Clearly, however, the thing was in the air, for here we find the same device in a minor degree.

"Bathing in the slumbrous coves,
In the cocoa-shadowed coves
Of sun-bright Xaraguay," quite hints the method of Edgar Poe; and not only Poe, but Mangan, excels Tennyson in this kind. "Anacaona" is as deficient in striking substance as Mangan; while its metre, for all its elaboration, falls short of the Irish poet's felicity. The rhymes did not satisfy Tennyson, we are told, which probably means the arrangement of rhymes—the metrical form. And he was right; it does not achieve its intention. The long "Hesperides," we are told, he was sorry for having omitted from his "Juvenilia." But we may thank his better and earlier judgment. In its form (and it depends on form rather than on substance) it is somewhere between the "Lotus Eaters" and such poems as "The Mer-man." Coleridge, who rightly blamed him because in his first volume he had adventured novel combinations before he was securely grounded in regular metre, would have found yet more fault with the "Hesperides." Its unfulfilled intention came (metrically) to golden fruit in the "Lotus-Eaters"; and we lose nothing by its absence from his poems. A following sonnet—"Lasting Sorrow"—has an excellent final couplet:

"I am so dark, alas! and thou so bright,
When we two meet there's never perfect light."

A sonnet on Cambridge, also, written in 1830, is good in a minor kind. And, finally, a sonnet on the "Nightingale" has an octave, charming in itself, and notable as the basis of a lovely passage in the "Lotus-Eaters":

"Check every outflash, every ruder sally
Of thought and speech, speak low, and give up wholly
Toy spirit to mild-minded Melancholy:
This is the place. Thro' yonder poplar alley,
Below, the blue green river windeth slowly,
But in the middle of the sombre valley
The crisped waters murmur musically,
And all the haunted place is dark and holy."

But so much—by far the greater part—of these poems reads like Tennyson imitating himself. "The Statesman" and "Truth" are of this kind; "The Mother's Ghost" is not even Tennyson's ghost; it is nothing. And of the patriotic songs what shall be said? "Britons, guard your own," is painfully poor; "Hands all round," in spite of lines which have the dignified Tennysonian manner, is quite below the high poetic mark. "The Philosopher" is a perfect example of workmanship without inspiration. But why go on? Tennyson thought none of these things worthy a place in his published work; and their publication shows that he had admirable self-judgment. It is the same with the omitted stanzas from his various poems; they deserved omission, and not posthumous publication. The best of them are some of those excluded from the "Dream of Fair Women." This astronomical stanza, for instance:

"Regions of lucid matter taking forms,
Brushes of fire, hazy gleams,
Clusters and beds of worlds, and bee-like swarms,
Of suns and starry streams."

This is fine and vivid: it and its companion stanzas were doubtless left out to gain compactness. He had intended (so we are told) to insert sculptures in that rich poem, but only finished two. The first, of Elijah, is good, but not magical like the pictures we possess:

"Tall, eager, lean and strong, his cloak wind-borne
Behind, his forehead heavenly bright
From the clear marble pouring glorious scorn,
Lit as with inner light."

The second, of Olympias, I think better, and not unworthy of a place in the poem. The omitted prologue, on the other hand, to "The Gardener's Daughter" is all workmanship, workmanship, and decidedly is better away. Nevertheless, in that poem occurs the single omission which I find it possible to regret:

"Her beauty grew: till drawn in narrowing arcs,
The southing Autumn touch'd with swallowed gleams
The granges on the fallows."

That is magical, in Tennyson's finest style of pictorial suggestion. It is said to have been excised because Fitzgerald said it was taken from a landscape—background in a picture by Titian—surely the very strangest reason ever assigned for an omission! Let us thank and admire the great poet's judgment, that it is the sole ill-advised excision which his son's Memoir has been able to bring to light.

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

WHAT THE PEOPLE READ.

III.—A NOVELIST.

It struck me first as I placed the candle by my bedside and looked round the room. I had ridden down on my bicycle to dine and sleep. We had dined pleasantly and talked long; my brain was awake and needed a soporific. For my host, besides being a story-teller whose words are quoted among publishers at many guineas per thousand, is a stimulative talker, and he had made me think. And thought is a bad nightcap. Looking round the room, I saw a bookcase over the mantelpiece—empty. Yet not absolutely empty, for lying flat in one corner was a book of hymns, adapted, if I remember rightly, to the use of Congregationalists. It struck me even more forcibly the next morning, when I wandered about in search of a newspaper, or, in default of a newspaper, a book. Nothing of the kind was visible but a two months old copy of the Art Journal and an illustrated paper which contained an interview with the novelist. Tobacco, food, drink, pictures, music, but no literature. I found him lighting his after-breakfast pipe upon the lawn.

"I say," I began, "I can't find anything to read."

He looked at me a little curiously.

"If you really want a book," he said, "ask my wife. There are lots in the house; only—to tell you the truth, I don't know where they are."

"But the last time I was here," I said, "the place was infested with new books. You were reviewing, you know."

"I've given up reviewing," he said. "I'm getting on with my new story."

"Well, but where are the books?" I asked.

"I expect," he said, cramming a finger into the bowl of his pipe, "they're sold."

"But don't you read yourself between whiles?" I inquired. "Just as a relaxation?"

He drew me by the arm to a seat and we sat down.

"Look here," he said, "you've put your finger on my vice. I don't read anything."

"Don't read anything?"

"Nothing. I'm in the position of the man who has to take the pledge to avoid becoming a habitual drunkard. I've got the—well, you might call it the cacoëthes legendi—in a virulent form. Every scrap of printed matter that comes under my eye has got to be read before I can settle down to work. It doesn't matter how footling it is. If it is only a price-list which a draper has sent to my wife it's got to be read, if once I get hold of it. As to the morning paper—why, I can't get through it before lunch."

"Then," I said, "you don't take in a morning paper?"

"Not when I'm working," he replied. "At least I never see it. My wife looks after that. Any new book or paper that comes into the house she seizes and hides, and I never come across it. If I did, I assure you I should have to read it from end to end. Then the whole day would be gone and no work done."

"But don't you want to read to—well—improve your style, or for pleasure?"

"As for style," he said, "I think style comes from the inside of a man, not from the outside. To a novelist, for instance, it would be as absurd to try to copy Stevenson's style as to copy his velvet coat. The effect you made wouldn't be worth making. As to pleasure—"

"Well, don't you find pleasure in reading good stuff? Would you as soon read a draper's price list or the advertisements in the Times as, say, St. Ives?"

"Oh, certainly not," he said. "The confirmed inebriate probably likes good liquor better than bad, though he'll drink the worst rather than none. I would rather read good stuff; for choice I think I would rather read the transactions of scientific societies and accounts of discoveries in chemistry, biology, and so forth. But anything that's printed is enough to compel me to put off my work until it's read."

"Then you don't care particularly about reading novels?"

"Well, I fancy the novelist approaches the novel from a special point of view. The general reader reads for the story. The novelist looks at the method of telling. He is like the builder whom you show over your new house. The builder doesn't bother about the paint and the paper; he has an eye to the foundations, and the thickness of the walls, and the stuff the walls are built of. Now when I read a novel I am always on the look-out to see how it was put together. It's the technique that interests me. Of course, as I said, anything that is printed interests me—but a good novel holds me more securely than a draper's catalogue, because it is better done."

"Then which is the novelist you most carefully avoid?"

He considered for a moment, then he replied: "Henry James. That is, when I want to write myself. As a matter of fact, I read every line he writes, and can't do a stroke of work for a week afterwards. You see, you can't imitate him, and you can't see how he does it. I imagine that most writers have the same feeling about Henry James. He is the novelist for novelists, because only a man who writes novels has the feeling for technique. The general public, I believe, don't care about him because there is nothing particularly exciting, or improper, or instructive, in his stories. But the way he writes them—Good Lord!" He sighed gently, and knocked the ashes from his pipe.

"Well," he said, "if you go and find the wife, she will probably give you something to read. I've got to go and write."

PARIS LETTER.

(From our French Correspondent.)

THE sentence pronounced against sequels seems inevitable. Even the delicate and incomparable style of M. Anatole France is doomed to failure when he attempts to repeat a triumph in the same path. L'Orme du Mail was an enchantment. Not so its successor, Le Mannequin d'Osier, which takes up the threads, and continues the tale of M. Bergeret's colourless miseries. The very title is an unjustifiable affectation. There is, of course, the same grace, the same mediæval elegance of phrase and irony. The same mocking and almost tender sympathy, the same exquisite clarity of thought and expression; above and beyond all, the same bland, unwavering charm. It is always a master who writes for our delectation, and in his pages the meanest life shows through a soft, luminous smile. Still the effort falls heavy. The first half of the book is charming. The latter half palls and is almost dull.

The author of so much wit and wisdom cannot fail to strew his pages with memorable phrases. Speaking of M. Bergeret's various disenchantments—the vulgarity of his wife, the indifference of his daughters, the insipidity of the combats of Turnus and Æneas—he says: “He was unhappy through his own fault. For all our real miseries are interior and caused by ourselves. We falsely believe that they come from without, but we form them within us from our own substance.” And addressing his favourite pupil in his military uniform as a hero, M. Bergeret adds: “The least one may do is to flatter a little those we send to death. We could not offer them the commission at a cheaper rate.” The pupil explains that he has expended all his mental faculties during four months in conciliating his corporal and serjeant-major by “measured gratuities.” It is the only branch of the military art he has succeeded in acquiring, but it is also the most important. The Romans, M. Bergeret says, were not essentially military, since they made profitable and durable conquests, whereas the true soldier takes everything and keeps nothing. Dilating fancifully on the innate love of destruction planted in every human breast, the fatuous young scholar says, “with a gun in my hand, I want to shoot everybody; it's in the blood.” He maintains that it suffices to give any man a bayonet for him to thrust it into the body of the first comer, and become thereby a hero. When M. Rouxe removes the master's dictionary from a chair to make room for the master's wife, M. Bergeret reflects:

“Mme. Bergeret swam in the infinite of the ages, formless, conscienceless, scattered in light rays of oxygen and carbon. The particles which should one day compose this Latin lexicon, at the same time, gravitated for ages in this same nebulous state, whence should spring monsters, insects, and a little thought. It needed an eternity to produce my wife and my dictionary, monuments of my painful existence, defective forms both, at times importunate. My dictionary is full of errors. Amélie bears an injurious soul in a heavy body. Hence there is scant reason to hope that a new eternity will finally create science and beauty. We live for a while, and we should gain nothing by living forever. It is not a lack of time or space that nature can complain of, and we see her work!”

M. Bergeret's erudite humour and punctilious prose in explaining the coarse insult of an illiterate sergeant are delightful. Admitting that he may possibly have lent a meaning to the sergeant's commonplace obscenity, he says: “I grant there may have been some unconsciousness in the memorable discourse of Sergeant Lebrece. But that is genius. It bursts without a suspicion of its own force.” The wife pettishly protests that nobody knows whether her husband is chaffing or serious, and we may imagine, without indiscretion, that M. France himself is not without familiarity with such a domestic protest. It requires some subtlety to penetrate so imperturbable a placidity as his, and detect how much real pity lies under the irony, how human is the limpid flow of speech. What, for instance, could be more pitifully, delicately satirical than the description of the gross domestic interruptions in the lofty discourse between M. Bergeret and his learned disciples? It is the brutal facts of life viewed with a dainty serenity. We hear of a young officer, a modern St. George, who nourishes a mystic notion of the military career, mysterious devotions fulfilled in a state of grave and pious chastity. Only one thing wrecks his mild and exquisite calm: the National flag. The iniquitous violence of white, red, and blue breaks his heart. He yearns for pink or lilac, and dreams of a celestial banner. But he suffers with patience and courage. Meanwhile sounds of another kind of wreckage come from the kitchen where the young Euphemia is engaged upon the dinner, and acrid odours penetrate in whiffs to incommode M. Bergeret among the shadows of Æneas, Turnus and the timid Lavinia, and the professor, saddened by the inelegance of his narrow life,

“mused of some villa where, on a white terrace, on the border of a blue lake, he might discourse quietly to his friends in the perfume of myrtle, at the hour when the amorous moon rises to bathe in a sky pure like the glances of the kindly gods, mild like the breath of the goddesses.”

The climax of this erudite chapter is the appearance of the young Euphemia, scarlet and enraged, roaring “Give me my wages and let me go.”

There is an indescribable and suggestive eloquence in each adjective, as well as each line referring to this quaint figure of a colourless and unhappy professor in a slow provincial town. The air that blows about him is “malicious,” the face of the town is “hostile”; his own eye is the only one that meets his glance with benevolence. “He bestowed some pity and sympathy on himself. He was kindly to himself as to the unfortunate.” When his wife betrays him with his favourite pupil,

“it was not his happiness that was destroyed (he was never happy), it was his poor domestic life, his private existence, already so cold and so laborious, now broken and dishonoured, of which nothing more remained.”

Pity here is more profound than M. France's graceful irony would have us believe. To measure such dull and uninteresting sorrow is atonement for a pagan lack of morality, and an unreverent raillery.

H. L.

SOME BOOKMEN OF YESTERDAY.

WE receive now and again from Mr. Quaritch, the bookseller, certain slim paper-covered booklets bearing the title: Contributions towards a Dictionary of English Book-Collectors. They represent Mr. Quaritch's progress with a work of great interest, difficulty, and magnitude, the nature of which is sufficiently indicated by its name. We are merely about to dip into its latest instalment. Not one of the articles in this part is written by Mr. Quaritch himself; all are from the pen of Mr. F. S. Ellis, who pleasantly dubs himself “an advanced sexagenarian bibliopole”; but Mr. Quaritch appends a characteristic note to the first article, in which is set forth the career of Bertram, the great fourth Earl of Ashburnham—the founder of the Ashburnham Library.

Mr. Quaritch—whose opinion may be said to be final—considers that the Earl was “a most accomplished and learned book-collector.” Mr. Quaritch knew him well. In his early bookselling days the noble Lord was his frequent customer, and he (the Earl) had many a good bargain. For instance, a small folio, Aesopus, that was made Lot 19 in the recent Ashburnham sale, was recognised by Mr. Quaritch as a volume which he had sold to the Earl fifty years previously for £3 3s. Mr. Quaritch was glad to acquire it again for £61. On one occasion, when the Earl thought he had been fortunate in his dealing with Mr. Quaritch, we read: “He was so pleased with his bargain that he made me a very acceptable present of game.” Alas! for the fourth Earl of Ashburnham, he weakened in the eternal struggle at Quaritch's. “Latterly Lord Ashburnham ceased to buy from me; he could not compete with more open-handed buyers like the Earl of Crawford, Mr. Henry Huth, and Mr. James Lenox, of New York.” Then came the catastrophe: “One day I showed him a splendid collection of MSS., including one of the Carolingian period. I told him my prices; he admitted the great attraction placed before him, and asked me, finally, whether I would allow him to make an offer for the lot. I curtly replied, ‘No, my lord, my prices are net.’ I think that was the last time Lord Ashburnham was in my shop.”

Such partings must be; but, while we read, we feel sorry for the fourth Earl of Ashburnham, for he was proud and stern, and he had run his race well. Once he commissioned Lilly, his agent, to buy a second folio Shakespeare, but without mentioning any price. Such folios then fetched about £15; this one was run up to £60, and then Lilly stopped in dismay, and the folio was lost. “What did you mean by letting it go at that price? Did I not tell you to buy it?” thundered the Earl, whose good judgment, by the way, has been proved by the prices the same book realised at later dates: £146 in 1864, and £540 in 1896. The day arrived (we have seen) when the Earl's acquisitions were controlled by sterner circumstances than the timidity of an agent.

A great bookman, of the same period, was George Daniel. Mr. Ellis says of himself that he is one of "the few survivors among bibliophiles to whom the portly figure and florid, good-humoured countenance of Mr. George Daniel were familiar during the latter years of his life." He gives us a picture of Daniel. Though he "had lampooned the Prince Regent in his youth, he affected the style and manners of the Regency period in his later days, and there are touches in Dickens's creation of Mr. Turveydrop, senr., that strongly remind one of him. His manner was too supercilious, condescending, and pompous to inspire any very warm-hearted remembrances in those who knew him." Thus plainly do these bookmen write of their dead. The sale of Daniel's collection took place in 1864. In forty years' experience Mr. Ellis remembers no sale "that created equal excitement and interest"; and he recalls the heat and suffocation and tension of the auction room when Mr. Wilkinson took up his hammer to dispose of Daniel's Shakespearian treasures, notably a first folio, which he knocked down to the Baroness Burdett Coutts for 682 guineas. If golden lads must come to dust, it would seem that every collection on which gold and brains have been spent must some day be dusted. George Daniel, like the rest, had his day; "he was a cautious buyer, and a hard-mouthed bargainer," yet he could show emotion when it cost nothing. When he bought that first folio Shakespeare from Mr. Pickering for £100—a high price in those days—the bookseller was for wrapping the volume in paper. "No, no!" cried Daniel; "nothing less than silk! fetch me one of your best silk handkerchiefs." And in silk, and in a hackney-coach, the volume was conveyed to Islington.

THE BOOK MARKET.

THE BOOK, AND THE VILLAGE.

A FEW days ago I was in a long, lofty office, overlooking the Victoria Embankment. Shelves of new, brightly bound books ran round the room, and the floor was almost covered with painted wooden boxes, made very square and tight, with clamps and good locks, as if for endurance. At the end of the room, opposite the window, was a table for secretarial work, and beyond, through the window, ran the glinting tides, with the red sails of barges showing above or between the trees. It was a pleasant room in itself; but knowing its work and purposes it seemed to me singularly pleasant. For from this room remote villages all over England are supplied with new books on a self-supporting library system. I was a visitor to the Review of Reviews Circulating Library; and Mr. W. Stead, jun., who manages the library, was there to talk to me about it; while Miss Atlee, on whom the secretarial work falls, was equally ready to meet with facts and documents any dulness of comprehension that declared itself in my questions.

"Will you tell me," I asked Mr. Stead, "how long you have been doing this work, and why you began it."

"It sprang," was the reply, "out of the Review of Reviews, three years ago. We had country people calling to ask all kinds of questions, and chiefly to ask what books they should read and what editions they should buy. It became clear to us that small towns and villages had been quite passed over by the Free Libraries Acts, and that something else, appropriate to their needs, ought to be done to help them in the race."

"And you found the solution in what I may call circulating Circulating Libraries?"

"Yes. Not that the idea was original. Hampshire and Yorkshire had already village libraries. The Sunday School Union was supplying books to villages. The Working Men's Club and Institute Union was issuing over a hundred boxes of books a year to local centres, and the National Liberal Club was acting as literary godfather to about thirty villages. Then in America the box-system had long been in operation. What my father did see was that the ground was most imperfectly covered; and that in the Review of Reviews he had a valuable aid in any attempt he should make to establish an extensive Village Library system of his own."

"And he felt encouraged to start?"

"Yes, and his encouragement came from the villagers themselves as represented by our constant stream of callers at the Review of Reviews office. Mr. Thomas Greenwood, who was entitled to speak with authority, assured my father that a box system of supplying small country towns and villages with books could never be self-supporting. We are proud to have proved Mr. Greenwood wrong. Then the parish councils to whom we first appealed were not at all effusive in their welcome of the project. Being then very new bodies, they were afraid of schemes that spelled increased rates. They would do nothing."

"Well, you did get support, and you have made the scheme pay. Now, Mr. Stead, will you tell me just what the scheme is when in full operation?"

"Certainly. It is very simple. At any given time we have several sets of twelve boxes in circulation. These sets are alike. But the twelve boxes composing a set are all differently made up. A village, therefore, can ask for any one of these twelve boxes, the contents of which are catalogued in the current prospectus; then it can exchange this box for another, and so gradually devour twelve little libraries."

"How many books are there in one box?"

"Forty."

"And how long is a village entitled to keep a box?"

"Three months."

"And the subscription?"

"The subscription is £6 a year; and it works out to this, that thirty people, paying each a halfpenny a week, can have the reading of some 150 books every year."

"And who takes charge of a village box, and who distributes the books?"

"That varies in different cases. A clergyman, a small stationer, the secretary of a club, a Sunday-school teacher, or a private individual—all these receive boxes and are responsible for their safety."

"And are you supplied with any record of the use that is made of a given box of books?"

"Oh, yes; you shall see one." Here Miss Atlee placed before me a tabulated statement of the books received in last March from the Review of Reviews Library by the little village of H—.

The names and addresses of thirty subscribers were given, and opposite each were the numbers of the books which the subscriber had borrowed. They did not all borrow books from that box. Seven refrained. Two subscribers borrowed only one book each. Others had three, four, and five books from the box in the quarter, and Mr. C— borrowed fourteen volumes. I take leave to surmise that Mr. C— has a family of boys and girls, particularly boys. In any case, the C— family has very healthy tastes in reading. These are the books they carried home between March 26 and June 26 of this year: Mrs. Browning's Poems, Green's Short History of the English People, Letters and Memoirs of Charles Kingsley, Poultry for Prizes and Profit, and four bound volumes of magazines. Then I found that the C—'s taste in fiction is robust and varied. Treasure Island, Toilers of the Sea, Adventures of Sherlock Holmes, I do not doubt, were the boys' choice. Mrs. W. K. Clifford's Aunt Anne, The Stickit Minister, and Mrs. Charles's The Draytons and Davenants, would be the choice of their sisters; and Marcella, perhaps, pleased an older mind.

I found it interesting to analyse the table further. The most popular book in this box—sent to a Sussex village three months ago—was The Adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

Second in favour came Mrs. Charles's The Draytons and Davenants, and—for a surprise—Sheridan's Plays.

Next in popularity came Marcella, Kenilworth, The Bride of Lammermoor, and Toilers of the Sea.

After these: Mr. Lang's Green Fairy Book, The Citizen and the State, and It's Never too Late to Mend.

Lady Brassy's Voyage in the Sunbeam was borrowed three times; Mrs. Browning's Poems twice; Scott's Poems only once.

Green's Short History of the English People had only one reader in the village, but Dean Farrar's Early Days of Christianity had three.

There were two readers each for The Life of Lord Lawrence, Mr. Frederic Harrison's Life of Cromwell, and Lord Macaulay's Essays.

Not a single Sussex villager wanted to read The Humour of Ireland.

I thought this document, one of scores which Mr. Stead could have shown me, was most interesting and significant. Mr. Stead went on to tell me of bleak villages on the Tyne, and stone-built hamlets on the Cumberland fells, and Welsh hamlets as remote, between which and London there has been established this literary tie; and it seemed to me that a new and gracious wonder had been added to London.

W. W.

THE WEEK.

A PRODUCTIVE week, in which works of History and Biography are again prominent. Thus the fourth and concluding volume of the Life of Dr. E. B. Pusey, D.D., begun by Canon Liddon, is given to the world. Dr. Pusey had scarcely begun to work upon this portion of Dr. Pusey's life, but he had written an account of Dr. Pusey's last days, and of his death-bed, which, it is unnecessary to say, finds its place in this volume. In the latter part of his life, when the Tractarian storm had rocked itself to rest, or was heard only in its after-rumbles, Dr. Pusey devoted himself to broadening the foundations of the Christian faith as a whole. In this volume the reader will learn how,

"from the vantage-ground of the full faith of the Catholic Church, and with his wide knowledge and clear insight into the limits of any possible range of physical science, he was able not only to steady and reassure many troubled minds, but also to make timely contributions of permanent value to the cause of Christian apology."

The work has not even now been completed without vicissitudes. The names of four writers, including Pusey's, appear on the title-page of this volume, and two of these writers have gone to their rest.

A book of the week is the Philosophical Lectures and Remains of Richard Lewis Nettleship. It is contained in two volumes, of which Mr. S. C. Bradley has edited the first, and Mr. G. R. Benson the second; and the labours of these gentlemen are founded to some extent on work done by Prof. C. E. Vaughan, of the University College of South Wales. The "Remains" include Miscellaneous Papers and Extracts from Letters, a series of Lectures on Logic, a series of chapters on "Plato's Conception of Goodness of the Good" (the only portion of these books written for publication), and Lectures on the Republic of Plato.

The tragically sudden death of Prof. Nettleship, which all our readers will remember, lends touching interest to the biographical sketch which Prof. Bradley has written for these "Remains." Referring to Prof. Nettleship's matured mind, Prof. Bradley has these striking sentences:

"In his last years he had given up some of his college work, and it is most likely that, before very long, he would have retired, and have devoted himself in London to philosophical writing. Nor is it probable that, even if his colleagues had wished him to become master, he could have been induced to accept a position which, in some respects, would have been very uncongenial to him, and for which he considered himself in those respects unfitted. He was thought by the friends who saw most of him in these last years to look decidedly older, and at the same time to have grown more peaceful, if not happier. He had, I think, mastered the restlessness of unsatisfied love; and, while his sympathies were only deepened and enlarged, he seemed to have attained to much of that indifference to the chances and changes of which religious writers speak. Alike in intellect and character, which in him seemed in a peculiar degree inseparable, he was standing when his death came higher than he had ever stood before. The last of his letters to me was written the night before he started for Switzerland, never to return; it was meant to be read only if he chanced to be the first to die; and almost its final words were these: 'Don't bother about death; it doesn't count.' Not for him, doubtless, or for that which includes both him and all who loved him or feel his influence; but to them, and, as they believe, to others, his death counts only too much. He lives, indeed, in them so long as they are true to him; but they must feel how dim is the reflection that their memories, or even these 'Remains,' can render of a spirit so ardent, deep, and pure."

It may be asked, who wants a new complete edition of the works of George Berkeley? But the Bohn series is a monument of courageous publishing, and Messrs. Bell are, we dare say, not mistaken in their belief that Berkeley's works only need to be made more accessible to be more studied. The only other edition before the public is the exhaustive one issued by Prof. Campbell Fraser from Oxford in 1871. This is both too expensive and too learned for any but a narrow range of readers. The present edition will be less cumbered with notes, and its cost will be no barrier to its acquisition. A Biographical Introduction by the Right Hon. Arthur J. Balfour is a welcome feature. This essay has been printed before, but it has been revised for its present purpose. Mr. Balfour says of Berkeley's writings:

"In reading his not very voluminous works we find ourselves not only in the thick of every great controversy— theological, mathematical, and philosophical—which raged in England during the first half of the eighteenth century, but we get glimpses of life in the most diverse conditions: in the seclusion of Trinity College, Dublin, in the best literary and fashionable society in London, among the prosperous colonists of Rhode Island, among the very far from prosperous peasants and squireens of Cork. And all this in the company of a man endowed with the subtlest of intellects, lit up with a humour the most delicate and urbane."

A portrait of Berkeley, executed in photograph from John Smibert's picture in the National Portrait Gallery, is the frontispiece to the first of the three volumes within which the edition will be complete.

The week's Poetry gives us Mr. Austin Dobson's final selections of his Poems, and Canon Ainger's selection from the poems of Thomas Hood.

A curious book of travel may be noted: England Through Chinese Spectacles, by Wo Chang. It should be interesting to compare Wo Chang's strictures on England with those of Goldsmith's "citizen of the world."

Students who can visit Rome, or who cannot, will probably find a useful book in Prof. Rodolfo Lanciani's Ruins and Excavations of Ancient Rome. Prof. Lanciani teaches ancient topography in the University of Rome, and is master of his subject. "Students wishing to attain a higher degree of efficiency in this branch of Roman archaeology will find copious references to the standard publications on each subject or part of a subject; while the description of ruins and excavations will not be found too technical or one-sided for the ordinary reader."

About thirty new novels are catalogued and described elsewhere.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

- THE RETURN TO THE CROSS. By Rev. W. Robertson Nicoll, M.A. Isbister & Co.
THE NEW TESTAMENT. Illustrated. Thomas Nelson & Sons. 2s. 6d.
HOMILETIC: LECTURES ON PREACHING. By Theodor Christlieb, D.D. Edited by Th. Haarbeck. T. & T. Clark (Edinburgh). 7s. 6d.
GENESIS CRITICALLY AND EXEGETICALLY EXPOUNDED. By Dr. A. Willmann. Translated from the last edition by Wm. B. Stevenson, B.D. T. & T. Clark (Edinburgh).
ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRIST. By David Somerville, M.A. T. & T. Clark. 9s.
IN A PLAIN PATH: ADDRESSES TO BOYS. By Rev. W. J. Foxwell, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
CHRISTIAN ASPECTS OF LIFE. (By Brooke Foss Westcott, D.D. Macmillan & Co. 7s. 6d.)
THE THREE RYLANDS: A HUNDRED YEARS OF VARIOUS CHRISTIAN SERVICE. By James Culross, D.D. Elliot Stock.

HISTORY AND BIOGRAPHY.

- LIFE OF EDWARD BOUVERIE PUSEY. By Henry Parry Liddon, and Other Writers. Longmans, Green & Co. 18s.
PHILIP II. OF SPAIN. By Martin A. S. Hume. Macmillan & Co.
CHRONICLES OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND. By B. B. Turner. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 7s. 6d.
THE CHILDREN'S STUDY: ROMAN. By Mary Ford. T. Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d.
THE RUINS AND EXCAVATIONS OF ANCIENT ROME. By Rodolfo Lanciani. Macmillan & Co.
THE WORKS OF GEORGE BERKELEY, D.D. Edited by George Sampson. With a Biographical Introduction by the Right Hon. A. J. Balfour, M.P. Vol. I. George Bell & Sons. 5s.
THE STORY OF AUSTRALIA. By Flora L. Shaw. Horace Marshall & Son. 1s. 6d.
THE WORKS OF XENOPHON. Translated by H. G. Dakyns, M.A. Macmillan & Co. 5s.
THE MAKERS OF MODERN ROME. By Mrs. Oliphant. Macmillan & Co. 10s. 6d.
EAST ANGLES AND THE GREAT CIVIL WAR. By Alfred Kingston. Elliot Stock.
THE COLDSTREAM GUARDS IN THE CRIMEA. By Lt.-Col. Ross of-Bladensburg. A. D. Innes & Co.
THE CAMPAIGN OF MARENGO. By Herbert H. Sargent. Kegan Paul. 3s. 6d.

ESSAYS, POETRY, CRITICISM.

- THE ROYAL SHEPHERDESSES, AND OTHER POEMS. By Dudley Charles Bushby. Digby, Long & Co. 2s. 6d.
POEMS. By George Cookson. A. D. Innes & Co. 4s. 6d.
LAYS OF THE RED BRANCH. By Sir Samuel Ferguson, Q.C. T. Fisher Unwin. 2s.
THE ETHICS OF BROWNING'S POEMS. By Mrs. Percy Leake. Grant Richards.
SONGS IN MANY MOODS. By Nina Frances Layard. THE WANDERING ALBATROSS. By Annie Corder. Longmans, Green & Co.
THE PRINCIPLES OF CRITICISM. By W. Basil Worsfold, M.A. George Allen.
LAYS OF LOVE AND LIBERTY. By James A. Mackereth. Elliot Stock.
MONTAIGNE AND SHAKESPEARE. By John M. Robertson. The University Press (London).
COLLECTED POEMS. By Austin Dobson. Kegan Paul. 6s.
THE TEMPLE DRAMATISTS: THE FAITHFUL SHEPHERDESSES. By John Fletcher. Edited by F. W. Moorman, Ph.D. J. M. Dent & Co. 1s.
LITERARY PAMPHLETS, CHIEFLY RELATING TO POETRY. From Sidney to Byron. Selected by Ernest Rhys. 2 vols. Kegan Paul.
FIDELIS, AND OTHER POEMS. By C. M. Gemmer. Archibald Constable & Co. 3s. 6d.
POEMS OF THOMAS HOOD. Edited by Alfred Singer. 2 vols. 10s.

SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL.

THE LOCAL DISTRIBUTION OF ELECTRIC POWER IN WORKSHOPS, &c. By Ernest Kilburn Scott. Biggs & Co. 2s.
THE FOUNDERS OF GEOLOGY. By Sir Archibald Geikie. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

THE GOLD FIELDS OF THE KLONDIKE. By John W. Leonard. T. Fisher Unwin. 2s. 6d.
ENGLAND THROUGH CHINESE SPECTACLES: LEAVES FROM THE NOTEBOOK OF WO CHANG. The Cotton Press.
CHRONICLES OF THE PARISH OF TAXWOOD. By J. R. Maodon, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 3s. 6d.
MOUNTAIN, STREAM, AND COVERT. By Alexander Innes Shand. Seeley & Co.

PHILOSOPHY.

MODERN RATIONALISM. By Joseph McCabe. Watts & Co.
THE FACTS OF THE MORAL LIFE. By Wilhelm Wundt. Translated by Julia Gulliver and Edward B. Titchener. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 7s. 6d.
PHILOSOPHICAL LECTURES AND REMAINS OF RICHARD LEWIS NETTLESHIP. Edited by A. C. Bradley and G. R. Benson. Macmillan & Co. 17s.

EDUCATIONAL.

A DIGEST OF DEDUCTIVE LOGIC. By B. Johnson Barker. B.A. Methuen & Co. 2s. 6d.
A HISTORY OF ROME FOR BEGINNERS. By Evelyn S. Shuckburgh, M.A. Macmillan & Co.
A JUNIOR LATIN-ENGLISH GRADUS OR VERSE-Dictionary. By Sidney C. Waterhouse, B.A. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 3s.
APPLIED MECHANICS. By John Perry. Cassell & Co. 9s.
THE UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL SERIES: THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE; ITS HISTORY AND STRUCTURE. By W. H. Low, M.A. W. B. Oliver. 3s. 6d.
MIDDLE FORM GREEK READING BOOKS: PYLOS AND SPARTANES. Edited by W. H. D. Rouse, M.A. Livingtons.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

LITTLE GROWN-UPS. By Elizabeth S. Tucker and Maud Humphrey. SUNDAY READING FOR THE YOUNG, 1896. Gardner, Darton & Co. PHIL MAY'S A.B.C. The Leadenhall Press, Ltd. SONG FLOWERS FROM A CHILD'S GARDEN OF VERSE. By Robert Louis Stevenson. Set to Music by Robert Louis Stevenson. Gardner, Darton & Co. ANIMAL LAND. By Sybil & Katharine Corbet. With an Introduction by Andrew Lang. J. M. Dent & Co. FOR THE FLAG. From the French of Jules Verne. By Mrs. Cassel Hoey. Sampson Low. CLOVIS DARTMENTOR. By Jules Verne. Sampson Low. RED APPLES AND SILVER BELLS: A BOOK OF VERSE FOR CHILDREN OF ALL AGES. By Hamish Hendry. Illustrated by Alice B. Woodward. Blackie & Son, Ltd. FIFTY-TWO STORIES OF DUTY AND DARING FOR GIRLS. Edited by Alfred H. Miles. Hutchinson & Co. FIFTY-TWO STORIES OF DUTY AND DARING FOR BOYS. Edited by Alfred H. Miles. Hutchinson & Co. A DAUGHTER OF ERIN. By Violet P. Finny. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d. NELL'S SCHOOL-DAYS: A STORY OF TOWN AND COUNTRY. By H. F. Gethen. Blackie & Son. 2s. 6d. THE NAVAL CADET: A STORY OF ADVENTURE ON LAND AND SEA. By Gordon Stables, M.D. Blackie & Son. 3s. 6d. WITH FREDERICK THE GREAT. By G. A. Henty. Blackie & Son. 6s. THE FLAMP, AND OTHER STORIES FOR CHILDREN. By E. V. Lucas. Grant Richards. FROGGY, OR MY LORD MAYOR; A STORY OF THE TRIALS OF OFFICE. By Charles James Scotter. The Leadenhall Press, Ltd. 3s. 6d. GUBBINS MINOR, AND SOME OTHER FELLOWS. By Fred. Whishaw. Griffith Farran. 3s. 6d. THE ADVENTURES OF A STOWAWAY. By Fred. Whishaw. Griffith Farran. 3s. 6d. SCARLET LEATHER. By Henry J. Barker. Griffith Farran. 2s. MISS BOBBIE. By Ethel Turner. Ward, Lock & Co. A LONELY LITTLE LADY. By Dolf Wyllarde. Hutchinson & Co. 5s. OLGA; OR, WRONG ON BOTH SIDES. By Vin Vincent. Griffith Farran. 3s. 6d. MISS MOUSE AND HER BOYS. By Mrs. Molesworth. Macmillan & Co. 4s. 6d. IDA FROM INDIA: A TALE FOR GIRLS. By Mrs. Herbert Martin. Griffith Farran. 3s. 6d. THE LUCK OF THE EARDLEYS. By Sheila E. Braine. Blackie & Son. 6s.

FOREIGN.

NAPOLEON: A-T-IL ÉTÉ UN HOMME HEUREUX? Par Philibert Andebrand. LE RÊVE DE YANNIKI. Par Jean Paichari. LES AMANTS BYZANTINS. Par Hugues le Roux. Calmann Lévy (Paris).

NEW EDITIONS.

THE NEWCOMES. By W. M. Thackeray. Service & Paton. 2s. 6d. THE LADY OF THE LAKE. By Sir Walter Scott. With an Introduction by Andrew Lang, and Illustrations by C. E. Brock. Service & Paton. 6s. THE HOUSE OF THE SEVEN GABLES. By Nathaniel Hawthorne. Service & Paton. 3s. 6d. REMINISCENCES OF A HUNTSMAN. By the Hon. Granville F. Berkeley. New edition. Edward Arnold. 15s. THE TINTED VENUS: A FARCICAL ROMANCE. By F. Anstey. Harper & Bros.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MARRIAGE CUSTOMS IN MANY LANDS. By the Rev. H. N. Hutchinson, B.A. Seeley & Co. BAROO JABBERJEE, B.A. By F. Anstey. J. M. Dent & Co. THE STRAY NOTES OF A WANDERER. By A. C. C. Roxburghe Press. HISTORY OF THE HORN-BOOK. By Andrew W. Tuer, F.S.A. The Leadenhall Press, Ltd. THE THREE CRUIKSHANKS: A BIBLIOGRAPHICAL CATALOGUE. W. T. Spencer. 8s. 6d. THE PROSE WORKS OF JONATHAN SWIFT, D.D. Edited by Temple Scott. George Bell & Sons. 3s. 6d. THE NEW MAN: A CHRONICLE OF THE MODERN TIME. By Ellis Paxson Oberholtses. The Levytype Co. (Philadelphia). CHILDREN UNDER THE POOR LAW. By W. Chance, M.A. Swan Sonnenschein & Co. 7s. 6d. THE REMINISCENCES OF BASHI-BAZOOK. By Edward Visetelly. J. W. Arrowsmith (Bristol). HUMANITARIAN ESSAYS. By Maurice Adams and Other Writers. William Reeves. 1s. SCENES FROM MILITARY LIFE. By Richard Penny. Digby, Long & Co. 3s. 6d.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TENNYSON AND WORDSWORTH.

London: Oct. 22, 1897.

The reviewer of the Tennyson biography in your issue of October 9 quotes with a certain approval a story of Tennyson and Wordsworth contributed to the Biography by Mr. Aubrey de Vere. Tennyson had been to Hampstead to call on Wordsworth, and returning to town across the fields he complained to Mr. Aubrey de Vere of "the Old Poet's coldness." "He had endeavoured," says Mr. Aubrey de Vere, "to stimulate some latent ardours by telling Wordsworth of a tropical island where the trees, when they first come into leaf, were a vivid scarlet; 'every one of them, I told him, one flush all over the island, the colour of blood! It would not do. I could not influence his imagination in the least.'" Your reviewer adds—surely rather rashly—"Our own, we confess, is left cold." My imagination is warmed; but that is not the point. What I wish to draw attention to is the fact that more than forty years before this conversation between the young and the old poet took place, Wordsworth had written in his beautiful poem "Ruth" this stanza:

"He told of the Magnolia, spread
High as a cloud, high over head!
The cypress and her spire;
—Of flowers that with one scarlet gleam
Cover a hundred leagues, and seem
To set the hills on fire."

The Old Poet may have considered that there was no need to glow twice. W. W.

ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH.

Holne Chase, Devon: Oct. 20, 1897.

In the ACADEMY of October 2 your reviewer writes an article on Arthur Hugh Clough, which, as a life-long admirer and careful student of that poet, I should much like to supplement.

The writer states it as his opinion that the reputation of Clough has reached its vanishing point, and that "his kind of wit," as well as his "kind of verse," is out of date.

This may be so, perhaps, with regard to some of his poems, especially those to which the writer confines himself. The "Bothie" is, undoubtedly, laborious reading, and the "Amours de Voyage" are as bad, if not worse. But it is not for the sake of these, or even "one or two lyrics in the Arnold manner," that I venture to think the name of Clough will be still long remembered.

One of our critics wrote some years ago: "Clough was the poet of devout scepticism, as Arnold was the poet of devout unbelief." Whether this judgment be true or not, it is pre-eminently as a religious poet that Clough takes his place among the earlier writers of the century. The author of "Dipsychus" and "Poems on Life and Duty" may surely claim an equal rank with Matthew Arnold. It must be allowed he had not the same happy turn for metre and rhythm as his friend, but he possessed what in Arnold is so often wanting—a keen sense of humour. It would be hard to name any poet—unless it be Heine—in which the pathetic and the ludicrous, the tragedy and comedy, are so inextricably mingled. Where shall we find, for instance, such a felicitous summary of the problems of life as in the utterance of the Spirit in "Dipsychus":

"This world is very odd, we see,
We do not comprehend it;
But in one fact we all agree,
God won't, and we can't mend it."

The actual sum total of his philosophy—as deduced from his poems—may not amount to very much. As he says, his desire was rather

"Oh, let me love my love unto myself alone,
And know my knowledge to the world unknown."

Yet in his negative teaching he is often very daring in his expression. If the author of "Obermann" considered it "a gratifying marvel" that the Archbishop should invite him once a year to dinner, what is to be said for the writer of "Easter Day," with its persistent refrain:

"Christ is not risen—No!
He lies and moulders low?"

In all those minds on whom the problems of the day still press unsolved and apparently insoluble, A. H. Clough yet holds an honoured place. We may regret that he should ever have written the "Bothie"—which we agree with your reviewer in not being able to pronounce—but we can well forgive the error for the sake of the many fine poems he wrote—not in hexameters!

E. FORSTER.

OMAR KHÄYYÄM.

Oct. 18, 1897.

There is one thing that has long puzzled me, and I do not mind incurring the sneers of Oriental literati, provided I can get from them an answer that shall restore tranquillity to my troubled mind.

Who is this Omar Khäyyäm, and why all this fuss about him when those of his craft are as thick as berries upon the Eastern Parnassus? I have long since made the acquaintance of all, or nearly all, of them in Hammer-Purgstall's and Friedrich Rückert's marvellous translations, and do not hesitate to say that the poetry of most of these worthies is as boneless, as featureless, as insipid as that of the Italian trecentisti, who still have devotees in this country, notwithstanding Leopardi's dictum concerning them: quantunque si trovino rime non si trova poesia.

But to return to Omar Khäyyäm. Is he, I wonder, equal in merit to Amrillkai's "Dichter und König" done into German by Rückert? I have here before me a couple of volumes of Persian and Arabic tales and legends by the same translator: "Morgenländische Sagen und Geschichten" (Stuttgart, 1837). These volumes have been in my possession for years, and I cannot resist the suspicion that whatever fugitive amusement I may have derived from their perusal, it was all due to the brilliant infidelities of the adapter. If, as the ACADEMY seems to think, Omar Khäyyām's commonplace gazels have also been beautified in like manner, all honour, I say, to the "traduttore-traditore" for his literary skill; but, then, why all this fuss about the Persian rhymester, as if he were a second Marcus Aurelius? This is what puzzles me. I enclose my card, and have the honour to remain, &c.

J. D.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"What Maisie Knew."
By Henry James.
THE Chronicle's praise of this story is too breathless to be informing. The Pall Mall Gazette says with deliberation:

"This latest novel from Mr. James's pen seems, beyond doubt, to touch his highest point. It is a work very difficult to criticise, very perplexing to appraise. But beyond and above all the one fact of its astounding cleverness stands forth. It is quite impossible to ignore that, if the word have any significance, and is ever to be used at all, we are here dealing with genius. This is a work of genius, as much as Mr. Meredith's best work, though on quite other human lines, as the readers of both need not be reminded. And the next point which may occur to a reader, as he lays down the book, is that the author has generously, wilfully, almost wantonly handicapped himself."

The writer justifies his last remark as follows:

"Conceive that this medley, these intricacies of motive, this tangle and confusion of emotion, are all transmuted, reflected, determined through the mind of a little girl of eight years! The thing, one would say, was preposterous. What on earth, indeed, did Maisie know of all this terrible human imbroglio? She knew nothing—that is obviously the answer which Mr. James desires us to take from his story; and that very fact that she knew nothing, was really aware of nothing, stared on life through childish and innocent eyes, surveyed the dustheap and the dungheap with her incomplete and wondering vision—that fact composes the amazing difficulty of Mr. James's task. To render the action and the motives through Maisie's mind to the reader, and yet leave upon that virginal spirit the stain or shadow of no comprehension—such has been the author's work. His success is commensurate with the difficulty."

Now for a little fault-finding. Mr. T. C. Quiller-Couch, writing in the Speaker, comes to the conclusion that Mr. James's interest in his characters gradually changes into interest in the game he has set them to play. His characters, in their turn, "stand perilously near to merging themselves and their interests in the author's own cleverness and the interests of that cleverness."

"Indeed, the whole splendid possibilities of the original situation seem, under the baneful compulsion of this too ingenious plot, to be fined down into an academical discussion between Maisie and Mrs. Wix as to the amount of moral sense which Maisie possesses. In other words, the problem is set for human tragedy, and is worked out—in so far as it is worked out—as a clever game. The result, then, in the judgment of one sincere admirer of Mr. James's work, is a great novel marred by sophistication in the treatment. But that it is in conception a great novel surely no competent judge will be found to deny; and its intricacy of motive—if this be a fault, as many, and perhaps most, will maintain—springs from the restless conscientiousness of a great artist."

As usual, Mr. James's obscurities and eccentricities of style are pointed out. The Standard says:

"His vision of the things he describes seems to be so full that he lacks words with which to express it; and instead of being content with giving us as much as plain language can legitimately convey, he is always striving after the impossible, and piles words upon words and image upon image in the vain attempt to make our dull eyes discern the infinite subtleties of human feeling and motive that are so plain to him."

And the Standard quotes one of Mr. James's sentences in justification. Here it is:

"... But if he had an idea at the back of his head, she had also one in a recess as deep, and for a time, while they sat together, there was an extraordinary mute passage between her vision of this vision of his, his vision of her vision, and her vision of his vision of her vision."

With a simpler style, the Standard thinks Mr. James "would be an admirable novelist."

"Selected Poems."
By George Meredith.
THE Pall Mall Gazette has a good review of these poems. It says:

"The art, the insight, the force, the minuteness, the largeness of the writer's mind, strike the reader on every page. And yet he would be a bold critic who would place Mr. George Meredith among the great English poets. The reason of this is somewhat obscure. Probably the art is not concealed enough; there is too much striving after effect, too much elaboration, too much determination not to be commonplace. The foot of the writer seems to be tapping on the threshold of the very inmost shrine of poetry, but it seldom crosses it. His hand beats patiently upon the door, but the door does not fly open."

The writer then briefly examines some half-dozen of the poems. He quotes the two former stanzas in "Love in the Valley" ("Lonely are the curves of the white owl sweeping," &c.), and says:

"The rhythm and metre of this poem are irresistible; it is full from end to end of a rippling melodious happiness, which fairly sweeps the reader away; and yet, with due respect, we would submit that the poem is far too long—over 200 lines—and loses its lyric quality thereby. Moreover, in stanzas written in such long lines, the ear simply demands the double rhyme, and is unsatisfied with scanty assonance. Similarly the 'Woods of Westernmain,' that closes the book, a cataract of leaping, tripping sound, is vitiated by its length; it is, as it were, a canvas a foot high and fifty feet long, not to be grasped. You pass along it, enchanted, amazed; but its long-drawn sweetness palls."

The St. James's Gazette, after quoting "Marian," says:

"There is not a spark of crabbed Meredithese in that. O si sic omnia! some will sigh. There, of course, a reservation must be made. Mr. Meredith, like Browning, attempts in his poetry to traverse regions of the intellect where high thoughts can only be converted, with any power to recreate thought, into complicated, metaphorical, and profound expression, not to be grasped by a reader without some co-responding labour of brain. Still Mr. Meredith's keenest admirers will do well to confess that his mannerism has grown upon him in his poems even more than in his novels. And it is all the more refreshing for catholic-minded but not uncritical lovers of good poetry to re-discover by means of this volume what a body of truly minted stuff the poet, after all, has put forth."

The Chronicle, dealing with Meredith's subject-matter, says:

"What most appeals to us personally, in his poems, even more than the nervous force of his ballads or the splendid imagination of his myths, is the matchless intensity with which he sees and reproduces English nature, the life of woodland and common, down and dingle."

THE Saturday Review has been scolding Mr. Frederic Harrison—all on account of this book, which has been issued by the Clarendon Press as the definitive edition. But it does not seem to be definitive, and it has found in Mr. Frederic Harrison its only champion. On September 11 the Tablet reviewed the book and fell foul of Mr. Bridge's text, which it declared to be inferior and inexact, and full of "gross mistakes." On September 18 the Saturday Review followed suit, and said, "The text is worthless." On September 25 the Athenæum published a review, if possible, more searching and severe. The reviewer concluded: "One of the greatest opportunities a student of mediæval science could have had has thus been frittered away." But on October 1 the Positivist Review had a favourable review of the book. It was from the pen of Mr. Frederic Harrison, who extolled the edition for its completeness and accuracy, and described it as "truly monumental." The Saturday Review reviewer saw this notice, rubbed his eyes, took down the book again, and wrote another article in the Saturday Review of October 2. He concluded a scathing article, as follows:

"If Mr. Harrison's review is meant as irony, it is not difficult to conjecture why he should have made such an attack on the work. His bitterness is, perhaps, only the measure of his disappointment. It seems that Bacon has been placed in the Religion of Humanity on a pedestal near that of Comte, and great things were hoped from this edition. The Franciscans had published a scholarly and complete edition of the works of St. Bonaventure, Bacon's general: the Comtists wished to do the same for Bacon himself. How the Clarendon Press came to lend itself to the plan is another question. As things stand, we have no hesitation in joining with Mr. Frederic Harrison in his ironical congratulations to the College of Physicians and the University of Oxford on this 'truly monumental edition.'"

These critical exchanges are followed by others in the Athenæum of October 16. Mr. Harrison sends a long letter, to which the reviewer replies at almost equal length. Here we can do no more than draw attention to this bout of learning and wits.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW BOOKS.

MESSRS. METHUEN BEG TO ANNOUNCE THAT THEY WILL PUBLISH SHORTLY:—

- TRAITS and CONFIDENCES, by the Hon. EMILY LAWLESS, crown 8vo, 6s.
A PASSIONATE PILGRIM, by PERCY WHITE, crown 8vo, 6s.
BYEWAYS, by R. S. HICHENS, crown 8vo, 6s.
ENGLISH LYRICS, Selected and Edited by W. E. HENLEY, crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.
THE GOLFING PILGRIM, by HORACE G. HUTCHINSON, crown 8vo, 6s.
A LIFE of ERNEST RENAN, by Madame DARMESTETER, with Portrait, crown 8vo, 6s.
THE DECLINE and FALL of the ROMAN EMPIRE, by EDWARD GIBBON, a New Edition, Edited with Notes, Appendices, and Maps, by J. B. BURY, M.A., Fellow of Trinity College, Dublin, in 7 vols., demy 8vo, gilt top, 8s. 6d. each; crown 8vo, 6s. each. Vol. IV.
A HISTORY of BRITISH COLONIAL POLICY, by H. E. EGERTON, M.A., demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

FICTION.

- LOCHINVAR. By S. R. CROCKETT, Author of "The Raiders," &c. Illustrated, and with a Coloured Map. Crown 8vo, 6s.
A DAUGHTER of STRIFE. By JANE HELEN FINDLATER, Author of "The Green Graves of Balgowrie." Crown 8vo, 6s.
OVER the HILLS. By MARY FINDLATER. Crown 8vo, 6s.
A CREEL of IRISH STORIES. By JANE BARLOW, Author of "Irish Idylls." Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE CLASH of ARMS. By J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON, Author of "In the Day of Adversity." Crown 8vo, 6s.
BLADYS of the STEWPONEY. By S. BARING-GOULD. Illustrated by F. H. Townsend. Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "A story of thrilling interest."—Scotsman.
 "A sombre but powerful story."—Daily Mail.
 "Teems with incident and adventure."—Glasgow Herald.
THE LADY'S WALK. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "A story of exquisite tenderness, of most delicate fancy, and alluring pathos."—Pall Mall Gazette.
 "A very delicate and charming story."—Westminster Gazette.
THE BUILDERS. By J. S. FLETCHER, Author of "When Charles I. was King." Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE SINGER of MARLY. By I. HOOPER. Illustrated by W. C. COOKE. Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE FALL of the SPARROW. By M. C. BALFOUR. Crown 8vo, 6s.
THE POMP of the LAVILETTES. By GILBERT PARKER, Author of "The Seats of the Mighty." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition].
 "We would not wish for a better told romance.....A capital story."—Westminster Gazette.
 "A powerful and faithful story."—Manchester Guardian.
 "A bold romance, ingeniously and deftly set in a picturesque realism."—World.
THE MUTABLE MANY. By ROBERT BARR, Author of "In the Midst of Alarms." Second Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "The best novel that Mr. Barr has given us. There is much insight in it and much humour."—Daily Chronicle.
 "An exceedingly interesting book."—Westminster Gazette.
 "An excellent story filled with life-like pictures."—Glasgow Herald.
 "A series of pictures of a strike which have rarely been equalled in brilliancy."—Star.
BY STROKE of SWORD. By ANDREW BALFOUR. Illustrated by W. C. COOKE. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "A banquet of good things."—Academy.
 "A recital of thrilling interest, told with unflagging vigour."—Globe.
 "An unusually excellent example of a semi-historical romance. This exciting volume is worthy of a place in the front rank."—World.
 "Manly, healthy, and patriotic."—Glasgow Herald.
KIRKHAM'S FIND. By MARY GAUNT, Author of "The Moving Finger." Crown 8vo, 6s.
 "A really charming novel."—Standard.
 "A very spirited and agreeable tale."—Glasgow Herald.
 "The plot of this graceful story is unfolded with all the skill of the practised novelist."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- THE BENIN MASSACRE. By Captain BOISRAGON. With Map and Portrait. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. [Second Edition in the press].
 "A survivor's tale, realistic and terrible."—Morning Post.
 "The most impressive and moving narrative of African adventure and of British bravery that we have read for many months."—Daily Mail.
 "There will be many readers."—Globe.
 "Told with the unconscionable that becomes a brave story."—Standard.
 "If it had been written 400 years ago, it would be read to-day as an English classic. A narrative of engrossing interest."—Scotsman.
 "A thrilling romance."—Yorkshire Post.
THE HILL of the GRACES; or, the Great Stone Temples of Tripoli. By H. S. COWPER, F.S.A. With Maps, Plans, and 75 Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.
THE STORY of the BRITISH ARMY. By Lieut.-Colonel COOPER KING. Illustrated. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.
A SHORT HISTORY of the ROYAL NAVY, from Early Times to the Present Day. By DAVID HANNAY. Illustrated. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. Vol. I.
NURSERY RHYMES. With many Coloured Pictures. By F. D. BEDFORD. Small 4to, 5s.
LIGHT and LEAVEN: Historical and Social Sermons. By the Rev. H. HENSLEY HENSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Incumbent of St. Mary's Hospital, Ilford. Crown 8vo, 6s.
VOCES ACADEMICÆ. By C. GRANT ROBERTSON, M.A., Fellow of All Souls', Oxford. With a Frontispiece. Fcap. 8vo, 3s. 6d.
A PRIMER of the BIBLE. By Prof. W. H. BENNETT. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 This Primer sketches the history of the books which make up the Bible, in the light of recent criticism. It gives an account of their character, origin, and composition as far as possible in chronological order, with special reference to their relations to one another, and to the history of Israel and the Church. The formation of the Canon is illustrated by chapters on the Apocrypha (Old and New Testament); and there is a brief notice of the history of the Bible since the close of the Canon.
 "Scholarly, clear, and interesting."—Scotsman.
 "The cream of many a ponderous and erudite volume."—Globe.
A PRIMER of WORDSWORTH. By LAURIE MAGNUS. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d.
 This volume contains a concise biography of the poet, a critical appreciation of his work in detail, and a bibliography.
SPORTING and ATHLETIC RECORDS. By H. MORGAN-BROWNE. Crown 8vo, 350 pp., paper, 1s.; 2s., cloth. [Shortly].
 This book gives, in a clear and complete form, accurate records of the best performances in all branches of sport. Indispensable to every sportsman and athlete.
TECHNOLOGICAL HANDBOOKS.
 EDITED BY PROFS. GARNETT and WERTHEIMER.
HOW TO MAKE a DRESS. By J. A. E. WOOD, Head Teacher of Dressmaking, Goldsmiths' Institute. With numerous illustrations, crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.
 "An eminently practical work."—Church Family Newspaper.
 "Admirably suited for its purpose."—Pall Mall Gazette.

MESSRS. METHUEN'S NEW CATALOGUE and BOOK GAZETTE sent to any address.

METHUEN & CO., 36, ESSEX STREET, STRAND, W.C.

GRIFFITH, FARRAN, BROWNE & Co.'s NEW ILLUSTRATED GIFT BOOKS.

By FRED WHISMAN, Author of "Harold the Norseman,"
"A Boyar of the Terrible," &c.

THE WHITE WITCH of the MATABELE.
Large crown 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 5s.

THE ADVENTURES of a STOWAWAY.
Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

GUBBINS MINOR and SOME OTHER
FELLOWS. Large crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

By HARRY COLLINGWOOD, Author of "The Log of a Privateersman," &c.

FOR TREASURE BOUND. Large crown
8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 5s.

By Mrs. EMMA MARSHALL.

THE LADY of HOLT DENE. Large crown
8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 5s.

By CHARLES EDWARDS.

DR. BURLEIGH'S BOYS. Large crown
8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 5s.

By VIN VINCENT, Author of "Cathedral Bells," &c.

OLGA: or, Wrong on Both Sides. Large
crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

By Mrs. HERBERT MARTIN.

IDA from INDIA. Large crown 8vo, cloth,
3s. 6d.

By HENRY BARKER.

THE SCARLET FEATHER. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt.

NEW EDITIONS.

By BEATRICE HARRADEN, Author of "Ships that Pass in the Night," &c., &c.

A NEW BOOK of the FAIRIES. Crown
8vo, cloth, full gilt back and side, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

By E. M. GREEN, Author of "Scraps; or, Only a Lad,"
&c., &c.

THE CHILD of the CARAVAN. Illustrated by Edith Scannell. Crown 8vo, cloth, full gilt back and side, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

THE KINGSTON SERIES.

(A New Edition of the Works of the late W. H. G.
KINGSTON.)

Large Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top. With New Illustrations.
Price 3s. 6d. each.

THE THREE MIDSHIPMEN.

THE THREE LIEUTENANTS.

THE THREE COMMANDERS.

THE THREE ADMIRALS.

PADDY FINN.

THE RIVAL CRUSOES.

35, BOW STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.
TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE
FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND
FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

E P P S'S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING

C O C O A

SKEFFINGTONS' NEW NOVELS.

The most weird story published for many a day.

This Day.—A NEW NOVEL BY RICHARD MARSH.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

With Illustrations by JOHN WILLIAMSON.

THE BEETLE: a Mystery!

The Daily Graphic says: "The Beetle" revels in the weird. It is a book to be read, not, maybe, when alone, or just before going to bed, because it is the kind of book which you put down only for the purpose of turning up the gas and making sure that no person or thing is standing behind your chair—and it is a book which no one will put down until finished except for the reason above described." The Scotsman Herald says: "The weird horror of this Being grows upon the reader. It is difficult, if not impossible, to lay down this book when once begun." The Academy says: "'Dracula,' by Mr. Bram Stoker, was creepy, but Mr. Marsh goes one, oh! many more than one, better." The Atlas says: "'Full of mystery.'"

This Day.—A NEW NOVEL BY GUY BOOTHBY,

Author of "Dr. Nikola," "The Beautiful White Devil," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

With Frontispiece by HAL LUDLOW.

SHEILAH McLEOD.

A HEROINE of the BACK BLOCKS.

The Athenum says: "This really moving tale proceeds briskly enough, and is worth reading." The Scotsman says: "The interest of this bright tale of adventure never flags."

This Day.—By ERNEST G. HENHAM.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

With Illustrations by HAL LUDLOW.

MENOTAH:

A Thrilling Tale of the Canadian North-West

Rebellion, and the Hudson's Bay Company.

The Scotsman says: "'Menotah' is an uncommonly fine creation—impressive in her supreme beauty and other charms. The incidents are intensely dramatic and pathetic.... Mr. Henham has made a close study of the country, the people, and the events of which he writes." The Whitaker Review says: "Replete with action.... Inexpressibly grand."

The Manchester Courier says: "A varied and original story, brimful of passion, which will bear reading more than once."

LONDON: SKEFFINGTON & SON, 163, PICCADILLY, W.

Publishers to Her Majesty the Queen and H.R.H. the Prince of Wales.

8vo, 6s.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 372, is NOW READY.

CONTENTS.

- I. ARCHBISHOP BENSON.
- II. SOME MINOR POETS.
- III. THE BASTILLE.
- IV. MONKEYS.
- V. PROVINCIAL SOCIETY in the DAYS of ST. BASIL.
- VI. LETTERS of LADY M. W. MONTAGU.
- VII. ENGLISH PROSE WRITERS.
- VIII. SCOTTS METHODS and ORIGINALS.
- IX. LIFE of TENNYSON.
- X. WOMEN at OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE.
- XI. INDIAN DISCONTENT and FRONTIER RISINGS.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

J. W. ARROWSMITH'S NEW LIST.

THE REMINISCENCES of a BASHI-BAZOUK. By EDWARD VIZETELLY. Illustrated with 25 Drawings by GEORGE MORRARD, and some Photographs. Crown 8vo, cloth, 422 pp., 6s.

THE SETTLING of BERTIE MERIAN.

By NARANJA AMARGA. Crown 8vo, cloth, 407 pp., 6s.
"Is unquestionably brilliant."—Black and White. "It is a book which will be read."—Weekly Dispatch.

A BRIDE'S MADNESS. By ALLEN

UPWARD, Author of "Secrets of the Courts of Europe." Crown 8vo, cloth, 228 pp. Volume XXVIII. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. Second Edition.
"From the first page to the last there is not a dull paragraph."—Black and White. "A capital detective novel."—The World.

THE SACK of MONTE CARLO. An

Adventure of To-day. By WALTER FRITH, Author of "In Search of Quiet." Crown 8vo, cloth, 293 pp. Vol. XXIX. of Arrowsmith's 3s. 6d. Series. [Ready October 28th.]

THE MILLIONAIRE of PARKERS-

VILLE. By MARSHALL G. WOOD. Being Vol. LXXV. of Arrowsmith's Bristol Library. Fcap. 8vo, 1s. Cloth, 1s. 6d.

PEPITA of the PAGODA. By TIGHE

HOPKINS. Being Arrowsmith's Christmas Annual. Will be ready October 28th. Price 1s.

BRISTOL: J. W. ARROWSMITH.
LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & CO.

Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co., LIMITED.

NOW READY.

Mr. AUSTIN DOBSON'S COLLECTED POEMS.
COLLECTED POEMS. By Austin

DOBSON. Crown 8vo. Price 6s. With a Portrait.

In this volume will be found all the best and most popular verses from Mr. Austin Dobson's earlier books, together with several poems which have not hitherto appeared in book form. The present, in short, may be regarded as the definitive edition of its author's work.

THE BOOK of the DUMPY. By

ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE. Oblong 4to. 3s. 6d. With a Cover in Colours. With numerous illustrations on every page by FRANK VERBECK.

These delightfully original little people, who made their first English appearance in the pages of The Sketch are sure to make new friends for themselves in book-form. No more amusing literature has been provided for the young of all ages since Mr. Palmer Cox introduced us to the memorable Brownies. [Immediately.]

THE COON BOOK. By E. W. Kemble.

Price 6s. Profusely illustrated in Colours.

This amusing work, by the leading delineator of negro life, is full of comical illustrations and amusing anecdotes of life in the West. [Shortly.]

THE HISTORY of CHINA. From the Earliest Days down to the present. By Rev. J. MACGOWAN. Demy 8vo, 16s. net.

THE "WOLSELEY SERIES."

Edited by WALTER H. JAMES, late Captain R.E. Demy 8vo.

Field-Marshal the Right Hon. Viscount WOLSELEY, K.P., G.C.B., G.C.M.G., Commander-in-Chief, has kindly consented to preface the first volume.

WITH the ROYAL HEAD-

QUARTERS in 1870-71. By General VON VERDY DU VERNON. With Portrait of the Author and Map. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THE CAMPAIGN of MARENGO.

By Lieut. H. H. SARGENT. With Maps and Plans. Crown 8vo, price 6s.

NEW VOLUME OF "THE PHILOSOPHICAL LIBRARY"

FICHTE'S SCIENCE of ETHICS.

Translated by A. E. KROEGER, and Edited by Prof. the Hon. W. T. HARRIS. Post 8vo, 2s.

THE PAMPHLET LIBRARY.

Edited by ARTHUR WAUGH.

POLITICAL PAMPHLETS. Selected

and Arranged by A. F. POLLARD. Crown 8vo, 6s.
"A most useful and excellent reprint."—Athenaeum.

LITERARY PAMPHLETS. Selected and Arranged, with an Introduction and Notes, by ERNEST RHYS, Editor of "The Camelot Classics." "Lyric Poets," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 5s. each.

NEW FICTION.

DOWN by the SUWANEE RIVER.

By AUBREY HOPWOOD. A Tale of Adventure and Romance among the Orange Plantations of Florida. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A MODERN ATALANTA; and other

Stories. By MAUD VYSE. With numerous illustrations by the Author. Crown 8vo, 6s.

A GREAT CANADIAN HISTORICAL NOVEL.

THE FORGE in the FOREST. By Professor CHARLES G. D. ROBERTS. Crown 8vo, 5s.

THE JOURNAL of COUNTESS

FRANCOISE KRASINSKA, Great-Grandmother of Victor Emmanuel. Translated by KASIMIR DZIEKONSKA. The only authorised edition. With a portrait and other illustrations, 16mo, gilt top, deckled edges, and a special cover design, 5s.

"The book deserves to be read side by side with Carlyle's 'Frederick' for instruction as well as for the human interest of the story."—Daily Chronicle.

THE PHILOSOPHY of HEGEL.

THE WISDOM and RELIGION of a GERMAN PHILOSOPHER, being extracts from the works of HEGEL. Translated and arranged by ELIZABETH S. HALDANE. With a Portrait, crown 8vo, 5s.

HAWTHORNE'S FIRST DIARY.

With an Account of its Discovery and Loss. By SAMUEL T. PICKARD, Author of "The Life of John Greenleaf Whittier." 16mo, 3s. 6d. net.

PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S PUBLICATIONS.

AN ALPHABET.

By WILLIAM NICHOLSON.
IN THREE EDITIONS.

1. The ORDINARY EDITION, lithographed on Cartridge Paper, 12½-in. by 10-in., picture boards, price 2s. 6d.
2. On Van Gelder's Hand-made Paper, mounted on brown paper, cloth, price 12s. 6d. net.
3. A few copies printed direct from the Woodblocks, and Hand Coloured by the Artist, each Design mounted on board, in Vellum Portfolio, price £21 net. [Next week.]

An Illustrated Prospectus on Application.

NEW LETTERS OF NAPOLEON I.

Omitted from the Collection published under the auspices of Napoleon III. Translated from the French by Lady MARY LOYD. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with Frontispiece, price 15s. net. [Shortly.]
These Letters manifest the great man in his smallest and most secret moods. He strikes no picturesque attitude, but unmask himself as he felt, and as he was."

A HISTORY OF DANCING, from the Earliest Ages to

OUR OWN TIMES. From the French of GASTON VUILLIER. With 25 Plates in Photogravure and about 400 Illustrations in the Text. In 1 vol., 4to, price 36s. net. [Shortly.]
Also 35 copies printed on Japanese Vellum (containing Three additional Plates), with a duplicate set of the Plates on India Paper for framing. Each copy numbered and signed, price TWELVE GUINEAS net.

An Illustrated Prospectus on Application.

THE NEW AFRICA. A Journey up the Chobe and down

the Okovanga Rivers. By AUREL SCHULZ, M.D., and AUGUST HAMMAR, C.E. 1 vol., demy 8vo, with 70 Illustrations and a Map, 28s.
TIMES.—"There is not a page which the reader need regard as dull, and so graphically and unpretentiously is the story told that before the end of the volume is reached the scene and circumstances appear to have long formed a part of the familiar knowledge of the reader."

PETER THE GREAT. By K. Waliszewski. With a

Portrait. 2 vols., 8vo, 28s.
SATURDAY REVIEW.—"A marvellous story, told with great spirit."

LITERATURES OF THE WORLD.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, price 6s. each.

A HISTORY OF MODERN ENGLISH LITERATURE. By

EDMUND GOSSE, Hon. M.A. of Trinity College, Cambridge. [In the Press.]

PREVIOUSLY PUBLISHED.

A HISTORY OF FRENCH LITERATURE. By Edward Dowden,

D.C.L., LL.D., Professor of Oratory and English Literature in the University of Dublin.
ATHENÆUM.—"A history for lovers of literature; it gives us a more sympathetic notion of the spirit of French writers than any book which has been written in English. Certainly the best history of French literature in the English language."
SATURDAY REVIEW.—"A history of literature as histories of literature should be written."

A HISTORY OF ANCIENT GREEK LITERATURE. By Gilbert

MURRAY, M.A., Professor of Greek in the University of Glasgow.
TIMES.—"A sketch to which the much-abused word 'brilliant' may be justly applied. Dealing in 400 pages with a subject which is both immense and well worn, Mr. Murray presents us with a treatment at once comprehensive, penetrating, and fresh. By dint of a clear, freely moving intelligence, and by dint also of a style at once compact and lucid, he has produced a book which fairly represents the best conclusions of modern scholarship."

A List of this Series on application.

THOMAS AND MATTHEW ARNOLD: and their Influence on

English Education. By Sir JOSHUA FITCH, LL.D., formerly Her Majesty's Inspector of Training Colleges. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
DAILY CHRONICLE.—"We commend this interesting volume to every one interested in the great subject of the training of the young. The book is a noble tribute to two great educational reformers."

A List of this series will be sent on application.

THE NON-RELIGION OF THE FUTURE. By Marie Jean

GUYAU. 1 vol., demy 8vo., 17s. net.
SCOTSMAN.—"The knowledge and ability with which it is written, the clearness and vivacity of its style, and the aptness of the numerous illustrated anecdotes are conspicuous. It must interest, and few will read it without finding in it abundant food for thought and reflection."

SIXTY YEARS OF EMPIRE, 1837—1897. A Review of the Period. Contributions by Sir CHARLES DILKE, Mr. JOHN BURNS, Mr. JOSEPH PENNELL, Mr. LIONEL JOHNSON, &c., and many Portraits and Diagrams. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s. [Great Lives and Events.]

CUBA IN WAR-TIME. By Richard Harding Davis, Author of

"Soldiers of Fortune." With Illustrations by Frederic Remington. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.
TIMES.—"Mr. Davis's book is sure to be widely read. It is the first striking account we have read of the characteristics of the war, and there will be general agreement as to its being a good and interesting piece of work."

MY FOURTH TOUR IN WESTERN AUSTRALIA. By Albert

F. CALVERT, F.R.G.S. 4to, with many Illustrations and Photographs, 21s. net.

LUMEN. By Camille Flammarion. 1 vol., 3s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"One of the most subtle pieces of imaginative literature of recent times."

SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

IN THE PERMANENT WAY, and other Stories.

By FLORA ANNIE STEEL.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

ON THE FACE OF THE WATERS.

[Fortieth Thousand.]

SATURDAY REVIEW.—"The best novel of the great Mutiny."

THE POTTER'S THUMB.

[Sixth Edition.]

GLOBE.—"A brilliant story; a story that fascinates."

FROM THE FIVE RIVERS.

[Third Edition.]

TIMES.—"Of exceptional merit."

ST. IVES.

By R. L. STEVENSON, Author of "The Ebb-Tide," &c. Second Edition.

TIMES.—"Neither Stevenson himself nor any one else has given us a better example of a dashing story, full of life and colour and interest. St. Ives is a character who will be treasured up in the memory along with David Balfour and Alan Breck, even with D'Artagnan and the Musketeers."

THE CHRISTIAN.

By HALL CAINE.

Of this Novel over 100,000 copies have been sold.

SKETCH.—"It quivers and palpitates with passion, for even Mr. Caine's bitterest detractors cannot deny that he is the possessor of that rarest of all gifts—genius."

THE GADFLY.

By E. L. VOYNICH.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.—"A very strikingly original romance, which will hold the attention of all who read it, and establish the author's reputation at once for first-rate dramatic ability. Exciting, sinister, even terrifying, we must avow it to be a work of real genius."

THE FREEDOM OF HENRY MEREDYTH.

By M. HAMILTON, Author of "McLeod of the Camerons," &c.

MARIETTA'S MARRIAGE.

By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "The Dancer in Yellow," &c.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"Keen observation, delicate discrimination, a pleasant, quiet humour, rare power of drawing characters that are both absolutely natural and interesting to study."

WHAT MAISIE KNEW.

By HENRY JAMES, Author of "The Spoils of Poynton." Second Edition.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"A work of art, so complex, so many-coloured, so variously beautiful! It is life seen, felt, understood, and interpreted by a rich imagination, by an educated temperament; it is a life sung in melodious prose, and that, it seems to us, is the highest romance."

THE GODS ARRIVE.

By ANNIE E. HOLDSWORTH, Author of "Joanna Traill, Spinster."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"Bright, wholesome, and full of life and movement. Miss Holdsworth has, too, a very witty style."

LAST STUDIES.

By HUBERT CRACKANTHORPE, Author of "Wreckage." With an Introduction by HENRY JAMES, and a Portrait. [Shortly.]

SARAH GRAND'S NEW NOVEL.

THE BETH BOOK.

By SARAH GRAND, Author of "The Heavenly Twins." [In the Press.]

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21, Bedford Street, W.C.

CLARENDON PRESS LIST.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

*.* Dedicated by special permission to Her Majesty.

New Part and Double Section now ready, 4to, stiff covers.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY on HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES. Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

New Double Section—FOISTY-FRANKISH. 5s. } Edited by Mr. HENRY BRADLEY.
New Part—FIELD-FRANKISH. 12s. 6d. }

FORTHCOMING ISSUE, JANUARY 1, 1898.

A DOUBLE SECTION of F and G, by Mr. BRADLEY (completing the letter F and containing a portion of G).

Now Ready. Extra fcap. 8vo, stiff covers, 2s. 6d.

FIRST STEPS in ANGLO-SAXON. By Henry SWEET, M.A., Ph.D., &c.

THE TREASURY of SACRED SONG. Selected from the English Lyrical Poetry of Four Centuries. With Notes, Explanatory and Biographical. By F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A., Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. Extra fcap. 8vo, cloth, bevelled boards, 4s. 6d.

"A more delightful collection it would be difficult to conceive, and the fascination of infinite variety carries us on from page to page."—Times.

*.* An Edition is also issued printed on OXFORD INDIA PAPER, superfine cloth, 7s. 6d.; and in various superior leather bindings.

In 2 vols., medium 8vo, in half-roan 28s.

UNIFORM with DR. BIRKBECK HILL'S EDITIONS of BOSWELL'S "LIFE of JOHNSON" and "LETTERS of SAMUEL JOHNSON."

JOHNSONIAN MISCELLANIES. Arranged and

Edited by GEORGE BIRKBECK HILL, D.C.L., LL.D., Honorary Fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford.

"We have now, in all, ten volumes of 'Life, Letters, and Miscellanies,' embodying practically all that is known, and all that ever will be known, of Dr. Johnson."—Academy.

Demy 4to, half-buckram, 36s. net; half-vellum, 42s. net.

THE CHURCH of ST. MARY the VIRGIN,

OXFORD. By T. G. JACKSON, R.A., sometime Fellow and now Honorary Fellow of Wadham College. With 24 Full-page Illustrations and numerous cuts in the Text.

"A quarto of very comely appearance. . . . Mr. Jackson combines a survey of details which all students of architecture will find full of interest, with a lucid and vivid sketch of the history of the Church which will be welcome to everyone who cares for Oxford and its teeming academical memories."—The Times.

[Twenty-first Edition. Eighty-Second Thousand. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.]

A BRIEF HISTORY of the INDIAN PEOPLES.

By Sir W. W. HUNTER, K.C.S.I., C.I.E.]

"No other manual on India covers so wide a field with equal judgment and knowledge; everywhere complete mastery of the subject is apparent."—Leeds Mercury.

"We know of no work that gives, within reasonable compass, such a complete outline of the history of the peoples of our great eastern dependency."—Fall Mall Gazette.

RULERS OF INDIA SERIES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

THE MARQUESS of HASTINGS; and the Final

Overthrow of the Maráthá Power. By Major ROSS of BLADENSBURG, C.B.

DAILY CHRONICLE.—"Major Ross has done his work admirably, and bids fair to be one of the best writers the Army of our day has given to the country. . . . A most acceptable and entrancing little volume."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d. each.

A HISTORY of FRANCE. By G. W. Kitchin, D.D., F.S.A. With numerous Maps, Plans, and Tables.

SIR WALTER RALEGH: a Biography. By

WILLIAM STEBBING, M.A. With a Portrait from the Miniature in the possession of the Duke of Rutland. Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

"It brings Sir Walter Raleigh before us almost as vividly as though we saw him in the flesh."—Saturday Review.

Just published, extra fcap. 8vo, half-linen, 3s. 6d. net.

THE PRINCE. By Niccolo Machiavelli. Translated from the Italian by NINIAN HILL THOMSON, M.A.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"The book before us is prepared with as much care as would be bestowed on original work, with no less attention to literary form than faithfulness to the original. . . . So good a version will bring many English readers to one of the most remarkable books in the history of political literature."

Demy 8vo, cloth, 12s. 6d.

HISTORY of MY OWN TIME. By Bishop BURNET. Vol. I. A New Edition founded on that of M. J. ROUTH, D.D. Edited by OSMUND AIRY, M.A.

TIMES.—"All serious students will commend the laudable enterprise of the Clarendon Press in issuing a new edition of this famous work, and in securing the services of so competent an editor as Mr. Airy."

2 vols., 8vo, price £2 5s. net.

THE UNIVERSITIES of EUROPE in the MIDDLE AGES. By HASTINGS RASHDALL, M.A. With Maps and Illustrations. WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.—"There can be no doubt that Mr. Rashdall has produced the classic work in English on the history of Universities."

8vo, cloth extra, with Portrait, price 16s.

The LIFE and WORKS of JOHN ARBUTHNOT, M.D., Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians. By GEORGE A. AITKEN.

ATHENÆUM.—"Mr. Aitken's biography is extremely interesting, and he is fortunate in having found such a delightful subject."

Third Edition, Enlarged. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE as a DRAMATIC ARTIST:

a Popular Illustration of the Principles of Scientific Criticism. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

THE ANCIENT CLASSICAL DRAMA. A

Study in Literary Evolution. Intended for Readers in English and in the Original. By R. G. MOULTON, M.A. Crown 8vo, cloth, 8s. 6d.

"A popular yet scholarly presentation of the main ideas which underlie the ancient classical drama."—University Extension Journal.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

SOURCES for GREEK HISTORY BETWEEN the PERSIAN and PELOPONNESIAN WARS. Collected and Arranged by G. F. HILL, M.A., of the British Museum, Fellow of University College, London.

"The work seems to us to be done in a complete and scholarly manner. . . . The book is likely to prove extremely useful both to teachers and scholars."—The Times.

Popular Edition, now ready, with a Facsimile, crown 8vo, stiff covers, 2s. 6d.

ECCLESIASTICUS (xxxix. 15 to xlix. 11).

Translated from the Original Hebrew and Arranged in Parallel Columns with the English Revised Version of 1895, by the Editors of the Hebrew Text (A. E. COWLEY, M.A., and AD. NEUBAUER, M.A.).

Edited by REGINALD L. POOLE, M.A., Ph.D., Lecturer in Diplomatic in the University of Oxford. Part XII., now ready, 3s. 6d. net.

HISTORICAL ATLAS of MODERN EUROPE.

From the Decline of the Roman Empire.

PART XII. contains:

- Map 37. GERMANIA SACRA, showing the Ecclesiastical Divisions in the Middle Ages. By the Editors.
- Map 48. POLAND after the Union of Lublin. By R. NISBET BAIN.
- Map 68. ITALY in 1454. By Miss EWART.

HENRY FROWDE, Clarendon Press Warehouse, London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and New York.

Printed by ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Lonsdale Printing Works, Chancery Lane; Published for the Proprietor by PETER GEORGE ANDREWS, 48, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1330.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 30, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. [Established 1819.] A large Clientele in all parts of the East.

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 33rd Street, New York, and 24 BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MONTHLY CUMULATIVE INDEX to PERIODICALS. Indexes Subjects, Authors, Titles, Book Reviews, and Portraits. Specimen copy free. PUBLIC LIBRARY, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER, 45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

TYPE-WRITING work of every description done with accuracy and despatch. Author's MSS., Technical and Legal Copying, Indexing, Specifications, Tracing, Translating, Addressing, Type-written Mimeographed Copies, &c., &c.—The Misses E. & J. POTTS, 436, Mansion House Chambers, London, E.C.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations—E. W. LUMMA, Beeches Road, West Bromwich.

LITERARY LADY, experienced Typist, desires AUTHORS' MSS. to COPY, at 10d. per 1,000 words. Work neatly and expeditiously done.—"Typist," 27, Strathblaine Road, S.W.

TYPE-WRITER—GREAT BARGAIN £9 FOR £3.

Send for full particulars of above Splendid Machine, sold through liquidation. Quite new and perfect. A most beautiful, strong, practical machine. Anyone can learn in half an hour.

Messrs. KING, SELL, & RAILTON, WHOLESALE STATIONERS, 12, Gough Square, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 50, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.) Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen. ruled or plain.

SALES BY AUCTION.

LIBRARY of the late ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Esq., Glasgow.

In the CROWN HALLS, 98, SAUCHIEHALL STREET, GLASGOW, on 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th, 8th, and 9th NOVEMBER, commencing each day at 12 o'clock prompt.

PUBLIC SALE of the FINE COLLECTION of 3,000 RARE SCOTTISH HISTORICAL & ANTIQUARIAN BOOKS

(formed with great care and judgment by the late ALEXANDER MACDONALD, Esq. Sold by order of Messrs. MACDONALD & KIRKLAND, Writers, Agents for the Trustees).

MORRISON, DICK & McCULLOCH will SELL by AUCTION as above. On view on Monday, 1st November, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on forenoon of each day of Sale. Catalogues price 1s.; or post free on receipt of 12 Stamps on application to the Auctioneers, 98, Sauchiehall Street, Glasgow.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.—THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Council of the Yorkshire College invite APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT of a LECTURER in ENGLISH LITERATURE, who will be required to conduct the classes in this subject for the Pass and Honours Schools of the Victoria University. The Lecturing will probably average about eight hours per week during the Session. The Lecturer will not be at liberty to hold any other teaching appointment, but will have opportunity for Extension Lecturing. Stipend £200 with half the class fees. The appointment will date from the 1st January, 1898. Applications will be received by the SECRETARY up to 11th November.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE (A CONSTITUENT COLLEGE of the UNIVERSITY of WALES).

The Council invites APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK. Applications and testimonials should be sent on or before TUESDAY, NOVEMBER the 23rd, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Secretary and Registrar, University College, Cardiff, October 19th, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

ASSISTANT LECTURESHIP IN CLASSICS.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the above appointment. Applications, accompanied by Testimonials, should be sent to the undersigned, not later than SATURDAY, the 6th of NOVEMBER.

The Candidate elected will be required to enter upon his duties as soon as possible.

Further particulars may be obtained from

Geo. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an exceptional English Chaperson. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPERON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

LITERARY RESEARCH.—A Gentleman, experienced in Literary Work, and who has access to the British Museum Reading Room, is open to arrange with Author or any person requiring assistance in Literary Research, or in seeing work through the Press. Translations undertaken from French, Italian, or Spanish.—Apply, by letter, to D. C. DALLAS, 5, Fumival Street, London, E.C.

JOURNALISTIC PUPIL.—Would be thoroughly taught the commercial, printing, and editorial work of a newspaper and general printing office. With his intelligent co-operation would be made duly qualified to take charge of a similar business. Moderate premium, which, supplemented, would be returned as progressive salary. Must write shorthand. May reside with editor or proprietor.—Address M. M., care of Messrs. Passmore & Cooke, Avon Lodge, West Kensington, W.

BOOKS FOR SALE.

Advertisements are inserted under this heading at 4d. per line, prepaid.

RETIRING from BUSINESS.—CHARLES R. LOWE, Baskerville Hall, Birmingham, offers choice little Standard Oil Painting; also, David Cox—Some pretty Chelsea F. gures. Set of "Punch," vols. 1 to 100, new three-quarter morocco—Set of "Punch," in years, new, half-morocco—Magnificent Oak Bookcase, cost £150—100 vols. of useful Tales, Travels, Biographies, &c., all good, sound Volumes, £3, cost £20.—CHARLES LOWE, Book Exporter, New Street, Birmingham.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY (Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London).

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—SCOTT, 17, Crondale Road, Fulham, S.W.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS.

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited, 30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.; 48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C., LONDON; and at BARTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

LONDON LIBRARY, ST. JAMES'S SQUARE, S.W.

PATRON—H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

PRESIDENT—LESLIE STEPHEN, Esq.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, the Very Rev. the DEAN of LLANDAFF, HERBERT SPENCER, Esq., Sir HENRY BARKLY, K.C.B.

TRUSTEES—Right Hon. Sir M. GRANT DUFF,

Right Hon. Sir JOHN LUBBOCK, Bart., M.P., Right Hon. EARL of ROSEBURY.

The Library contains about 170,000 Volumes of Ancient and Modern Literature, in Various Languages. Subscription, £3 a year: Life-Membership, according to age. Fifteen Volumes are allowed to Country, and Ten to Town Members. Reading-Room Open from 10 to half-past 6. CATALOGUE, Fifth Edition, 2 vols., royal 8vo, price 5s.; to Members, 16s.

C. T. HAGBERG WRIGHT, Secretary and Librarian.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO.,

ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of

HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Pictorial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their

IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c. &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR

AND

BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

A HIGH-CLASS PAPER FOR PUBLISHERS, BOOKSELLERS, LITERARY MEN, BOOK COLLECTORS, LIBRARIANS, AND ALL WHO TAKE AN INTEREST IN THE WORLD OF LETTERS.

Published every Saturday, price 1½d.

Amongst the General Contents of the Paper are—
ARTICLES ON CURRENT LITERARY SUBJECTS—
NOTES AND NEWS REGARDING BOOKS—CONTINENTAL NOTES—AMERICAN NOTES—JOTTINGS ABOUT LIBRARY SALES—REVIEWS OF NEW BOOKS AND MAGAZINES—REGULAR LISTS OF BOOKS PUBLISHED IN GREAT BRITAIN AND AMERICA—LEADING FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS—BUSINESSES FOR SALE—SITUATIONS WANTED, AND SITUATIONS VACANT—BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE, AND BOOKS FOR SALE—TRADE CHANGES.

The characteristics of the literary matter, and of the advertisements, make the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record a most comprehensive record of current literature.

Subscription Terms and Advantages to Annual Subscribers.

FOR FIFTY-TWO WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE*	8 6
FOR TWENTY-SIX WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	4 6
FOR THIRTEEN WEEKS, INCLUDING POSTAGE	2 6

* The Annual Subscription to America and Foreign Countries included in the Postal Union is Eleven Shillings.

N.B.—The ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTION INCLUDES the large EXPORT and EDUCATIONAL NUMBERS, the SPECIAL ILLUSTRATED CHRISTMAS NUMBER, and also the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in the out-of-print Books Wanted column.

NOW READY.

BOOKS of the YEAR 1896.

Royal 8vo, pp. over 220, cloth limp, 5s. net; or half-roan limp, 6s. 6d. net.

THE ANNUAL VOLUME

OF THE

English Catalogue for 1896

differs from its predecessor in this respect, that it gives the

FULL TITLE

With Duplicate, and in many cases Triplicate, Classification under one general alphabet, of every book, instead of as hitherto abbreviated titles, consequently

The Bulk of the Catalogue is increased by over 80 pages, whilst the price (5s. net) remains the same.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON FORMER ISSUES.

"The English Catalogue" is a publication of national importance. There is nothing existing that has any claim to be compared with it as a ready guide to the vast fields of modern publications."—Daily News.

"Such a book is immensely useful to all who have to do with the literature of the day."—Athenaeum.

"We need scarcely point out how valuable a work of reference this well-known catalogue affords, as it is not only the names of books which are furnished in these pages, but also the dates of publication, an indication of the size, and the name of the publisher. The principal works imported from the United States of America are also included in this admirable volume."—Daily Telegraph.

"The English Catalogue of Books" is known and appreciated by librarians and those engaged in literary research wherever English books are used, and the new volume of the work is sure of a wide and hearty welcome."—Scotsman.

"To say that it is indispensable to whole classes and interests is mere commonplace. It is in its class the most useful of records.....The entire work is, indeed, a precious record."—Notes and Queries.

London:

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LTD.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS TO "THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

BEN JONSON ... ..	1896. November 14	WILKIE COLLINS ... ..	March 20
JOHN KEATS ... ..	" 21	JOHN MILTON ... ..	" 27
SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..	" 28	WILLIAM COWPER ... ..	April 3
TOM HOOD ... ..	December 5	CHARLES DARWIN ... ..	" 10
THOMAS GRAY ... ..	" 12	ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..	" 17
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..	" 19	HENRY WADSWORTH LONGFELLOW ... ..	" 24
SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..	" 26	ANDREW MARVELL ... ..	May 1
SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..	1897. January 2	ROBERT BROWNING ... ..	" 8
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..	" 9	THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..	" 15
LEIGH HUNT ... ..	" 16	PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..	" 22
LORD MACAULAY ... ..	" 23	CHARLES DICKENS ... ..	" 29
ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..	" 30	JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..	June 5
S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..	February 6	WILLIAM MAKEPEACE ... ..	" 12
CHARLES LAMB ... ..	" 13	WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..	" 19
MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..	" 20	SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..	" 26
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..	" 27	ALEXANDER POPE ... ..	July 3
SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..	March 6	DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..	" 10
EDMUND WALLER ... ..	" 13	FRANCIS BACON ... ..	" 17

FOUNTAIN PENS AND STYLOS:

The objections to them, and how they have been met.

Cæteris paribus everyone would rather use a fountain pen that carries its own ink, and can, therefore, be used anywhere and at any moment, in preference to an ordinary pen, which has to be dipped in the ink every minute or so.

But fountain pens have acquired a bad name from two or three general objections to them. "A fountain pen is all very well," people say, "but it has to be carried upright, otherwise the ink comes out in your pocket; in fact, the ink spills and makes a hideous mess on the smallest provocation. By way of compensation, when you want to write, the ink retires to the barrel (if it isn't all spilled into your pocket) and refuses to emerge until the pen has been shaken and thumped until it squirts out a blot on the carpet."

This used to be true; but the CAW PEN has met the difficulty. It does not have to be carried upright; it can be carried sideways, upside down, or in any position whatever. The ink cannot possibly spill, because it is in a hermetically closed chamber, screwed tight. There is no air-hole.

The pen can be jerked or thrown about as much as you please; it cannot spill. On the other hand, until the CAW PEN is opened for use the nib (which is a gold one of the finest quality) is immersed in the ink. Consequently it writes at once, without giving any trouble.

The CAW PEN is not merely the only fountain pen which anyone cares to use who has once seen it as a pocket pen, but it is so convenient for desk use that it supersedes all other pens whatever.

It is easily filled, and having a wide mouth does not clog with air bubbles during that operation. Prices from 12s. 6d.

"Caw pens have a reputé beyond their neighbours."—Westminster Budget.

The objection to Stylographic Pens is that the point rarely suits the writer's hand, and cannot be adjusted.

The CAW STYLOGRAPHIC PEN can be adjusted in an instant. It has not all the advantages of the CAW FOUNTAIN PEN; but for people who prefer a stylo this is the best stylo on the market. Prices from 5s.

British Depot: 46, Holborn Viaduct, London, E.C.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 985. — NOVEMBER, 1897. — 2s. 6d.

JOHN SPLENDID: THE TALE OF A POOR GENTLEMAN, AND THE LITTLE WARS OF LOREN, by Neil Munro. Chaps. i.-iv. — LORD TRENTON. — KARAIN: A MEMORY, by Joseph Conrad. — THE CALENDAR OF SCOTTISH CRIME, Part II., by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P. — ADVENTURES OF THE COMTE DE LA MURTE DURING THE REIGN OF TERROR, by Bernard Capes. — A MODERN ARCADIA, by E. F. Ames. — AT THE CORONATION OF GEORGE IV.: LETTER FROM MISS ROBERTSON OF GEORGE SQUARE, EDINBURGH, TO HER MOTHER. — TIGER MAJESTY, by Edward A. Irving. — DISOBEDIENCE IN ACTION.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Price 2d., by post 3d.; yearly subscription (including Supplements), 2s. 6d.

THE LITERARY GUIDE:
A Rationalist Review.

THE NOVEMBER NUMBER CONTAINS:

POPULAR RELIGIOUS FALLACIES.
DOGMA ENTHERONED.
TWILIGHT MOODS and MELODIES.
IN THE RATIONALIST VANGUARD.
FROM CHINA TO PERU.
MRS. BESANT'S NEW BOOK: "THE ANCIENT WISDOM."
A DISCIPLE OF NIETZSCHE.
RATIONALISM and the CHURCH CONGRESS.
LITERARY CHAT.—IX. With Mr. W. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN.
RATIONALISM in the MAGAZINES, JOTTINGS, &c., &c.

London: Watts &amp; Co., 17 Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

Ready next week, price Sixpence.

THE GUNPOWDER PLOT AND
THE GUNPOWDER PLOTTERS.

BEING A REPLY TO PROFESSOR GARDINER.

By JOHN GERARD, S.J.,

Author of "What was the Gunpowder Plot?"

HARPER &amp; BROTHERS, London and New York.

THREE CENTURIES OF NONCONFORMITY.

Large cr. 8vo, nearly 800 pp., cloth, 6s., post free.

HISTORY

OF THE

FREE CHURCHES OF ENGLAND

FROM THE REFORMATION TO 1851.

By HERBERT S. SKEATS.

WITH A CONTINUATION TO 1891,

By CHARLES S. MIALL.

"The leading members of all denominations will do well to get hold of this publication."—South Wales Daily News.

London: ALEXANDER &amp; SHEPHEARD, Farnival Street, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE

FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND

FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free.

FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THE MOST NUTRITIOUS.

E P P S ' S

GRATEFUL—COMFORTING.

C O C C O A

BREAKFAST AND SUPPER.

Mr. MURRAY'S LIST of NEW BOOKS

With Portraits and Maps. Crown 8vo, 12s. Ready.

"RODDY OWEN" (Late Brevet-Major, Lancashire Fusiliers, D.S.O.). A Memoir. By his Sister, Mrs. A. G. BOVILL, and G. R. ASKWITH, M.A., F.R.G.S.

"From every point of view a life of 'Roddy Owen' was sure of a welcome....a more popular sportsman never breathed."—Pall Mall Gazette.
"I was well aware—no one perhaps better—of the admirable service which he performed under circumstances the most trying. No more gallant fellow ever left these shores."—Lord Salisbury.

"Of all the young men that we have spent in Africa, there was never one lost more simple-minded and earnest-hearted than 'Roddy Owen.'"—Daily Chronicle.

With Portraits and Maps. Crown 8vo, 9s. Just out.

UNDER the RED ORESCENT.

Adventures and Experiences of an English Surgeon in the Service of the Turkish Government during the Sieges of Plevna and Erzeroum, 1877-78. Related by CHARLES S. RYAN, M.B., O.M. Edin., in association with his friend, JOHN SANDES, B.A. Oxon.

"A vivid picture of the dark side of the last great battles that have been fought in Europe."—Daily News.

With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 18s.

Just out.

THE LIFE of WILLIAM PENGELLY,

of Torquay, F.R.S., Geologist. With Selections from his Correspondence. By his Daughter, HESTER PENGELLY. And a Summary of his Scientific Works, by Professor BONNEY, F.R.S., F.G.S., &c.

"Though we have read many records of Pengelly's work, we have never seen anything so clear and concise, and yet comprehensive....The life is one to be treasured by all interested in the progress of geology."

Western Morning News.

"A work which specialists will value and laymen enjoy." Glasgow Herald.

With Portrait and Illustrations. Demy 8vo, 18s.

Now ready.

THE LIFE of the Rev. SOLOMON

CÆSAR MALAN, D.D., Scholar, Linguist, Artist, Divine. Formerly Vicar of Broadwindsor, Dorsetshire. With Extracts from his Correspondence. By his Son, the Rev. A. N. MALAN.

By Dr. GEORGE SMITH, C.I.E.

Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d. Now ready.

TWELVE INDIAN STATESMEN:

CHARLES GRANT, Sir HENRY LAWRENCE, JOHN LORD LAWRENCE, Sir JAMES OUTRAM, Sir DONALD McLEOD, Sir HENRY MARION DURAND, Lieut.-General COLIN MACKENZIE, Sir HERBERT EDWARDS, JOHN OLARK MARSHMAN, Sir HENRY MAINE, Sir HENRY RAMSAY, Sir CHARLES U. ARTHURSON.

IN THE PRESS.

With Maps and Illustrations from the Author's Photographs. 2 vols., large crown 8vo.

KOREA and HER NEIGHBOURS.

A Narrative of Travel, and an Account of the Vicissitudes and Present Position of the Country. By Mrs. BISHOP (ISABELLA BIRD).

A CHEAPER EDITION OF

DR. SMILES' SELF-HELP SERIES.

The following well-known and popular Works which have hitherto been published at 6s. each, will now be issued at 3s. 6d. a volume.

SELF-HELP.

THRIFT.

INDUSTRIAL BIOGRAPHY

LIFE OF THOMAS EDWARD

LIFE AND LABOUR.

LIFE OF WEDGWOOD.

CHARACTER.

DUTY.

MEN OF INVENTION AND INDUSTRY.

LIFE OF JAMES NASMYTH.

BOY'S VOYAGE ROUND THE WORLD.

LIFE OF JASMIN.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of the Rev. JOHN BACCHUS DYKES, M.A., Mus. Doc., late Vicar of St. Oswald's, Durham. Edited by the Rev. JOSEPH T. FOWLER, Vice-Principal of Hatfield Hall, Durham, &c.

A man of saintly character and deep devotional feeling, he was able to give to such Hymns as 'Lead, kindly Light,' 'I heard the voice of Jesus say,' 'Eternal Father, strong to save,' or 'Now the labourer's task is o'er,' that living voice of music which intensifies their fullest meaning.

Demy 8vo.

MINISTERIAL PRIESTHOOD. Six

Chapters Preliminary to the Study of the Ordinal. With an Enquiry into the Truth of Christian Priesthood and an Appendix on the recent Roman Controversy. By R. C. MOBERLY, D.D., Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology in the University of Oxford, Canon of Christ Church.

JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

CLEMENT WILSON'S PUBLICATIONS.

LEGAL EPITOMES FOR GENERAL USE.

Price 2s. 6d., fcap. 8vo, cloth.

NO. I.

LAW of SALES of STOCKS and

SHARES. By CHARLES FRAMPTON STALLARD, M.A. (Oxon.), of Gray's Inn, late Holt Scholar, Barrister-at-Law.

"The law is clearly and concisely given, and the book should certainly assist those who are concerned in dealings with stocks and shares."—Law Times.
"Cannot fail to be of service to many who have dealings in stocks and shares."—Banker's Magazine.

NO. II.

LAW of BANKS and BANKERS.

By W. DE BRACY HERBERT, M.A., LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

"A clear and readable exposition of the English law of Banker and Customer."—Stockman.
"Clear and simple in its style....and appears to be absolutely accurate."—Law Times.

NO. III.

LAW of DIRECTORS' and PRO-

MOTERS' LIABILITIES. By R. STORRY DEANS, LL.B. (London), of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, sometime Holder of Inns of Court Studentship, Arden Scholar of Gray's Inn, &c.

"A clearly written and useful book upon a subject of general interest."—Manchester Guardian.
"Is well fitted to be of assistance to directors, promoters, and shareholders."—Dundee Advertiser.

NO. IV.

IN THE PRESS.

The LAW of FIXTURES and REPAIRS

as BETWEEN LANDLORD and TENANT. By W. DE BRACY HERBERT, M.A., LL.M., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

BOOKS BY A. J. WILSON.

Editor of the "Investors' Review" and "Investment Index."

Price in cloth, 1s. 6d. net (post free, 1s. 8d.); paper cover, 1s. net (post free, 1s. 2d.).

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION, THOROUGHLY REVISED AND LARGELY REWRITTEN.

PRACTICAL HINTS to INVESTORS.

"The perusal of Mr. Wilson's handy book will repay those concerned in the matters treated of; and as an example in terse and incisive English it may be read by the student and admirer of style." Manchester City News.

IN THE PRESS.

NEW EDITION, ENTIRELY REWRITTEN.

PLAIN ADVICE ABOUT LIFE

INSURANCE.

London: CLEMENT WILSON,
Norfolk House, Norfolk Street, W.C.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.O.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of

PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS

OF

FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, &c. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA.

From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s. Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY

FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN'S LIST.

The PRIVATE PAPERS of WILLIAM WILBERFORCE. Collected and Edited, with a Preface, by Mrs. WILBERFORCE, of Lavington. Photogravure and other Illustrations. Cloth, 12s.

"The volume as it stands is so full of intrinsic interest that it almost dispenses with the services of an editor." Times, in a column and a-half review.

THE LIFE and LETTERS of MR. ENDYMION PORTER; Sometime Gentleman of the Bedchamber to King Charles the First. By DOROTHEA TOWNSHEND. Photogravure and other Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, 12s.

"It is not only State secrets that lie buried beneath the dust of our national archives. That this dust also covers many a secret of the human heart is proved by the diggings and discoveries as in a Klondyke land of human passion, whereof Mrs. Townshend has embodied its results in the handsomely turned out volume before us." Daily Chronicle.

VOLUME I. OF "MASTERS OF MEDICINE."

JOHN HUNTER. By Stephen Paget. With Introduction by Sir JAMES PAGET. With Photogravure Frontispiece. Large crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. (This work forms the Initial Volume of the Series which is Edited by ERNEST HART, D.C.L., Editor of "The British Medical Journal.")

"In this well-written monograph we have a portrait of the man in his splendid strength and skill, and the impression it leaves is heightened by the fact that his amusing foibles are also revealed." Leeds Mercury.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "HOW TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED."

THE LOVE AFFAIRS of SOME FAMOUS MEN. By Rev. E. J. HARDY, M.A. Cloth gilt, 6s.

BY BENJAMIN SWIFT, AUTHOR OF "NANBY NOON."
THE TORMENTOR. In Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.

DR. WEIR MITCHELL'S NEW NOVEL.

HUGH WYNNE: Free Quaker, sometime Brevet Lt.-Col. on the Staff of His Excellency General Washington. Unwin's Green Cloth Library. 6s.
"Is so told that the interest at no time flags. Dr. Weir Mitchell deserves our thanks for an admirable piece of work."—Literature.

AN ALLEGORY OF HUMAN LIFE.

BRER MORTAL. By Ben Marlas. 6 Full-Page Illustrations by Mark Zangwill. Cloth, 6s.

THE FORTUNE-SEEKERS' GUIDE.

THE GOLD FIELDS of the KLON-DYKE; the Yukon Region of Alaska and British America. The Story as told by Ladue, Berry, Phisator, and other gold-finders. By JOHN W. LEONARD. Maps, Diagrams, and Illustrations. Cloth, 2s. 6d.

SECOND AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE LIFE of GENERAL GORDON. By DEMETRIUS C. BOULGER. 2 Photogravures and other Illustrations. Cloth, 6s.

NEW IRISH LIBRARY.—New Volume.

LAYS of the RED BRANCH. By Sir SAMUEL FERGUSON. With an Introduction by Lady FERGUSON. Paper, 1s.; cloth gilt, gilt top, 2s.

NEW VOLUMES OF THE CHILDREN'S STUDY.

ROME. By Mary Ford.

FRANCE. By Mary C. Rowsell. Each with Frontispiece, cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

THE LABOUR MOVEMENT. By L. T. HOBBHOUSE, M.A. With Preface by R. B. HALDANE, M.P. Paper covers, 1s.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION.

MY LONG LIFE. By Mary Cowden-CLARKE. With 4 Photogravure Engravings and 4 Colotypes. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

COMPLETE LIST of Mr. T. FISHER UNWIN'S AUTUMN PUBLICATIONS will be sent post free on receipt of card.

LONDON:
T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

FROM MR. GRANT RICHARDS'S LIST.

TWO NEW ANTHOLOGIES.

(I.) THE FLOWER OF THE MIND:

A Choice among the best Poems.

By Mrs. MEYNELL.

With Cover Designed by Laurence Housman.

Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s. [On Monday.]

(II.) A BOOK OF VERSES FOR CHILDREN: an Anthology.

Compiled by EDWARD VERRALL LUCAS.

With Cover, Title-Page and End-Papers Designed in Colours by F. D. Bedford.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. [Ready.]

THE DUMPY BOOKS FOR CHILDREN.

(I.) The FLAMP, the AMELIORATOR

AND THE

SCHOOLBOY'S APPRENTICE.

By E. V. LUCAS.

(II.) MRS. TURNER'S CAUTIONARY STORIES.

With an Essay on Good and Bad Children.

16mo, cloth, 1s. 6d. each.

BY GRANT ALLEN.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE IDEA OF GOD:

An Inquiry into the Origins of Religions.

Demy 8vo, cloth, 20s. net.

BY RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

THE RUBAIYAT OF OMAR KHAYYAM:

A Paraphrase from several Literal Translations.

Long fcap. 8vo, parchment cover, 6s.

REALMS OF UNKNOWN KINGS:

Poems.

By LAURENCE ALMA TADEMA.

Fcap. 8vo, paper covers, 2s. net; buckram, 3s. net.

A NEW BOOK ON NEWFOUNDLAND.

THE TENTH ISLAND:

Being some Account of Newfoundland, its People, its Politics, and its Peculiarities.

By BECKLES WILLSON.

With an Introduction by Sir WILLIAM WHITEWAY, K.C.M.G., Premier of the Colony,

And an Appendix by Lord CHARLES BERESFORD.

With Map. Globe 8vo, buckram, 3s. 6d.

THE SUBCONSCIOUS SELF, AND ITS RELATION TO EDUCATION AND HEALTH.

By LOUIS WALDSTEIN, M.D.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE OLD ROME AND THE NEW,

And Other Studies.

By W. J. STILLMAN.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

THE LAUGHTER OF JOVE: a Novel.

By HELMUTH SCHWARTZE.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

GRANT RICHARDS, 9, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.

SMITH, ELDER & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

PUBLISHED LAST WEDNESDAY.

In 2 vols., with Portraits, crown 8vo, 15s. net.

The Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

Edited, with Biographical Additions,

By FREDERIC G. KENYON.

From the TIMES.—"The series of letters, it will easily be understood, gives a very complete picture of Mrs. Browning's life, so far as it can in any sense be said to have belonged to her friends and the world. The editor, whose name is a guarantee that he is the right man for the work, has supplemented the letters with a slender thread of narrative, sufficient to make of these two volumes a thoroughly adequate biography. The selection of the letters and the interposed narrative are both done with excellent taste."

From the STANDARD.—"As a contribution to political as well as literary history, these volumes are of value; and they do much to clear up many allusions that have hitherto remained obscure in Mrs. Browning's works. It is impossible to quit the perusal of these letters without a feeling that we have been permitted to pass an hour or two in the company of two of the most delightful, as well as the most gifted and high-minded, of mortal men and women."

NEW ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF
"THE GREY LADY."

Now ready, with 12 Full-Page Illustrations by ARTHUR RACKHAM, crown 8vo, 6s.

THE GREY LADY. By Henry Seton MERRIMAN, Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," "In Kedar's Tents," &c.

CHEAP POPULAR EDITION of "MARCELLA."

Now ready, crown 8vo, bound in limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

MARCELLA. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. Cheap Popular Edition.

On November 6th, with Map, large crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE WAR of GREEK INDEPENDENCE, 1821-1835. By W. ALISON PHILLIPS, M.A., late Scholar of Merton College, Senior Scholar of St. John's College, Oxford.

NEW NOVEL OF SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE.

Just published, crown 8vo, 6s.

JAN: AN AFRIKANDER.

By ANNA HOWARTH.

THIRD EDITION nearly sold out.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

IN KEDAR'S TENTS.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN,

Author of "The Sowers," "With Edged Tools," &c.

The GUARDIAN.—"Mr. Merriman is at his best in his new book. It is full of adventure, of humour, and of vigour, and the scene, which is laid in Spain during the Carlist war, will be quite new to most readers. In short, we have nothing but praise for 'In Kedar's Tents.'"

Mr. JAMES PAYN in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.—"It is a book which no one will lay down who has begun it."

LONDON: SMITH, ELDER & CO., 15, WATERLOO PLACE, S.W.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
The Dark Lady Unveiled ... ..	341
Literary Recollections ... ..	342
The Prose of William Morris ... ..	343
The Mystery of Sleep ... ..	345
A Caroline Courtier ... ..	346
Travel Books ... ..	347
Boys' Books ... ..	348
William Wilberforce ... ..	349
BRIEF MENTION ... ..	349
NEW EDITIONS ... ..	350
THE DUCHESSES OF TUCK ... ..	351
NOTES AND NEWS ... ..	351
FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE ... ..	353
THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS ... ..	353
EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM: V., SOME PAMPHLETS ... ..	354
THE BOOK MARKET ... ..	355
DRAMA ... ..	356
THE WEEK ... ..	357
CORRESPONDENCE ... ..	358
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ... ..	359
FICTION SUPPLEMENT ... ..	97-100

REVIEWS.

THE DARK LADY UNVEILED.

Gossip from a Muniment Room, being Passages in the Lives of Anne and Mary Fytton, 1574 to 1618. Transcribed and Edited by Lady Newdigate-Newdegate. (David Nutt.)

IT is a happy chance which has brought the Muniment Room of Arbury, Warwickshire, under the control of a lady so able and open-minded as the present Lady Newdegate. Out of the family letters there preserved she has made a charming and most valuable selection, doing her work as editress with diligence, frankness, and discretion. The Lady Newdigate of three centuries ago, who is the heroine of the book, happens to have had for her only sister Mistress Mary Fytton, Maid-of-Honour to Queen Elizabeth, who is by some thought to have been the heroine of a very different book—the Sonnets, to wit, of William Shakespeare. As the letters contain many references to this lady, they have a peculiar interest for those eager irreconcilables on whom the enigma of the Sonnets has cast its spell. But even if Mary Fytton had not attained this equivocal fame, the value of the book as a record of domestic manners in the days of Elizabeth and James would be undiminished:

"For us," says Lady Newdegate, "living as we do within the same walls where, nearly three hundred years ago, Anne lived, loved and died . . . our chief heroine's personality has a reality and a fascination which we cannot hope to impart to our readers."

This is no doubt true; but it is also true that to any reader of these pages who has a spark of imagination, Anne Newdigate cannot but become very real and sympathetic. Of her own writing not much is preserved—only a few drafts of letters, and a long and touching supplication to Lord Salisbury, then "Master of the Wards," for the wardship of her eldest son. She is amply mirrored for us, however, in the letters addressed to her by numerous correspondents, who all write in a tone of unfeigned affection and admiration. First come her father and mother, Sir Edward and Lady Fytton, of Gawsorth,

Cheshire. Her father ends his first letter: "Thus longing soare to see thee faare well this xvii of May, 1598. Thy treuest friend Ed. fytton"; and two months later he begins another letter thus: "Nan Newdigate, I ame to think my selfe much beholdinge to you as a ffather can be to a daughter." Her mother ends a letter "To my good doughter Mrs. Anne Newdygat at Erbery" with the touching phrase, "God blesse you and yours and send us all meri to meett." Her uncle, Francis Fytton, addresses "To myne especial good neece, Mrs. Newdigate at hir house at Arbery in Warwyckshyre," and signs himself "Your owne uncle and affectionat frend to all my powere." These are no mere formal phrases. Their context sufficiently proves that the affections of a truly united family centred around Anne; while the loyalty with which she stood by her scapegrace sister through all her errors and troubles shows that there was no Pharisaism in her own unblemished virtue. Outside her immediate family, her chief correspondents were Sir William Knollys, of whom more anon, old Sir Fulke Greville, Sir Richard Leveson, and one Francis Beaumont—not, unfortunately, the Beaumont of The Maid's Tragedy and Philaster. To Sir Fulke Greville, then over seventy, she accorded, in the fashion of the time, the title of "master," acknowledging herself his "servant," and the old gentleman thanked her for her favour in these courtly, yet evidently heartfelt, terms:

"Deere esteemed and best beloved servant All y<sup>e</sup> words in y<sup>e</sup> world cannot suffyciently expresse ye Joy and comfort I take in bearyng ye tittle and name off your Mr. Many men are diversely affected, some take pryde off fayre howses some off theare welth, some off fayre wyffs and others off theare chyldrene; I only glory y<sup>t</sup> I have a servant w<sup>ch</sup> conteynes all vertues and y<sup>e</sup> same draws to her y<sup>e</sup> trew love and affection off all good mynds and myne in good faythe sweete servant in such sort that thoughe I have y<sup>e</sup> honor to be called your Mr. you have y<sup>e</sup> powre to command me and any thinge I have. . . .

"From Beachampscourt this 20th off August 1599

by him y<sup>t</sup> loves and honors you

"Your Mr. off your own favor and courtesye,

"FFOWLKE GREVYLE."

The letters of her cousin, Sir Richard Leveson, are frank, sailorlike, and genuinely affectionate. It strikes us as odd to find him currently addressing her as "sweet wyff," while sending the most friendly messages to her husband, "my cozen Jake"; but it was the fashion of the time to express affection in imaginary relationships. Even the cousinship was, as a matter of fact, many times removed; yet he would be a frontless cynic indeed who, after reading these innocent and kindly letters, should hint a suspicion that, as Barham puts it, "they were a little less than kin and rather more than kind." So amiable is Leveson's unconscious self-portrayal that, like the present Lady Newdegate, we are loath to believe the assertion of an old family-tree that Mary Fytton, his friend's sister, was his mistress and had two children by him. It is clear enough that Mary's conduct was not irreproachable even in the interval between her intrigue with the Earl of Pembroke and her marriage with William Polwhele. Shortly after Sir Edward Fytton's death, in 1606, we find Lady Fytton writing to her daughter Anne:

"I take no joye to heer of your sister nor of that boy. If it hade plesed God whan I did bear her that shee and I hade bine beried it hade saved mee ffrom a great delle of sorow and gryffe, and her ffrom sham and such shame as never hade Chesshyre woman, worse now than ever. Wrytt no mor to mee of her."

There can be but one interpretation of this passage; but it can scarcely refer to the birth of a child by Sir Richard Leveson, who died in August, 1605. Moreover, the phrase "worse now than ever" indicates that Mary's conduct had for some time been better, and that she had lately relapsed into evil ways; but if, as the family-tree would have us believe, she had two daughters by Sir Richard Leveson, they must have been born between 1601 and 1605, so that at no time could there have been any great appearance of reformation on her part. On the whole, then, we incline, with Lady Newdegate, to reject the evidence of the family-tree, so far as it concerns Sir Richard Leveson. On the other hand, it must be remembered that the family-tree was correct in recording her intrigue with Pembroke; that Sir Richard Leveson's will contains provision for the payment of an annuity of £100 to "a person or persons" privately designated by the testator to his executors; that a Captain Polwhele served under Sir Richard Leveson at sea; and that the manor of Perton, in Staffordshire, where William Polwhele and Mary Fytton lived after their marriage in 1607, was the property of Sir Richard. The matter is obscure and of no importance. The interesting part of Mary Fytton's career, to which we shall presently return, lies between 1595 and 1601.

Anne Newdigate lost her husband in 1610, and it was shortly before his death that she got into correspondence with her neighbour, Francis Beaumont of Bedworth. This gentleman's letters are, from a literary point of view, the most interesting in the book, for Master Beaumont possessed no despicable powers of expression, and was an accomplished, though belated, Euphuist. He is Anne's most ardent admirer, and, being himself well stricken in years, is urgent in promoting the suit of his "cosyn Sanders," who would fain have been her second husband. Anne, however, resolutely declined to be (as she herself phrased it in her petition to Lord Salisbury) "soe accursed a woeman to marrye againe." She seems, indeed, to have had little more than an amused tolerance for the ingenious phrases in which Master Beaumont pleaded his kinsman's cause. Yet they were not without a certain insinuating grace—witness the following really exquisite form of address: "My best ladie and of all ladies that ever I knew myne onlie best and most noble Ladie." Hamlet, you perceive, was in nowise out of the fashion in inscribing his billet, "To the celestial and my soul's idol the most beautified Ophelia"; but Beaumont's formula is at once simpler and subtler; Polonius could scarcely have found it "a vile phrase." Whether sincerely or not, Beaumont professed a somewhat extravagant admiration for Anne's own literary gifts (which were quite unpretending), and begged earnestly for a copy of her before-mentioned letter and supplication o Lord Salisbury:

"Your owne they be and yours as much as your owne children be yours, in this onely different, that your children were borne of your bodie and these preatie inanimate creatures borne of your brayne: yet not still borne but borne stil to reproove poor mee. . . . You can not bestowe your favoures upon any the best freindes you have that shalbe more kindelie accepted then of mee, and your most loving freind my neece, who being a great collector of monuments wil, I knowe, in hir booke of recordes reserve a prime station for my Ladie Nudigate's letters."

We owe our best thanks to "Ladie Nudigate" for having preserved, and to Lady Newdegate for having published, these "monuments" of the epistolary style of our forefathers.

But we have kept the worshipful Sir William Knollys, Comptroller of Her Majesty's Household, waiting too long for his audience. Whatever be their bearing on the problem of Shakespeare's Sonnets, and even if it should one day appear that they have no bearing at all, Sir William's letters are certainly human documents of extraordinary interest. He was over fifty, and married to a rich wife who was older than himself, when the seventeen-year-old daughter of his friend, Sir Edward Fytton, made her first appearance at Court. After promising her father to "deffend the innocent lamb ffrom the wolvyse crueltye and fox-like subteltye of the tame bests off thys place," he promptly fell in love with her and determined to marry her as soon as his wife should be good enough to die. Meanwhile he doted upon her with all an old man's fondness, and made her sister Anne the confidant of a suit which seems to have been (if the word can be used under the peculiar circumstances) entirely "honourable." He is dejected, in one letter, because Mary has gone to bed without saying good night to him. In another, accepting the office of godfather to one of Anne Newdigate's children (a daughter), he writes:

"Imagyne what name I love best, and that doe I nominate but refer the choyse to your self, and yff I might be as happye to be a ffather as a godffather, I would think myself exceedyng rich, but that will never be untill one of your owne tribe be a partye player."

Passages of as plain or even plainer import abound in his letters. It is evident that the compact of marriage as soon as it should be legally possible was (outwardly, at least) accepted by Mary herself, and was understood and approved by her family. Gradually, as time goes on, Mary grows restive, and makes no attempt to conceal the fact from Sir William, who writes:

"Hyr greatest feare ys that while the grasse groweth the horse maye starve, and she thinketh a byrd in the bushe ys worth 2 in the hand [sic]. But both she and I must have patience & that will bring peace at the last."

At last, as we know, Mary's intrigue with

William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, comes to light, she leaves the Court in disgrace, and though Sir William continues to write of her affectionately and respectfully, all thought of marriage is at an end. Now, to some of us, it appears that this strange and almost incredible relationship between the old Comptroller of the Household and the young Maid of Honour removes the main difficulty in the way of accepting Mary Fytton as the Dark Lady of the Sonnets, while it supplies a new and striking coincidence in her favour. The great stumbling-block to the Mary Fytton theory has hitherto been the phrase "In act thy bed-vow broke"; and here we find her engaged by what was in effect a "bed-vow" to Sir William Knollys. Further, it had been argued by more than one critic that the sonnet beginning:

"Whoever bath her wish, thou hast thy Will,
And Will to boot, and Will in overplus," implied that she had not only two lovers, but three, of the name of William; and here we have the trefoil completed: William Shakespeare, William Herbert, William Knollys. We have no space to go into the question in detail. All we can say is that if Mary Fytton was not the Dark Lady, the chain of coincidence completed by these letters is one of the strangest on record.

LITERARY RECOLLECTIONS.

Recollections of Aubrey de Vere. (Edward Arnold.)

MR. AUBREY DE VERE'S Recollections go back for more than sixty years. They are concerned a little with travels, the record of which reminds us that there was a time when an Englishman's visit to Milan Cathedral was an event; they deal largely with politics, but narrowed to Irish politics, and narrowed again to strained relations between landlord and tenant, Mr. de Vere belonging to a family of landlords, and having no love for "the agitators" as his political opponents are nicknamed by him; they deal, too, with religion, for Mr. de Vere is one of the not very numerous Irishmen of his class who have joined the Roman Catholic Church; and he devotes himself for the rest to the world of Letters, in which, by his own achievements as well as by his close friendships with eminent writers, he has been a name since Victoria began to rule. These literary "Recollections" will be the most interesting of all for the general reader, who may, however regret their grave limitations. Mr. de Vere, for instance, was the friend of Tennyson for more than half a century. They met in the first forties in the rooms of James Spedding, or at some smoking party of the "apostles"; and they called each other by their Christian names from the first, a common habit with the Laureate's early friends, due perhaps to the convenience of distinguishing him from his brothers. After fifty years of friendship, the two Christian names were put together in a playful verse by Tennyson:

"Little Aubrey in the West! Little Alfred in the East
Accepts the songs you gave, and he sends you his salaam,"

and so on, with allusions to "little Homer, little Dante, little Shakespeare." The two names, moreover, are linked together in the christening—"Alfred Aubrey"—of one of the present Lord Tennyson's sons. Of the long intimacy, thus outwardly marked, the readers of Mr. de Vere's Recollections have no hints; for he has enriched the Laureate's Memoir with such contributions. Of Mr. de Vere's friendship with Sara Coleridge, the poet's daughter, the record is in her Memoir; it is not here. So, too, in the case of Landor, of Sir Henry Taylor, of Lord Houghton, Mr. de Vere has added chapters to other books, which gained thereby the interest now lost to his own.

It is so long since his career was at its beginning, that a new generation may well need the reminder they do not get of the friendships and praises that link his name with immortal memories. In him Walter Savage Landor hailed that Greek spirit which revives so strangely, at far intervals of time and space, in single intellects among alien nations. Landor placed the young poet on the heights, bidding him go forward—

"Where there are none to lead and few to follow," adding to his valediction:

"Make thy proud name still prouder for thy sons,
Aubrey de Vere!"

To him, too, Sir Henry Taylor addressed the lines we miss from these Recollections:

"No lesser light
Than what was lit in Sydney's spirit clear,
Or given to saintly Herbert to diffuse,
Now lives in thine, de Vere."

In a notice of these personal "Recollections" we may be allowed to add that Landor's injunction has never been fulfilled; that Mr. de Vere has never married; and that with him and his elder brother, Sir Stephen de Vere, the "proud name" will pass away from this branch of the family that bears it. All these maimings and omissions mean that the present "Recollections" are somewhat random, if so haphazard a phrase may be used where all that does appear is so dignified, so circumspect, and so sedate.

Mr. de Vere was about eighteen when he began to write verses in 1832, one of his themes being the Reform Bill. A year earlier he had passed through his Byron period. After a month of it, an inmate of the house said: "What has flung that cloud over your face?" Probably no reply was given then, but Mr. de Vere now confesses: "It was the Byronic sulk." He did find some expression for his thoughts, however, for he said to his father: "I suppose every one knows that Byron is the greatest modern poet." Sir Aubrey answered very quietly, "I do not know it." "Then who is?" persisted the boy; and he got back the name of Wordsworth. A year later he was able to say that the Byron sulk had been exorcised by his reading of the other poet. When, in 1841, Mr. de Vere visited England, he went to the Lakes, and, as a guest of Miss Fenwick, met her illustrious neighbour, and afterwards made a stay of several days under his roof, "which I regard as the greatest honour of my life." Even the yearly visits to Cardinal Newman at Edgbaston, or to Sir Henry Taylor at Bournemouth, or to Tennyson at Aldworth, must give way to that experience at Rydal Mount; but we have to remember these other intercourses, and the value attached to them by Mr. de Vere, if we would give full weight to his superlative words. A letter written by Wordsworth to his visitor soon after his departure incidentally discloses that Aubrey de Vere's filial attitude towards the poetry of his father existed even then, and that he himself had begun his career as a reviewer in various quarterlies:

"First let me express," Wordsworth writes, "my pleasure in learning that I had been misinformed concerning the article in The Quarterly. The thing I have not read, nor probably ever shall read; but it grieved me to think, from what I heard of it, that it should be written by any friend of mine whom I esteem so highly as yourself. And I was the more concerned because the only disparaging notices which I have ever cared the least for unfortunately have ever come from persons with whom I have lived in close intimacy. And this occurred in several remarkable instances. Now, though I am far from supposing that every one who likes me shall think well of my poetry, yet I do think that openness of dealing is necessary before a friend undertakes to decry one's writings to the world at large."

After this human passage, Wordsworth proceeds to another theme common to the epistles of poets—the acknowledgment of volumes of verse; and when you are dealing with Mr. de Vere, you may be sure he has sent not his own poems only, but his father's and his friend's. After acknowledging Mr. de Vere's volume, which "Miss Fenwick has read with much pleasure, especially the Hymns," and which she "lent to Mr. Faber," the future founder of the London Oratory, Wordsworth continues:

"Alas, the state of my eyes curtails my reading hours very much in these short days. Your father's Sonnets and Mr. Taylor's Tragedy are the only verse I have read for many months. If the expression, especially in point of truthfulness, were equal in your father's poems to the sanctity and weight of the thoughts, they would be all that one could desire in that style of writing. But in respect to your father's poems, your own, and all other new productions in verse, whether of my friends or of strangers, I ought frankly to avow that the time is past with me for bestowing that sympathy to which they are entitled. For many reasons connected with advanced life I read but little of new works either in prose or verse. Rogers says of me, partly in joke and partly in earnest, as he says of himself and others as frankly, 'I read no poetry now but my own.' In respect to myself, my good old friend ought to have added that if I do read my own, it is mainly, if not entirely, to make it better. But certain it is that old men's literary pleasures lie chiefly among the books they were familiar with in their youth; and this is still more pointedly true of men who have practised composition themselves. You must be perfectly aware of all that I have said as characteristic of human nature to a degree which scarcely allows exceptions, though rigidity or obtuseness will prevail more in some minds than in others."

This is frank, at any rate, and only the hastily-judging will say that it is also egotistic. It explains, or at least admits, the existence of that otherwise baffling slowness of old poets to admit the claims of new ones. But we miss from this volume what has been told elsewhere, and is certainly required here to round the story, the record of Mr. de Vere's own wrestling from Wordsworth his first praise of Tennyson, whose "Of old sat freedom" and "You ask me why, though ill at ease," he judiciously chose for recitation at Rydal Mount. Mr. de Vere had then the talisman of youth, and he was an enthusiastic admirer of Tennyson from the moment Monckton Milnes brought the 1842 volume to Curragh Chace. Mr. de Vere is among the elders of those who had the exquisite pleasure of discovering the then little recognised glories of Keats and Shelley, whom he read as he drove his sister about the woods—"the pony soon found us out and we had hairbreadth escapes"—or repeated aloud all night floating in a boat on the lake till a splendid sunrise surprised him—"it was all Shelley's fault."

With Coleridge's work, too, he made acquaintance at the same time; and the union of "poet and saint" which Cowley thought so rare in Crashaw, but which recent poetry has made familiar by allusions to "the holy poets" and to "saint or singer" as alternatives, seems to have had a place in his reverent mind:

"A thousand thanks to you, my dear friend" [he writes to Sara Coleridge], "for that lock of your father's hair. I could hardly have valued more a tress from a saint's head than I value one which may once have touched 'that god-like forehead,' seen so often in my youthful fancies, but never, alas! in the light of day. I shall never again feel that veneration for any other man which my sister and I used to feel for your father when we read him together and thought, on laying down the book, that we could gather amaranths from every meadow. I am not now quite so much a believer in heroes as once ere that wicked and unfeeling thing, Experience, had bullied me into believing that every man has his infirmities. This new philosophy does not yet, however, wholly tyrannise over my old habits. There remains one unsubverted throne occupied by an aged man with dreamy eyes, and lips once brightened by Parnassian springs, and still breathing Elysian airs."

Wordsworth's saying that "we live by admiration" comes to mind as we read Mr. de Vere's account of his relations with these great poets and their works. Yet for him, too, possibly the hour struck when the list of his heroes had its end; and when the unreceptiveness, confessed to by Wordsworth, became his in turn. Certain it is that in these Recollections we have no hint of the new and morning spirit that has moved through English prose and verse in later years. Mr. de Vere writes and feels as a contemporary at latest of Coventry Patmore and Trench; not of Mr. George Meredith, not of Mr. Stevenson, and still less of Mr. Rudyard Kipling.

The reminiscences of Cardinals Manning and Newman appearing in the volume are already familiar to readers of magazines. The chapter on the Great Irish Famine is vitiated by the feeling born of modern political landlord-and-tenant warfare that is suggested in it; and it is made all but vain by the modesty which has withheld the record of the writer's own personal devotion to the dying. More to the point than stale anecdotes of that "year of sorrow" would be a quotation in this volume from the still vital verses composed by Mr. de Vere himself at that time:

"Fall snow, and cease not! Flake by flake
The decent winding-sheet compose;
Thy task is just and pious; make
An end of blasphemies and woes.

"Fall, snow, in stillness fall, like dew,
On church's roof and cedar's fan;
And mould thyself on pine and yew,
And on the awful face of man.

"On quaking moor and mountain moss,
With eyes upstaring at the sky,
And arms extended like a cross,
The long expectant sufferers lie.

"Bend o'er them, white-robed acolyte,
Put forth thine hand from cloud and mist;
And minister the last sad rite,
Where altar there is none nor priest."

That Mr. de Vere has written poetry as fine as this, may be news to many readers of his Recollections; nor will they have any hint of it there, although his final chapter is entitled in the table of contents "Some of my Poems, their Aims and Objects," a title which loses half its dulness in the book itself, where the chapter is called only "Some of my Poems." The book is issued without an index, an omission which will decide many persons to refuse it a place on their shelves among books of reference. Another addition needed for future issues is that of a table of errata, in which, for instance, the name of Lord Blachford should correct the "Blackford" that now appears, and a very bad misprint be amended in Mr. de Vere's own verses of "Farewell to Naples."

THE PROSE OF WILLIAM MORRIS.

The Water of the Wondrous Isles. By William Morris. (Longmans.)

We have many faults to find with this book—its style, diction, plot, and conception; but they are faults only to be discovered by applying the highest tests. Perhaps it may sound like cold praise to those who have hacked the words "genius," "masterpiece," "artist" out of all meaning to say that it comes very near being literature. It is a book to carry the imagination away from the dust and roar of common life, a tale of chequered woodland paths and green turf and beautiful flowers, a story of witches and magic, of fair ladies and brave knights, of love and adventure. And at first the quaint archaic style seems to fit in with the character of the narrative. Of spells and wood nymphs, of magic rings, of a boat that acts as a wishing-carpet and brings its burden to islands where old remains old and the young are young for ever, where little children are always little children playing with rabbits and flowers—how could these be read in the matter-of-fact style of the morning paper?

But the unfortunate fact is that Mr. Morris could not keep it up. He lived in the nineteenth century, and was chokeful of his time. The hours he spent with Homer suggested to him many fine incidents, such as that where the adventurers are half-maddened by phantoms of their mistresses sailing past in black and green and gold; in the "Morte d'Arthur" he has found an atmosphere where acts of gramarye and feats of derring-do are implicitly believed by a simple, credulous, child-like folk; the dialect he has adopted (so far as it is a dialect and not a jumble of new and old) is the language of Malory; and what poet whose mind ran on such themes could avoid drinking deep at the vessel held to him by Edmund Spenser? Mr. Morris has yielded himself fully to the influence of these writers. They were kin to him, for there is no mistaking his deep, sweet, full poetic note, and yet, we repeat, he could not get away from his modern environment. This story of his is not really a fairy tale at all; it is a three-decker, a novel such as was popular the day before yesterday, conceived in Victorian London, and only dressed in ancient or imitation antique wrappings.

An easy transposition will make our meaning clear. Suppose Evilshaw (the great wood near which the heroine was born) to be the New Forest, or the Forest of Dean, or Epping Forest, and the witch of the story the ordinary kidnapping gipsy of fiction. That surely is trodden ground to the novel-reader: a stolen child grows to be a woodland beauty, and escapes, meets the hero, passes through a series of complications, and eventually marries him and is happy ever after. We think at once of Cinderella, of Perdita, of the beggar's daughter, of Beauty, and the heroines of Perrault. Stated thus, the theme is that of innumerable fairy tales. But—and here is the flaw—the fairy tale, move through what adventures it may, should be simple, direct, elemental, as being written for children or primitives. Our author's hero, the Black Squire, before meeting Birdalone, was already in love with a woman who is wisdom and goodness incarnate—"a tall, slim woman with the grace of the willow-bough in the wind; with dark plenteous hair and grey hawk-eyes; her skin privet-white, with but little red in her cheeks." Now, you cannot play fast and loose with the well-established conventions of childhood. By the rules of the game Atræ should have been a false witch, wrinkled and ugly and vicious; and the Black Squire ought to have been under a stern father's compulsion to marry her. Not by any means that we assert Arthur's change to have been impossible; but to bring it about, the author must be modern and psychological. Mr. Morris did not think himself the one and could not be the other, and hence this abortion—a three-volume novel in the environment of a fairy tale. We cannot think he would have failed so if he had been content to draw on his youthful memories of Walthamstow and Epping Forest, and, without trying to imitate old legend and fable, had pictured nature and life as he knew them.

Moreover, what we say of the essence of the story applies equally well to the language. It is our firm belief that his love of archaisms was, consciously or not, a mere affectation. He is not at home in the language, and probably could not have spoken it with the ease, for instance, with which Lord Tennyson spoke the dialect of "The Northern Farmer." The proof is that Mr. Morris is never at his very best except when he forgets all about the jargon. Take, for example, the following brief description of the phantom ship sent forth by the witches; it is the high-water mark of the prose in which he most excelled:

"So we sat us down, but huge shrieking laughter rose up unblended from the keel of the evil thing, and then they let her go down the wind, and she went her way with flashing of arms, and streaming of banners and pennons, and blowing of horns, and the sun was setting over the wide water."

Not one obsolete word, and yet how strong and vivid the picture! We shall instance a passage of another kind, if only for the pleasure of transcribing the exquisite couplet with which it ends:

"I have seen once and again, on the wall of the Minorites' Church at Greenford, a fair picture of the Blessed, and they walking in the meads of Paradise, clad in like raiment men and women; their heads flower-crowned, their feet naked in the harmless blossomed grass; hand in hand they walk, with all wrath passed for ever, all desire changed into loving-kindness, all the anguish of forgiveness forgotten. And underneath the picture it is writ:

"Bitter winter, burning summer, never more shall waste and wear;
Blossom of the rose undying brings undying springtide there."

It is a bitter reflection that he who could write such English devoted himself to producing a harsh, ugly jargon, with archaisms lying in it like paving-stones flung by some mischievous boy into a field of clover. We cannot help adding to these extracts a third, the charm of the Sending Boat. It is but a simple verse in simple words, and yet only a true poet could have given it the pleasant unanalysable spell-like beauty, the like of which is scarce to be found save it be in Scott's "Thrice to the Holly Brake," or the more exquisite line in Vivian and Merlin:

"the charm
Of woven paces and of waving hands."

This is the spell that moves the Sending Boat:

"The red raven-wine now
Hast thou drunk, stern and bow;
Then wake and awake,
And the wonted way take!
The way of the Wender forth over the flood,
For the will of the Sender is blent with the blood."

These purple patches, alas! are too infrequent. When Mr. Morris began this story, the flush of inception appears to have carried him over the difficulties. He gets an old-world charm into the narrative. It seems to transport the reader away to some quiet garden of the early centuries, where hushed is every sound but the bee's hum, the ripple of water, the breathing of a gentle wind, the song of wild birds. The first few chapters are like the opening of a poet's dream, and the unfamiliar words are so appropriately used, we notice them only to regret that they have fallen into disuse. But soon the enthusiasm wanes. He begins to choose his vocables no longer for their beauty and expressiveness, but only for their age. The style passes into mannerism, and the more his ardour pales the more freely does he sprinkle his "belikes" and "herseemeds," his "wottest," and "hight" and "dight," as the old historical romancer used his "zounds" and "Gramercy for thy kindness, gentle squire," and "By'r Lady, noble host"; and the most sympathetic reader sees it is no true revival of the old, but only a stucco imitation. He is amused, not angry, when the fagged writer slips in a commonplace locution of the day, such as that Birdalone was a "Past master of the bow," or that the witch who ruled the isle of Increase Unsought was "a proud, stupid lump of flesh." Such phrases are plentiful, and are appropriate language for the three-decker, which in essence this is. But fancy their effect in the prose of Malory!

And if the whole truth must be told, Mr. William Morris is not here, and never was, a supreme artist, else the faults we have dwelt upon had been impossible. He had many artistic impulses, instincts, and gifts, so that he is able to produce passages, whole chapters indeed, of captivating and exquisite beauty. But this does not in itself constitute greatness. A work of art must be not only beautiful in its several parts, but these must join and fit in so as to make a beautiful and harmonious whole. To gather stones and wood and mortar together, to carve little images, and stain glass with pictures is not to build a cathedral, and it is the builder's power that most is lacking here. The reader is forced to conclude either that the author did not take sufficient trouble with his work or that his brain was lacking in architectural power; that he could not, as a great artist must, form his scheme or design and resolutely carry it out. There is a certain austerity, an almost frigid orderliness in work of the highest stamp. Mr. Morris had none of it. We learn from internal evidence that he began with some vague allegorical intention, but it seems to have evaporated as he proceeded; had this result been due to a triumph of narrative instinct it would have been gladly forgiven. Unfortunately the story is very weak, almost slovenly in construction. If Mr. Morris did not primarily intend the witch's motive in stealing Birdalone to assist in the development, then a great deal of elaborate hinting and finger-pointing is worse than wasted. The witch, like a great deal else, passes out of his control, and is got rid of by the novelist's most hackneyed artifice. She is found dead. Of the bits that are exquisitely carved, but not fitted in, we may instance the Isle of Queens, where a feasting company were, so to speak, frozen to death at table:

"For the boards endlong and athwart were set, and thereat were sitting a many folk, and their hands were reached out to knife and to dish and to platter and cup; but such a hush there was within that the song of the garden birds without sounded to her as loud as they were the voices of the children of Adam."

The striking and impressive idea is worked out at great length, and is so beautiful in itself that a greater artist would not have been content till he had found for it a natural place in his structure. Mr. Morris has not done this. Here, as elsewhere, his imagination suggested a fine picture, and he let his imagination run riot without taking the trouble to blend and harmonise. In addition, his taste is by no means impeccable; were it so, he could not endure the sham-antique of his own style, or his lapses into the colloquial. It follows that his choice of incident suffers from the same cause, but sham-classical would better describe it than sham-antique.

Thus the Water of the Wondrous Isles, though containing much that is good to read, much that tastes cool and refreshing in these hurried days, lacks the perfection of taste, the completeness of design, the artistic austerity needed for work of the highest rank.

THE MYSTERY OF SLEEP.

Sleep: Its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and Psychology. From the Russian of Marie de Manacéine. (Walter Scott.)

In adding this volume to their "Contemporary Science Series," the publishers would have done well to preface it with a few words of explanation as to the personality of the author, and the date and other circumstances of the publication of the original work of which this is a translation. One is never quite at one's ease in discussing matters with an entire stranger, and such, to the great majority of English readers, Marie de Manacéine must be. The absence of the author's credentials is, however, the less important in this instance that the work is mainly concerned with the labours of many contemporary investigators—European and American—in the field of physiology, and even a mixed collection of facts and speculations brought up to date has its value. Perhaps the most surprising fact in connexion with sleep is that despite the amount of scientific attention given to it, there is still no certainty as to its causes or the extent to which it invades the brain and nervous system. There is nothing more puzzling than that faculty possessed by many people (from 50 to 60 per cent. apparently) of being able to wake at a specified hour provided they have, so to speak, made a bargain with themselves to do so. It is over this unquestionable fact that the purely mechanical theories of sleep come to grief, since it seems to denote the existence within ourselves of some intelligent monitor who is not necessarily overcome by fatigue or disabled by an accumulation of poisonous ingredients in the blood. The degree of intensity to which our attention may be maintained during sleep is shown by the following case:

"On going to bed a man recalled that he must rise the next day at eight, at the same time forgetting that his clock was half an hour fast. In the middle of the night he awoke, and, on looking at his clock, remembered that it was half an hour fast, and that consequently he must wake not when the clock struck eight, but half an hour later. He then fell into a sound slumber until he felt himself disturbed by some unknown cause. He started up with the dread that he had awakened too late, but, looking at his clock, he saw that it pointed exactly to half-past eight. Thus, in spite of deep sleep, the sleeper's attention not only followed the course of time, but even corrected the error of the clock, the man sleeping loudly while the clock struck eight and awaking when the hand silently pointed to the half hour."

Apparently it is not by watching the clock that our internal monitor judges of the hour of night. If we might hazard a guess on the subject, it would be that the consumption of tissue in the body apprises the watchful part of the brain of the lapse of time, as the waking man is apprised of it by the falling sand in an hour glass. The striking of a clock would, therefore, have nothing to do with the subject's awakening.

Good reason exists for believing that, however stimulated, the mechanism of sleep consists in the withdrawal of blood from the brain. The more complete this withdrawal, the sounder the sleep; while dreaming appears to be due to a partial circulation of the blood through the various brain centres. Even in the soundest sleep, however, a person is within reach of the sensations of hearing, touch, smell, and even sight, although he may not be fully conscious of them, and may not awake when they are applied; but his brain in such cases, pale before, flushes and swells with the increased flow of blood, as has been observed in cases where accident has removed a portion of the skull. It has also been found that during dreams the brain will sometimes rise above the edges of the wound to an even greater extent than during the waking state. Many apparently intelligent acts can be performed in the sleeping state:

"A sleeping person changes his position whenever it becomes uncomfortable, and without waking takes an easier position. . . . Soldiers have been known to sleep on horseback during a night march. Infantry often fall asleep during forced marches, walking at a regulated pace and holding their guns without waking. The frequency of talking during sleep is a familiar fact, and various observers have pointed out that some persons will answer questions and obey commands during sleep."

In view of these and similar facts, the author concludes that "not only are the sensory nerves awake and active during sleep, but also the brain centres corresponding to those nerves." This seems a little hasty. Common experience tells us that the senses are certainly not as active in the sleeping as in the waking state; they are more or less deadened, and more or less slow in responding to a stimulus. The safest definition to give of sleep is that it is "an arrest of consciousness." Many complicated physical and mental processes, as the author shows, can be carried on in sleep. We do not awake until they come within the sphere of consciousness. What, then, is "consciousness"? This is the great problem of psychology, upon which this volume throws no light. The most luminous remark on the subject has been made by Taine, who compares the human mind to a darkened stage, with consciousness as a focus of light thrown upon the centre of it; much goes on in the dark, but only of such action as comes within the circle of light are we conscious. It seems probable that consciousness is a function of the frontal lobes of the brain, where the co-ordination of sensory and motor impressions is believed to be carried on. So essential is sleep to the working of both mind and body that to be deprived of it is even more quickly fatal than to be deprived of food. In China deprivation of sleep is not only a form of torture, but a method of capital punishment. In some experiments as to the effects of sleeplessness, here recorded, it was found that there was danger to life at the end of ninety hours, though, of course, the power of endurance differs greatly in individuals. On the other hand, the author asserts that excess of sleep is also injurious, tending to a weakening of consciousness and of "character." The tendency to "half-awakening," instead of being thoroughly aroused to consciousness at once, is likewise pronounced to be bad. It denotes some sluggishness of the brain and ought to be combated.

In certain of her views the author flies in the face of conventional beliefs. No idea is more prevalent among parents than that it is well for children to accustom themselves to fixed hours for going to bed and rising:

"My observations of children," she writes, "have shown me that those who through childhood are made to observe strictly regular hours in going to sleep and in getting up are more prone to fall into the half-awakening state on being roused at an unusual hour than others not accustomed to such absolute regularity. In my dealings with the young I have found it useful to change the hour of their going to sleep and getting up at different seasons of the year, making them get up much earlier in spring and summer than in autumn and winter."

People who object to early rising will be grateful to Marie de Manacéine for what she has to say on the subject: "Those persons who get up very early in the autumn and winter never look fresh and cheerful, but, on the contrary, sour and fatigued." The rule she lays down is, that it is best to get up as soon as the morning is bright, but not before, light having an important effect upon the mental condition in which we begin the day.

Dreaming naturally receives a considerable share of the author's attention, and the general purport of the numerous facts and observations collected under this head is to confirm the existing theory that dreams result from a partial stimulation of the various brain centres, both sensory and motor. The stimulation may come either from outside, through one of the channels of sense, or from some internal and automatic action of the brain. Dreams, in short, are the product of the same processes which produce hallucinations and even insanity, the difference in the latter case being that the co-ordinating faculty which enables the patient to control his present sensations by past experiences is weakened or non-existent. It is this faculty which enables us to reassure ourselves that what we have seen or felt in sleeping is "only a dream." The madman, on the other hand, lives in a world of his own. To him all his morbid sensations are real; he has no power of discriminating between the actual and the imaginary. Dreams have their chief origin in those regions of the brain which are not active during the waking state. In the human subject, therefore, they are mainly visual and auditory, with associated sensations of touch—dreams depending upon smell and taste being comparatively rare. It is probable, however, that in a dog, whose olfactory nerves are more highly developed and more active than ours, dreams are largely concerned with the sense of smell. The dreams of musicians are mostly auditory. Into the dreams of persons born blind and deaf, sight and hearing do not enter, but those faculties, if lost only in youth, are capable of being revived in dreaming, as the man who has lost a leg sometimes suffers from cramps in the missing toes.

Some of the facts here recorded—and the book is, at least, a valuable collection of facts—have an important bearing upon the psychological problem of memory. A recent writer has attempted to show that there is a special centre for memory in the brain. But a great deal of evidence goes to show that the older idea is the truer one, namely, that memory is a faint stimulation of the same group of nerve-cells as those originally concerned in a real sensation. For instance, it is enough to think of a movement in order to induce a twitching in the corresponding muscular group; and cold water strikes colder if we have just immediately previous been thinking of heat, and less cold if beforehand we have revived in the mind impressions of cold.

A CAROLINE COURTIER.

Life and Letters of Mr. Endymion Porter. By Dorothea Townshend. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

ENDYMION PORTER is probably best known by the memorials of him in Herrick's verse, and by the magnificent Vandyke preserved at Madrid. A poet and the friend of poets, an enthusiastic devotee of art, he stands out even more conspicuously among the mob of Caroline courtiers by the dignities and decencies of his life. The deeper problems of the day, perhaps, stirred him little. Rightly or wrongly, he was content, without much questioning, to take the side of his king, and like Falkland, and like Godolphin, to illustrate a mistaken cause. Mrs. Townshend's memoir, now before us, is throughout a careful and a pleasant bit of work; but she has enriched it with a real treasure-trove by printing for the first time a number of letters from Porter to his wife Olivia. Mistress Olivia Porter was daughter of Sir

John Boteler, and niece of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham. The marriage took place about 1620, and, as Porter was attached to Buckingham's suite, he was obliged to leave his young wife much alone, while he followed the perpetual progresses of James, or accompanied his patron and Prince Charles in their would-be romantic expedition to Spain. It is to this period that the majority of the letters discovered by Mrs. Townshend belong. They are the letters of an ardent lover, genuinely grieved in absence, genuinely chafing at the hard fate which held him from home and mistress. "Dear Heart," he writes—

"Dear Heart" . . . whenever I go to sleep I send my soul to watch with thee, and whatsoever waking I can see with mine eyes, I look on it through thee; for if it be a beauty it is none to me, my thoughts do so prefer thine, that I see nothing but thy goodness and love, which makes me happier in thee than the world can with all the rest of the pleasures it can afford."

And again:

"Know that I live like a dying man, and as one that cannot live long without you. My eyes grow weary in looking upon anything, as wanting that rest they take in the company and sight of thine; nor can I take pleasure in sports, for there is none that seems not a monster to my understanding where my Olive is wanting."

There is the lover's exaggeration in this and the poet's, but the sentiment rings true, nevertheless. That Endymion's "sweet Olive" returned his affection we may suppose: one of D'Avenant's prettiest love-poems is cast in the form of a lyric dialogue between the pair. But she was a young wife, alone in a country house, and her husband followed a court of ill-repute. Moreover, she had a quick, proud temper, as her portrait, with its firm chin and the suspicion of a scowl, may show. One need not, then, be surprised that her love was soon ready to feel itself slighted. Even during the courtship she had tried her wooer's patience. "I make no doubt," he wrote—

"I make no doubt that your careless disposition will not let you perish with any want of my lines, for I think that my presence affords you no more joy than my love obliges you to, nor my absence no more sorrow than you not caring whether you ever see me again, however you profess otherwise; and this I gather by the salutation I had in the Park from you when I was last there."

And now he is soon on his defence:

"Thy care in sending to me shows me how truly thou lovest me, and thy fear of my inconstancy argues no want of affection, but of faith, which, if any good works of mine may strengthen, I will come on my knees to see thee, and put out my eyes, rather than look with an unchaste desire upon any creature whilst I breathe."

Particularly obnoxious to Olivia are the three pretty Miss Crofts of Saxham, and to Saxham Endymion must promise not to go. Then some traveller brings back a silly bit of gossip from Spain.

"Since my coming to Spain, I have received four letters from you, and the two first with so much kindness in them, as I thought my love rewarded; but the two last are so full of mistrusts and falsehoods, that I rather fear you have changed your affection than that you have any sure grounds for what you accuse me of in them, for as I hope for mercy at God's hands I neither kist nor touched any woman since I left you; and for the innkeeper's daughter at Boulogne, I was so far from kissing her, that as I hope to be saved I cannot remember that I saw any such woman."

Endymion is a gentle lover, and, let us trust, conscious of innocence; but his temper is not proof against constant railing. He tries chaff: "For your suspicion of my having any other creature here, I know you writ that bit to make up the letter"; but it is useless. Moreover, he has to caution his wife about some indiscreet behaviour of her own, and bid her "remember what it is to be good." So presently his letters show symptoms of growing irritation, and at last he breaks out:

"I did not think to have received such a swaggering letter from you, but I see you can do anything now, for time hath worn out the kindest part of your love, which I did hope would have lasted longer."

How did the little drama work itself out? We cannot say, for here, unfortunately, the letters cease. But probably the troubles blew over, for in the reign of Charles progresses went out of fashion, and Endymion was able to spend more time at home with wife and children. For some years he led a pleasant life, much in the company of poets and painters. Herrick celebrates his hospitable dwelling.

"When to thy porch I come and ravished see
The state of poets there attending thee,
Those bards and I all in a chorus sing
We are thy prophets, Porter, thou our King."

But with the Civil War sterner days began. Porter's second son, Charles, a lad of promise, fell at Newburn in the first engagement with the Scots. An even more tragic fate awaited his daughter Marie. She was with the Queen at Burlington in 1643 when the Parliament ships bombarded the house where the royal party lay. Here is a contemporary narrative:

"Aluises scho gettis up out of her naiked bed, in her night walycot, bair feet and bair leg, with her maids of honour (whair of one throu plain fier went strait mad, being ane nobleman's dochter) she gettis saiffie out of the hous while the schipps bring down the roof of her lodging."

It seems likely that this maid of honour who went distraught—not really a nobleman's daughter—was poor Marie Porter, for her burial in York Minster is recorded a few days later. Endymion's eldest son, George Porter, would be little credit to any man. He passed for "the best company and worst officer that ever served the King"; and at the rout of Lamport Goring met him flying from the field. He tickled the humour, however, of Charles II., and waxed fat at the court of that merry monarch.

TRAVEL BOOKS.*

In a survey of recent works of travel, let us start, as near home as possible, and accompany Dr. Hans Gadow and his wife on their tour in Northern Spain. Mr. Gadow has all the equipment of a really desirable travelling companion. As befits a Fellow of the Royal Society, he is a trained and accurate observer. He is a botanist and a naturalist, a philologist and an archaeologist, with a taste for ethnology, and is a well-read man to boot. Moreover, he has thoroughly explored the North-western Provinces of Spain, from Bilbao, say, to Corunna, with the result that he gives his reader good brass-headed facts, and not the somewhat callow impressions of the hasty tourist to which we are frequently treated. For, though the district of which he treats lies at our doors, it is to most English travellers an unknown territory off its beaten path. The discomforts of travelling in Spain probably account for this. The Spanish inns are notoriously unsophisticated, to put it mildly, and the means of locomotion is more primitive than luxurious. However, Mr. Gadow was intent on leaving the beaten path and was prepared to rough it. His wife seems to be a lady of an equally enterprising disposition. Hence they disencumbered themselves of all superfluous impedimenta and traversed the heart of the interior, which seems to be in much the same stage of civilisation and culture to-day as it was when that ingenious gentleman Don Quixote of La Mancha set out upon his travels. But if romantic and beautiful scenery, the intimate acquaintance with a sturdy and simple peasantry, and the discovery of architectural and antiquarian prizes can compensate for the discomforts of the Middle Ages, they certainly had their reward. It was very rarely that Mr. Gadow explored any remote little hill village without lighting on some relics which recalled some episode or some phase in the past history of Spain. It is to be regretted that the author did not spare a little more space to the history and ethnology of the Basque provinces, as the scattered references he makes to the unique nationality of their inhabitants are most interesting. The chapters on the flora and fauna of Northern Spain are more of scientific than of general interest, and that on the history of Spain is just a little bald; but they give the proper finish to a most comprehensive and practical volume.

The antithesis of Mr. Gadow's work is a little volume which to a large extent deals with the same subject—Idylls of Spain: Varnished Pictures of Travel in the Peninsula (Elkin Mathews), by Mr.

*In Northern Spain. By Dr. Hans Gadow. (A. & C. Black.)

Idylls of Spain. By R. Thirlmere. (Elkin Mathews.)

In Joyful Russia. By John A. Logan, Jr. (C. A. Pearson & Co.)

Three Years in Western China. By J. Hosie, F.R.G.S. (Philip & Son.)

The Gist of Japan. By W. Peery. (Oliphant, Anderson & Ferrier.)

Journal of a Tour through the United States. By Lady Howard of Glossop. (Sampson Low & Co.)

Thirlmere. An oil-painting is varnished and so, for all we know, is a chromo-lithograph. We can therefore leave Mr. Thirlmere's varnish—which seems, by the way, to be first cousin to veneer—out of the question, and come to the pictures. They strike the unprejudiced observer as rather sloppy samples of the art of decorating and colouring in words. In one or two instances the author is moderately happy in his descriptions of scenery, but for the main there is too little of the picture and too much of Mr. Thirlmere in the book. We are always being told of his gastronomic sufferings, of what he thought as he lay basking on his back in the sun; and precious poor stuff it was too.

From Spain to Russia is a far cry; but Mr. John A. Logan, junior, invites us to accompany him thither. As the realm of the Tsar has usually been painted in the most sombre of colours, it is rather refreshing to find an author who gives us a brighter picture. And if they be not gaudy, Mr. Logan's sketches are certainly bright. Our author went to Moscow to attend the coronation of the Tsar, was civilly entreated by every one he met, interviewed the inevitable Li Hung Chang, and altogether enjoyed a very festive time. He saw Russia in holiday garb, and it is only to be expected that his impressions should be rose-coloured. Indeed, he betrays an overwhelming inclination to gush, notably when talking of the Imperial family. His tour to Finland furnishes pleasant reading, though it is difficult not to be haunted with an idea that his fulsome descriptions of a happy and contented peasantry, under the best of all possible governments, are the outcome of superficial observation and hasty generalisation. On the whole, however, the author's account of his tour is pleasant reading, for his style is light and his intentions are amiable.

Having once got into our stride, we shall have no difficulty in skipping across from St. Petersburg to Western China—there is the new Trans-Siberian railway to help us on—where Mr. Hosie, F.R.G.S., of the Consular Service, is waiting to conduct us over the scene of his labours. It is difficult to speak too highly of the value of his work on Three Years in Western China (Philip & Son). It is one of those books which help to open up fresh fields for British commerce and British enterprise. Mr. Hosie, in his official capacity as Her Majesty's consul at Chung-king, has had exceptional facilities for obtaining information, and has made three expeditions to the inland provinces of Western China to test its trustworthiness. And wherever he has gone, whatever he has seen, one main idea, the furtherance of our commercial interests, has always been in his mind. When his junk is swept down some dangerous rapid of the upper Yang-tze, the thought of the navigability of the river to a new centre at I-chang is, one feels, uppermost in his thoughts. He has a keen appreciation for beautiful scenery, but he conscientiously endeavours to concentrate all his powers of observation on the local conditions of sericulture. He admires the glowing colours of the poppy-fields, but his thoughts are with the opium trade. It is the strenuous work and stern sense of duty of such men as Mr. Hosie which have given to our country her commercial supremacy. He was therefore certainly well-advised to rescue his work from dusty files of Blue-books, and to publish it in a pleasantly written narrative form. The second edition of this work has been enlarged and brought up to date. Several new chapters have been added. Of these, the few pages he devotes to the "insect white wax" give a fascinating account of quaint industry, which reads more like a fairy story than anything else; while his chapter on the non-Chinese races of Western China—peoples which, it appears, are hastening towards extinction—together with his excursus on, and glossary of, the Phö language, is probably a mine of unique value to the ethnologist and philologist. But for all its scientific interest, the book is written in a bright and cheery style, and contains purple patches of descriptive writing and of personal adventure which help the general reader over the more arid regions of purely commercial or scientific interest.

Being in China, it is only in the eternal fitness of things that our glance should turn towards the Celestial's younger rival, the gentle Japanese. In The Gist of Japan, Mr. Peery, of the American Mission, is only too anxious to act as our cicerone. Mr. Peery, of course, gives us his "gist" from one point of view only—that of the American missionary. This is not the place to discuss the ethics of proselytising missionary work among a cultured and civilised people; it is sufficient to say that the reverend gentleman's sneer at the Japanese mythology seems, all things considered, to be distinctly out of place. The American mission is, it appears, not making any very great headway, and Mr. Peery's views on a people, which, after a few decades of Western influence, has won its way into the front rank of civilised nations, may be coloured by that fact. Apart from the odium theologicum which seems to pervade this work, it is a comprehensive and lucid account of the chief natural features and national characteristics of Japan.

After a short stay with Mr. Peery, it is refreshing to meet with such a bright, enthusiastic, and lively travelling companion as Lady Howard of Glossop is in her Journal of a Tour through the United States, Canada, and Mexico (Sampson Low). Lady Howard travelled through some of the sublimest scenery the world has to show, and she enjoyed it thoroughly. She falls into raptures over the stupendous scenery of Niagara, becomes positively ecstatic over the beauties of the Yo Semite Valley, and can hardly find words to express her admiration for Florida. Indeed, it would be interesting to reckon on how many occasions during her tour Lady Howard chanced upon the most beautiful scenery she "ever saw." But her enthusiasm and her genuine delight in the beauties of nature is never allowed to run to seed in gush; her descriptions are so picturesque and convincing that you are constrained to agree with her. A word of commendation, too, must be given to the book's numerous illustrations.

BOYS' BOOKS.*

HOW THEY STRIKE A CONTEMPORARY.

Cicero House: Oct. 25, 1897.

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—

It was ripping of you to send me all those books, and I cut football practice to read them, and said I had a sore heel so as not to be run in for Tuesday's run. I had not time to read them all in the time, but I had Hunted through Fiji underneath the desk at prep. the first evening I got them. It's jolly. It begins with convicts in the Antipodes that are flogging a black boy, and Hawkins comes out and stops them. "'Liar!' he foamed, 'I saw you,' and he drove his fist full into the convict's face." The convicts run away on ship and collar Hawkins, Jerry, and some more chaps. Adams swore a broad oath. I didn't get any further, but I looked ahead. They went to Fiji and there were cannibals, and they got through a passage under the river.

The Rover's Quest is all right, and Sam Port is a good sort, but he does not know the difference between "diseased" and "deceased." Noel went out fishing in a boat and was caught in a storm, and he was taken on board a ship that was bound for Melbourne. The mate was a cruel chap, and roared always, and said "blue blazes."

**Lords of the World.* By the Rev. Alfred Church. (Blackie & Son.)

With Moore at Corunna. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie & Son.)

A March on London. By G. A. Henty. (Blackie & Son.)

King Olaf's Kinsman. By C. W. Whistler. (Blackie & Son.)

A Stout English Bowman. By Edgar Pickering. (Blackie & Son.)

Paris at Bay. By Herbert Hayens. (Blackie & Son.)

Just Forty Winks. By Hamish Hendry. (Blackie & Son.)

Adventures in Toyland. By Edith King Hall. (Blackie & Son.)

Hunted through Fiji. By Reginald Horsley. (W. & R. Chambers.)

The Rover's Quest. By Hugh St. Leger. (W. & R. Chambers.)

The Boys of Huntingley. By K. M. Eady and R. Eady. (Andrew Melrose.)

In the Swing of the Sea. By J. Macdonald Oxley. (J. Nisbet & Co.)

Half-Text History. By Ascott R. Hope. (A. & C. Black.)

Bushy. By Cynthia M. Westover. (Chapman & Hall.)

Afloat with Nelson. By Charles H. Eden. (Macqueen.)

In Lincoln Green. By E. Gilliat. (Seeley & Co.)

The Camp of Refuge. By G. Laurence Gomme. (A. Constable & Co.)

Stories for Children. By Mrs. Molesworth. (Garne, Darton & Co.)

There was a mutiny, and the ship was wrecked, and the survivors got on a desert island, and were taken off by the brig Rover, that was looking for some captive ladies. It gets fine after that, only there is some kissing at the end which is rot. Afloat with Nelson is about two boys who go and fight under Nelson. They are midshipmen. The battle of Trafalgar is splendid. There is a beastly traitor called Croucher, who is their enemy, and he gets shot in the cross-trees when he was shooting at Nelson. You will not mind me saying beastly, because you said I was to write what I thought. I think stories about schools are generally rather rot. Fenwick, in The Boys of Huntingley, is a sap, and thinks it is bad form to use a crib—isn't that rot? Chisholm isn't half a bad sort, but he bets on horses. Fenwick goes to look for a ghost and falls into the river, and Chisholm saves him, and they are friends again because they had quarrelled. There is a story about Robin Hood that is called Lincoln Green. There is a jolly fight with quarterstaff at the beginning, and Robin Hood comes to see the bishop, and then he says "Pax Vobiscum" and rescues some women. There is Little John and Maid Marian and lots more, but I cannot tell you any more because I had to go and fag. I have not read much of Lords of the World, but it looks all about the ancient Greeks and Romans, and how the Romans destroyed Carthage and Corinth; and there are notes that tell you how much a talent was in English money, just like the Latin Primer.

I wish chaps could get into the army now like Terence got into the army in With Moore at Corunna, instead of having to pass a beastly exam. Terence got a colonel and a doctor to sign their names, and then he went off to the Peninsula, and did a lot of fighting with Sir John Moore, who was killed, and not a drum was heard, not a funeral note. This looks like a good book, and there are no girls in it for what I can see. I was not very keen on Half-Text History, from the look of it, because the first few sentences are just what my form master would say. But I daresay some people would like it. I don't like masters when they try to get at you. If I was a master I could get at the fellows so easy. I have not read much of The Camp of Refuge yet, but I lent it to Jimmy Almond, who is an awful young sap, and he says it is all about Hereward the Wake, and there is an introduction that tells you all about who Hereward was and dates and things. My house tutor saw it, and said he would like to see it. I shall let him, because he is not a bad sort, except about verses.

A March on London is about Wat Tyler and how he got up a rebellion. Tyler is stabbed by the Lord Mayor, and the king says: "Wat the Tyler was a traitor. I am your king, and I will be your captain and guide." Really the king said, "I will be your leader." There's a lot of jolly fighting after that in Flanders. Paris at Bay is a good story. It begins with a lot of fighting between the French and Prussians, and Geoffrey Townsend has to go back to Paris and tell Marie Devine that her brother is killed. Then there is a lot more fighting in Paris. There are some good pictures too. King Olaf's Kinsman tells you all about the invasion of the Danes into England. King Olaf moored his ships to London Bridge, and the men began rowing and pulled the bridge down with all the Danes on it and killed them. A Stout English Bowman is written by the last of the Godwiths; he gets taken prisoner by Lord Farnham, and he and Sir Bevis le Blonde are tied on horses, but they leap a wide stream and escape. That is as far as I got, but there are robbers and a tournament, and they go to France and have a fight with wolves. In the Swing of the Sea is about whalers and missionaries. Ralph goes to sea, and he nearly falls down when he climbs to the maintop, and has to go up through the lubber's hole; but he sticks to it, and does it properly next time. He meets a lot of heathens, and when he comes back he means to be a missionary and convert them. Some of the books you sent me are for girls, and I have not read much of them. Bushy is about a little girl who lived in America and had adventures with snakes and Indians. Stories for Children is for kids; they are about the Lord's Prayer. So is Adventures in Toyland, and it has some nice coloured pictures. I hope I have said what you want to know about the books.—

Yours truly,

SKIPPER MINOR.

WILLIAM WILBERFORCE.

Private Papers of William Wilberforce. Collected and Edited, with a Preface, by A. M. Wilberforce. With Portraits. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THIS is a somewhat miscellaneous collection of letters from and to a very remarkable man. On the main achievement of Wilberforce's life, the suppression of European slave-trading, they throw no fresh light—though it is notable to find that the last letter in the book, written in 1832, the year of his death, is concerned with this life-long interest. A large part of the book, and perhaps the most characteristic part, consists of "Home Letters," chiefly addressed to his son Samuel, afterwards the Bishop. They are full of that sincere yet almost demonstrative piety which existed in Wilberforce along with qualities more generally popular; and the union explains how one who carried Puritanism to the point of disapproving of ordinary theatre-going and dances was, nevertheless, the close friend of Pitt and Dundas—neither of them precisians. Saints are not, as a rule, good company, and that Wilberforce would seem to have been. Perhaps the best of these letters is one in which he urges his son at Oxford to keep down his standard of living for the sake of the many sons of poor clergy who may easily be tempted or almost forced into extravagance. "Gentleness and cheerfulness, these are the perfect virtues—these come before all morality," says Stevenson in one of his essays; and Wilberforce's morality, uncompromising as it was, was always gentle, cheerful, and considerate.

The most interesting part, however, of the book are the letters from his contemporaries. There is a long series from Pitt, which ought, in our opinion, to have been interspersed with brief elucidating notes referring concisely to the events of which Pitt happened to write. There is also a lengthy sketch by Wilberforce of his friend's character; perhaps the most significant thing in it is the remark that whereas at Eton and Oxford Fox "happened to have become connected with a circle of men eminent for talents and classical proficiency"—or, as we should rather say, drew them naturally to himself—"Pitt's associates were by no means men of the same degree of brilliancy as the former set, nor did they in the same degree live in the circle of fashion and there diffuse their own opinions." But Pitt's curious and unattractive character does not seem to be sketched here in any unmistakable lineaments. The truth about him would seem to be that he was a man of iron will who succeeded in imposing on the world a fancy picture of himself. Sir William Napier tells a story of how he and the two young Stanhopes were one day staying in Pitt's house and, if you please, bearing-fighting with the great man. The young subalterns—boys of seventeen or thereabouts—were trying to put the statesman on his back and black his face with a burnt cork. In the middle of the diversion a message came up that two of the Cabinet were waiting. Pitt continued the struggle for ten minutes or so till the blacking became imminent, then ordered the boys into their chairs and allowed the ministers to be shown-up, meanwhile stiffening himself into an attitude of perfect rigidity. Lords Liverpool and Castlereagh were shown in, and, to young Napier's great amazement, they literally cringed like dogs, while Pitt, with his nose in the air and his eyes on the ceiling, scarcely returned their salutation. Some faint suggestion of this double nature one finds in Wilberforce, but only the faintest.

Very funny is Lord Calthorpe's letter to Wilberforce, who had warned him against the rash experiment of spending a Sunday with the too fascinating Duchess of Gordon.

"O how subtle are the devices of the enemy of our peace and how weak our natural means of defence," writes this young gentleman, who had been beguiled into staying over a second Sunday; "the shadow of delusion that for a moment imposed upon me was the idea of having some serious conversation with the Duchess when we were likely to be almost alone, and which company has hitherto given me but little occasion for. . . . I am just awakened to see the extent of my folly, conceit, and wilful depravity by finding that we are to have no chance of having my imagination gratified, as Sir Wm. Scott has written word that he is coming to-morrow; and the delight with which the Duchess welcomed the intelligence has opened my eyes to my sottishness in thinking her sincere in a wish that I might pass a Sunday with her. . . . She fell asleep on Sunday while I was reading to her part of Leighton's commentary, and awoke with lively expressions of admiration at what she had not heard."

Sweet youth; let us hope Sir William Scott made better use of his opportunities.

The turn-out of the book deserves a word of praise: print, paper, and binding are excellent, and the pictures well reproduced.

BRIEFER MENTION.

If I Were God. By Richard Le Gallienne. (James Bowden.)

THIS work with the unfortunate title is a very harmless production. It will offend nobody, and may please some gentle souls who are conscious of timid questionings on religious matters. It is a very small book, and the interest is of the slightest. A man and a girl are sitting upon "a summit of the Alps" (the expression is as vague and non-committal as the book itself), and there they indulge in a mild conversation. She has the "early Christian look," and he is a terrible fellow, with doubts about the beneficence of God and the use of suffering. But like other terrible fellows, a belief in the goodness of the Creator seems much more possible when His advocate is a pretty girl with red lips and the "early Christian look." The effect upon the man of this colloquy on "a summit of the Alps" is that "his own people, the lovers of Beauty, were no longer quite the same for him." And "sometimes he—almost—prayed." So he was not such a very terrible fellow after all.

Baboo Jabberjee, B.A. By F. Anstey. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

TO readers of Punch this book will be familiar as the collected "Jottings and Tittlings" of Hurry Bungsho Jabberjee, a whilom contributor to that paper. At the time the Jottings were appearing it was an open secret that Mr. Anstey was the author: certainly, when the moment came for turning the baboo to humorous account, he was the man to do it. Mr. Jabberjee is a delight. His simplicity, masquerading as knowledge of the world, as "doggiishness," is managed as only Mr. Anstey could manage it, while his derangement of epithets is sometimes so comic as almost to imperil the pre-eminence of Mrs. Malaprop herself. The book is to be read gently, we ought to say, a little at a time. Here is a short extract bearing upon the eternal bicycle question. It is funny as it stands, but the humour of the work permeates each page—that is to say, the whole is funnier than the part. Mr. Jabberjee has hired a bicycle for his first ride:

"But, on receiving the bicycle from his hands, I at once perceived myself under a total impossibility of achieving its ascent—for no sooner had I protruded one leg over the saddle than the foremost wheel averted itself, and the entire machine bit the dust, which afforded lively and infinite entertainment to my feminine companions.

"I, however, reproached the bunniah for furnishing a worn-out, effete affair that was not in working order or a going concern, but he, by assuring me that it was all right, cajoled me into trying it once more.

"So, divesting myself of my fur-lined overcoat, which I commanded a hobbardhyoy of the sweeper class to hold, I again mounted upon the saddle, while the proprietor of the machine sustained it in a position of rectitude, and then, supporting me by the superfluity of my pantaloons, he propelled me from the rear, counselling me to press my feet vigorously upon the paddles. But it all proved as the labour of Sisyphus, for the seat was of sadly insufficient dimensions and adamantine hardness, and whenever the bicycle-man released his hold, I instantaneously endured the total upset."

Mr. Partridge's illustrations are among the best that we have seen from his pencil.

Admirals All. By Henry Newbolt. (Elkin Mathews.)

THE ranks of Mr. Mathew's shilling poets are very sensibly strengthened by the addition of Mr. Newbolt. New poets are not often so vigorous and straightforward as he is. Mr. Newbolt's subject is, like Mr. Kipling's, the sea; but the two writers are quite distinct. Mr. Newbolt is concerned solely with the battles the waves have seen and the great warriors of those battles; with Drake and Nelson, with Hawke and Rodney, with Duncan and Blake. He brings to his task a fine enthusiasm for heroism, a gift of swinging metre, some power of using words, and the true English point of view. Thus, from the title-poem:

"Splinters were flying above, below,
When Nelson sailed the Sound:
'Mark you, I wouldn't be elsewhere now,'
Said he, 'for a thousand pound!'
The Admiral's signal bade him fly,
But he wickedly wagged his head:
He clapped the glass to his sightless eye,
And 'I'm damned if I see it!' he said."

And here is the last stanza of what is, we think, the best poem—"Drake's Drum":

"Drake lies in his hammock till the great
Armadas come,
(Capten, art tha sleepin' there below?)
Slung atween the round shot, listenin' for the drum,
Au' dreamin' all the time o' Plymouth Hoe?
Call him on the deep sea, call him up the Sound,
Call him when ye sail to meet the foe;
Where the old trader's plyin' an' the old flag
flyin',
They shall find him ware an' wakin', as they found him long ago!"

We give Mr. Newbolt welcome.

Cuba in War Time. By Richard Harding Davis. (Heinemann.)

THE sufferings of the Cubans in their effort to lift the yoke of Spain have hardly met with the attention in this country that might have been expected. Probably ignorance has been the cause of this, and ignorance may readily be dispelled by Mr. Harding Davis's vividly descriptive pages. Mr. Harding Davis was a correspondent for the New York Journal in Cuba, and one of the few independent observers who were able to see for themselves what the situation really was. He has his firm convictions as to the duty of his own country in the crisis, but he seems to have kept a clear head and to have observed with impartiality. With the social and political bearings of the book we cannot occupy ourselves at length here. If Mr. Harding Davis's story is accurate, and we have no reason to doubt it, then between degenerate Spanish Christian in the West and degenerate Ottoman Infidel in the East there is not much to choose. As for the manner of presentment, Mr. Harding Davis writes journalism, but it is journalism of the very best—clear, terse, informing, always effective, never blatant. His description, reticent and sympathetic, of the martyrdom of Rodriguez—one of those things that make the blood boil—is surely a masterpiece in this little art.

France under Louis XV. By James Breck Perkins. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

HONOUR among historians is due to the man who is willing to devote himself to the patient investigation of an unattractive period. Such, we fear, must be accounted the reign of Louis Quinze. Midway between the splendours of Louis Quatorze and the sombre tragedies of the Revolution, it is a weary space, the witness of an empire crumbling in defeat abroad and decay at home, with a Pompadour and a Du Barry frisking on the ruins. The earlier years of Louis Quinze Mr. Perkins has already dealt with in his France Under the Regency: the present volumes carry the story from the death of Orleans, in 1723, to the sordid end, in 1774. It is not an epoch-making work, but a useful, straightforward chronicle none the less. Mr. Perkins does not aim at brilliancy of literary style, but he writes crisply, with an occasional venture of epigram that lightens a somewhat tedious road. The value of the book would have been increased by a preliminary chapter setting forth and criticising the authorities made use of, and indicating the new information contributed and the new points of view taken in the book itself.

Roddy Owen: a Memoir. By Mrs. Bovill and G. R. Askwith. (John Murray.)

THIS little account of the life of a daring rider and gallant soldier is interesting to those who knew him rather than to the public at large. At the time of his death, the late Major Owen was just beginning to prove himself a capable and wise officer. He was then forty. The bulk of his career up to that point had not been serious. Mrs. Bovill and Mr. Askwith have small skill as biographers. In leaving Major Owen's own despatches and diaries to tell the story of his life, they have not done his memory so great a service as was within the power of writers with more grasp of character and more faculty for presenting it. The portraits and maps add to the interest of a volume which we cannot consider to have been wanted.

Magic. Edited by Albert A. Hopkins. (Sampson Low.)

FOR a wet day in a country house we can recommend the huge work entitled Magic, which lies before us. It consists of 556 copious pages, most of which are illustrated, their object being to describe and elucidate most of the tricks and illusions with which conjurors bewilder their audiences. What the conjurors will say to the book we dare not conjecture. For example, here is a series of diagrams laying bare the stages of the vanishing lady trick, which took all London to the Egyptian Hall a few years ago. The veil is not, however, lifted from Messrs. Maskelyne & Cook's cabinet mystery in Wil, the Witch and the Watchman—that annual problem.

The Gold Fields of Klondike. By John W. Leonard. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

AN Englishman intending to journey to Klondike next spring cannot do better than digest Mr. Leonard's work during the winter. So shall he learn the story of the first Klondike strike, the best means of reaching the fields, the proper equipment, and how he must proceed. If he intends to take his wife he will find some useful information bearing on that point. A book like this need not be a miracle of grace; still we do not know why Mr. Leonard's work is printed on papers of two shades of white. This rests with the American publishers, from whom the volume has been supplied to Mr. T. Fisher Unwin, its English agent.

Brer Mortal. By Ben Marlas. (T. Fisher Unwin.)

WE have read this book with the utmost alertness, hoping ever for our reward; but it never came, except possibly with the relaxation of tension when the last page was turned. Brer Mortal is a satirical allegory of the progress of man, told somewhat in the manner of Uncle Remus. That it is witty we do not doubt, but truly it is not intelligible; and it is far too long. The best idea we can give of the book is to say that it is The Pilgrim's Progress translated into new language by a student of Swedenborg, Schopenhauer, Comte, and American humour. The illustrations, by Mr. Mark Zangwill, are hideous.

NEW EDITIONS.

Makers of Modern Rome. By Mrs. Oliphant. (Macmillan & Co.)

IT will be long before Mrs. Oliphant's name ceases to figure in lists of new editions. Such a work as this is for the lover of picturesque history, not for the scholar; but even the scholar will not waste his time if he sometimes looks at history through the medium of a mind like Mrs. Oliphant's. Mr. Henry P. Riviere's and Mr. Joseph Pennell's illustrations are satisfactory, but the contrast of wood-engravings and pen-drawings is not an elegance. The book first appeared in 1895.

The Divine Comedy of Dante. Carey's Translation. (New York: Crowell & Co.)

AS an influence to lead readers once again to neglected poets the camera will soon be supreme. From America comes a reprint of Carey's translation of Dante's Divine Comedy, with many photographs—the Tombs of the Scaligers, Fiesole, Mantua, Dante's Tomb, and such scenes. A popular introduction by Prof. Oscar Kuhns is prefixed.

The Newcomes. By W. M. Thackeray. (Service & Paton.)

MESSRS. SERVICE & PATON are not—as Mr. Punch might remark—doing a very patent service to literature by issuing a novel like The Newcomes in the style in which it comes to hand in their half-crown “Illustrated English Library.” The paper is thin, and the type is thick and trying. The illustrations, too, by Miss Chris Hammond, are not worthy of that clever artist. They are not Thackerayan; they capture none of the atmosphere of the story; and in the picture facing p. 48 Colonel Newcome is made to look like Jingle.

The Bride of Lammermoor. By Sir Walter Scott. (Service & Paton.)

THIS is issued in the same library. Here a better result is obtained, simply because the length of the book permits of shorter lines and leaded type. Mr. Fred. Pegram contributes sixteen illustrations. They are clever enough; but the thin effect of a pen drawing on very white paper ill suits a Waverley romance.

The Lady of the Lake. Edited by Andrew Lang. (Service & Paton.)

MR. ANDREW LANG supplies one of his clear, succinct, and very readable prefaces, and Mr. C. E. Brock, an illustrator whose previous work, we believe, has been in the main humorous, contributes drawings which have both spirit and intelligence. Scott's own introduction and notes complete the volume.

The Ordeal of Richard Feverel. By George Meredith. (A. Constable & Co.)

THIS is the first volume of the new popular edition of Mr. Meredith's novels. The text is that of the édition de luxe which has been appearing at intervals during the past year, with certain alterations by the author. The present popular edition is well printed on good paper, bound in red cloth, and it includes a picture of “The Old Weir.”

Undine. By De la Motte Fouqué. Illustrated by Rosie M. M. Pitman. (Macmillan & Co.)

THE illustrations to De la Motte Fouqué's story, Undine, which accompany this translation just issued by Messrs. Macmillan are strangely unequal. Sometimes the artist displays a very promising combination of imagination and force, as in the drawings on pp. 179 and 189, but in other places she has failed completely. To make pictures is not necessarily to illustrate a book.

Reminiscences of a Huntsman. By Sir Herbert Maxwell. (Edward Arnold.)

SIR HERBERT MAXWELL prefixes a brief mention of the late Grantley Berkeley to this reprint of that sportsman's Reminiscences of a Huntsman. New drawings by the Punch artist, Mr. G. H. Jalland, are also added to the original coloured plates by Leech. Forty-three years have passed since the book appeared.

Guide to Bath and Bristol. (Black.)

IN former editions Bath was linked with Cheltenham, but Messrs. Black now include it in the Bristol and Clifton volume, thus making the area covered by the book more compact and geographically appropriate.

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

EIGHTEEN volumes of fiction only have been published during the past week—quite a fall. Mrs. F. A. Steel has given us another collection of her Indian tales, but there is not much else of particular moment to chronicle. Short stories and sketches in the guise of novels, and historical romances that derive from Dumas, are still abundant.

IN THE PERMANENT WAY.

BY MRS. F. A. STEEL.

Eighteen short stories about India, in the style that Mrs. Steel and Another have made familiar. The title-story comes second in the collection. It tells of a Holy Man who chose the railway track as the scene of his meditations, and of the result of his persistence. (W. Heinemann. 306 pp. 6s.)

THE LAUGHTER OF PETERKIN.

BY FIONA MACLEOD.

A retelling of four old tales of the Celtic wonderland. Fiona Macleod is the apostle of what is known as the "Celtic Glamour." To this volume she is good enough to append some pages of notes, by the help of which Cockneys and country gentlemen will stumble less often as they read. (Constable & Co. 288 pp. 6s.)

THE TREE OF LIFE.

BY NETTA SYRETT.

A novel of Revolt, very feminine, bright and pointed. It is the story of a girl, whose young life was grey and suppressed. She breaks her chains, and almost finishes her husband. (John Lane. 387 pp. 6s.)

OVER THE HILLS.

BY MARY FINDLATER.

Here we have a woman's penetration, a style neat and sure, and for material the daily life of people whose existence seems probable. The heroine is forty when we meet her, and marries an unpromising Scottish minister—a widower to boot—in the second chapter. "Fate," we read, "had long ago written against her the sentence of unimportance":

"None shall ask thee what thou doest,
Or care a rush for what thou knowest,
Or listen when thou repliest,
Or remember where thou liest,
Or how thy supper is sodden."

With this quotation Miss Findlater proceeds to make Jane Anne Jerminham interesting, and we will stake much on her success. It is fair to add that the reader will not want for younger society as he proceeds. Miss Findlater is a sister of J. H. Findlater, the author of The Green Graves of Balgownie. (Methuen & Co. 297 pp. 6s.)

PEPITA OF THE PAGODA.

BY TIGHE HOPKINS.

Mr. Tighe Hopkins here returns to the light and airy manner of Lady Bonnie's Experiment. The new story is an agreeable mixture of comedy and farce, with a touch of mystery added. Among the characters are the beautiful Pepita herself, Toby, a precocious infant, and a fruity and full-flavoured Irishman. "Jolly" is the word that best describes the little book. (J. W. Arrowsmith. 208 pp. 1s.)

THE HAPPY EXILE.

BY H. D. LOWRY.

Twenty-one sketches—slight, graceful, sad and civil—the fugitive humour of a man who lives in London, but whose heart is in the West-country. Many have appeared in various publications.

Mr. Lowry's bibliography grows apace: Wreckers and Methodists, Women's Tragedies, A Man of Moods, Make-Believe are already to his account. (John Lane. 200 pp. 6s.)

THE FATE OF WOMAN.

BY FRANCIS SHORT.

The story of a woman married to a man who appeals to only a part of her nature. How Mrs. Paul Browne fares is the story. The author has cleverness, but such an expression as "the rather scraggy charms of the rector's youngest daughter," which occurs early in the book, warns the reader of vulgarities ahead. (John Macqueen. 275 pp. 3s. 6d.)

NICCOLINA NICCOLINI. BY THE AUTHOR OF "MADEMOISELLE MORI."

Married women and widows seem to be the favourite heroines this week. Here we have a young Englishwoman in her first widowhood. She is in Italy, whither she had gone with her young Italian husband. The author knows Italy well, and we have old Italian towns described as a painter would see them; while the growing up of little Lina, and her betrothal, supply the thread of a pretty and placid story. (Gardner, Darton & Co. 310 pp. 6s.)

VALENTINE.

BY CURTIS YORKE.

Valentine is seven years old in the first chapter, and her story is told almost year by year—her romps, her pets, and her loves. Her nurse, Hannah, supplies a kind of Greek chorus. "Well, well, well, it's way we all must go, sooner or later," she exclaims when Valentine tells her of her engagement; "and I'm thankful, at least, that it's not that rhyming gentleman." (Jarrold & Sons. 304 pp. 6s.)

THE NE'ER-DO-WEEL.

BY ANNIE S. SWAN.

When we find Donald Orde running away from school, and generally misbehaving, we know that Mrs. Annie Swan means to do well by the youth. He will be good and noble later on. And he is, and he has a house at Prince's Gate, and his movements are recorded in the Society papers, and he is "blessed above the common." (Hutchinson & Co. 347 pp.)

FOR THE LIFE OF OTHERS.

BY G. CARDELLA.

Obviously a novel with a purpose. The struggle for life, we read in a quotation which is made the motto of this story, is "an instrument of perfection." We are inclined to think that the struggle to read these four hundred closely printed pages may be an instrument of perfection, but we fear we should decline the discipline. Yet the scene is Devonshire, and the fortunes of the Garnsworthies and the Hannafords—farmers these—will allure some. (Swan Sonnenschein. 409 pp. 6s.)

HERNANI THE JEW.

BY A. N. HOMER.

The author's name might lead us to expect an epic; but this is a romance. A story of the Polish struggle for freedom, with love and politics interwoven. (Sampson Low. 339 pp. 6s.)

AT MIDNIGHT.

BY ADA CAMBRIDGE.

Six quiet stories, gently sentimental. (Ward, Lock & Co. 305 pp. 3s. 6d.)

JOHN MARMADUKE.

BY SAMUEL HARDEN CHURCH.

Sub-title: "A Romance of the English Invasion of Ireland in 1649." Extract from preface: "After the publication of the book Oliver Cromwell: a History, some three years ago, it occurred to me that a further elucidation of that matter might be effected by means of an historical romance." The first person singular is employed. There are a few excellent pictures. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. 328 pp. 6s.)

THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA.

BY ANNETTE L. NOBLE.

This is the mixture of love, small talk, and travel which Americans do so well—Miss Kate Douglas Wiggin, for example, in A Cathedral Courtship. There is plenty of minor humour, such as this epitaph on a dog:

"Though duly from my hand he took
His pittance every night,
He did it with a jealous look,
And, when he could, would bite."

The guide-book part refers to Egypt. (G. P. Putnam's Sons. 316 pp.)

THE WROTHAMS OF WROTHAM COURT.

BY F. H. FRESHFIELD.

A love-story of the seventeenth century, with a solitary horseman entering London. This is Rupert Wrotham, and it is pleasant to find that his first care on arriving in town is to seek out Mr. Dryden. The pictures of London which form the background of the story have been carefully done, and there is a strong Quaker element in the story. (Cassell & Co. 376 pp.)

THE CLASH OF ARMS.

BY J. BLOUNDELLE-BURTON.

Many books written just now might bear this title. Mr. Bloundelle-Burton is the author of The Hispaniola Plate, and other good stories of adventure, and here he is again on his own ground. The scene is Old France, at the time when that country resembled a vast fencing-school. It is a tale of intrigue and plot, check and counter-check, long rides, fair women, and brave men. The late Lord Randolph Churchill, who just laughed at double-barrelled names, would enjoy the dedication; for Mr. Bloundelle-Burton offers his book to Mr. Penderel-Brothurst. (Methuen & Co. 318 pp. 6s.)

FOR HIS COUNTRY'S SAKE.

BY L. M. P. BLACK.

There is a sub-title of some length, too—"Or, Escalade: A British Prince at the Court of Trajan." Also, there are views of Ancient Rome, and a few pictures by Miss Dorothea Drew; but it is not Mr. Gladstone's grand-child. The author says, on page 158, "We will not attempt the oft-told tale of a Roman banquet"; but many other and less interesting phases of Roman life are attempted, and Christianity is upheld in a manner which will not be unfamiliar to the frequenters of Mr. Wilson Barrett's theatre. (Horace Cox. 332 pp.)

REVIEWS.

THE NEW KIPLING.

Captains Courageous. By Rudyard Kipling.
(Macmillan & Co.)

Mr. Kipling is flashing a new facet upon us. He has become the archimandrite of technicalities—the inspired journalist who must see things from the inside. It is now his passion to grasp details, to understand the work of men's hands, what they think, and how they act, in the making of things. In the guise of stories he writes Blue-books upon locomotives and upon ships, giving life to the inanimate parts, and firm characterisation to the workmen that control them.

Those, and they number many, who are following his career closely, read these technical stories diligently, with astonishment at his grasp of detail, and admiration of his power of marshalling and vivifying commonplace incidents. But to say that they are generally attractive is to say the thing that is not. These technical stories need more attention than the ordinary reader of fiction cares to give. There are parts of Captains Courageous where the mind wearies, and the interest flags: nevertheless it is well to persevere, and those who do so will be rewarded. For the workmanship is fine—very fine—if somewhat overlaid.

Mr. Kipling may have had either of two motives in his mind when he set himself to write this story. Let there be a boy, he may have said to himself, the son of an American multi-millionaire, a spoilt boy, a nuisance and a cub, but with the right stuff under the crust of his caddishness. I will plump him down among men, honest sailor-men, God-fearing, white all through, who cure whims with hard work, and affectation with a rope-end. Through this ordeal he shall pass. And he shall come out a man. Or Mr. Kipling may have mused: I'll tell of polyglot folk—hairy Newfoundlanders, howling Portuguese, reckless Galway men—who fish in the deep sea on the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, even to the hoarse-roaring Virgin. I'll give a six months' intinerary of their buxom schooners, dancing dories, and the hardy crews that wrest a living from the seas—for I know. I know it all—the dories that are sunk by the swift liners, and the auction held over the drowned sailor's kit. And to make the yarn palatable I'll drift into it the story of a boy, and the sea shall be his master, and water and men together shall buffet and lick the cub into something good. But the real yarn shall be the story of the men who go down to the deep sea to catch cod.

If the evolution of Harvey Cheyne, the multi-millionaire's boy, was the motive of the story it might have been told in a quarter the length. Captains Courageous need have been no longer than Love-o'-Women. Again and again Mr. Kipling delays the march of the story to rollick with extraneous incidents—pages of them—profoundly well done, but not vital. More than two-thirds of the book are allocated to cod, to the voyaging of the We're Here of Gloucester, Mass., and the doings of her crew. Cod-fishing may not be your hobby, but you must grip the paragraphs line by line if you would learn what technical-romantic writing is at its best. Even then some passages are ill to digest. This, for instance:

"Hi!" shouted Manuel, stooping to the fish, and bringing one up, with a finger under its gill and a finger in its eye. He laid it on the edge of the pen, the knife-blade glimmered with a sound of tearing, and the fish, slit from throat to vent, with a nick on either side of the neck, dropped at Long Jack's feet. . . . The cod's liver dropped in the basket. Another wrench and scoop sent the head and offal flying, and the empty fish slid across to Uncle Salters, who snorted fiercely. There was another sound of tearing, the backbone flew over the bulwarks, and the fish, headless, gutted, and open, splashed in the tub."

A landsman is quite at sea with a description like the following, except, perhaps, the last two lines:

"She was running before the wind, yawing frightfully, her staysail let down to act as a sort of extra foresail—'scandalised,' they call it—and her foreboom geyed out over the side. Her bowsprit cocked up like an old-fashioned frigate's; her jib-boom had been fished and spliced and nailed and clamped beyond further repair; and as she hove herself forward, and sat down on her broad tail, she looked for all the world like a blouzy, frouzy, bad old woman sneering at a decent girl."

But an illuminative picture like this is not easily forgotten:

"At the first glance a silvery-white ghost rose bolt upright from the oily water and sighed a weird, whistling sigh. Harvey started back with a shout; but Dan only laughed. 'Grampus,' said he. 'Beggin' fer fish-heads. They up-eeend that way when they're hungry. Breath on him like the doleful toms, hain't he?' A horrible stench of decayed fish filled the air, as the pillar of oil sank, and the water boiled oily."

Mr. Kipling glosses nothing in his descriptions. He has a genius for fixing the dramatic moment in a scene. How convincing, how photographic is this whale!—

"The deep fizzed like freshly opened soda-water, and cod, men, and whales together flung in upon the luckless bait. Harvey was nearly knocked overboard by the handle of Dan's net. But in all the wild tumult he noticed, and never forgot, the wicked, set little eye—something like a circus elephant's eye—of a whale that drove along almost level with the water, and, so he said, winked at him."

As the reader ploughs his way through the book, it becomes plainer that Mr. Kipling is more interested in the We're Here and the fortunes of her crew than in the growth of the millionaire's boy. So great is the author's delight to find himself aboard the schooner, so avid is he to spread himself over technicalities, that he has somewhat neglected to express the nuances that must have gone to produce the change in Harvey Cheyne. The miracle works all too quickly. Some plain speaking, a blow on the nose, the wave of a knotted rope—and he is a man.

Finally the We're Here returns to Gloucester, Mass., and Harvey telegraphs his safety to his parents who are away out at "their raw new palace" in San Diego. Old Cheyne bids him meet them in Boston; and the next step in the story, both for the reader and in the hoary convention of fiction, is that meeting between parents and an only son, who was lost and is found. But Mr. Kipling delays the meeting for several pages to describe the millionaire's race against time across America. It's amazingly well done, but is it art—the art of fiction? Still, we would not have missed that journey for a world of pedestrian novels properly constructed on the best French model. Thus does genius override law by making another law, convincing us of the legality of the act, and demonstrating its fitness with a triumphant example. Mr. Kipling finds naught common on the earth. He takes the common things by choice, and they become distinguished—even cod.

* * * *

Jerome. By Mary E. Wilkins.
(Harper & Brothers.)

At first Miss Wilkins was content to set her talents at short stories. Most readers know these minute comedies and tragedies of New England rural life: quaint character sketches; studies in the conflict between pride and poverty. If New Englanders were not often poor and proud Miss Wilkins's occupation would have ceased to be. With perfect understanding and sympathy her indomitable spinsters and heroic matrons, her contriving old men and wistful invalids, are set forth in tiny tales—in "An Unwilling Guest" and "Gentian," in "Life Everlasting" and "A Taste of Honey," to mention not necessarily the best, but those that come most readily to mind; with perfect understanding and sympathy, and also with tender perceptive humour, lying very nigh to tears, and a power of selection to which too much praise could hardly be given. To do, in her contracted space, what Miss Wilkins has occasionally done, borders on the miraculous. In a matter of some ten pages she can pack (yet with no sense of packing) all the essentials and the decorative graces too, not only the fable but also atmosphere—the sweet New England air, the old-world flowers, the manner of habitation, and a score of intimate things about the actors in the little drama which a lesser artist would have left out.

After these stories came a detective tale—"The Long Arm"—which, though of small merit in itself, was probably of great value to its author as a lesson in construction; and then longer stories—Jane Field, Madelon, Pembroke,—which dealt on a larger plane with a more intricate play of emotions, and carried Miss Wilkins's strength steadily forward. And now in Jerome, just published, we have a still longer story, containing signs of a still riper power. One would not say that Miss Wilkins is yet at her best, but beyond question Jerome is a masterly achievement.

Jerome is a study of a proud New England boy upon whom, suddenly, at the age of twelve, the responsibility falls of becoming the head of the family. His father, at best a weak but kindly peasant, disappears, presumably having committed suicide in a fit of hopelessness; his mother is a cripple; his sister Elmira is younger than himself. In a moment Jerome, always a thoughtful, solitary boy, finds that the whole burden of maintaining the house intact and defying charity rests upon himself. He braces himself to the fight—and wins. The story of the long battle is the story of the book.

Herein is matter ready to Miss Wilkins's hand. A struggle to pay off a mortgage is to her what intrigue and the clash of steel were to Dumas. On the unfolding and development of Jerome's character, on his pride and scorn, on his invincible honesty and simplicity, she has lavished the resources of her knowledge and art. Here is a fine passage, descriptive of the boy's spirit. He has been refused more work at closing shoes by the mean-spirited storekeeper of the valley, and returns homeward at his wits' end:

"Now and then he stood still and looked up at the sky, where the great white moon rode through the hosts of the stars. Without analysing his thoughts, the boy felt the utter irresponsiveness of all glory and all heights. Searching shafts of moonlight and starlight and frostlight seemed glancing off this one little soul in the freezing solitude of creation, wherein each is largely to himself alone. What was it to the moon and all those shining swarms of stars, and that far star-dust in the milky way, whether he, Jerome Edwards, had shoes to close or not? Whether he and his mother starved or not, they would shine just the same. The triviality, even ludicrousness, of the sorrow of man, as compared with eternal things, was over the boy. He was maddened at the sting, and, despite of his own littleness in the face of that greatness, suddenly a wild impulse of rebellion that was almost blasphemy seized him. He clinched a puny fist at a great star. 'Wish I could make you stop shinin',' he cried out in a loud, fierce voice. 'Wish I could do somethin'!'"

The story of what he does do is deeply interesting, and must be found so even by those who are not attracted by the kind of people of whom Miss Wilkins writes; for the book has a substantial groundwork of plot, although its strength lies in characterisation. Miss Wilkins has the admirable practice of accounting for everyone as she goes along. To each new character, however small a part they play, her readers are with perfect courtesy introduced. We are on intimate terms at once; we know them, and the story is in consequence so much the more interesting and more vital. Squire Merritt's sister, Miss Camilla, is of all the subsidiary characters the most charming. Miss Wilkins paints her in elaborate full-length. Here is an exquisite passage:

"The East Room door had been left ajar. Presently a soft whisper of silk could be heard afar off; but before that even, a delicate breath of lavender came floating into the room. Many sweet and subtly individual odours seemed to dwell in this old house, preceding the mortal inhabitants through the doors, and lingering behind them in rooms where they had stayed."

After the lavender sweetness came the whisper of silk flounces, growing louder and louder; but there was no sound of footsteps, for Aunt Camilla moved only with the odour and rustle of a flower."

Camilla Merritt was far from young, being much older than her brother, Lucina's father; but she was old as a poem or an angel might be, with the lovely meaning of her still uppermost and most evident. Camilla in her youth had been of a rare and delicate beauty, which had given her fame throughout the countryside, and she held the best of it still, as one holds jewels in a worn sashet, and as a poem written in obsolete language contains still its first grace of thought. Camilla's soft and slender body had none of those stiff, distorted lines which come from resistance to the forced attitudes of life. Her body and her soul had been amenable to all discipline. She had leaned sweetly against her crosses, instead of straining away from them with fierce cramps and agonies of resistance. In every motion she had the freedom of utter yielding which surpasses the freedom of action."

Finally, we would say that it seems to us that Americans should be very proud of Miss Wilkins. Her modesty and retiring nature, coupled with the humble characters of whom she writes, may have withheld from her countrymen a full appreciation of her great and singular merits; but it seems to us that in this quiet New England lady America possesses a novelist of lowly life whose subtle comprehension of the elemental passions is not surpassed by any living writer, and one who serves her art with a loving and patient fidelity not to be overpraised.

* * * *

The Beetle: a Mystery. By Richard Marsh.
(Skeffington & Son.)

"The surprising narration of Richard Holt," as it is called in this story, and the various developments which follow from his experiences, make up a very ingenious book of horrors, on which Mr. Richard Marsh is to be congratulated. Mr. Marsh has a lurid imagination, and has put together a narrative which should make the flesh of even the least susceptible reader creep. The Beetle, the scarabæus sacer, is the badge or emblem of the worshippers of Isis, whose priestesses, apparently, are able to transform themselves, in moments of danger, into scarabæi when they wish to hide themselves from their enemies or to make their way into places which they would be unable to enter in human form. The particular priestess of Isis whose misdeeds are the subject of this story is a sufficiently repulsive person. Here is Richard Holt's description of her:

"I could not at once decide if it was a man or a woman. Indeed, at first I doubted if it was anything human. . . . There was not a hair upon his face or head, but, to make up for it, the skin, which was a saffron yellow, was an amazing mass of wrinkles. The cranium—and, indeed, the whole skull—was so small as to be disagreeably suggestive of something animal. The nose, on the other hand, was abnormally large; so extravagant were its dimensions and so peculiar its shape, it resembled the beak of some bird of prey. A characteristic of the face—and an uncomfortable one!—was that, practically, it stopped short at the mouth. The mouth, with its blubber lips, came immediately underneath the nose; and chin, to all intents and purposes, there was none. This deformity—for the absence of chin amounted to that—it was which gave to the face the appearance of something not human—that, and the eyes. For so marked a feature of the man were his eyes that, ere long, it seemed to me that he was nothing but eyes."

Mr. Marsh succeeds in producing that sensation of horror in his readers which is a prime necessity in a story of this kind.

BLACKIE & SON'S NEW ILLUSTRATED STORY BOOKS

By G. A. HENTY.

WITH FREDERICK the GREAT: a Tale of the Seven Years' War. With 12 Page Illustrations by WAL PAGET, and Maps.
Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

WITH MOORE at CORUNNA. With 12 Page
Illustrations by WAL PAGET. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

A MARCH on LONDON: being a Story of Wat
Tyler's Insurrection. With 8 Page Illustrations by W. H. MARGETSON. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

By A. J. CHURCH.

LORDS of the WORLD: a
Tale of the Fall of Carthage and Corinth. With 12 Page Illustrations by RALPH PEACOCK. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

By HERBERT HAYENS.

PARIS at BAY: a Story of the Siege and the Commune. With 8 Page Illustrations by STANLEY L.
WOOD. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

By GORDON STABLES.

THE NAVAL CADET: a
Story of Adventure on Land and Sea.
With 6 Page Illustrations by WILLIAM
RAINEY, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By EDGAR PICKERING.

A STOUT ENGLISH BOW-
MAN: being a Story of Chivalry in the Days of Henry III. With 6 Page
Illustrations by W. S. STACEY. Crown
8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

By ROBERT LEIGHTON.

THE GOLDEN GALLEON:
being a Narrative of the Adventures of Master Gilbert Oglender, and of how in the year 1591 he fought under the gallant Sir Richard Grenville in the great Sea Fight off Flores on board
Her Majesty's Ship "The Revenge."
With 8 Page Illustrations by WILLIAM
RAINEY, R.I. Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s.

By KIRK MUNROE.

WITH CROCKETT and
BOWIE: a Tale of Texas. With 8 Page
Illustrations by VICTOR PERARD.
Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 6s.

By CHARLES W. WHISTLER.

KING OLAF'S KINSMAN:
a Story of the Last Saxon Struggle against the Danes in the Days of Ironside and Unut. With 6 Page Illustrations
by W. H. MARGETSON. Crown
8vo, cloth elegant, olive edges, 4s.

FINELY ILLUSTRATED CHILDREN'S BOOKS.

RED APPLE and SILVER BELLS: a Book of Verse for Children of All Ages. By HAMISH HENDRY. Every page is decorated with charming Illustrations by ALICE B. WOODWARD, amounting in all to over
One Hundred and Fifty. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, 6s.

ADVENTURES in TOYLAND. By Edith King
HALL. With 8 Page Pictures printed in Colour, and 70 Black-and-White Illustrations throughout the Text, by ALICE B. WOODWARD. Crown 4to, decorated cloth boards, gilt edges, 6s.

JUST FORTY WINKS; or, The Droll Adventures of Davie Trot. By HAMISH HENDRY. With 70 humorous Illustrations by GERTRUDE M. BRADLEY. Square 8vo, cloth elegant, gilt edges, 6s.

BLACKIE'S HALF-CROWN SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES. Cloth elegant.
Illustrated.

A DAUGHTER of ERIN.
By VIOLET G. FINNY.

NELL'S SCHOOL DAYS.
By H. F. GETHEN.

THE LUCK of the EARD-
LEYS. By SHEILA E. BRAINE.

PICKED UP AT SEA. By
J. C. HUTCHESON. New Edition.

THE SEARCH for the
TALISMAN. By HENRY FRITH.
New Edition.

BLACKIE'S TWO-SHILLING SERIES.

NEW VOLUMES. Cloth elegant.
Illustrated.

TOMMY the ADVEN-
TUROUS. By S. E. CARTWRIGHT.

SOME OTHER CHILDREN
By H. F. GETHEN.

THAT MERRY CREW. By FLORENCE COOMBE.

SIR WILFRID'S GRAND-
SON. By GERALDINE MOCKLER.

Also NEW STORY BOOKS at 1s. 6d., 1s., 9d., and 6d.

BLACKIE & SON'S New Catalogue of Books suitable for Presentation,
School Prizes, Rewards, &c., sent post free on application.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, Old Bailey.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir

By HIS SON.
With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c.
Facsimiles of Portions of Poems.
And Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscombe Gardner, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

HUGH THOMSON'S NEW VOLUME

MANSFIELD PARK.

By JANE AUSTEN.
With 40 Illustrations by Hugh Thomson, and an Introduction by Austin Dobson.
Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, cloth elegant, 5s.
[ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.]

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD. CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily.

In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

Illustrated by Rosie M. M. Pitman.

UNDINE.

By F. DE LA MOTTE FOUQUÉ.
With 63 Illustrations, Initials, Chapter Headings, and Tailpieces by Rosie M. M. Pitman.
Extra crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

'CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS': A Story of the Grand Banks.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Illustrated by I. W. Taber.

DAILY NEWS—"As we follow the narrative we are in the very middle of the scenes he describes. We are one of that seafaring company. We are always aware of the sea and the sky, of the smell of the fish, and the thousand odours with which the ship is packed.

BY THE LATE FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE.

Second Series now ready.

THE GOLDEN TREASURY (Second Series), selected from the best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language, and Arranged with Notes by FRANCIS T. PALGRAVE, late Professor of Poetry in the University of Oxford. 2s. 6d. net. First and Second Series, gilt backs, in box, 5s. net.

FOREIGN STATESMEN SERIES—New Volumes.

Edited by Professor BURY, Trinity College, Dublin.

Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

WILLIAM the SILENT. By Frederic Harrison.

DAILY NEWS—"In a space of less than two hundred and fifty pages he produces a vivid picture of national struggle for freedom in the most critical period of modern Europe."

PHILIP II. of SPAIN. By Martin A. S. Hume.

PALL MALL GAZETTE—"A very able and comprehensive biographical sketch."

ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.

New Volume. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, antique paper, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, gilt sides, back, and edges, 5s.

NEWTON FORSTER, or THE MERCHANT SERVICE.

By Captain MARRYAT. Illustrated by E. J. Sullivan. With an Introduction by DAVID HANNAY.

AUSTRAL-ENGLISH: a Dictionary of Australasian Words,
Phrases, and Usages, with those Aboriginal-Australian and Maori Words which have become incorporated in the Language and the commoner Scientific Words that have had their origin in Australasia. By EDWARD E. MORRIS, M.A., Oxon., Professor of English, French, and German Languages and Literatures in the University of Melbourne. 8vo, 16s.

NOVEMBER NUMBER. Now ready.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE.—Price 1s.

CONTENTS.
THE DIARY of a PRIVATE SOLDIER in the PENINSULAR WAR. Edited by Lieut.-Colonel WILLOUGHBY VERNER, late Rifle Brigade.
THE MEETING of HORACE and VIRGIL. By Professor RAMSAY.
A NEW ACADEMY.
A PHILOSOPHER'S ROMANCE. By JOHN BEWICK. Chapters I.-III.
THE MURDER of the DUKE of GANDIA. By A. H. NORWAY.
TENNYSON. By STEPHEN GWYNNE.
AMERICAN DIPLOMACY.

NOW IS THE TIME to SUBSCRIBE.

A NEW VOLUME BEGINS with the NOVEMBER NUMBER of

THE CENTURY MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. 4s. each Number. Annual Subscription, 16s.

The NOVEMBER NUMBER (FIRST of a NEW VOLUME) Contains:

TENNYSON and HIS FRIENDS.
Mrs. Cameron, her Friends and her Photographs. Tennyson, Watts, Taylor, Herschel.
By V. C. SCOTT O'CONNOR.

The OPENING CHAPTERS of a NEW NOVEL by Mrs. BURTON HARRISON.

GOOD AMERICANS.

THE STORY OF CHITRAL.

The Heroic Defence for Seven Weeks by the British Garrison of Fort Chitral on the Indian Border. By CHARLES LOWE. Illustrated by R. COTTON WOODVILLE.

ANDRÉE'S FLIGHT INTO THE UNKNOWN.

Impressions and Photographs of an Eye-Witness. By JONAS STADLING.

AN INTERVIEW WITH SULTAN ABDUL HAMID.

By the Honourable A. W. TRENELL, lately United States Minister at Constantinople.
&c., &c., &c.

NEW VOLUME BEGINS with the NOVEMBER NUMBER of

THE ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE.

Illustrated. Price 1s. each Number. Annual Subscription, 12s.

Contains the OPENING CHAPTERS of TWO NEW STORIES: THE BUCCANNERS of our COAST. By F. R. STOCKTON.—WITH THE BLACK PRINCE. By W. O. STODDARD.
And numerous other Stories and Articles.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, ST. MARTIN'S STREET, LONDON, W.C.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1897.

No. 1330, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 8
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

THE DUCHESS OF TECK.

By the death of the Duchess of Teck England has lost one of the noblest and most brilliant in that small circle of really great ladies who were the pride of a former, and are the saving grace of the present, generation of English women. She was, by birth, a Princess of the Royal House, but she owned in her own nature those qualities of soul and mind which must have made her, in any station of life, distinguished, graceful, and enchanting. Whether working—as she never ceased to do—for the cause and happiness of the poor, whether fulfilling, with unstudied ease, the important duties of her high position in society, whether visiting the sick and unknown, whether laughing with her friends, whether conversing on subjects political, literary, artistic, or domestic, whether devoting herself to her family, whether labouring for the “strangers and pilgrims,” she was ever lovely for her religious character, her good sense, her wit, her generosity, and her ineffable sweetness of heart. She possessed personal beauty and dignity in a high degree, a charm of manner which no words could convey, and a dislike of affectation which was, in itself, an evidence of her own singularly pure and candid spirit. The disappearance of such an influence from the fearful drama of modern life—for the Princess Mary was the light not of a set only, but of the whole nation—is something to give rise to many emotions besides grief, and many speculations beyond this dying century.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DID Mr. Gladstone seriously hesitate to offer a coronet to Tennyson because the poet wore a wide-awake instead of a tall hat? That he did so hesitate is the gravely made statement of Tennyson's biographer, who prints the journal he kept on the Pembroke Castle, where the offer was made: “The only difficulty in Gladstone's mind was that my father might insist on wearing a wide-awake in the House of Lords.” A correspondent who called Mr. Gladstone's attention to this statement has received the following judicious reply, which we are permitted to print, in settlement of the curious point of social etiquette. “The ‘wide-awake,’” Mr. Gladstone writes, “is, I think, made to play a part more grave than history warrants. But I do not doubt there may have been some half-jesting reference to it. Costume,” Mr. Gladstone adds, “is a matter not without importance, and has given trouble to Speakers of the House of Commons.”

MR. HERBERT MORRAH, in a letter too long to print, makes a gallant attempt to persuade us that in the review of the second series of The Golden Treasury last week, our critic was hasty in his protest against the insertion of verses by Canon Walton in an anthology from which Robert Louis Stevenson, for example, is omitted. We would willingly be persuaded; but the specimens of the Canon's verse sent to us by our correspondent do not seem to rise above the level of that which we quoted last week. Indeed, they hardly seem to reach it.

THE errors in the Quarterly Review article upon minor poets, to which reference was made last week, have impelled a correspondent to make a further protest. “You have,” he writes, “mentioned one or two mistakes: with regard, for example, to Mr. ‘Walter’ Henley and to Mr. Andrew Lang, to whom the reviewer attributed lines that were really Mr. Austin Dobson's. It is easy to add another that directly concerns Mr. Austin Dobson himself. ‘He is one of four only among those now under review,’ we are told, ‘who has never employed any medium but verse; no wonder that it is so perfectly sympathetic and malleable.’ There is no need to give a list of Mr. Dobson's prose works; they are many and familiar; and to these signed volumes of his there must be added a large bulk of anonymous prose work in the shape of unsigned criticisms.”

“MR. FRANCIS THOMPSON, again,” our correspondent continues, “ought to be a poet with a grievance if he pays heed to anything so earthly as a Quarterly reviewer. Among all praises of women, sung by him or by anyone, stand out his memorable lines:

‘O, envious coveter
Of others’ grieving.’

The Quarterly reviewer remarks the novelty and the beauty of the attribute; but he wrote it down carelessly, or he did not correct a sad misprinting of what he did write, for this is what the Quarterly says: ‘His description of a high-souled woman as one “envious of other's good” is a fine phrase’—which it certainly is not. That sort of misquotation almost amounts to a major error; but one need say no more, for the man who will feel it most acutely will be the able Quarterly reviewer himself.” At the same time, it ought to be said of the article that it abounds in much shrewd and vivacious criticism. And vivacity is very scarce.

MR. SIDNEY LOW has resigned the editorship of the St. James's Gazette. He is succeeded by Mr. Hugh Chisholm, who has been assistant editor for some years. Mr. Low, we understand, is about to make a lengthy tour in India.

MR. W. D. HOWELLS, during his sojourn in Paris, has fallen into the hands of the interviewer, and the result is a budget of opinions on American literature. Mr. Howells views his country's fiction with spacious complacency. The Transatlantic realistic school satisfies him entirely. Messrs. Brander Matthews and Hamlin Garland, Miss Jewett and Miss Wilkins, seem to him to be doing excellent realism of the “Jane Austen sort.” Miss Wilkins we know and admire; but to group the other writers with her is to vitiate the criticism, and Miss Austen's name should have been omitted. American writers, Mr. Howells added, are getting to be more distinctively American—“the flowering of our modern literature is to come.”

FOR modern American poetry Mr. Howells cannot, even with all his national enthusiasm and leniency, say very much. These are bad days, he admits. At most Americans can boast some “captivating songsters.” All things considered, he continued, it is not possible for America to claim Mr. Kipling. No, it is not. Still, as some consolation for this inability, Mr. Howells added that neither could England claim him. Mr. Kipling, he explained, is a colonial product. None the less England does claim him.

MR. RUDYARD KIPLING has written a series of tales for children, to appear in St. Nicholas, which is the magazine that first printed the Jungle stories, during the forthcoming year. They are to be called “The Just-So Stories,” and will deal whimsically with animals. The first is due in the November number.

ALTHOUGH the fund for erecting a monument to Guy de Maupassant in the Parc Monceau was not too readily subscribed, the function of last Sunday went off with as much éclat as if the cost of the monument had been a slight matter. Nothing was wanting to the occasion, and the park provided a beautiful frame to the human picture. Mr. Benjamin-Constant was there, and M. Aurélien Scholl and M. Joseph Reinach, and M. Georges Ohnet and M. Zola, and M. Jules Claretie, who had paid his tribute to Maupassant in Saturday's Figaro. All the reports dwell on M. Zola's speech, and with reason, for it seems to have been pointed and yet impassioned.

"It was near this spot," he exclaimed, "that I first met Maupassant, more than a quarter of a century ago, at the house of our great and good Flaubert, in that little room in the rue Murillo, whose windows open on the greenery of this park. . . . How strange that, after more than twenty-five years, this young man, then unknown, is found here again in marble, and that I have the joy of paying homage to his immortality."

The design of the memorial is happy. Maupassant was an analyst of feminine nature, and there, beneath his bust, a Parisienne reclines at her ease, intent on one of his novels. How appropriate, and in London how impossible!

M. ZOLA's Paris is now appearing in Le Journal. Its commencement has been heralded by an affiche by Steinlen, which we can only call horrible. If this picture fairly represents Zola's delineations in his book, readers of Paris had best have strong nerves. We need not describe Steinlen's work in detail; but it represents a Montmartre tragedy, with a Montmartre mob in the background, and it suggests immeasurable villany. If the picture is an unfair gloss on the book, it is a pity it was published, or at least sent across the Channel. The story opens with a description of Paris, of which we append a hasty translation:

"One morning, towards the end of January, the Abbé Pierre Froment, who had to say mass in the Church of the Sacred Heart, at Montmartre, found himself standing at eight o'clock on the high ground in front of the church. And, before entering, he had eyes for the immense Paris that rolled away at his feet. There had been two months of terrible cold snow and ice, and Paris was immersed in a dull and chilly thaw. From the vast leaden sky fell a thick and weeping fog. The whole east of the city, where lie the quarters of work and misery, seemed submerged in reddish vapours, through which one divined the panting saw-mills and factories; while towards the west, towards the haunts of wealth and enjoyment, the breaking fog was lighting up, and was no more than a thin, still veil of mist. The round line of the horizon was scarcely to be made out; the boundless field of houses and buildings appeared as a chaos of ruins, of stagnant seas that filled up the hollows with a pale steam, above which the crests of high streets detached themselves, black as soot. A Paris of mystery, veiled in clouds, as if buried under the ashes of some catastrophe, half swallowed already in that welter of shame and suffering that its immensity was hiding."

THE new novel of the American War of Independence—Hugh Wynne, Free Quaker—which received a welcome from the hands of a reviewer last week, is not the only fiction of its author. Dr. Weir Mitchell, in the intervals of his labours as a physician of high repute, and a writer of a number of works on hygiene, has found time to serve literature to some purpose. He has written both stories and poetry. His other non-medical books are Hephzibah Guinness, Roland Blake, In War Time, Characteristics, and Far in the Forest. Hugh Wynne, which ran as a serial in the Century last year, is the most interesting and the strongest. Dr. Mitchell has earned his right to be enrolled with the honourable little company of literary doctors, in which Arbutnot, Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, and Oliver Wendell Holmes hold places of honour.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Times points out a pretty error in a work entitled A Roving Commission. The Times had reviewed the book and had quoted a passage describing Nelson's demeanour "in his cabin when, being at the time in pursuit of Villeneuve, it had been reported to him that the signal 'Enemy in sight' had been made from one of his own frigates, 'The flag-lieutenant endeavoured to explain the mistake, just as the admiral was rubbing his hands with intense satisfaction,' &c." "It does not appear to have occurred," says gently the vigilant correspondent of the Times, "either to the author of an agreeable book, or to your critic, that the fortune of war had left the great admiral with only one hand to rub!"

WE still have correspondence about the epitaph—"The world's a city full of streets." The most interesting communication is from a reader who has discovered that the first two of the four lines occur in The Two Noble Kinsmen. It appears probable, therefore, that the mural tablet in Elgin Cathedral, referred to by the Dundee Advertiser bears a very early copy of the epitaph, but not the original draft. The date on the tablet is not known to us, but the first folio of The Two Noble Kinsmen is dated 1634. The fifth scene of act i. concludes as follows:

"Third Queen.—This funeral path brings to your household's grave;
Joy seize on you again! Peace sleep with him!

Second Queen.—And this to yours.

First Queen.—Yours this way. Heaven lend A thousand differing ways to one sure end.

Third Queen.—This world's a city full of straying streets,
And death's the market-place, where each one meets."

The Third Queen's last speech would appear to be the original of the first half of the epitaph. We wonder whether the second couplet—

"If life were a thing that money could buy,
The poor could not live, and the rich would not die"— was added by an original poet, or was found elsewhere and merely joined to the first couplet; and if elsewhere, where?

MR. W. S. MAUGHAM's outspoken story of a girl's life in a small London street—Liza of Lambeth—has been so unsparingly condemned as an immoral work by certain reviewers that the publisher has submitted it to the consideration of a number of prominent preachers and religious propagandists. The opinions of Canon Barnett, Canon Scott Holland, Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Parker, Dr. Horton, Dr. Marcus Dods, and others lie before us. In the main these gentlemen are not pleased with Liza; and some deplore the book's vogue. Canon Scott Holland's criticism is worth reproducing:

"As to Liza of Lambeth, it is obviously written with vivid dramatic skill, but I own that a book of this type seems to me to convey as false an impression to those who will read it as Dodo would if it were read in the alums, and taken to represent the life of the upper classes. All the actual facts of Liza could be found in Lambeth, and so could those of Dodo in the West End, but in either case they would be taken out of all perspective, and would convey an utterly wrong impression to outsiders who cannot give them their proportion and place. Any slum in Lambeth is full of human kindness that surprises those who move about in it, and the better you know the slum the more you feel this. Those who read Liza, outsiders to her life, will only be confirmed in their despair at the brutality of the classes which it represents. They will not go behind and see the heart of goodness in the broken poor which is waiting there to be brought forward. Realism of this kind, which is, in reality, the idealisation of the worst elements in life, acts, it seems to me, as a knock-down blow to those who need to be taught not to despair, but to hope."

SEVERAL poets have found inspiration in the accounts of the charge of the Gordon Highlanders at Dargai, the most illustrious being Sir Edwin Arnold. In thirteen six-line stanzas the heroic feat was set forth in the Daily Telegraph; but Sir Edwin seems to us to have been unfortunate in his choice of metre. For descriptive purposes his chosen measure was useful, as thus:

"Then from grey hollows where they crouch
The sons of Scotland silent gather—
Wild indigo and tamarisk brush
The limbs bred in the purple heather—
The Gordon Highlanders fall in—
Pipers and all—Hell's Bridge to win."

Prose could not be more straightforward than this. In the next stanza we are entitled to a brisker movement:

"Men of the Gordon Highlanders!
Colonel Mathias loudly cries,
'The General's orders are to take,
At any needful sacrifice,
Yonder position! His we'll make it,
The Gordon Highlanders will take it!'"

This is too laboured and deliberate for the situation. In such pieces the right metre is half the battle.

MESSRS. METHUEN will publish in a few days the first volume of A Short History of the Royal Navy, from early times to 1660. The author, Mr. David Hannay, aims at giving an account not only of the fighting we have done at sea, but of the growth of the service, of the part the Navy has played in the development of the Empire, and of its inner life.

A NEW edition—the fifth—of Prof. Saintsbury's Short History of French Literature is nearly ready for publication at the Clarendon Press. The book has been thoroughly revised throughout, and the section on the nineteenth century has been practically rewritten and very much enlarged.

FRANCIS TURNER PALGRAVE.

At the age of seventy-three, Mr. Francis Turner Palgrave passed away at his house in London last Sunday morning, after a paralytic seizure of a few days' duration. A long, busy, and happy life had been his. Mr. Palgrave enjoyed his successes, and they were many; and we do not think that the contests on which he light-heartedly entered now and again in his career left him a sadder or, for that matter, a wiser man. He had strong prejudices, for some of which his old position as art-critic of the Saturday Review gave him an opportunity of expression he never lost; and he had prepossessions, of the strength of which his latest fulfilled task, the second series of The Golden Treasury, remains as a monument.

The eldest son of Sir Francis Palgrave, who adopted the name in lieu of that of Cohen, Francis Turner was sent to Charterhouse, and passed thence to Oxford, where he was scholar of Balliol, and then Fellow of Exeter. He took a First Class in Literæ Humaniores in 1847, when already he was one of Mr. Gladstone's assistant private secretaries. For five years, starting from 1850, he was Vice-Principal of the Training School at Kneller Hall, and then entered the Education Department, under Lord Granville's auspices, as examiner and assistant secretary, a post which he held for thirty years, and which left him a fair amount of leisure for his literary activities in poetry and prose. In 1854 appeared his Idylls and Songs; in 1861 came the compilation by which he has made his name a household word wherever English poetry is loved, The Golden Treasury of English poems; in 1862, the Art Catalogue of the Great Exhibition of 1862, a somewhat controversial pamphlet; in 1866, Essays on Art, in which readers of the Saturday Review recognised old friends or enemies as the case might be; in 1867, the Life of Sir Walter Scott, prefixed to the Globe edition of his poems. (Mr. Palgrave, by the way, was too much a Scottist to be willing or able to accept Stevenson as novelist or poet either!) In 1867, too, came a volume of "Hymns," which had a popularity that invited a second edition in the year following. In 1868 he issued The Five Days' Entertainments at Wentworth Grange, a book for children; and his later publications included: Landscape in Poetry from Homer to Tennyson; Amenophis, another volume of his poems; and, in the same form, Visions of England, a series of lyrics about episodes in English history. In 1887 he took his share in the poetical celebration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign. As an editor, his name is connected as well with The Children's Treasury of Lyrical Poetry, and with editions of the poems of Herrick, Keats, and Tennyson.

Edinburgh rewarded this busy man of letters with an honorary degree of LL.D., and Oxford made him her Professor of Poetry in 1885, in succession to Shairp, in anticipation of Courthope. His contribution to the Tennyson memoir was, perhaps, of all his labours of love that which pleased and moved him most. His memory for that old friend had no failure in details when already it had ceased to be authoritative on much beside. Stronger than this memory was his desire to please and to serve. A few weeks ago he began a story to a friend—he had fame as a charming talker—"I will tell you a capital story," and he broke into a happy laugh of anticipation. "Ah, it has gone from my mind," he said, and the smile passed. The story was still untold; but, whatever it was, it was a kindly one, or it would not have been Mr. Palgrave's. Old friends peopled his mind, although he was geniality itself to new ones down to the last months of his life. Less receptive in his mental impressions no doubt he was—a reservation written broad across the pages of his second series of The Golden Treasury, as alas! our own and other critics had to declare only last Saturday.

Mr. Palgrave was one of the generation of talkers. Obviously, there are some younger men who practise the first and most merely human of the arts, even in England; but these few are—though we need not point the remark too insistently by the mention of the names of the living—in few cases entirely Englishmen in the racial sense of the title. There are a certain number of younger talkers, but the mastery of conversation was with men born in the first quarter of the century. Elders, in all generations, have held the table, by reason of the deference that is paid to them, but the several generations are now, for some reasons besides this, respectively the speakers and the silent. Mr. Palgrave was at one time noted for the peculiar tact with which he suggested his own knowledge of a subject within the mind of the person he addressed, and this without any strain of courtesy. Of late years this kindly refinement was less practicable on account of a partial deafness which caused Mr. Palgrave's conversation to be more independent of his interlocutors. There was less exchange, and they became his mere audience, and a less variable audience, and less stimulative to variety in himself. But this slight disability never condemned him to the dulness of silence. He had a most interesting past to draw from whenever he momentarily lost touch with the present, and of that past Alfred Tennyson was perhaps the central figure. He was just such a friend to the Laureate's memory as though Tennyson had not been dead but living, and not only living but a young man, and Mr. Palgrave a much younger man admiring him. The later poems, the latest of that great muse—Silent Voices, even—were to his mind reverend work. He deliberately judged them to be equal to the lyrics of 1842 and 1854; nay, he believed Tennyson to have increased in the power of poetry up to the day of his death. Of the past Mr. Palgrave had no stories to tell that touched on a weakness; the usual anecdotes—not unkindly but slightly ironical—that were told, not printed, of the conspicuous recluse of Faringford and Aldworth were not told by him. He had no recollections that did not minister to the dignity of his hero and friend. But this unalterable kindness was his principal characteristic; and to those who made his acquaintance late it was the most manifest of all his qualities.

THE LONDON OF THE WRITERS.

II.—THE "SPECTATOR'S" LONDON.

THE sturdy survival of Addison and Steele's Spectator in its complete form must be held to rest more and more upon those innumerable touches in the essays which restore to us the London of Queen Anne. For although the Coverley essays, and others, live by their beauty, something is needed to explain the fact that two publishing houses are now issuing the entire six hundred and thirty-five essays to a generation which rather despises the essay as a literary form.

Now of all flavours in the Spectator, the flavour of London is the most pervading. The mere name of a street lends charm to many a page, as when Steele begins a discourse on the duties of wives: "I was the other day driving in a Hack through Gerard-street." As often it is some curious detail that quickens the attention, as when Addison, in an essay on Tragedy, remarks that the stage battles at the Haymarket Theatre could be heard, sometimes, at Charing Cross. A loving superfluity of place-names has become the salt of many of those moral "lucubrations," whose appearance now, with the coffee and rolls, would be far removed from our literary tastes. Our interest in Robin Bridegroom's complaint, that he and his newly made bride were awakened on the morning after their wedding by "the Thund' of a Set of Drums," is all enhanced by the punctilious dating of his letter from Birchan-lane. Sometimes the humour of a passage depends on a nice signification of locality, as in the case of the advertisement which runs: "This is to give Notice That the three Criticks who last Sunday settled the Character of my Lord Rochester and Boileau in the yard of a Coffee House in Fuller's Rents, will meet this next Sunday at the same Time and Place to finish the Merits of several Dramatick Writers: And will also make an End of the Nature of the Sublime." How important the yard in Fuller's Rents! And Jack Toper's scrupulous testimony to the character of his servant—whose steadiness was more than such a master desired—gains in the same kind when he writes: "We were coming down Essex-street one Night a little frustrated, and I was giving him the word to alarm the Watch; he had the impudence to tell me it was against the Law." Again, when Dick Steele pursues in a hackney coach the young lady, similarly conveyed, whose glances he encountered in Covent Garden, you may follow the chase through Long Acre, King-street, Newport-street, and St. Martin's-lane with all a Londoner's recognition of the route.

Hardly a characteristic of London in Addison's day is unmentioned in these intricately interesting essays. The extent of London, for instance, is indicated when the "Widow Gentlewoman," who advertises her willingness to instruct parrots and starlings in human speech, tries to recommend her house by stating that it stands in Bloomsbury-square, "commodiously situated next the Fields in a good Air." At once we have the limits of London in that quarter. Again, the whole humour of the "Projector's" letter, printed in No. 452 of the Spectator, depends on certain topographical facts. The writer proposes to regale Londoners with country news. He will collect intelligence from places so remote as ten miles from town, "or in other Words, within the Verge of the Penny-Post"; and worthy citizens "who cannot sleep with any Satisfaction, at present, for want of being informed how the world goes" shall now have tidings such as these: "Letters from Brompton advise that the Widow Bligh had received several Visits from John Mildev, which affords great matter of Speculation in those Parts. . . . By my last Advices from Knights-bridge I hear that a Horse was clapped into the Pound on the third Instant, and that he was not released when the Letters came away. . . . By a Fisherman which lately touched at Hammersmith, there is Advice from Putney, that a certain Person well-known in that Place is like to lose his Election for Church-warden; but this being Boat-news, we cannot give entire credit to it."

These pleasantries remind one that the London of the Spectator was a snug little London; a London that a man might really know, and that he could embrace, so to speak, in his affection. The careful student of the Spectator will often read its essays with a map of that London before him. Without it, he will miss so much. When Addison tells us that Sir Roger de Coverley's town lodgings were in Soho-square we know little about the matter until we see that Soho-square was on the very edge of London. Oxford-street (then the Tyburn-road) had only a south side, and this extended only as far as Bond-street. North of the road the fields stretched away to Paddington. The Tottenham-court-road ran northwards through open fields, and was called the Road to Hampstead. Bloomsbury scarcely existed; nevertheless, Red Lion-street ran up as far as Great Ormond-street. Bedford-row was being built when the Spectator was flourishing. To this day you may read the date, 1714, on some of its leaden water-spouts. Even when built, the northern end of Bedford-row long received the breezes straight from Highgate. Islington was connected with London by a country road. The City-road had not been thought of, and there were no streets north of Old-street. Shoreditch had no sooner passed St. Leonard's Church than it became the "Road to Ware," and the Whitechapel-road is mapped as the "Road to Harwich" before it has reached the site of London Hospital. Along the river the town stretched no farther than Wapping, which is twice mentioned in the Spectator. South London was a conglomeration of streets spreading fan-wise from the south end of London Bridge. Lambeth and Bayswater were dreary marshes. St. James's Park adjoined Nature; Piccadilly did not stretch its houses as far as Hyde Park Corner, at which point it became the Exeter Road. London, one is inclined to say, was just large enough and just small enough for loving literary treatment. To-day it can only be written about piecemeal; and, therefore, even M. Zola has abandoned it as a subject.

But the Spectator's pictures of London, as often as not, are deliberate. "I have sometimes employed myself," says Addison, "from Charing-Cross to the Royal-Exchange in drawing the characters of those who have passed by me." If short proof were needed that Addison was an acute observer of London life it would be found in his essays on the London Cries and the London Signs. Or the reader may turn to his description of the various quarters of the town in the Spectator, No. 403. Addison's visit to the Royal Exchange is classical. To Steele we owe the most complete picture of a London day in the whole Spectator. In No. 454 he undertook to give an account of the twenty-four metropolitan hours. He had been sleeping at Richmond, but rose at four, and took boat down to London. At once we have this river piece:

"When we first put off from Shore, we soon fall in with a Fleet of Gardeners bound for the several Market-Ports of London; and it was the most pleasing Scene imaginable to see the Carefulness with which those industrious People ply'd their Way to a certain Sale of their Goods. The Banks on each Side are as well peopled, and beautified with as agreeable Plantations, as any Spot on Earth; but the Thames itself, loaded with the Product of each Shore, added very much to the Landskip. It was very easie to observe by their Sailing, and the Countenances of the ruddy Virgins, who were Super-cargoes, the Parts of the Town to which they were bound. There was an Air in the Purveyors for Covent-Garden, who frequently converse with Morning Rakes, very unlike the seemly Sobriety of those bound for Stocks Market."

Presently our early-risen essayist lands "with Ten Sail of Apricock Boats at Strand-Bridge, after having put in at Nine-Elms and taken in Melons consigned by Mr. Cuffe of that Place to Sarah Sewell and Company, at their stall in Covent-Garden." This chatter must have gone excellently with the coffee and rolls. Later in the day, Dick makes his way Cityward, and it is noteworthy that, although fatigued already by details and adventures, he can feel the modern exultation in the size of London, and in its traffic, accumulating as the day nears its meridian.

"This Satisfaction increased as I moved towards the City; and gay Signs, well disposed Streets, magnificent publick Structures, and wealthy Shops, adorned with contented Faces, made the joy still rising, till we came into the Centre of the City, and Centre of the World of Trade, the Exchange of London."

On this note, this exclamation on the magnificence of London, and the joy of living in it, we may fitly close a survey of the London element in the Spectator. It has been said that he who would form a good style should give his days and his nights to Addison; with as much truth, perhaps with more safety, it may be said that he would know Queen Anne's London would mingle with its crowds, thread its streets, hear the cries of its hawkers and water-men, enter its coffee-houses and clubs, watch its processions, and repair on Sunday to its churches, and who would do all this in the company of keen, yet genial, observers—should fasten upon the Spectator.

EXCURSIONS IN CRITICISM.

V.—SOME PAMPHLETS.

WORTHY and commendable is the object of the Pamphlet Library, of which the first two volumes have just been issued, under the title Literary Pamphlets, and edited by Mr. Ernest Rhys. The pamphlet among our forefathers fulfilled some of the functions of the newspaper. On one hand it held kinship with the "leader"; on the other hand, with the article in the monthly review. Perhaps in the latter aspect it compares yet better with the old quarterly essay. Read the first of these two volumes and you will see that Campion's Art of English Poesie or Daniel's Defence of Ryme are Elizabethan quarterly articles, which—lacking an Edinburgh under whose flag they might sail—were forced to adventure in the freebooting guise of the pamphlet. Similarly, political warfare was not regularly organised under the banners of great newspapers; and so it burst forth in an irregular swarm of pamphlets. Statesmen like Harley and Bolingbroke were as much concerned to retain the services of great pamphleteers like Swift as Continental statesmen nowadays to maintain their official or semi-official organs in the press. And if the work reached incomparably fewer readers, it was incomparably better done. Milton was Cromwell's "able leader-writer"; the best that could be said for Whig or Tory in Queen Anne's reign has been put on immortal record by Steele or Swift.

The pamphlets in these two volumes are all of the literary class, and most of them concerned with poetry. They begin with Sidney and end with Byron. In truth, the end is very unequal to the beginning. Byron's letter to Murray (the publisher) concerning Bowles's strictures on Pope made much noise in its day, and is interesting to have; just now, especially, when Mr. Henley's edition of Byron's letters has brought Byron once more to the front. But great is the gulf between the demonic verses of the letters and this controversial epistle. Being Byron it has Byronisms which make it less dull than the bulk of controversial epistles; but few would in this day read it for pleasure. "In sincere verity," as Kent says, Byron never comes so near to being "stodgy" as when he writes about literature. Except for the name at the end of them, his literary opinions matter no more than Hobhouse's, or those of any demi-semi-literary man-about-town in the Byronic milieu. He has not an idea of argument, of grasping the point at issue and striking for it hard and often; but writes "about it, goddess, and about it," meandering off through a forest of inconclusive instances and illustrations and untenable assertions. The greater part of this production, in fact, is a debate concerning a mere illustration; which, like most illustrations, can with a little wit be turned to all points of the compass. The style is as loose as what is by courtesy called his argument; and altogether it is Byron at his unhappiest. It is companioned (an extreme contrast!) by Wordsworth's Letter on Burns, a specimen of Wordsworth in his most prosy and didactic and unanswerable mood of virtuous logic.

The style is better knit, and the argument better knit, than Byron's; but it is dull, dull and dreary. Then there is Pope's Essay on Criticism, well enough known in his collected poems; and Addison's Discourse on Ancient and Modern Learning—amiable, polished, pedantic, languid. And—first in this second volume—there is Milton's Areopagitica. Only for the reprint of this magnificent pamphlet, the volumes would be worth the buying. It is truly the apotheosis of the pamphlet, shedding a track of glory along that outworn form.

The first volume is much the richer. Its least interesting item is Swift's attack on poor Steele—The Importance of the Guardian Considered. Of course the style is there, strong, organic, wonderful, which never failed the great master of prose. The venom, too, is there; but the attack is too ostentatiously word-catching and pettily unfair for real effect. Nevertheless, it is well to have this specimen of Swift in his workaday vein brought within our reach. Very interesting is Daniel's Defence of Ryme; one of the few cases in which a poet has written on the technical side of his own art. And he writes notably well, if he is not free from mistake; though would he had been more careful not to leave some of his involved sentences hanging in the air, from a grammatical standpoint! Interesting is the much slighter brochure of a brother poet, Campion, to which Daniel's is an elaborate answer. Campion, a lovely minor master of rhyme, argues against rhyme; and he is venturesome enough to support his precept by example. The result, among many failures, is one of the few successful rhymeless lyrics in the language: the charming "Rose-cheeked Laura, come!" Its companion lyric is unknown and unquoted: indeed, it misses the poetic daintiness of the first, but is not less mellifluously felicitous in metre—witness the first verse:

"Just beguiler,
Kindest love, yet only chastest,
Royal in thy smooth denials,
Frowning or demurely smiling
Still my pure delight."

And then, only second in treasurableness to the great Miltonic pamphlet which opens the second volume, there is Sir Philip Sidney's Apology for Poetry. No man was better qualified to be the apologist of poetry than the most chivalrous of poets and poetic of soldier-courtiers. How flowing, melodious, gallant it is; often how modern, yet with what delicate touches of antiquity; how amiably humorous, with what sudden springing into brave ardours! Let me finish with his peroration—gayer and happier words than mine:

"I conjure you all . . . no more to scorn the sacred mystery of Poesy, but . . . to believe with me, that there are many mysteries contained in Poetry, which of purpose were written darkly, lest by profane wits it should be abused . . . Thus doing, your name shall flourish in the Printers' shops; thus doing, you shall be of kin to many a poetical preface; thus doing, you shall be most fair, most rich, most wise, most all—you shall dwell upon superlatives. But if (fie of such a but!) you be born so near the dull-making Cataphract of Nilus, that you cannot hear the planet-like music of Poetry, . . . then, though I will not wish unto you the ass's ears of Midas, . . . nor to be rhymed to death, as is said to be done in Ireland: yet thus much curse I must send you in the behalf of all poets, that while you live, you live in love, and never get favour, for lacking skill of a Sonnet; and when you die, your memory die from the earth, for want of an Epitaph."

FRANCIS THOMPSON.

THE BOOK MARKET.

A LITERARY CROSS-SECTION.

THE booksellers are just now wondering how many more editions of the Waverley Novels will be offered to them. Four new ones are appearing, and the first volume of a fifth edition is expected daily. It is clear that the Waverley Novels are selling well. Now, eighty-one years ago the Waverley Novels—what there were of them—were selling well, but with this difference, that then the booksellers could not tell their customers who wrote them. The great mystery was still young. Indeed, to be precise, only Waverley, and Guy Mannering, and Old Mortality, and The Antiquary, and The Black Dwarf—these five—were in print in 1816. But what magic is there in eight-one years? None at all; and my selection of that period is due to this circumstance: I picked up the other day from a Farringdon-street book barrow, for a few coppers, a volume bearing this title and dated 1816: A Biographical Dictionary of the Living Authors of Great Britain and Ireland. At least, that is the gist of the title, which is extended to a portentous length. Here was a veritable cross-section of literary history. Henry Colburn, who was doing business in Conduit-street, published the book, which is dedicated to the service of "AUTHORS, BOOKSELLERS, and the PUBLIC." It contains 450 pages, printed in double columns, and it is an amazing memorial of forgotten authors. It is also an instructive and entertaining conspectus of literature in the second decade of the century. This dry, official record of literary achievement in 1816 lay upon the counters of the Cadells, the Strahans, the Baldwins, the Rivingtons, the Lackingtons, and the Moxons; and turning its pages I have experienced, in a mild form, the "historic shudder."

Thus, to return to Scott—"Mr. Scott"—a neat, naive biographical sketch is appended to his name. He is already a most saleable poet.

"Mr. Scott has obtained a distinction above most of his contemporaries, having the merit of adapting the old ballad style of composition to the higher range of poetry. As an instance of the popularity of Mr. Scott's Works we subjoin a statement of the comparative sale of Robeby and the Lady of the Lake, in nearly four months, as submitted by the publishers. Sold of the Lady of the Lake, from June 2nd to September 22nd, 1810:

2000 quarto at, £2 2s. 0d. . . . .	£4,200
6000 octavo, at 12s. . . . .	£3,600
	£7,800

Sold of Robeby, in three months (January 14th to April 14th, 1813):

3000 quarto, at £2 2s. 0d. (less 120 remaining) . . . . .	£6,048
5000 octavo, at 14s. . . . .	£3,500
	£9,548

That is how the booksellers were talking and figuring about Mr. Scott, when they wondered who wrote Waverley.

Instinctively one turns to other great names of the date. What of Wordsworth? "This gentleman stands at the head of a particular school of poetry, the characteristic of which is simplicity." Then a list of his published works, which includes Lyrical Ballads, The Excursion, The White Doe of Rylstone. And Byron? Childe Harold has been out two years, and the notice of him is very brief, also alarmingly incomplete—for he is not credited with The Giaour, Parisina, and several other poems that had then appeared. Mr. Coleridge "has latterly been engaged in reading lectures on Poetry and the Belles Lettres," and his works are catalogued as far as his tragedy Remorse, published in 1813. Of Mr. Charles Lamb we are dryly told: "He is at present a clerk in the India House." To-day we should write "holds an appointment." But then he had written nothing better than Rosamund Grey and John Woodville; Elia was yet unborn. Mr. Southey has already written much prose, including the Life of Nelson (1813). In that year "he succeeded Mr. Pye as Poet Laureate, and it must be confessed that with some slight exceptions, his subsequent performances are such as do credit to the appointment." How gratifying to Mr. Southey! Mr. Thomas Campbell is alive, and is rather candidly noticed. "Mr. C. enjoys a pension, secured for him by Lord Grenville, as it is said, for political paragraphs written by him in an evening paper."

Among minor writers, Dr. Aitken and Joanna Baillie are in mid-career. Robert Bloomfield, whose Farmer's Boy enjoyed extraordinary popularity, has already seen his works collected. Here is a curious entry:

"BURNS, ROBERT, son of the celebrated Robert B., the poet, clerk in the office of the Comptroller for Stamps, Somerset House.—'The Caledonian Musical Museum or Complete Vocal Library,' 12mo, 1809."

This Robert B. must have been the son whom Charles Lamb said he wished had been the father. Mr. Cobbett (in 1816) is in the middle of his strenuous life. Mr. Crabbe is "one of the most distinguished poets of the present day." Mr. Charles Dibdin is old, and as poor as a pension will allow him to be. Miss Edgeworth is already "one of the most ingenious female writers of the present day." Mr. Malthus has "greatly distinguished himself as a political arithmetician." Mrs. Opie has done all her best work, and her tales are justly popular. We have a contemptuous notice of John Williams ("Anthony Pasquin"), the editor quoting with apparent approval a note of Gifford's to his Baviad, in which he says of Williams that "his acquaintance was infamy, and his touch poison." Nor is this the only outspoken sketch in the Dictionary. Dr. John Wolcott (Peter Pindar) is severely handled; and we have this curious echo of an old quarrel 'twixt author and publisher:

"Some years ago he [Wolcott] had a suit in chancery with his publishers respecting the construction of an agreement by which they were to pay him two hundred and forty pounds a year for the copyright of his works. At the time when this contract was made the doctor was labouring under an asthmatic complaint, and to all appearance had not long to live. But going into Cornwall, however, he recovered his health and returned to London without any cough, which was far from being a pleasing sight to the persons who were bound to pay his annuity. A plea was then set up that the agreement extended to all future pieces, as well as to the past; and on this ground an action was commenced which in a short time was compromised. The doctor was also embroiled in an unpleasant dispute with Mr. William Gifford, who having treated him rather severely in his Baviad and Mæviad, was assaulted by the redoubtable Potter, staff in hand, in Mr. Wright's shop in Piccadilly."

If this were the place to do it, one would like to compensate Sir Richard Phillips and John Thomas Smith for the contempt poured on them in this book. The editor seems to bear a grudge against booksellers who write. Phillips, a most active-minded man, gets scant justice. Yet he was a pushing publisher, and issued Godwin's best novels, and biographies of Foote and Lady Wortley Montagu. Amid many vicissitudes he found time to devise a new scheme of school-books. His very mistakes were magnificent, if we are to believe that he rejected Byron's early poems, Waverley, and the Farmer's Boy. What we must definitely thank him for is his Morning's Walk from London to Kew, a book read by no one, but quoted by every writer on London topography. As for John Thomas Smith, we learn that having engaged a Mr. Hawkins to write on London antiquities he quarrelled with him, and wrote the works himself. "The execution," sneers the editor, "is just what might be expected." We may rest pleased that John Thomas Smith disagreed with "the ingenious Mr. Hawkins" for this threw him on his own powers; and his Life of Nollekens and Book for a Rainy Day are treasures still. Besides, who will not resent a slight on the man who made these seven boasts:

"When a boy, I received a kiss from the beautiful Mrs. Robinson, was patted on the head by Dr. Johnson, have frequently held Sir Joshua Reynolds's spectacles, partook of a pot of porter with an elephant at Exeter Change, saved Lady Hamilton from falling when the melancholy news of Lord Nelson's death arrived, three times conversed with George III., and was shut up in a room with Mr. Kean's lion."

John Thomas Smith might have added that in later life he kept the prints at the British Museum.

The Dictionary yields other food for thought. For instance, it shows who was contemporary with whom; and he must be well up in dates to whom a year-book of such antiquity brings no surprises. Many will need to be reminded that Charles Lamb could have had first-hand knowledge of Dr. Johnson from the three women who, perhaps, knew him best—Mme. d'Arblay, Hannah More, and Mrs. Piozzi. One forgets such things. Now if Mme. Piozzi had only met Wordsworth and had battered his ears with Johnsonian anecdote, and if (but this is improbable) Wordsworth had listened to her with any attention, and if he had then retailed what he had heard to Mr. Aubrey de Vere, then Mr. Aubrey de Vere would have enriched his Reminiscences, just published, with some new stories of the great Cham, and we should all—from Dr. Birkbeck Hill downwards—have been made happy.

W. W.

DRAMA.

ALONE among the notable dramatists of the day, Mr. R. C. Carton works the vein of sentiment. Vulgar romance is too strong for him, and realism he abhors. He loves the purely idyllic, which he cultivates, if need be, in the dingy surroundings of a Bloomsbury second-hand bookshop. This view of life has never presented itself to Mr. Henry Arthur Jones, and Mr. Pinero has toyed with it only to desert it promptly for a study of the perversities and hypocrisies of human nature. The author of "Sunlight and Shadow," "Liberty Hall," and "The Tree of Knowledge," makes little attempt to hold the mirror up to nature, at least to such nature as the average man, l'homme moyen sensuel, is acquainted with. He sets us down in a modern Arcadia, and bids us watch the loves of Strephon and Clœ—the one in riding breeches and the other in a Bond-street costume. As even goodness cloy, Mr. Carton finds it expedient from time to time to diversify his idyll with a breath of wickedness from the outer world, to introduce a serpent into his Eden. He does not, however, think it necessary to study his wickedness at first hand. He takes the most suitable conventional type of sin in man or woman that he can find, gives us a sample of it in passing, and then resumes his portrayal of Arcadian simplicity.

SUCH, I take it, is the genesis of "The Tree of Knowledge," with which Mr. George Alexander has just reopened the St. James's Theatre. Mr. Carton is a believer in the "made" play. The truthful play has never entered into his calculations; and this may be said as confidently of "The Tree of Knowledge" as of any of his earlier works. For there is just as little truth in the flash adventuress who lives on the wreck of men's lives as in the young heiress who for sentimental reasons writes her first cheque in order to clear off the liabilities of the neighbouring squire, or the faithful land-steward who, like Viola, never tells his love until the avowal of it is wrung from him by circumstances. Mr. Carton's aim is not to preach or to educate: it is simply to please.

For this view of the dramatist's duty there is a good deal to be said. Mr. Carton's success with his adopted method proves it. Nobody would turn to "The Tree of Knowledge" for a faithful portraiture of modern country life; but the play is nevertheless destined, I should think, to a greater popularity than could possibly attend a purely realistic study, equivalent in merit. After all, realism on the stage, where the events of years are compressed into hours, and where there are invariably half-a-dozen assorted types of character, is only relative. The realistic dramatist gets no nearer his object, which is presumably the verité crüe of life, than does the ambitious astronomer who mounts on a chair to look at the stars.

It is curious to note how many of the familiar elements of fiction Mr. Carton impresses into his dramatic scheme—the baronial-hall, the encumbered estate, the foreclosed mortgage, the undutiful marriage, the elopement with the signal of the lamp at the window, the heartless adventuress, the faithful friend, the cynical roué, the bashful swain, hesitating to court the heiress because of her money—they are all here, our old acquaintances, tangled merely in a new dramatic skein. Yet they are for the most part old acquaintances whom it is pleasant to meet. The worst fault I have to find with them is that they talk and act at inordinate length; for Mr. Carton, an excellent craftsman as a rule, takes five long acts to tell a story the essential features of which one can forecast almost from the beginning. Just consider for a moment! In Mrs. Stanyon's cottage, nestling under the wing of Hollingworth Manor, the abode of Sir Mostyn Hollingworth (how "reminiscent" are these names of the sensational novelette!), Nigil Stanyon confides his wretched past to a cynical friend, one Roupell. He had lost his heart to an adventuress whom he had met abroad, and who, his funds being exhausted, had deserted him for a rich admirer. That was two years before, and still his heart bleeds. Hardly has the tale been told when Brian Hollingworth, heir to the manorial property, who has also been abroad, returns to announce that he has married a lady of no family and unknown antecedents, and that he relies upon his old friend Nigil to make peace with his father, Sir Mostyn, as to whose acknowledgment of the bride he has his doubts. Thus, in a nutshell lies the donnée of Mr. Carton's play; for naturally the adventuress of Nigil's unhappy past and Brian Hollingworth's mysterious bride are one and the same.

THE untying of so simple a dramatic knot is within the capacity of the least sophisticated playgoer. The first act of the five, indeed, contains all that is essential to the solution of the author's problem, which, I should add, comprises for the adventuress a sharp disappointment on the very threshold of her new life. Not that Sir Mostyn disowns the fascinating Belle! No; he is all graciousness to his erring son's bride. But (after the fashion of the novelette again!) the family are "ruined." Starting with these postulates, the author's course is clear. First, the adventuress must be got rid of. Well, here is the cynical man of the world with whom in the end she can elope. The Augiers and the Dumas killed off their wicked heroines at the end, but that was because an elopement under the then French law afforded the unfortunate husband no relief. The English dramatist in the like case trusts to the machinery of the divorce court. Secondly, the foreclosed mortgage must be taken up. The emancipated heiress, rejoicing in the possession of her first cheque-book, is at hand to do that. Thirdly, Nigil must be consoled; and again the sweet and winning Monica throws herself into the breach. Mr. Carton's play, in short, is fitted together with a neatness that suggests that the picture has been made for the frame rather than the frame for the picture.

BEING in need of an adventuress, the author has borrowed one from contemporary fiction without pausing to consider how far she accords with reality. For my part, I have considerable doubts as to the authenticity of the irresistible Belle, the man-killing tigress—mercenary, unscrupulous, soulless, with a heartless, metallic laugh, but overwhelmingly beautiful, able with a smile to bring her foolish husband to her feet after he has discovered her faithlessness, and casting her spell over the Mephistophelean Roupell himself. It is the fashion to praise the actress who undertakes such a part, and I own that Miss Julia Neilson throws herself valiantly enough into this uncongenial character of Belle. But if there were she-devils of such a type, able to turn the heads of all men with whom they were brought into contact, I apprehend they would require to possess other qualities than the purely physical. The Belle of Mr. Carton's play is a magnificent animal, but nothing more. As Miss Julia Neilson depicts her—rightly enough, no doubt, according to the text—she is not only unattractive, but, with her cynicism and her effrontery, absolutely gross and revolting. It is not by such attributes as these that the minds of men are beguiled. This bold-eyed adventuress is altogether too transparent a character. That she exists as a literary and dramatic abstraction we know, but it is time she were brought into some sort of relation with human nature as it lives and loves.

As Nigil, Mr. George Alexander has one of those showy parts dear to the heart of the romantic actor. Nigil is a young man with a past—a very small past, as such matters go. He had fallen under the influence of the terrible Belle, and lived under it until the inevitable rupture came. It was not his fault; he had offered his divinity marriage and she had declined it in favour of other more brilliant, if less durable, connections. Nevertheless, this past embitters the land-steward's existence, and it is one of the circumstances, as he believes, that disqualify him for the love of the innocent Monica. This is the way of the conventional drama; it is hardly the way of the world. But with his accent of conviction in the part Mr. Alexander achieves an easy rhetorical triumph. Equally successful is Mr. H. B. Irving in the cynical vein as the detrimental Roupell; and Mr. F. Terry fulfils satisfactorily the task of assuming an overwhelming infatuation for his Circe. When all is said and done, however, the author is at his best in depicting the serene and gentle cottage life of Mrs. Stanyon and her adopted daughter, untroubled save for the misdemeanours of the handy man, half-poacher, half-gardener, upon whose imperfect conception of his social obligations Mr. Carton relies for his comic relief. Here Miss Fay Davis creates a charming effect as the unsophisticated heiress who has to throw herself at the head of the too scrupulous Nigil before he sees her drift. Hither, too, comes the spluttering half-pay major of Mr. H. V. Esmond, to admire Monica at a distance, and to talk about his pets—Uncle Theodore, the pig, Squilla, the hedgehog, and the rest of them. What pastoral simplicity, to be sure! But it is these scenes of the play that one recalls with most pleasure.

J. F. N.

THE WEEK.

THE last week has seen a lull in publishing; but some interesting books are to hand.

The book of the week is the Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning. These, with their connecting narrative, supplied by Mr. F. G. Kenyon, fill two thick volumes. They form a very complete memorial of the writer, and it is interesting to note that their publication, in due time, was contemplated by Robert Browning, who, on his wife's death, begged back her letters from her friends. "The letters," says the editor, "when once collected, were not destroyed, as was the case with many of his own letters, but carefully preserved, and so passed into the possession of his son, Mr. R. Barrett Browning, with whose consent they are now published." They are chiefly addressed to Mr. H. S. Boyd, Mrs. Martin, Miss Mitford, Miss Browning, Mrs. Jameson, Mr. Chorley, and to Mr. Kenyon (the editor), who was a personal friend of both Robert Browning and his wife, and was, therefore, well qualified for the biographical task he has now brought to a conclusion.

THE motto to Dr. Louis Waldstein's book on The Sub-Conscious Self and its Relation to Education and Health is happily related to a difficult title, and is no more than the familiar couplet of the most direct of poets:

"What's done we partly may compute,
But know not what's resisted."

Dr. Waldstein distinguishes conscious and sub-conscious impressions, and says:

"Everyone will at once appreciate the fact that impressions here called sub-conscious are by far more numerous than those designated as conscious; the totality of our memory, therefore, are [sic] made up to a far greater degree of sub-conscious than of conscious impressions. The accumulated contents of our memory govern our emotions, our thoughts, and actions, and therefore that portion of our memory made up of sub-conscious impressions and their aggregate must necessarily play a great part in our individual life."

It is with this part, and how it is played, that Dr. Waldstein is concerned.

The Potter's Wheel is a collection of sermons by Dr. John Watson ("Ian Maclaren") preached, we imagine—but this is not stated—to his large Liverpool congregation. "The Potter's Wheel" is the first, followed by "Loss of Goods," "Obscurity," "Vanishing Illusions," "The Veiling of the Soul," "The World-Sorrow." There are also sermons on "Death" and "Our Departed." Dr. Robertson dedicates his book to Dr. Robertson Nicoll—"who constrained me to write."

THE brilliant series of lectures on "Optics" which Dr. Silvanus P. Thompson delivered at the Royal Institution last Christmas have been collected by him into a volume, with the title of Light Visible and Invisible. Introducing the lectures in their printed form, Dr. Thompson says:

"Two things are expected of a lecturer who undertakes a course of Christmas lectures at the Royal Institution. In the first place, his discourses must be illustrated to the utmost extent by experiments. In the second, however simple the language in which scientific facts and principles are described, every discourse must sound, at least, some note of modernity, must reflect some wave of recent science."

These conditions are fulfilled in the book, which records numerous experiments by means of illustrations, and concludes with a chapter on "Röntgen Light."

MR. W. J. STILLMAN, who is the Times correspondent in Rome, and a brilliant essayist, has gathered ten papers, which have appeared in English and American magazines, into a volume, which he calls The Old Rome and the New, and other Studies. The first four chapters are inspired by the author's travels and domiciles. After the study of Rome, which gives the book its title, we have "Marathon and its Brigands," "My Experience in a Greek Quarantine," and "An American's Reverie over London." The last-named essay will have special interest for English readers. No one brings to London a more valuable observation than a cultured American. A more personal paper deals with "A Few of Lowell's Letters," and three touch on art under the titles of "John Ruskin," "The Decay of Art," and "The Revival of Art."

IN Portrait Miniatures Mr. George C. Williamson has provided students with a volume less sumptuous, and therefore less expensive, than Dr. Propert's History of Miniature Art, the standard book on the subject. Mr. Williamson's work is well illustrated.

NEW BOOKS RECEIVED.

THEOLOGICAL AND BIBLICAL.

THE LAST THINGS. By Joseph Agar Beet, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.

LETTERS FROM HEAVEN. By G. E. Watts, M.A. David Nutt. 6d.

THE CHURCH HISTORICAL SOCIETY: GLASTONBURY. An Address by the Bishop of Stepney. S.P.C.K.

THE LITURGY OF THE ANTI-NICENE CHURCH. By F. E. Warren, B.D. S.P.C.K.

THE RITSCHLIAN THEOLOGY AND THE EVANGELICAL FAITH. By James Orr, M.A. Hodder & Stoughton. 2s. 6d.

THE AVELLAN COMMUNION: ITS POSITION AND PROSPECTS. S.P.C.K.
THE FATHERLY HAND. By Rev. Edward T. Vaughan. S.P.C.K.
OXFORD CONFERENCES: LENT AND SUMMER TERMS, 1897. By Joseph Rickaby, S.J. Burns & Oates.
STAFFORD HOUSE LECTURES. By the Bishop of Stepney, and Others. S.P.C.K.
SIDELIGHTS FROM PATMOS. By George Matheson, D.D. Hodder & Stoughton. 6s.
WOMEN OF THE OLD TESTAMENT: STUDIES IN WOMANHOOD. By Rev. Robert F. Horton, M.A. Service & Paton.
THE CHRIST OF GOD. By Charles H. Mann. G. Putnam's Sons. The Knickerbocker Press. 4s.

BIOGRAPHY AND HISTORY.

THE LETTERS OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING. Edited, with Biographical Additions, by Frederic C. Kenyon. 2 vols. Smith, Elder & Co.
LIFE AND LETTERS OF DEAN CHURCH. Edited by his Daughter, Mary C. Church. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
A SHORT HISTORY OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH. By F. Goulburn Walpole. Burns & Oates. 3s.
WILLIAM THE SILENT. By Frederic Harrison. Macmillan & Co. 2s. 6d.
TRANSLATIONS AND REPRINTS FROM THE ORIGINAL SOURCES OF EUROPEAN HISTORY—THE WITCH PERSECUTIONS. P. S. King & Son (Philadelphia, U.S.A.).
THE SEVENTH EARL OF SHAFFESBURY, K.G., AS SOCIAL REFORMER. By Edwin Hodder. James Nisbet & Co.
THE CELTIC CHURCH IN IRELAND. By James Heron, D.D. Service & Paton. 6s.
RELIGIONS OF PRIMITIVE PEOPLES. By Daniel G. Brinton. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 6s.
THE LITERARY HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION. By Moses Coit Tyler. G. P. Putnam's Sons. 12s. 6d.

POETRY, ESSAYS, BELLES LETTRES.

SELECTIONS FROM THE POETS: WORDSWORTH. By Andrew Lang. Longmans, Green & Co. 6s.
FOUR POETS: SELECTIONS FROM WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, SHELLEY, AND KEATS. Selected by Oswald Crawford. Chapman & Hall. 3s. 6d.
STRAY THOUGHTS OF READING. By Lucy H. M. Soulsby. Longmans, Green & Co. 2s. 6d.
PORTRAIT MINIATURES: A HANDBOOK FOR COLLECTORS. By George C. Williamson, Litt.D. George Bell & Sons. 12s. 6d.
REALMS OF UNKNOWN KING. By Laurence Alma Tadema. Grant Richards.
UNDIRK. By F. de la Motte Fouqué. Illustrated by Rosie M. M. Pitman. Macmillan & Co. 6s.
MAY CAROLS; OR, ANCELLA DOMINI. By Aubrey de Vere. Macmillan & Co. New edition. 5s.
THE DIVINE COMEDY OF DANTE ALIGHIERI. Carey's Translation. Edited by Oscar Kuhn. Thom. Y. Crowell & Co. (New York).
ESSAYS OF SCHOPENHAUER. Translated by Mrs. Rudolf Dicks. Walter Scott.
WORDSWORTH AT RYDAL, AND OTHER POEMS. By Tinsley Pratt. John Heywood. 2s. 6d.
CARMEN DEO NOSTRO: SACRED POEMS. By Richard Crashaw. Edited by J. R. Tutin. Wm. Andrews & Co. 3s. 6d.
LIFE OF LIFE, AND OTHER VERSE. By Arthur L. Salmon. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 2s. 6d.
THE OLD ROME AND THE NEW, AND OTHER STUDIES. By W. J. Stallman. Grant Richards. 5s.
SOCIAL FORCES IN GERMAN LITERATURE. By Kuno Francke, Ph.D. Second edition. Henry Holt & Co. (New York). 10s.
THE SUB-CONSCIOUS SELF; ITS RELATION TO EDUCATION AND HEALTH. By Louis Waldstein, M.D. Grant Richards. 3s. 6d.
VOICES IN THE TWILIGHT. By L. Cranmer-Byng. Watts & Co. 2s. 6d.

SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL.

CHEMISTRY FOR PHOTOGRAPHERS. By Chas. F. Townsend. Dawbarn & Ward. 1s.
LIGHT VISIBLE AND INVISIBLE. By Sylvanus P. Thompson, D.Sc. Macmillan & Co. 6s.

TRAVEL AND TOPOGRAPHY.

THE GUIDE TO SOUTH AFRICA. Sampson Low. 2s. 6d.
THE COUNTY HISTORIES OF SCOTLAND: A HISTORY OF THE COUNTY OF INVERNESS (Mainland). By J. Cameron Lees, LL.D. Wm. Blackwood & Sons. 7s. 6d.
BLACK'S GUIDE TO BATH AND BRISTOL. Edited by A. R. Hope Moncrieff. Sixth edition. A. C. Black. 1s.

EDUCATIONAL.

FIRST LATIN EXERCISES. By Rev. James West, M.A. Longmans, Green & Co. 1s

NEW EDITIONS OF FICTION.

MANFIELD PARK. By Jane Austen. Illustrated by Hugh Thomson. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
NEWTON FORSTER. By Captain Marryat. Illustrated by E. J. Sullivan. Macmillan & Co. 3s. 6d.
MARCELLA. By Mrs. Humphry Ward. Seventeenth edition. Smith, Elder & Co. 2s. 6d.
THE GREY LADY. By Henry Seton Merriman. New edition. Smith, Elder & Co. 6s.

JUVENILE BOOKS.

CHIEFDEER. By E. Boyd Bayly. Hodder & Stoughton. 1s.
MRS. MERRIMAN'S GODCHILD. By H. Louisa Bedford. S.P.C.K. BESIDE THE GUNS. By Mary E. Shipley. S.P.C.K. MRS. RULIN'S FOUNDLINGS. By Annette Lyster. S.P.C.K. THE HOMEWARD VOYAGE. By Harry Collingwood. S.P.C.K. THE OLDER BROTHER. By Panny. James Nisbet & Co. THE STORY OF EDISON. By Frank Mundell. Jarrold & Sons. GOALS AND TIDES. By V. Brooks-Hunt. S.P.C.K. THE THREE ADMIRALS, AND THE THREE COMMANDERS. By W. H. G. Kingston. Griffith Farran, Browne & Co. 3s. 6d. FOR TREASURES BOUND. By Harry Collingwood. Griffith Farran, Browne & Co. 5s. WEE DOGGIE. Nelson & Sons. 1s. COUSIN TOM. By Wm. Turville. Ash Partners. VANDRAD THE VIKING. By J. Storrs Clouston. Nelson & Sons. THE DAWN OF DAY: 1897. S.P.C.K. FRANK AND SAXON. By G. Manville Fenn. S.P.C.K. A CLERK OF OXFORD AND HIS ADVENTURES IN THE BARONS' WAR. By E. Everett-Green. Nelson & Sons. 5s. DR. BURLINGHAM'S BOYS. By Charles Edwards. Griffith Farran. 5s. THREE COMELY MAIDS AND THEIR AFFAIRS. By Mary L. Pendred. Hutchinson & Co. 3s. 6d. LEADING STRINGS. Gardner. 1s. 6d. JENNY. By Mrs. Edward Cartwright. Gardner.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DECORATIVE HERALDRY: A PRACTICAL HANDBOOK OF ITS ARTISTIC TREATMENT. By G. W. Eve. George Bell & Sons. 10s. 6d. NIGHTS WITH AN OLD GUNNER. By C. J. Cornish. Seely & Co. 6s. MAGIC: STAGE ILLUSIONS AND SCIENTIFIC DIVERSIONS. Edited by Albert A. Hopkins. Sampson Low. THE ISTHMIAN LIBRARY: BOXING. By R. G. Allanson-Winn. Edited by B. Fletcher Robinson. A. D. Innes & Co. GESTA TYPOGRAPHICA. By C. T. Jacobi. 3s. 6d. SPORTING AND ATHLETIC RECORDS. By H. Morgan-Browne. Methuen & Co. 1s. THE HILL OF THE GRACES: A RECORD OF INVESTIGATION AMONG THE TRILITHONS AND MEGALITHIC SITES OF TRIPOLI. By H. S. Cowper, F.S.A. Methuen & Co. 10s.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A CORRECTION.

1, Marloes-road: Oct. 22.

I have not seen the article on Minor Poets in the Quarterly, where, as I gather from the ACADEMY, my twittings are judged solely from Ballades in Blue China. But most of the verse in Grass of Parnassus is earlier by some ten years than the Ballades, not later, as my apologist thinks. This is unimportant (especially as the lines he mentions are later), but in the name of my outraged country, I protest that there were no witch-burnings in Scotland "in the last decade" as the reviewer of the newest fiction seems to suppose and not more than two or three in the last century (1700-1800). A. LANG.

[A comma was the culprit. The writer meant the last ten years of the period in which witches were burnt.]

MR MARSH EXPLAINS.

163, Piccadilly, W.: Oct. 23.

Speaking of my story, The Duke and the Damsel on p. 92 of your issue dated October 23, you say, "Mr. Richard Marsh seems to produce a novel every week."

The assertion suggests a form of misapprehension under which reviewers appear apt to labour—their innocence on certain points being almost equivalent to that of some of Her Majesty's judges. Since a section of your readers may share your contributor's innocence, I must ask you to be so very good as to allow me to relieve myself of the onus of so serious an imputation.

I am responsible for three of the stories which have appeared this autumn. One, The Crime and the Criminal, was finished in the spring of '94; published serially in '96; and announced, as a book, for the spring of '97—then postponed on account of the Jubilee. Another, The Beetle, was written in '95, appearing, serially, at the commencement of the present year. While the third, The Duke and the Damsel, was the only book I wrote last year.

Simultaneous publication is not equivalent to simultaneous production. Would that reviewers could be induced to understand that elementary truth! I assure you I had no wish that my books should be treading on each other's heels—circumstances have been too strong.

As a matter of fact, I produce slowly. Kneading a story, mentally, is a delight, setting it forth on paper is about as bad as a surgical operation.

RICHARD MARSH.

[We would remind Mr. Marsh that there are other openings for a surgical operation, as Sydney Smith once pointed out, besides its use in a comparison.]

"LONDON SIGNS AND INSCRIPTIONS."

Kensington: Oct. 24.

In your review of Mr. Philip Norman's book (October 9), your reviewer accepts the statement that the old sign of the Porter and the Dwarf has disappeared from Newgate-street, and he makes the humorous suggestion that someone with time and money to spare should go in quest of this relic which, Mr. Norman thinks, may yet turn up. I desire to say that at an infinitesimal cost of time and money I have found the missing (?) sign, which is to be seen above a second-story window at No. 78, Newgate-street. This is not its original position; and it is true, as Mr. Norman says in his book, that the sign disappeared some years ago from its old station over the entrance to Bull Head-court. But it merely went a few yards eastward. The present Lord Mayor, who owns the property, had a care for the Porter and the Dwarf, and caused the old sculptured stone to be built into one of the new buildings he then erected.

This sign, by the way, is by no means without literary and historical interest. The porter is William Evans a colossal Welshman who served Charles I. The dwarf is Sir Jeffrey Hudson, who was page to Queen Henrietta Maria. His introduction to the Court is thus described by Sir Walter in a note to Peveril of the Peak: "Hudson's first appearance at Court was his being presented, as mentioned in the text, in a pie, at an entertainment given by the Duke of Buckingham to Charles I. and Henrietta Maria. Upon the same occasion the Duke presented the tenant of the pasty to the Queen, who retained him as her page. When about eight years of age he was but eighteen or twenty inches high, and he remained stationary at that stature till he was thirty years old, when he grew to the height of three feet nine inches, and there stopped." Evans, the giant, stood seven feet six inches, and once at a masque at Whitehall he considerably astonished the company by pulling Sir Jeffrey out of his pocket. Other stories are told of this curious pair, and particularly of the dwarf, who carried an heroic soul in his tiny carcase. He fought a duel with a young gallant of the Court, named Croft. Croft entered the field armed with a syringe, with which he threatened to drown his antagonist. But when it came to pistols, Croft fell dead at the dwarf's first shot. Sir William Davenant has some funny lines recording a supposed fight between Sir Jeffrey and a turkey-cock. I believe there is a portrait of Sir Jeffrey by Vandyke; but its height in its relation to Evans's may be studied in Newgate-street with the aid of opera-glasses.

A. A.

BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED.

"Captains Courageous."
By Rudyard
Kipling.

THE critics recognise that Mr. Kipling's actual story is of the shortest and slightest.

The making of Harvey Cheyne, the spoilt youth who tumbles off a Cunard liner almost straight into Disko Troop's dory might have been told, they seem to indicate, in fifty pages. The book attains its dimensions by virtue of its descriptions of the cod-fishing, the minuteness of which breeds astonishment in the critics. Says the Times:

"All the varied, exciting incidents of a summer's cod-fishing are sketched in Mr. Kipling's best manner. How he comes to be able to give such marvellously clear impressions and to offer so complete a picture (unless, perchance, he has himself gone through the same discipline as Harvey Cheyne) is a mystery. As usual, the wealth of detail is amazing. He has told us his ideal of the nuova vita—a paradise where the artist shall 'draw the Thing as he sees It for the God of Things as They Are'; and, indeed, this life is scarce long enough to gain the multifarious experience of which we seem to get the essence in writings like his."

And the Chronicle's mood is the same: "Mr. Kipling's amazing knowledge of the technique of his subject appals us as it has appalled us before." Of fault-finding there is little. The Times remarks that

"... the worst a hostile critic could say of Captains Courageous would be to call it a glorified boy's book. There would be some truth in this, no doubt, but only very superior persons need think less of it on that score. For, after all, what are men but boys writ large? In many matters their taste is much alike—notably, in the enjoyment of a good, rousing story—and if any one be found to deny that Captains Courageous answers this description we 'disable his judgment.'"

The Chronicle points out that Captains Courageous is one of the few books that justify the vogue of the short story writ large. "Mr. Kipling is one of the very few who are not hampered by the new limits, and who do not need to complain of them. A master of episode, he has yet to convince us that a broader basis of art is at the command of his genius."

That "broader basis of art" is just what the Westminster Gazette thinks Mr. Kipling has already attained, and has here abandoned:

"As a tour de force in vivid description one cannot imagine the thing better done; but it is little short of a liberty to ask us to accept Captains Courageous as a worthy successor to Plain Tales and Many Inventions in the realm of fiction. It is Mr. Kipling himself who has spoiled the market for so exiguous a tale; and it is absurd to suppose that so finished a craftsman is not acutely aware of its deficiencies. He must then wish us to accept it as a contribution to the knowledge of mankind under strange conditions, and as such it is, no doubt as good as it can be. But will Mr. Kipling forgive the wish that he of all men should do work worthier of his gifts?"

The St. James's Gazette is always critical; and its reviewer expresses the opinion that the book "would be all the better for a little thinning among the smart phrases and technical terms. They are too thick on the ground, and spoil each other. Mr. Kipling seems as if he had got a note-book full and must work them all off somehow. It reminds one of the history exams. at school, when we crammed in by hook or by crook every fact and date in our repertory." The same critic objects to Harvey Cheyne's manner of falling overboard and his picking up:

"We have no objection to impossibilities: they are the salt of fiction. But this particular incident, which might have been managed in half a dozen other ways, makes a tax upon our credulity. Observe: a tiny, single-handed, open row-boat fishing in a sea which poops a Cunarder. It is a serious flaw at the beginning of a book all about the water, because it throws some suspicion on the genuineness of the apparently marvellous familiarity with sea-life that follows. And it comes of overdoing the details, which is Mr. Kipling's besetting sin. The boy might easily have fallen overboard fooling around in an ordinary way; but then we should not have had the 'turtle-back' and the 'low, gray mother-wave' that 'swung out of the fog and tucked him under one arm,' &c. It is very picturesque; but when you are washed off the stern of a liner by a mother-wave, or any other wave, you don't find many open row-boats plying cheerily in your vicinity."

But the St. James's acuteness has not been unchallenged, and the following letter has since appeared in its columns:

"It is strange that your critic should have fallen foul on a point of seamanship with Mr. Rudyard Kipling—one of those very, very scarce writers in whom sailors recognise a man who knows what he is talking about. Harvey Cheyne was not 'washed' off the stern of the liner. Who could have thought that he was? He overbalanced himself and fell off. Voilà tout. That an open boat was near him at the time would not have surprised your critic had he ever seen the fish going from smack to carrier in the North Sea in heavy weather."

ALL the critics are struck by the character of Mr. Parker's hero—weak in life, strong only in his death hour—the Hon. Tom Ferrol. "A very life-like study of the incontinent man and his devious ways," says the Athenæum. And the Chronicle says: "Mr. Parker has drawn him carefully and cleverly. One doesn't dislike the Hon. Tom, though one recognises clearly enough what a thorough-paced detrimental he is. He is sympathetically touched; he is left just enough of the saving grace of courage to hold our interest while he is above ground; the while we feel that nothing in his life became him like the manner of his leaving it." The story as a whole is not much to the Chronicle reviewer's taste, but he is "ready and willing to assert that it does Mr. Parker no discredit. It is always delicately, if not quite always strongly, wrought." The Scotsman repeats the Chronicle's note of qualified praise: "Mr. Parker's new story shows some falling off from the genuine literary achievement of The Seats of the Mighty. It has fine passages, and, taken as a whole, it may be said to be a clever story of the modern melodramatic order, with picturesque effects, exciting incidents, and a sensational climax. But it is also a psychological study of a somewhat unwholesome order, and the morbid humanity of the Honourable Tom Ferrol and his feminine victims is not an edifying subject. Moreover, the style is a little slipshod. Mr. Parker is capable of much finer work."

The Glasgow Herald is struck by the title of the book: "Mr. Parker is singularly fortunate in his titles, for they sound well and they stick in the mind."

"In Kedar's Tents." By Henry Seton
Merriman.

THE Pall Mall Gazette reviewer takes up half his space in exclaiming like little Jack Horner, when he had pulled out a plum, "Oh, what a good boy am I!"—so pleased is he to find one book of which he "can say at once, and without afterthought, 'This is good.'"

"Such a book is In Kedar's Tents. It brings with it a rest from the weariness of disapproval. After the first few pages one ceases to criticise one can only enjoy. And, at the end, looking back, one finds that criticism has been stifled, not by mere sensational interest, but by sheer excellence. The book falls short in no particular of its ideal. It is a story of intense excitement, yet the psychology and the characterisation are admirable. The narrative is faithful and convincing, the conversations are lifelike. There are no loose ends, and the last chapter brings the lovers together. What more can we ask? The book is good."

The Saturday reviewer remarks in much the same mood: "Even in the age of good writing and brilliant narration, In Kedar's Tents is certain to make its mark." He thinks that the picture of Spain given in this story is as vivid as that of Russia in The Sowers.

The Daily News does not find the theme "so appealing" as that of The Sowers, but "the novel presents the same combination of an adventurous plot and keen character drawing—a combination as rare as it is admirable. Mr. Merriman sees life largely, and is aware of its subtler significance. He is interested in the play of character and in noting the idiosyncracies that are its more intimate revelations."

The Manchester Courier thinks that Mr. Merriman's master quality is his power to carry his readers into unaccustomed regions. "Above all, Mr. Merriman's fights are delicious. His men are all 'bonnie fighters.'"

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

"In its new form it should have thousands of new readers."—Weekly Dispatch.

"E. A. V.'s Memoir of Mazzini is, we are glad to see, now issued at sixpence, so that it can be procured and read by everyone interested in the development and growth of Democracy."—Pall Mall Gazette.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
FURNIAL STREET.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.

HISTORICAL CHURCH ATLAS. Illustrating the History of Eastern and Western Christendom, until the Reformation, and that of the Anglican Communion until the present day. By EDMUND McCCLURE, M.A. Containing 18 Coloured Maps besides some 50 Maps in the Text. 4to, cloth boards, 16s. [In the press.]

THE ANCIENT HEBREW TRADITION as ILLUSTRATED by the MONUMENTS. A Protest against the Modern School of Old Testament Criticism. By Dr. FRITZ HOMMEL, Professor of the Semitic Languages in the University of Munich. Translated from the German by EDMUND McCCLURE, M.A., and LEONARD CROSSLE. With Map. Large post 8vo, buckram boards, 6s.

"We are profoundly grateful to Dr. Hommel for work whose results will do much to reassure many a timid and distressed believer."—Record.
"We can recommend Dr. Hommel's well-argued and deeply interesting book to the careful consideration of all Biblical students."—Oxford Review.

THEODORE and WILFRITH. Lectures delivered in St. Paul's Cathedral, December, 1896, by the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Bristol. Small post 8vo, with several illustrations, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.
"The Bishop's polemic is sturdy in argument, but scrupulously temperate in tone, and it need hardly be said that he illustrates his thesis with great ecclesiastical and archaeological learning."—Times (September 17).

SIDE LIGHTS on CHURCH HISTORY.—THE LITURGY and RITUAL of the ANTE-NICENE CHURCH. By the Rev. F. E. WARREN, B.D., F.S.A. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

CHRISTIAN LIFE in SONG (TE DEUM LAUDAMUS).—THE SONG and the SINGERS. By the late Mrs. RUNDLE CHARLES. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. [In the press.]

THE STRUGGLE of the NATIONS: Egypt, Syria, and Assyria. By Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCCLURE. With Maps, 3 Coloured Plates, and over 400 illustrations. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 25s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 50s.

This is a companion volume to "The Dawn of Civilization," and contains the History of the Ancient Peoples of the East from the XIVth Egyptian Dynasty to the end of the Ramesside period. This interval covers the sojourn of the Israelites in Egypt and their Exodus therefrom. The recent discovery of an Egyptian Stele mentioning the Israelites gives special interest to this volume, where the matter is discussed with his usual acumen by the Author.

"The translation by M. L. McCCLURE is in both cases excellent. Professor Maspero's presentation of the new learning is at once eminently popular and attractive."—Times.

THE DAWN of CIVILIZATION (EGYPT and CHALDEA).

New and Revised Edition. By Professor MASPERO. Edited by the Rev. Professor SAYCE. Translated by M. L. McCCLURE. With Map and over 470 illustrations, including 3 Coloured Plates. Demy 4to (approximately), cloth, bevelled boards, 24s.; half-morocco (bound by Riviere), 48s.

Professor Maspero, by using the result of the most recent researches in Egypt and Mesopotamia, has brought this New Edition up to the latest date.

THE ROMANCE OF SCIENCE.

THE MACHINERY of the UNIVERSE. Mechanical Conceptions of Physical Phenomena. By A. E. DOLBEAR, A.B., A.M., M.E., Ph.D., Professor of Physics and Astronomy, Tuft's College, Mass. Small post 8vo, with several Diagrams. Cloth boards, 2s.

THE SPLASH of a DROP. By Prof. Worthington. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OUR SECRET FRIENDS and FOES. By Percy Faraday FRANKLAND, Ph.D., B.Sc. (London), F.R.S. Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

"It is a book which every clergyman, every magistrate, every guardian of the poor, every governor of a school ought to possess and master."—Guardian.

COLOUR. By Captain Abney, F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

COAL. By Prof. R. Meldola. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

DISEASES of PLANTS. By Prof. Marshall Ward. With numerous illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

TIME and TIDE: a Romance of the Moon. Third Edition, Revised. By Sir ROBERT S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S., Royal Astronomer of Ireland. Illustrated. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE STORY of a TINDER-BOX. By the late Charles MEYMOTT TIDY, M.B.M.S., F.C.S. With numerous illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIRTH and GROWTH of WORLDS. A Lecture by Prof. GREEN, M.A., F.R.S. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s.

SOAP BUBBLES and the FORCES which MOULD THEM. Being a Course of Three Lectures delivered at the London Institution, in December, 1890, and January, 1890, before a Juvenile Audience. By C. V. BOYS, A.R.S.M., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

SPINNING TOPS. The Operatives' Lecture of the British Association Meeting at Leeds, September, 1890. By Prof. J. PERRY, M.E., D.Sc., F.R.S. With numerous Diagrams. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

THE MAKING of FLOWERS. By the Rev. Prof. George HENSLOW, M.A., F.L.S., F.G.S. With several illustrations. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

STAR ATLAS. Gives all the Stars from 1 to 6.5 magnitude between the North Pole and 34° South Declination, and all Nebulae and Star Clusters which are visible in telescopes of moderate powers. Translated and Adapted from the German of Dr. KLEIN, by the Rev. E. McCCLURE, M.A. Imperial 4to, with 18 Charts and 80 pages Illustrative Letterpress. Cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

EVENINGS at the MICROSCOPE; or, Researches among the Minuter Organs and Forms of Animal Life. By the late P. H. GOSSE, F.R.S. A New Edition, Revised by A. JEFFREY BELL, M.A., Secretary R.M.S., Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Zoology in King's College, London. Profusely illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s.

PATRIARCHAL PALESTINE. By the Rev. A. H. Sayce, Professor of Assyriology, Oxford. Crown 8vo, with Map, buckram boards, 4s.

[This book is the first to apply the Tel-el-Amarna Tablets, both published and unpublished, towards elucidating the condition of Syria at this period. It also contains a recent and important revision of the Egyptian Geographical Lists bearing on Palestine.]

THE "HIGHER CRITICISM" and the VERDICT of the MONUMENTS. By the Rev. Professor SAYCE, Queen's College, Oxford. Fifth Edition. Demy 8vo, buckram, bevelled boards, 7s. 6d.

"A really valuable and important work; perhaps the best which Professor Sayce has yet written."—Academy.

ANCIENT HISTORY from the MONUMENTS.—THE HISTORY of BABYLONIA. By the late GEORGE SMITH. Edited and brought up to date by the Rev. Professor A. H. SAYCE. Fcap. 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE CONVERSION of the HEPTARCHY. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Bristol. Small post 8vo, with several illustrations, cloth boards, 3s.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH in THESE ISLANDS before the COMING of AUGUSTINE. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Bristol. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

AUGUSTINE and HIS COMPANIONS. By the Right Rev. G. F. BROWNE, D.D., D.C.L., Bishop of Bristol. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE BIBLE in the LIGHT of TO-DAY. By the Rev. CHARLES CROSLIGH, D.D. Post 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

BIBLE PLACES; or, the Topography of the Holy Land. A Succinct Account of all the Places, Rivers, and Mountains of the Land of Israel mentioned in the Bible, so far as they have been identified; together with their Modern Names and Historical References. By the Rev. Canon H. B. TRISTRAM, D.D., LL.D., F.R.S. New Edition, brought up to date. With Map. Crown 8vo, 5s.

VERSES. By Christina G. Rossetti. Reprinted from "Called to be Saints," "Time Flies," and "The Face of the Deep." Small post 8vo, printed in red and black on hand-made paper, buckram, top edge gilt, 3s. 6d.; limp roan, 5s.; limp morocco, 7s. 6d.

THE FACE of the DEEP. A Devotional Commentary on the Apocalypse. By CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI, Author of "Time Flies," &c. Demy 8vo, cloth boards, 7s. 6d.

TRACES of GREEK PHILOSOPHY and ROMAN LAW in the NEW TESTAMENT. By the Rev. EDWARD HICKS, D.D., D.C.L. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

CHURCH HISTORY in QUEEN VICTORIA'S REIGN. By the Rev. MONTAGUE FOWLER, M.A., Chaplain to the late Archbishop of Canterbury. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

ADDRESSES and SERMONS. By Basil, Archbishop of Smyrna. Translated (with his permission) by the Rev. A. BAKER, R.N. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

THE ANGLICAN COMMUNION: its Position and Prospects. Sermons preached in St. James's Church, Piccadilly, in July and August, 1897, by the ARCHBISHOP of CAPE TOWN, the ARCHBISHOP of RUPEERTSLAND, the ARCHBISHOP of SYDNEY, the BISHOP of CALCUTTA, and the BISHOP of KENTUCKY. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 2s.

THE PAPAL CONCLAVES. By the Rev. Canon Pennington, M.A. Small post 8vo, cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

OUTLINES of the HISTORY of THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE of the CHURCH of ENGLAND from the REFORMATION to the CLOSE of the EIGHTEENTH CENTURY. The Bishop Paddock Lectures. By JOHN DOWDEN, D.D., Bishop of Edinburgh. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s.

HANDY BOOK (A) of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Rev. EDWARD L. CUTTS, D.D. New and Improved Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

LONDON: NORTHUMBERLAND AVENUE, W.C.; 43, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.
BRIGHTON: 129, NORTH STREET.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1331.—NEW SERIES.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1897.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CATALOGUES.

TO BOOKBUYERS and LIBRARIANS of FREE LIBRARIES.—The NOVEMBER CATALOGUES of Valuable SECOND-HAND WORKS and NEW REMAINDERS, offered at prices greatly reduced, are Now Ready, and will be sent post free upon application to W. H. SMITH & SON, Library Department, 186, Strand, London, W.C.

POTTER'S BOOK CATALOGUE on General Literature (No. 117, for OCTOBER), at reduced prices, post free. Sporting Works purchased.—WILLIAM POTTER, 20, Exchange Street East, Liverpool.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

WILLIAMS & NORGATE, IMPORTERS OF FOREIGN BOOKS, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, 20, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh, and 7, Broad Street, Oxford. CATALOGUES post free on application.

T. H. WOHLLEBEN, FOREIGN BOOKSELLER, 45, Great Russell Street (Opposite the British Museum), Supplies all Foreign Books and Periodicals at the most moderate prices. CATALOGUES on application.

W. THACKER & CO., PUBLISHERS, 2, Creed Lane, London, E.C. And at Calcutta, Bombay, and Simla. MSS. considered for Publication. [Established 1819. A large Clientele in all parts of the East.]

AGENCY FOR AMERICAN BOOKS.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, PUBLISHERS and BOOKSELLERS, of 27 and 29 West 23rd Street, New York, and 24, BEDFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C., desire to call the attention of the READING PUBLIC to the excellent facilities presented by their Branch House in London for filling, on the most favourable terms, orders for their own STANDARD PUBLICATIONS and for ALL AMERICAN BOOKS and PERIODICALS—CATALOGUES sent on application.

MR. MOSHER'S New and Complete Descriptive LIST OF BOOKS is Now Ready. It is issued in narrow 8vo, with Facsimile Titles in Red and Black, done up in French hand-made paper wrappers, with original cover design. Those who have yet to see these Editions published by Mr. Mosher should favour him with their names that the new List may be mailed them, post paid.

THOMAS B. MOSHER,
45, EXCHANGE STREET, PORTLAND, MAINE, UNITED STATES.

SCHOLARLY TYPE-WRITING by a Graduate. Greek, Latin, Foreign MSS., Poems, Plays, Translations.—E. W. LUMMIS, Beches Road, West Bromwich.

TYPE-WRITER.—GREAT BARGAIN
£9 FOR £3.

Send for full particulars of above Splendid Machine, sold through liquidation. Quite new and perfect. A most beautiful, strong, practical machine. Anyone can learn in half an hour.

MESSRS. KING, SELL, & RAILTON, WHOLESALE STATIONERS,
12, Gough Square, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE AUTHOR'S HAIRLESS PAPER-PAD. (The LEADENHALL PRESS, Ltd., 20, Leadenhall Street, London, E.C.)

Contains hairless paper, over which the pen slips with perfect freedom. Sixpence each. 5s. per dozen, ruled or plain.

BOOKS WANTED TO PURCHASE.

(Advertisements in this column are inserted at 4d. per line, prepaid.)

WANTED.—Copies of "THE ACADEMY" for 11th JANUARY, 1898. Full price (3d. per copy) paid.—Apply ACADEMY Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London.

AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS PURCHASED. A large assortment of all kinds FOR SALE. Lists free.—Scott, 17, Cradock Road, Fulham, S.W.

VICTORIA UNIVERSITY.—THE YORKSHIRE COLLEGE, LEEDS.

The Council of the Yorkshire College invite APPLICATIONS for the APPOINTMENT of a LECTURER in ENGLISH LITERATURE, who will be required to conduct the classes in this subject for the Pass and Honours Schools of the Victoria University. The Lecturing will probably average about eight hours per week during the Session. The Lecturer will not be at liberty to hold any other teaching appointment, but will have opportunity for Extension Lecturing. Stipend £200 with half the class fees. The appointment will date from the 1st January, 1898. Applications will be received by the SECRETARY up to 11th November.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES AND MONMOUTHSHIRE (A CONSTITUENT COLLEGE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WALES).

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP OF GREEK. Applications and testimonials should be sent on or before TUESDAY, NOVEMBER the 23rd, 1897, to the undersigned, from whom further particulars may be obtained.

J. AUSTIN JENKINS, B.A., Secretary and Registrar.
University College, Cardiff, October 19th, 1897.

ROYAL INDIAN ENGINEERING COLLEGE, COOPER'S HILL, STAINES.

The course of study is arranged to fit an engineer for employment in Europe, India, and the Colonies. About 40 Students will be admitted in September, 1898. The Secretary of State will offer them for competition 12 Appointments as Assistant Engineers in the Public Works Department, and three Appointments as Assistant Superintendents in the Telegraphic Department, one in the Accounts Branch P. W. D., and one in the Traffic Department, Indian State Railways. For particulars, apply to SECRETARY at College.

EXHIBITION OF MANUSCRIPTS and AUTOGRAPHS OF HISTORICAL INTEREST, including those of the principal Monarchs, Statesmen, Commanders, Poets, Authors, Painters, and Musicians. NOW OPEN at THE FINE ART SOCIETY'S, 148, NEW BOND STREET.

BEDFORD COLLEGE, LONDON, for WOMEN, YORK PLACE, BAKER STREET, W.

The Council invite APPLICATIONS for the PROFESSORSHIP of MENTAL and MORAL SCIENCE. Applications, with one copy of testimonials, should be sent, on or before Monday, 22nd November, to the Honorary Secretary at the College, from whom all particulars may be obtained.

LUCY J. RUSSELL, Honorary Secretary.

TO WEALTHY PATRONS of ART and BELLES LETTRES.—A Gentleman engaged in producing a GREAT WORK, indispensable to Students of English Literature throughout the civilised world, requires FINANCING to a very moderate extent. The Work has met, so far as it has at present gone, with the highest approval of eminent experts. Guaranteed sale of small edition.—Apply by letter (Principals or Solicitors only) to X., care of Messrs. Steadman & Van Praagh, Solicitors, 23, Old Broad Street, London, E.C.

WANTED.—GIRL of 17 or 18 to join Four others who are studying French, Music, Singing, Painting, in FRANCE, in charge of an unexceptional English Chaperon. Highest references given and required. Terms for Pension and French, 10 Guineas monthly.—CHAPERON, "ACADEMY" Office, 43, Chancery Lane, London, W.C.

ARTIST, in good house. St. John's Wood, wants MAN of cultured tastes to SHARE HOME. Could have own Sitting-Room if desired. Excellent housekeeping. Terms moderate.—Write G., care of Mr. Sharpe, Newsagent, Queen's Terrace, N.W.

Nearly ready, 8vo, price 15s.

THE SECRET of HEGEL: being the Hegelian System in Origin, Principle, Form, and Matter.

By JAS. HUTCHISON STIRLING. LL.D. Edin.
New Edition, Unabridged but carefully Revised.
Edinburgh: OLIVER & BOYD.
London: Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton & Co., Limited.

MESSRS. J. C. DRUMMOND & CO., ART REPRODUCERS,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C.
Are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich.

The well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE now patronised by the leading London Art Publishing Firms. A large Collection of Important Plates always on view.

PROCESS BLOCKS for the PURPOSE of ORDINARY BOOK ILLUSTRATIONS.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO. supply the cheapest and best Processes in the market, which are specially adapted to meet the wants of Antiquarians, Archaeologists, and those engaged in the investigation and publication of Parochial and Diocesan Records.

J. C. DRUMMOND & CO. invite attention to their IMPROVED RAPID PHOTO-MECHANICAL PROCESS.

For the Reproduction of Works of Art, Original MSS., Designs, Lace Manufactures, Photographs, Views, Book Illustrations, Artistic Advertisements, Catalogues, &c., &c., at a moderate cost.

Specimens and Price List on application.

Offices: 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY.

For the CIRCULATION and SALE of all the BEST

ENGLISH, FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN AND SPANISH BOOKS.

TOWN SUBSCRIPTIONS from ONE GUINEA per annum.

LONDON BOOK SOCIETY (for weekly exchange of Books at the houses of Subscribers) from TWO GUINEAS per annum.

COUNTRY SUBSCRIPTIONS from TWO GUINEAS per annum. N.B.—Two or Three Friends may UNITE in ONE SUBSCRIPTION and thus lessen the Cost of Carriage.

Town and Village Clubs supplied on Liberal Terms.

Prospectuses and Monthly Lists of Books gratis and post free.

SURPLUS LIBRARY BOOKS

NOW OFFERED AT

Greatly Reduced Prices.

A NEW CLEARANCE LIST (100 pp.)

Sent Gratis and post free to any address.

The List contains: POPULAR WORKS in TRAVEL, SPORT, HISTORY, BIOGRAPHY, SCIENCE, and FICTION. Also NEW and SURPLUS Copies of FRENCH, GERMAN, ITALIAN, and SPANISH BOOKS.

MUDIE'S SELECT LIBRARY, Limited,
30-34, NEW OXFORD STREET; 241, BROMPTON ROAD, S.W.;
48, QUEEN VICTORIA STREET, E.C.; LONDON; and 21 BANTON ARCADE, MANCHESTER.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

PRODUCERS and PUBLISHERS of

PERMANENT CARBON PHOTOGRAPHS

OR

FAMOUS WORKS OF ART.

Catalogues and Price Lists upon application.

THE NORWICH SCHOOL of PAINTING. A Series of Plates, printed in various Colours, after Cotman, Crome, Leman, Lound, Bright, Stark, Vincent, etc. [Will be ready shortly.]

THE TATE COLLECTION (NATIONAL GALLERY of BRITISH ART). A large number of the Pictures now Exhibited at Millbank have been published in Autotype, including the Chief Works of G. F. WATTS, R.A. Further additions are being made, and will be announced shortly.

BRITISH ARTISTS of the VICTORIAN ERA. From the recent Guildhall Loan Collection. Average size 18 x 15 inches. Price 12s.

PAINTINGS, DRAWINGS, and SCULPTURE by the OLD MASTERS. A large Collection of Permanent Photographs of the Chief Treasures of Art contained in the Public and Private Collections of Europe. Paintings and Sculpture in one uniform size, price 12s.; Drawings on the Scale of the Originals at prices ranging from 1s. 6d. to 10s. each.

The AUTOTYPE COMPANY will be pleased to advise upon, and to undertake, the REPRODUCTION of WORKS of ART of every character, both for Book Illustration, and on a larger scale for the Portfolio or for Mural Decoration. Price Lists and Estimates free upon application.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY
FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.

MR. ROBINSON'S NEW BOOKS.

THE COUNSELS OF WILLIAM

DE BRITAIN. A Volume of Seventeenth Century Precepts and Aphorisms. Revised by HERBERT H. STURMER. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 3s. 6d.

"It is full of wise saws and modern instances."

Daily News.

"Mr. Sturmer has accomplished his 'toil' well and carefully; his introduction is excellent. . . . The author, whoever he was, knows how to turn an aphorism with so neat a touch that he must have been ancestor of Mr. George Meredith."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"By no means unfit to be ranked with Gracian and Osborne."—Manchester Guardian.

SELECTIONS from the BRITISH

SATIRISTS. With an Introductory Essay by CECIL HEADLAM, late Deputy of Magdalen College, Oxford. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

THE GUARDIAN'S INSTRU-

CTION; or, The Gentleman's Romance. Written for the diversion and service of the Gentry. A Reprint from the Edition of 1888.

This quaint little book contains a defence of the University of Oxford, interesting details of life there, and advice to parents of position on the education of their sons.

With a Biographical Introduction.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

UNIVERSITIES of OXFORD

and CAMBRIDGE. Two Series of Popular Histories of the Colleges. [In preparation.]

A strong list of writers has been secured, whose names will be announced next month.

LONDON: F. E. ROBINSON, 20, GREAT RUSSELL STREET, BLOOMSBURY.

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

TO

"THE ACADEMY."

The following have already appeared:—

	1896.
BEN JONSON ... ..	November	14
JOHN KEATS ... ..	"	21
SIR JOHN SUCKLING ... ..	"	28
TOM HOOD ... ..	December	5
THOMAS GRAY ... ..	"	12
ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON ... ..	"	19
SIR WALTER SCOTT ... ..	"	26
1897.
SAMUEL RICHARDSON ... ..	January	2
THOMAS DE QUINCEY ... ..	"	9
LEIGH HUNT ... ..	"	16
LORD MACAULAY ... ..	"	23
ROBERT SOUTHEY ... ..	"	30
S. T. COLERIDGE ... ..	February	6
CHARLES LAMB ... ..	"	13
MICHAEL DRAYTON ... ..	"	20
WALTER SAVAGE LANDOR ... ..	"	27
SAMUEL PEPYS ... ..	March	6
EDMUND WALLER ... ..	"	13
WILKIE COLLINS ... ..	"	20
JOHN MILTON ... ..	"	27
WILLIAM COWPER ... ..	April	3
CHARLES DARWIN ... ..	"	10
ALFRED, LORD TENNYSON ... ..	"	17
HENRY WADSWORTH LONG- FELLOW ... ..	"	24
ANDREW MARVELL ... ..	May	1
ROBERT BROWNING ... ..	"	8
THOMAS CARLYLE ... ..	"	15
PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY ... ..	"	22
CHARLES DICKENS ... ..	"	29
JONATHAN SWIFT ... ..	June	5
WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY ... ..	"	12
WILLIAM BLAKE ... ..	"	19
SIR RICHARD STEELE ... ..	"	26
ALEXANDER POPE ... ..	July	3
DOUGLAS JERROLD ... ..	"	10
FRANCIS BACON ... ..	"	17

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVELS NOW READY.

Cloth, 3s. 6d.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "STEPHEN REMARK."

PAUL MERCER. A Tale of Repentance among Millions. By the Hon. and Rev. JAMES ADDERLEY.

JOB HILDRED, Artist and Carpenter.

By ELLEN F. PINSENT, Author of "Jenny's Case," "No Place for Repentance," &c.

Cloth, 6s.

THE SON of a PEASANT. By Edward

McNULTY, Author of "Misther O'Ryan," &c. Pall Mall Gazette.—"A remarkably clever representation of Irish life. Constable Kerrigan is a creation, and Mr. Flanagan, the easy, good-natured publican is a portrait that is drawn with a cunning hand."

THE KING with TWO FACES. By M. E. COLERIDGE, Author of "The Seven Sleepers of Ephesus." Cloth, 6s.

NETHERDYKE. By R. J. Charleton, Author of "Newcastle Town," &c. Cloth, 6s.

NOW READY AT ALL LIBRARIES AND BOOKSELLERS.

RECOLLECTIONS OF AUBREY DE VERE.

1 vol., with Portrait, demy 8vo, 16s.

Spec. for.—"The 'Recollections' are likely to be widely read, for they will interest all readers."

Morning Post.—"These 'Recollections' will appeal to many sympathies, personal, political, social, literary, and religious. As a Catholic the author enjoyed the intimate friendship of Cardinal Newman and Cardinal Manning, and these pages throw additional and interesting sidelights on the character and genius of each of these distinguished men."

Athenaeum.—"It presents the portrait of a noble figure, a man of letters in a sense peculiar to a day now disappearing, a man of responsible leisure, of serious thought, of grave duties, of high mind."

A MEMOIR OF ANNE J. CLOUGH.

Principal of Newnham College, Cambridge.

By her Niece, BLANCHE CLOUGH.

With 2 Portraits, 8vo, 12s. 6d.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY AND LETTERS

of the RIGHT HON. JOHN ARTHUR ROEBUCK, Q.C., M.P. Edited by ROBERT EADON LEADER. With 2 Portraits, demy 8vo, 16s.

BENIN, the CITY of BLOOD: an Account of the Benin Expedition. By R. H. BACON, Commander, R.N. Illustrated by W. H. Overend. Demy 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THE CHIPPENDALE PERIOD in

ENGLISH FURNITURE. By K. WARREN CLOUSTON. With 300 Illustrations by the Author. Demy 4to, handsomely bound, 21s. net. (In conjunction with Messrs. Debenham & Freebody.)

Standard.—"Mr. Clouston has done his work thoroughly well, and has produced a book which will be of real value not only to the serious student of the history of furniture, but to every reader who wishes to be well informed upon a topic at once so pleasant and so popular."

DEDICATED BY SPECIAL PERMISSION TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

OLD ENGLISH GLASSES. An

Account of Glass Drinking Vessels in England from Early Times to the End of the Eighteenth Century. By ALBERT HARTSHORNE, F.S.A. Illustrated by about 70 Tinted Plates and several Hundred Illustrations in the Text. Super-royal 4to, £3 3s. net.

Times.—"An important contribution to the library of the serious antiquary and collector."

STYLE. By Walter Raleigh, Professor

of English Literature at University College, Liverpool. Author of "Robert Louis Stevenson," "The English Novel," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

Manchester Guardian.—"It has not only grace and gold brocade, but an intellectual movement. It also has wit; in achieved expression it is beyond what has yet been published from the same hand. In gravity of enthusiasm and in heat of artistic purpose it approves itself the work of a teacher capable of sprinkling the semina flammæ."

TWO NEW VOLUMES OF

"THE SPORTSMAN'S LIBRARY."

Edited by the Right Hon. Sir HERBERT MAXWELL, Bart., M.P.

THE REMINISCENCES of a HUNTS-

MAN. By the Hon. GRANTLEY F. BERKELEY. With the Original Illustrations by John Leech, and several Coloured Plates and other Illustrations by G. H. Jalland. Large 8vo, handsomely bound, 15s.; Large-Paper Edition, limited to 200 copies, £2 2s. net.

THE ART of DEER STALKING By

WILLIAM SCROPE. With Frontispiece by Edwin Landseer and 9 Photogravure Plates from the Original Illustrations. Large 8vo, handsomely bound, 15s.; Large-Paper Editions, limited to 200 copies, £2 2s. net.

[November 11.]

THE NEW NONSENSE BOOK.

MORE BEASTS (for Worse Children).

By H. B. and B. T. B., Authors of "The Bad Child's Book of Beasts." 4to, 3s. 6d.

EDWARD ARNOLD, London and New York.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

A NEW BOOK OF ILLUSTRATION FROM FRESH SOURCES.

In handsome demy 8vo, tastefully printed and bound in cloth, price 7s. 6d.

LESSONS from LIFE (ANIMAL and HUMAN),

being a Collection of Curious and Interesting Facts and Phenomena concerning the Nature, Functions, Relations, and Ministries of Men and Animals, as arranged as Illustrations of Social, Moral, and Religious Truths and Principles. With an Introduction by HUGH MACMILLAN, LL.D., Author of "Bible Teachings in Nature," "The Vine," &c., &c.

In fcap. 4to, cloth, illustrated, price 5s.

CANDLEWICKS: a Year of Thoughts and Fancies. By CAROLINE TILBURY.

"These thoughts and fancies are just keynotes to which the life music of a day may be attuned. The book is one to be prized. A number of delicate fern studies serve as illustrations, and these appear in harmony with the gentle character of the literary contents."

Dundee Advertiser.

In crown 8vo, cloth, gilt lettered, price 5s.

PRE-REFORMATION WORTHIES: their Lives, Teaching, and Influence. By Rev. WILLIAM COWAN, Incumbent of St. Augustine's, Londonderry.

"Mr. Cowan has certainly given us a very interesting, useful, and instructive little volume."—Eccelesiastical Gazette.

"This most interesting volume leads us into paths not familiar to the average student of modern history, and we join in the Bishop of Derry's prefatory words of commendation."—Christian.

NEW ILLUSTRATED WORK ON THE CIVIL WAR.

In demy 8vo, cloth gilt, price 3s. 6d.

EAST ANGLIA and the GREAT CIVIL WAR.

The Rising of Cromwell's Ironsides in the Associated Counties of Cambridge, Huntingdon, Lincoln, Norfolk, Suffolk, Essex, and Hertford. With Appendices and Illustrations. By ALFRED KINGSTON, F.R.Hist.S., Author of "Hertfordshire during the Great Civil War."

In crown 8vo, bound in cloth, price 5s.

Dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. Sir John Lubbock, Bart., M.P., F.R.S., LL.D., D.C.L.

THE BUILDING of the INTELLECT: a

Contribution towards Scientific Method in Education. By DOUGLAS M. GANE, Author of "New South Wales and Victoria in 1885."

"A vigorous and unconventional exposition of the scientific method in education."—Speaker.

"A very thoughtful and suggestive book on education. Well worthy of the study of all who are entrusted with the care of the young."—Glasgow Herald.

A NEW NOVEL.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

A BOOK WITHOUT a MAN. A Story by

AGNES GROZIER HERBERTSON.

"Daintily imagined and prettily written."—Black and White.

In medium 8vo, cloth, illustrated, price 3s. 6d.

THE SMEDLEYS of MATLOCK BANK.

Being a Review of the Religious and Philanthropic Labours of Mr. and Mrs. John Smedley. By HENRY STEER. Dedicated (by permission) to H.R.H. the Princess Louise, Marchioness of Lorne.

"A reliable record of an interesting character and movement."

Literary World.

"An excellent biography. The volume is admirably got up, contains some excellent illustrations, and will well repay perusal."

Derby Gazette.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 2s.

THE THREE RYLANDS: a Hundred Years

of various Christian Work. By JAMES CULROSS, M.A., D.D. With a Prefatory Note by W. RYLAND D. ADKINS, B.A.

"The book throws some interesting sidelights on Nonconformist life and character during the wide interval which divides the middle of the reign of George II. from the long succession of quiet but eventful years of religious and political progress which followed in the wake of the triumph of the first Reform Bill."—Speaker.

NEW VOLUMES OF VERSE.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 5s.

IN LONDON, and other Poems. By C. J.

SHEARER, Author of "A Family of Quality," and "On Heather Hills."

"A clever collection of poems. This book will be welcomed by those who delight in high-class literature. Mr. Shearer in his verses proves himself a poet and a scholar."—Public Opinion.

"The volume is a pleasant and attractive one. The style is lucid, simple, and directly to the point."—Weekly Sun.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. net.

LAYS of LOVE and LIBERTY. By JAMES

A. MACKERETH.

LONDON: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER

ROW, LONDON, E.C.

OLIPHANT'S LIST.

Dr. WHYTE'S NEW BOOK.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER will Publish on Monday Next, price 2s.,

SANTA TERESA:

An Appreciation.

With some passages of the Saint's Writings, Selected,
Adapted, and Arranged by

Dr. ALEXANDER WHYTE.

WORKS BY THE SAME AUTHOR.	s. d.
BIBLE CHARACTERS—ADAM TO ACHAN	3 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—First Series	2 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—Second Series	2 6
BUNYAN CHARACTERS—Third Series	2 6
SAMUEL RUTHERFORD AND HIS CORRESPONDENTS	2 6
JACOB BEHMEN	1 6
LANCELOT ANDREWES AND HIS PRIVATE DEVOTIONS	3 6

Just published, crown 8vo, price 2s. 6d.

SHAKESPEARE, PURITAN, AND RECUSANT.

By Rev. T. CARTER.

With a Prefatory Note by
Rev. Principal J. OSWALD DYKES, D.D.

The SPECTATOR says: "Mr. Carter confines himself practically to a single inquiry—What was the religion of Shakespeare's father?—and he arrives, by arguments which seem to us convincing, at a conclusion opposed to that usually accepted. Mr. Carter has by a clear-headed historical investigation added definitely to our knowledge about Shakespeare himself."

Large crown 8vo, price 6s., with 8 Full-Page Illustrations.

THE GIST OF JAPAN;

The Islands, their People, and Missions.

By Rev. R. B. PEERY, A.M., Ph.D.,
Of the Lutheran Mission, Saga, Japan.

Volume I., now ready, price 10s. 6d.

CHRISTIAN MISSIONS AND SOCIAL PROGRESS:

A Sociological Study of Foreign Missions.

By the Rev. JAMES S. DENNIS, D.D.,

Author of "Foreign Missions after a Century."

In 2 vols., royal 8vo, with upwards of 100 Full-Page Reproductions of Original Photographs, price 21s., cloth extra.

MRS. L. T. MEADE'S NEW STORY.

Handsomely bound, with Illustrations. Price 3s. 6d.

A HANDFUL OF SILVER.

By L. T. MEADE,

Author of

"A Girl in Ten Thousand,"
&c., &c.

FAMOUS SCOTS SERIES.—New vols.

Price 1s. 6d. each; with gilt top, 2s. 6d.

KIRKCALDY OF GRANGE.

By LOUIS A. BARBÉ.

SIR WALTER SCOTT.

By Professor GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

List of the "FAMOUS SCOTS" Series post free.

Post 8vo, art canvas, price 2s. 6d.

THE PLAGIARIST: a Novel. By WILLIAM MYRTLE.

Annie S. Swan's Favourite Novels.

Handsomely bound in cloth, gilt back and side.
Price 3s. 6d. each.

SHEILA.

THE GATES OF EDEN. With New Portrait of the Author.

THE GUINEA STAMP.

BRIAR AND PALM.

MAITLAND OF LAURIESTON.

ST. VEDA'S.

WHO SHALL SERVE

A LOST IDEAL.

OLIPHANT, ANDERSON & FERRIER,
21, Paternoster Square, E.C.; and Edinburgh.

MR. MACQUEEN'S LIST.

THE WILD FLOWERS of SCOTLAND.

By J. H. CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland," &c. Illustrations by John Williamson. Handsomely bound. Large crown 8vo, 6s. net.

"Those who shrink from the hard scientific aspect and the cacophonous would-be Latinity of many works with titles of this kind need have no fear that these pleasant, gossiping papers will be too severely botanical for them. The reader will be hard to please, be he but a lover of nature, who does not find these pages interesting and full of charm."—Times.

"A BOOK THAT BOYS WILL GLOAT OVER." Spectator.

AFLOAT with NELSON; or, From

Nile to Trafalgar. By CHARLES H. EDEN, Author of "George Donnington," "Queer Chums," &c. With 10 Full-page Illustrations by John Williamson. Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt edges, 6s.

"A book of charming romance, based on facts, full of stirring episodes in the life of the nation's great naval hero, Nelson, that will fire the blood of every Briton, old or young. This book will be very suitable as a gift-book to any one seeking the same for a young friend." Admiralty and Horse Guards' Gazette.

THE COURT of KING ARTHUR:

Stories from the Land of the Round Table. By WILLIAM HENRY FROST. 20 Illustrations by Sydney Richmond Burleigh. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"It is a cleverly written adaptation of the chief legends of the Round Table, done after Malory into simple language, and held together in a pretty framework of story of childhood. The book is well illustrated by Mr. S. R. Burleigh." Scotsman.

NEW SIX-SHILLING NOVELS.

A GIRL'S AWAKENING. By J. H.

CRAWFORD, Author of "The Wild Life of Scotland." With Frontispiece by John Williamson. Crown 8vo.

"A pretty and idyllic study is 'A Girl's Awakening.' Mr. Crawford's feeling for nature stands him in good stead, and the background of his picture in the Scottish village is as harmoniously fitted with the central figures, Alan Fordyce and his companions, as one of George Eliot's own drawing."—Athenaeum.

POSSESSED OF DEVILS. By Mrs.

HAROLD E. GORST. Crown 8vo.

"This clever psychological study is well worth reading. That the author has succeeded in X-raying the soul of an egotistic, passionate, self-absorbed modern woman, revealing the tumultuous thoughts and emotions of this tumultuous child, no one who reads this human document will deny."—Englishwoman.

A DRAWING-ROOM CYNIC. By

LOREN KAYE, Author of "Her Ladyship's Income." Art canvas, gilt top, crown 8vo.

"A witty, cynical, whimsical writer is the author of this most captivating story. 'A Drawing-room Cynic' is so much better a novel than the reader is likely to come across for some time, that he will find it advisable to begin it again when he has reached the end, for the book is a gallop from start to finish, and during the race he must miss some of the excellent things of which the story is full."—Queen.

A SINLESS SINNER: a Novel. By

MARY H. TENNYSON, Author of "The Fool of Fate," "A Cruel Dilemma," &c. Crown 8vo.

[Just published.]

THE SIGN of the CROSS. A Novel.

By WILSON BARRETT. With a Preface by the BISHOP of TRURO. Twenty-ninth Thousand. Crown 8vo.

"The book, as well as the play, is a phenomenon of our time, the significance of which, we believe, is wholly for good."—Christian World.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MISS TUDOR"

FAITH, HOPE, and CHARITY: a

Novel of the Graces. By JOHN LE BRETON. Crown 8vo.

"A powerful book, which can scarcely fail to interest and to impress everyone who reads it." Scotsman (First Review).

THE FATE of WOMAN. By Francis

SHORT, Author of "Val Constable's Career." Crown 8vo.

"Fine writing and cleverly conceived situations. . . . the character-sketching is a very strong point in the book." Scotsman.

THE RED PAINTED BOX. By Marie

CONNOR LEIGHTON, Author of "The Harvest of Sin," &c.; Joint-Author of "Convict 99," &c. Crown 8vo.

"It is only at pretty long intervals that stories so full of baffling mystery and powerful interest as 'The Red Painted Box' issue from the press. With cunning art the author weaves her plot, and the reader follows its windings with absorbed attention, spurred on from point to point by the pleasant but deluded belief that he or she has solved the mystery."—Scotsman.

JOHN MACQUEEN, HASTINGS HOUSE,
NORFOLK STREET, STRAND.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD &amp; SONS'

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND HIS

SONS. THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Vols. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

"The best book of the kind ever published."—Illustrated London News. "The most interesting literary memoirs which have been published for many a day."—Spectator. "Will rank among the masterpieces of modern biographical literature."—St. James's Gazette.

SECOND EDITION. AT ALL LIBRARIES

MRS OLIPHANT'S ANNALS OF A PUBLISHING HOUSE.

"Few books more interesting, and few pieces of literary work more skilfully executed."—Guardian. "A book which we can only give thanks for, a book of books."—British Weekly.

SECOND EDITION. NOW READY.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD AND HIS

SONS. THEIR MAGAZINE AND FRIENDS. By Mrs. OLIPHANT. Vols. I. and II., with 4 Portraits.

"Stirring and memorable achievements in letters and politics come to the light."—Scotsman. "Impossible to give the reader any adequate idea of the wealth of these volumes in literary anecdote."—Manchester Guardian.

NOW READY.

WITH the CONQUERING TURK:

CONFESSIONS OF A BASHI-BAZOUK. By G. W. STEEVENS, Author of "The Land of the Dollar," &c. With 4 Maps. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

THIS DAY IS PUBLISHED.

WILD TRAITS in TAME ANIMALS.

BRING SOME FAMILIAR STUDIES IN EVOLUTION. By LOUIS ROBINSON, M.D. With Illustrations by Stephen T. Dadd. Small demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. net.

A NEW NOVEL AT ALL LIBRARIES.

PEACE with HONOUR. By Sydney C.

GRIER, Author of "An Uncrowned King," "His Excellency's English Governess," "In Furthest Ind," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

CHEAPER EDITION.

THE HISTORY of the FOREIGN

POLICY of GREAT BRITAIN. By MONTAGU BURROWS, Chichele Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford, Captain R.N., F.R.S., &c., "Officier de l'Instruction Publique," France, Author of "Commentaries on the History of England," &c. Second Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 6s.

BY PROFESSOR TIELE

ELEMENTS of the SCIENCE of RELIGION. PART I. MORPHOLOGICAL Being the Gifford Lectures delivered before the University of Edinburgh in 1896. By C. P. TIELE, Theol. D., Litt. D. (Bonon.), Hon. M.R.A.S., &c., Professor of the Science of Religion in the University of Leyden. In 2 vols. Vols. I., post 8vo, 7s. 6d. net.

THE EXPANSION of the CHRISTIAN

LIFE. THE DUVE LECTURES FOR 1897. By Rev. J. MARSHALL LANG, D.D. Crown 8vo, 5s.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS,
EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

A SELECTION OF GARDNER, DARTON & CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.

FRIENDS of the MASTER (Christ and His Friends). By the Rev. A. F. WINNINGTON INGRAM, M.A., Bishop-Elect of Stepney, Author of "Work in Great Cities" (Third Edition), "The Men who Crucify Christ" (Second Edition), "Messengers, Watchmen, Stewards," &c. Crown 8vo, art linen boards, 1s. 6d.

NEW WORK BY THE AUTHOR OF "PLAIN WORDS," "PASTOR IN PAROCHIA," &c.

THE CLOSED DOOR: Instructions and Meditations for Quiet Days. By the Right Rev. W. WALSHAM HOW, D.D., first Bishop of Wakefield. Crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d. [Shortly.]

FAITH and SOCIAL SERVICE. By the Very Rev. GEORGE HODGES, Dean of the Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE CHURCH in ENGLAND. By Canon OVERTON. With Maps. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 6s. each. Being the IX. and X. Vols. of "THE NATIONAL CHURCHES." Edited by P. H. DITCHFIELD, M.A. [Shortly.]

AD LUCEM: or, the Ascent of Man through Christ. By the Rev. ALGERNON BARRINGTON SIMON, M.A., Christ Church, Oxford, Rector of Bigbury, Devon; sometime Warden of St. Edward's School, Oxford. Crown 8vo, 6s.

MOHAMMEDANISM: Has it any Future? By the Rev CHARLES H. ROBINSON, Lecturer in Hausa in the University of Cambridge, Author of "Hausa Country." With Introduction by the BISHOP of RIFON. Crown 8vo, 1s. 6d.

ZIGZAG FABLES. By J. A. SHEPHERD. Beautifully printed in Colours, oblong, pictorial, paper boards, 5s. [Shortly.]

SONG FLOWERS: from a "A Child's Garden of Verses." By ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

Set to Music by KATHARINE M. RAMSAY.

Introduction by S. R. CROCKETT.

Illustrations by Gordon Browne, R.I. Demy 4to, fancy boards, printed on superfine paper, 7s. 6d.

STORIES for CHILDREN in ILLUSTRATION of the LORD'S PRAYER. By Mrs. MOLESWORTH, Author of "Farthings," &c. Illustrated by Robert Barnes, Gordon Browne, M. E. Edwards, and W. H. O. Groome. Square cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

STORIES from the FAERIE QUEENE. By MARY MACLEOD. With Introduction by Professor HALLS. Illustrated by A. G. Walker, Sculptor. Large crown 8vo, 6s.

NICCOLINA NICCOLINI. By the AUTHOR of "MDLLE. MORI," &c. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

UNDER the DRAGON THRONE. By L. T. MEADE and ROBERT K. DOUGLAS. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 6s.

JACK'S MATE. By M. B. COX (NOEL WEST), Author of "Left on the Prairie." With numerous Illustrations by F. Feller. Large crown 8vo, cloth boards, 3s. 6d.

MAUD HUMPHREY'S FINE ART COLOURED BOOKS.
BOOK of FAIRY TALES. | BOOK of PETS.
LITTLE GROWN-UPS.

Large 4to, ornamental boards, cloth backs, 6s. each.

[Now ready.]

THE BEST MAGAZINE TO MAKE SUNDAY A BRIGHT AND HAPPY DAY; A REAL HELP IN THE HOME CIRCLE.

230 Original Illustrations	SUNDAY READING FOR THE YOUNG	416 Large Pages.
----------------------------------	---	------------------------

The New Volume now ready, 3s., pictorial paper boards; 5s., cloth extra, gilt edges.

"Cannot fail to be appreciated. The editor has succeeded in a remarkable degree."—Nonconformist.

"We know of no better magazine of its kind."—Church Times.

"As good as ever."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Well written, well illustrated, well printed."—Morning Post.

"'Sunday' might also be called Sunny Days, for the days will be bright for any youngsters who get it."—Christian World.

"Deservedly a favourite."—Saturday Review.

LEADING STRINGS.—THE BABY'S ANNUAL. Large Type. Short Words. Abundance of Pictures. New Volume now ready. Illustrated paper boards, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

GARDNER, DARTON & CO., PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, LONDON.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S NEW BOOKS.

AN ILLUSTRATED RECORD of the RETROSPECTIVE EXHIBITION, held at SOUTH KENSINGTON, 1886. Compiled and Edited by JOHN FISHER, Head Master Kensington School of Art, Bristol, containing 256 Illustrations of Designs, Models, Painting, Drawing from Life, &c., for which Gold and Silver Medals have been awarded by the Department of Science and Art. Demy 4to, 21s. net. [Next week.]

HISTORIC ORNAMENT: a Treatise on Decorative Art and Architectural Ornament. By JAMES WARD, Author of "The Principles of Ornament." 2 vols., demy 8vo, 7s. 6d. each volume.

VOLUME I.: Prehistoric Art, Ancient Art, and Architecture—Eastern Early Christian, Byzantine, Saracenic, Romanesque, Gothic, and Renaissance Architecture and Ornament. With 436 Illustrations.

VOLUME II.: Pottery, Enamels, Ivories, Metal-Work, Furniture, Textile Fabrics, Mosaics, Glass, and Book Decoration. With 317 Illustrations.

THE ART of PAINTING in the QUEEN'S REIGN. Being a Glance at some of the Painters and Paintings of the Period. By A. G. TEMPLE, F.S.A., Director of the Guildhall Gallery, London. With upwards of 60 Colotype Illustrations reproduced from the Works of the chief Artists of the Period. Demy 4to, £3 3s. net. [Next week.]

HARBUTT'S PLASTIC METHOD, and the Use of Plasticine in the Arts of Writing, Drawing, and Modelling in Educational Work. By WM. HARBUTT. With Illustrations. Crown 4to, 4s. [Ready.]

TRAVEL, SPORT, AND NATURAL HISTORY.

IN JUTLAND with a CYCLO. By Charles EDWARDS, Author of "Letters from Crete," "Sardinia and the Sardinians," &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

NATURE and SPORT in SOUTH AFRICA. By H. A. BRYDEN, Author of "Gun and Camera in Southern Africa," &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]
The Times says: "Mr. Bryden is an admirable, practical naturalist, and half his volume is a veritable naturalist's guide and handbook."
The Scotsman says: "Ought to be read and pondered by South African legislators and statesmen, as well as by naturalists and lovers of sport."

SPORT and TRAVEL in INDIA and CENTRAL AMERICA. By A. G. BAGOT, late 60th Rifles ("Bagatelle"), Author of "Sporting Sketches," &c. With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]
The Field says: "Highly entertaining.... Can be opened at any chapter with the certainty of finding something amusing."
The Manchester Guardian says: "Tales of sport and travel told in the tone of a man of refinement and with the directness of a soldier."

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

FOUR POETS. Selections from Works of WORDSWORTH, COLERIDGE, SHELLEY, and KEATS. Edited, with Introduction, by OSWALD CRAWFORD.

The Glasgow Herald says: "A book that will be cherished as a priceless possession."

UNIFORM WITH ABOVE.

LYRICAL VERSE, from ELIZABETH to VICTORIA. 3s. 6d. net.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

UNKIST, UNKIND! By Violet Hunt. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Standard says: "Miss Hunt has essayed a much more difficult task than she set herself in any of those sparkling stories that made her reputation, and she has accomplished it triumphantly.... 'Unkist, Unkind!' is a thoroughly artistic achievement. The setting, so far as fiction is concerned, is highly original, and the surroundings are not only vivid and romantic, but display considerable knowledge of out-of-the-way details."

STORIES and PLAY STORIES. By Violet HUNT, LADY RIDLEY, the Hon. Mrs. HENNIKER, JOSEPH STRANGE, and others. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

HIS CHIEF'S WIFE. By Baroness Albert D'ANETHAN. Crown 8vo, 6s. [Ready.]

JAMES BAKER'S NOVELS.

THE GLEAMING DAWN: a Romance of the Middle Ages. Third Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "A very fine historical romance is 'The Gleaming Dawn,' by James Baker. The chapters dealing with life in Oxford at the beginning of the fifteenth century are particularly excellent where much is good. Mr. Baker evidently knows his period well, and seems to have caught the spirit of the times.... But the human interest is not lost in the historical background, for the silver thread of a pretty love-story runs through the stirring scenes of persecution and battle.... A really fine story."

MARK TILLOTSON. New and Uniform Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

JOHN WESTACOTT. New and Uniform Edition. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

Edited by W. L. COURTNEY.

NOVEMBER.

OUR MILITARY REQUIREMENTS. By Lieut.-Col. Sir G. S. CLARKE, K.C.M.G., R.E.

SOME NOTES on RECENT POETRY in FRANCE. By GABRIEL MOUREY.

THE SPIRIT of TORVISM. By WALTER SICHEL.

A NOTE on GEORGE MEREDITH. By ARTHUR SYMONS.

THE BEHRING SEA DISPUTE (With Map.) By H. W. WILSON.

THE MODERN FRENCH DRAMA.—IV. By A. FILON.

THE CASE for "THE BECHUANA REBELS." By H. R. FOX BOURNE.

A NEW STUDY of NATURAL RELIGION. By W. H. MALLOCK.

THE FUTURE of BRITISH TRADE. By J. B. C. KERSEBAW, F.I.C.

LORD ROBERTS and INDIAN FRONTIER POLICY. By Lieut.-Gen. J. M. LEON INNES, R.E.

THE CHOICE for the SUGAR CONSUMER. By HUGH CHISHOLM.

TENNYSON: a Study in Poetic Workmanship. By HAROLD SPENCER.

LORD SALISBURY'S DEALINGS with FRANCE. By DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE. Sporting Literature and its Critics. By HADLEY PARK.

CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED, LONDON.

THE VICTORIAN ERA SERIES.

In Monthly crown 8vo volumes, cloth boards, 2s. 6d. each.

The aim of the Series is to form an authoritative, scholarly, and attractive Record of the great movements and developments of the age, in Politics, Economics, Religion, Industry, Literature, Science, and Art, and of the life work of its typical and influential men.

Under the General Editorship of Mr. J. HOLLAND ROSE, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge, the individual volumes will be contributed by leading specialists in the various branches of knowledge which fall to be treated in the Series.

The volumes will be published successively on the 15th of each month.

ON NOVEMBER 15TH.

THE RISE of DEMOCRACY. By J. Holland Rose, M.A., late Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge.

ON DECEMBER 15TH.

THE ANGLICAN REVIVAL. By J. H. Overton, D.D., Rector of Epworth and Canon of Lincoln.

Arrangements have also been completed for the following Volumes:—

CHARLES KINGSLEY. By the Very Rev. C. W. STUBBS, D.D., Dean of Ely.

THE GROWTH and ADMINISTRATION of the BRITISH COLONIES, 1837-1897. By the Rev. W. GRESWELL, M.A.

THE FREE TRADE MOVEMENT and its RESULTS. By G. ARMITAGE SMITH.

JOHN BRIGHT. By C. A. Vince, M.A., late Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge.

THE GROWTH of LONDON, 1837-1897. By G. LAURENCE GOMME.

CHARLES DICKENS. By George GISSING.

NATIONAL EDUCATION. By H. HOLMAN, M.A., one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools.

RECENT ADVANCES in ASTRONOMY. By A. H. FISON, D.Sc.

THE SCIENCE of LIFE. By J. ARTHUR THOMSON, M.A.

London: BLACKIE & SON, LIMITED, Old Bailey.

READY IN DECEMBER.

A NEW DICTIONARY OF UNIVERSAL BIOGRAPHY.

CHAMBERS'S BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY.

Dealing with Fifteen Thousand Celebrities of all Nations from the remotest times to the present day; with copious Bibliographies and Pronunciations of the Names.

EDITED BY

DAVID PATRICK, LL.D., Editor of "Chambers's Encyclopædia"

AND

FRANCIS HINDES GROOME,

Assistant Editor of "Chambers's Encyclopædia."

One Volume, crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.; half-morocco, 15s.

W. & R. CHAMBERS, LIMITED, LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

People's Edition, price 6d., with Portrait. (Special terms for quantities.)

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V., with Two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

London: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, Fumival Street, E.C.

EPPS'S COCOA.

EXTRACTS FROM A LECTURE ON FOODS AND THEIR VALUES, by Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., &c.—"If any motives—first, of due regard for health, and second, of getting full food-value for money expended—can be said to weigh with us in choosing our foods, then I say that Cocoa (Epps's being the most nutritious) should be made to replace tea and coffee without hesitation. Cocoa is a food; tea and coffee are not foods. This is the whole science of the matter in a nutshell, and he who runs may read the obvious moral of the story."

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane, London.

TWO-AND-A-HALF per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, on the minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit and allows interest monthly on each completed £1.

BIRKBECK BUILDING SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH.

BIRKBECK FREEHOLD LAND SOCIETY.

HOW TO PURCHASE A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post free. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

THE CONTEMPORARY SCIENCE SERIES.

Edited by HAVELOCK ELLIS.

Crown 8vo, Cloth, 3s. 6d. Some Vols. at 6s. Illustrated.

FOUR IMPORTANT NEW VOLUMES.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

HALLUCINATIONS and ILLUSIONS: A Study of the Fallacies of Perception. By EDMUND PARISH.

"This remarkable little volume."—Daily News.
"Scientific both in method and reasoning. Full of valuable matter for students of the subject."—Scotsman.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

THE PSYCHOLOGY of the EMOTIONS. By Professor TH. RIBOT.

"The revived interest in psychology, the distinct advance made in recent years by investigators, is visible in M. Ribot's volume, 'The Psychology of the Emotions.'"—Times.

"Professor Ribot's treatment is careful, modern, and adequate."—Academy.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s. 124 Illustrations.

THE NEW PSYCHOLOGY. By E. W. SCRIPTURE, Ph.D. (Leipzig).

"We have at present no work in England which gives in so compact a form so comprehensive a view of the subject, or affords so practical a guide to the student."—Liverpool Post.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d. With Diagrams.

SLEEP: Its Physiology, Pathology, Hygiene, and PSYCHOLOGY. By Dr. MARIE DE MANACÉNE (St. Petersburg).

"A complete and a wonderfully interesting exposition, and as such ought to receive a hearty welcome not by the medical student only, but by all who interest themselves in scientific subjects."—Scotsman.

PREVIOUS VOLUMES.

THE EVOLUTION of SEX. By Prof. PATRICK GEDDES and J. ARTHUR THOMSON.

ELECTRICITY in MODERN LIFE. By G. W. DE TUNZELMANN.

THE ORIGIN of the ARYANS. By Dr. TAYLOR.

PHYSIOGNOMY and EXPRESSION. By P. MANTEGAZZA.

EVOLUTION and DISEASE. By J. BLAND SUTTON, F.R.C.S.

THE VILLAGE COMMUNITY. By G. L. GOMME.

THE CRIMINAL. By HAVELOCK ELLIS.

SANITY and INSANITY. By Dr. C. MERCIER.

HYPNOTISM. By Dr. ALBERT MOLL (Berlin). Fourth Edition.

MANUAL TRAINING. By Dr. C. M. WOODWARD.

PRIMITIVE FOLK. By ELIE RECLUS.

THE SCIENCE of FAIRY TALES. By EDWIN SIDNEY HARTLAND.

BACTERIA and their PRODUCTS. By Dr. SIMS WOODHEAD.

EVOLUTION of MARRIAGE. By LETOURNEAU.

EDUCATION and HEREDITY. By J. M. GUYAU.

THE MAN of GENIUS. By Prof. LOMBROSO.

GRAMMAR of SCIENCE. By Prof. PEARSON.

PROPERTY: Its Origin and Development. By LETOURNEAU.

VOLCANOES: Past and Present. By Prof. EDWARD HULL, LL.D., F.R.S.

PUBLIC HEALTH PROBLEMS. By Dr. J. F. J. SYKES.

MODERN METEOROLOGY. By D. FRANK WALDO.

THE GERM PLASM. By AUGUST WEISSMANN. 6s.

THE INDUSTRIES of ANIMALS. By F. HOUSMAN.

MAN and WOMAN. By HAVELOCK ELLIS. 6s. Second Edition.

MODERN CAPITALISM. By J. A. HOBSON.

APPARITIONS and THOUGHT TRANSFERENCE. By FRANK PODMORE.

INTRODUCTION to COMPARATIVE PSYCHOLOGY. By Prof. C. LLOYD MORGAN. 6s.

THE ORIGINS of INVENTION. By OTIS T. MASON.

THE GROWTH of the BRAIN. By Prof. H. H. DONALDSON. 6s.

EVOLUTION in ART. By Prof. A. C. HADDON. 6s.

London:

WALTER SCOTT, LIMITED, Paternoster Square.

WARD, LOCK & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

Complete Catalogue, comprising over 3,000 Standard and Reference Works, post free on application.

NEW NOVELS.

GUY BOOTHBY'S NEW NOVEL.

THE FASCINATION of the KING. 5s.

Fourth Edition. Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

"Highly ingenious and exciting... a stirring romance."

"A brilliant tale, dramatically and vigorously told."

ARTHUR MORRISON'S NEW NOVEL OF CRIME.

Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood and others.

THE DORRINGTON DEED BOX. 5s.

By ARTHUR MORRISON.

Author of "A Child of the Jago," "Martin Hewitt," &c.

"Of exceptional power, with a genius comparing with that of Dickens."—Aberdeen Press.

SECOND EDITION.

The CRIME and the CRIMINAL. 3s. 6d.

By RICHARD MARSH.

"We know of no similar tale so thoroughly readable and so consistently exciting since Wilkie Collins's 'Woman in White,' or Conan Doyle's 'Study in Scarlet.'"

Black and White.

A STARTLING NOVEL.

TEMPTATION. 3s. 6d.

By "GRAHAM IRVING."

"A downright cunning and ingenious romance."

"A good story. There is cleverness of plot; the writer's style is throughout excellent."—The Athenaeum.

NEW NOVEL BY HEADON HILL.

Author of "Queen of Night," "By a Hair's Breadth," &c.

BEACON FIRES. 3s. 6d.

Illustrated by Stanley L. Wood.

"Told with singular skill; interests and holds the reader to the end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The book is decidedly clever, and for a Christmas gift-book we do not know of a better."—British Weekly.

AT MIDNIGHT. 3s. 6d.

By ADA CAMBRIDGE.

Author of "A Humble Enterprise," which the Daily Mail called:

"The most perfect piece of literary fiction which has yet been produced by an Australian writer."

TWO BEAUTIFUL GIFT BOOKS.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. each.

Profusely Illustrated by HAROLD COPPING.

"Beautifully bound."—The Scotsman.

JOHN STRANGE WINTER'S

NEW STORY OF CHILD LIFE.

PRINCESS SARAH.

"Delightful and engrossing... If the author had not long ago made a name as a story-teller this volume would have proved her worth."—The Scotsman.

ETHEL TURNER'S NEW BOOK

MISS BOBBIE.

"Interesting, mirthful, and pathetic."—Christian Age.

"Miss Ethel Turner is fast becoming to the world at large what the authoress of 'Little Men,' &c., was for generations past to America, and to children and grown-up people alike all the world over."—Westminster Gazette.

ETHEL TURNER'S WORKS.

Uniform with the above.

THE LITTLE LARKIN 3s. 6d.

SEVEN LITTLE AUSTRALIANS 3s. 6d.

THE FAMILY at MISRULE 3s. 6d.

READY SHORTLY.

Crown 8vo, art canvas, gilt, 5s., with special Title-page designed by A. A. Turbayne.

POEMS of

The LOVE and PRIDE of ENGLAND.

EDITED BY

FREDERICK and MILLICENT WEDMORE.

A hundred patriotic poems, old and new, have been found worthy of inclusion in this volume, in which it has been sought to maintain a high standard of technical merit. Among living writers who are represented are Swinburne, Austin Dobson, Watts Dunton, the Poet Laureate, Sir Lewis Morris, William Watson, Robert Bridges, and Conan Doyle.

WARD, LOCK & CO., LIMITED, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW VOLUMES.

ENTIRELY NEW AND IMPORTANT WORK BY A LEADING MEDICAL PRACTITIONER.

Now Ready, price 10s. 6d.

CASSELL'S FAMILY DOCTOR. A

New and Original Work. By a MEDICAL MAN.
Illustrated.

This work has been written by a medical man of wide experience and brilliant attainments as a general practitioner, with the avowed intention of supplying a family friend and medical adviser to the mother of a family or head of a house in times of emergency from sudden illness or accident.

Now ready, price 3s. 6d.

TWO OLD LADIES, TWO FOOLISH

FAIRIES, and a TOM CAT. The Surprising Adventures of Tuppy and Tue. Showing why they left Fairyland, what Puss-in-Boots had to do with it, and why the Spring was late that year. By MAGGIE BROWNE, Author of "Wanted—a King," &c., &c. With Four Coloured Plates and numerous Illustrations by A. Rackham.

RIVERS of the SOUTH and WEST

COASTS. With Etching as Frontispiece, and numerous Illustrations by leading Artists. 42s.

PICTORIAL ENGLAND and WALES.

With upwards of 320 beautiful Illustrations prepared from copyright Photographs. Cloth, 9s.; on superior paper, half Persian, in box, 16s. net.

A HISTORY of ENGLAND. From the Landing of Julius Cæsar to the Present Day. By H. O. ARNOLD-FORSTER, M.P. Illustrated, 6s.

THE CHURCH of ENGLAND: A

History for the People. By the Very Rev. H. D. M. SPENCE, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrated, Vols. I. and II., 6s. each.

WITH NATURE and a CAMERA:

being the Adventures and Observations of a Field Naturalist and an Animal Photographer. By RICHARD KEARTON, F.Z.S. Illustrated by a Special Frontispiece, and 180 Pictures of Wild Birds, Animals, &c., from Photographs taken direct from Nature by Cherry Kearton. 21s.

THE MAGAZINE of ART YEARLY

VOLUME. With about 1,000 Choice Illustrations, and a Series of Special Plates, 21s.

NEW WORKS OF FICTION.

BY A HAIR'S-BREADTH. By Headon

HILL. 6s.

COUPID'S GARDEN. Stories by Ellen

THORNEYCROFT FOWLER. 6s.

A LIMITED SUCCESS. By Sarah

PITT. 6s.

THE WROTHAMS of WROTHAM

COURT. By FRANCIS H. FRESHFIELD. 6s.

WORKS BY J. M. BARRIE.

AN ILLUSTRATED EDITION OF

SENTIMENTAL TOMMY. Illustrated

by W. Hatherell, R.L. 6s.

THE LITTLE MINISTER. With

9 Illustrations by W. Hole, R.S.A. 50th Thousand. 6s.

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED,
London; and all Booksellers.

HODDER & STOUGHTON'S NEW WORKS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

MARY QUEEN of SCOTS, from Her

Birth to Her Flight into England:—A Brief Biography, with Critical Notes, a Few Documents hitherto Unpublished, and an Itinerary. By DAVID HAY FLEMING.

"Mr. Hay Fleming has done historical and political students a signal service by putting together in this compact form all the facts needful for an understanding of the parts which Scotland played in the rivalries between England and France, and England and Spain."

The Daily News.

"Mr. Hay Fleming gives us the quintessence of six-and-twenty eventful, changeable, and tragic years."

The Scotsman.

"Of extreme value alike to the general reader and to the serious student."—The Daily Mail.

"The work will prove a mine of wealth by reason of its marvellous collection of documentary evidence, much of it for the first time published in an accessible form. The reader will rise from its perusal feeling probably that for the first time he has fairly got a grip of the essentials in the Marian controversy."—The Glasgow Daily Mail.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

OUTLINES of a PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION, Based on Psychology and History. By AUGUSTE SABATIER, Dean of the Faculty of Protestant Theology, Paris. Authorised Translation by the Rev. T. A. Reed.

"It contains matters of surpassing interest. The volume is an attractive one, and the translation well accomplished."

The Expository Times.

"It is a fascinating book. It quivers with the intense emotion of a fine spirit who has lived through the experience embodied in the book."—The Aberdeen Free Press.

"One of the most noteworthy books on theology which have appeared for some time."—The Dundee Advertiser.

THE GIFFORD LECTURES, 1897.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

THE PROVIDENTIAL ORDER of the WORLD. By ALEXANDER BALMAIN BRUCE, D.D., Professor of Apologetics and New Testament Exegesis in the Free Church College, Glasgow.

"His lectures are excellent literature, and will add to the reputation he already enjoys as a scholar and theologian."

The Scotsman.

"This is a serious book, dealing in a thoughtful, scholarly way with a great subject, and dealt with in that charming style peculiar to Professor Bruce."

The Church Family Newspaper.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA. By

HESBA STRETTON, Author of "Jessica's First Prayer," &c.

Crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 3s. 6d.

SUNDAY AFTERNOON VERSES.

Collected from "The British Weekly" by W. ROBERTSON NICOLL. Printed in Red and Black.

Fcap. 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

A DOCTOR of the OLD SCHOOL.

By IAN MACLAREN. With numerous Illustrations by Frederick C. Gordon.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

THE POTTER'S WHEEL. By the Rev. JOHN WATSON, D.D. (Ian MacLaren).

CONTENTS.—The Potter's Wheel—Departures in Life—Broken Homes—Loss of Goods—Trials of Faith—Missing the Prize of Life—Vexatious Children—Obscurity—Vanishing Illusions—The Defeats of the Soul—The Veiling of the Soul—Perplexing Providences—The World Sorrow—The Problem of Personal Suffering—Death—Our Departed.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THRO' LATTICE WINDOWS. By

W. J. DAWSON, Author of "London Lyrics," "The Makers of Modern English," &c.

"The value of such a book as this is not easily estimated.....This book is one of lasting interest."

Dundee Advertiser.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CHRONICLES of the PARISH of TAXWOOD. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. With Eight Illustrations.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

LIFE'S LOOK-OUT. The Auto-

biography of Sydney Watson.

"The fact that very much which I have written in story form during the past ten years has had its basis in personal experience and adventure, has made it almost imperative now that something like a full, clear autobiography should appear; and this, in addition to the requests from many of my readers in many lands for such a book, seems raison d'être sufficient to demand the publication of the present volume."—FROM THE PREFACE.

London: HODDER & STOUGHTON,
27, Paternoster Row, E.C.

CONTENTS.

REVIEWS	PAGE
Mr. Dobson's Poetry...	367
Mrs. Browning's Letters ...	368
For Children ...	369
The Blessed Reformation ...	370
Sketches and Stories...	371
A Tuscan Tragedy ...	372
BRIEFER MENTION ...	373
NOTES AND NEWS ...	375
AN ACADEMY OF LETTERS ...	376
T. E. BROWN: A EULOGY ...	377
PARIS LETTER ...	378
WHAT THE PEOPLE READ: IV., A BOOKSTALL KEEPER ...	378
THE BOOK MARKET ...	379
DRAMA ...	380
THE WEEK ...	381
NEW BOOKS RECEIVED...	381
BOOK REVIEWS REVIEWED ...	382

FICTION SUPPLEMENT ...	101-104
------------------------	---------

REVIEWS.

MR. DOBSON'S POETRY.

Collected Poems. By Austin Dobson.
(Kegan Paul & Co.)

THE motto upon Mr. Dobson's new title-page is "Majores majora sonent." His preface runs:

"This volume comprises all the verses written by me during the last thirty years which—in my opinion—seem worthy of preservation. Even with these it is possible that I have occasionally been more indulgent to a personal memory than attentive to a critical instinct. But I am fully conscious of the limitations of the result attained, and the motto on my title-page is sincere. Let me here complete it:

"'Mihi parva locuto Sufficit in vestras sæpe redire manus.'"

This is the modesty of a man who knows not only his powers, but his limitations. But excellent critic of his own work as he is, Mr. Dobson does not say everything. "Majores majora sonent?" True; but the greatest of them all never brought truer enthusiasm for letters or more careful workmanship to his task. Mr. Dobson never nods; never relinquishes the file till the last moment. And although greater things than those to be found in these pages have been said, yet in agreeableness Mr. Dobson's belong to the highest rank.

Agreeableness is, indeed, the dominant quality of Mr. Dobson's work, and there are occasions on which we would choose to read him before any poet. He is the most restful of singers: one can with him be so comfortable in a chair; he leads to so easy a relaxation of the risible muscles—the smile within the smile; he is so gentle and gentlemanly; so courteous; so amused and amusive; so whimsically sentimental; while, above all, he is a poet. Poets who also are witty are not common; but the poet whose wit is kindly and domestic is even more rare. Prior and Gay, Goldsmith and Hood, Præd and the late Frederick Locker-Lampson—these are Mr. Dobson's fore-runners; but he has something more than them all. His workmanship is more dexterous, his critical faculty is acuter, his erudition is wider, his fancy is more mellow. Mr. Dobson has not so robust a humour as the author of "Retaliation," nor so agile an invention as Hood, he is less brilliant than Præd, and less spontaneous than Locker-Lampson; but there are many things in the volume before us that not one of these men could have written: "The Curé's Progress," for example, "The Secrets of the Heart," "The Idyll of the Carp," "The Dying of Tanneguy Du Bois," and one or two of the essays in old French forms. Here Mr. Dobson stands alone.

Look, for example, at "The Curé's Progress," which, though well-known, may always profitably be quoted again: it is so simple, so slight, and yet irresistibly charming and distinguished:

"Monsieur the Curé down the street
Comes with his kind old face—
With his coat worn bare, and his straggling hair,
And his green umbrella-case.

"You may see him pass by the little 'Grande Place,'
And the tiny 'Hôtel-de-Ville,'
He smiles, as he goes, to the 'fleuriste Rose,
And the 'pompier Théophile.

"He turns, as a rule, through the 'Marché cool,
Where the noisy fish-wives call;
And his compliment pays to the 'Belle Thérèse,'
As she knits in her dusky stall.

"There's a letter to drop at the locksmith's shop,
And Toto, the locksmith's niece,
Has jubilant hopes, for the Curé gropes
In his tails for a 'pain d'épice."

"There's a little dispute with a merchant of fruit,
Who is said to be heterodox,
That will ended be with a 'Ma foi, oui!'
And a pinch from the Curé's box.

"There is also a word that no one heard
To the furrier's daughter Lou;
And a pale cheek fed with a flickering red,
And a 'Bon Dieu garde M'sieu!

"But a grander way for the 'Sous-Préfet,
And a bow for Ma'am'selle Anne;
And a mock 'off-hat' to the Notary's cat,
And a nod to the Sacristan:

"For ever through life the Curé goes
With a smile on his kind old face—
With his coat worn bare, and his straggling hair,
And his green umbrella-case."

This is both poem and picture. The curé is a visible, almost tangible influence. "Majores majora sonent," assuredly; but in its way this smaller thing is perfect. Our private theory has always been that Mr. Dobson, were he more ambitious, might himself achieve something greater. Now and then one chances in his poems on a passage betokening finer gifts of imagination than he usually employs. In "The Dying of Tanneguy Du Bois," for example, are these lines:

"Yea, now with me all dreams are done, I ween,
Grown faint and unremembered; voices call
High up, like misty warders dimly seen,
Moving at morn on some Burgundian wall."

The simile is in the grand manner, and the march of syllables is splendidly resolute; and in "The Idyll of the Carp" we find this delicately harmonious passage:

"Why, that's my good chambellan, with his seal—
A kind old man!—he carves me orange-peel
In quaint devices at refection hours,
Equips my sweet-pouch, brings me morning flowers,
Or chirrups madrigals with old, sweet words,
Such as men loved when people wooed like birds,
And spoke the true note first."

The last three lines are in Mr. Dobson's best vein. He is always best when he looks back—"Ah, but the back-look, lingering, for old sake's sake!" His panacea for troubles in our own day is to recollect (or invent) kindlier days that are dead. He has the old world point of view. Look how completely he has insinuated himself into the skin of Goldsmith in this postscript to "Retaliation," which takes the form of an epitaph on Johnson. We quote the opening lines:

"Here Johnson is laid. Have a care how you walk;
If he stir in his sleep, in his sleep he will talk.
Ye gods! how he talk'd! What a torrent of sound
His hearers invaded, encompass'd and—drown'd!
What a banquet of memory, fact, illustration,
In that innings-for-one that he call'd conversation!
Can't you hear his sonorous 'Why, no, sir!'
and 'Stay, sir!'
Your premiss is wrong,' or 'You don't see your way, sir!'
How he silenc'd a prig, or a slipshod romancer!
How he pounc'd on a fool with a knock-me-down answer!

"But peace to his slumbers! Tho' rough in the rind,
The heart of the giant was gentle and kind:
What signifies now, if in bouts with a friend,
When his pistol miss'd fire, he would use the butt-end?
If he trampled your flow'rs, like a bull in a garden,
What matter for that? He was sure to ask pardon;
And you felt on the whole, tho' he'd toss'd you and gor'd you,
It was something, at least, that he had not ignor'd you."

It is the very manner of Goldsmith. This piece, by the way, is one of the most important of the additions, which are only too few. On the other hand, Mr. Dobson has made not many omissions. We miss "The Jessamy Bride," a charming poem in honour of Goldsmith and Goldsmith's Miss Horneck; but our other old favourites are all here. There are changes of arrangement, all, we think, for the better. "In After Days," for instance, now serves as epilogue.

Among the poems which are new to us are two rondeaux, a form of verse in which Mr. Dobson is now the only active artificer. Among all the experimentalists who some years ago played with the rondeau and ballade, the triolet and villanelle, none so mastered the theory of the art as he did. Mr. Lang and Mr. Henley have written more ballades, but they have never excelled the "Pompadour's Fan," the "Armada," and "Imitation" ("The man who plants cabbages imitates, too!") in this volume. Mr. Henley made the rondeau an obedient servant, instead of the perverse master it is in the hands of most rhymesters, but his tendency, like Mr. Swinburne's with the roundel, was to ask it to do too much. Mr. Dobson knows exactly what the form is capable of, and demands no more. As specimens of his skill with the rondeau we may quote the following. This is called "Léal Souvenir":

"For old sake's sake!" 'Twere hard to choose
Words fitter for an old-world Muse
Than these, that in their cadence bring
Faint fragrance of the posy-ring,
And charms that rustic lovers use.

"The long day lengthens, and we lose
The first pale flush, the morning hues—
Ah! but the back-look, lingering,
For old sake's sake!

"That we retain. Though Time refuse
To lift the veil on forward views,
Despot in most, he is not king
Of those kind memories that cling
Around his travelled avenues
For old sake's sake!

And the other is "A Greeting," addressed presumably to a friend in America:

"But once or twice we met, touched hands,
To-day between us both expands
A waste of tumbling waters wide—
A waste by me as yet untried,
Vague with the doubt of unknown lands.

"Time like a despot speeds his sands:
A year he blots, a day he brands;
We walked, we walked by Themis' side
But once or twice.

"What makes a friend? What filmy strands
Are these that turn to iron bands?
What knot is this so firmly tied
That nought but Fate can now divide?
Ah, these are things one understands
But once or twice!"

Despite the rigidity of their laws and restrictions of space, these two experiments are compact of true poetry.

Although it is convenient to have all Mr. Dobson's poems in a single volume, we cannot consider that the decision not to reprint the two little books which until now have shared them is a happy one. Prettier books than these—Old World Idylls and At the Sign of the Lyre—do not exist, and they might very well have enjoyed a longer life. As it is, Mr. Dobson's new readers are destined never to possess the exquisite frontispieces by Mr. E. A. Abbey, nor Mr. Alfred Parsons's dainty colophon. Instead, they are offered a portrait of the poet, which, though of course interesting, is less in harmony. Nor is the size of this single embrative volume the ideal one for such pieces. "A dear and dumpy twelve" is nigher the perfect form in which to possess these lyrics and their companions. We hope that the publishers will think better of their intention to issue the earlier volumes no more. And Mr. Dobson's threat to cease singing must also be reconsidered. In some new verses, addressed "To One who Bids Me Sing," he says:

"You ask a 'many-winter'd' Bard,
Where hides his old vocation?
I'll give—the answer is not hard—
A classic explanation.

"'Immortal' though he be, he still,
Tithonus-like, grows older,
While she, his Muse of Pinus Hill,
Still bares a youthful shoulder.

"Could that too-sprightly Nymph but leave
Her ageless grace and beauty,
They might, betwixt them both, achieve
A hymn de Senectute;

"But She—She can't grow gray; and so
Her slave, whose hairs are falling,
Must e'en his Doric flute forego,
And seek some graver calling—

"Not ill-content to stand aside,
To yield to minstrels fitter,
His singing-ropes, his singing-pride,
His fancies sweet—and bitter!"

This must not be! Mr. Dobson must add many poems to his store. One could so easily enumerate a dozen bards whose silence would be more acceptable.

MRS. BROWNING'S LETTERS.

The Letters of Elizabeth Barrett Browning.
Edited, with Biographical Additions, by Frederick G. Kenyon. With portraits.
2 vols. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

MR. KENYON finds it necessary to defend the publication of Mrs. Browning's letters, but it is a work of supererogation. No objection was ever made by either Mr. or Mrs. Browning to publication after their death; and in Mrs. Browning's case it is peculiarly a just debt to literary history. We have a right to know as much as may be known about the greatest English poetess. Mr. Kenyon has, perhaps, erred on the side of printing too much, or, rather, printing the letters too much as they stand—a method which involves repetition as well as a good deal of comparatively uninteresting and uninforming detail. But these volumes remain for us at present the only substitute for a regular biography of Elizabeth Barrett Browning; and they will form the mine out of which subsequent and shorter and more critical biographies must be dug. To the historian of English poetry they will be invaluable; and to us, to whom the memory of the Brownings is still fresh, they are full of new lights and new beauties.

The greatest English poetess! Such is Mrs. Browning's claim, not to be challenged even by the right admirers of a cloistral genius like Christina Rossetti. The author of Aurora Leigh, the Sonnets from the Portuguese (so-named, as we now learn, at Mr. Browning's suggestion, instead of Sonnet Translated from the Bosnian)—"Casa Guidi Windows," "Wine of Cyprus," "The Cry of the Children," and the rest, is, indeed, not merely to be counted poet by comparison with the English women who have written verse. Miss Barrett herself appreciated the lack of compliment involved in the word "poetess." She wrote in 1845:

"It is a strong impression with me that previous to Joanna Baillie there was no such thing in England as a poetess. Where is our poetess before Joanna Baillie—poetess in the true sense? Lady Winchilsea had an eye, as Wordsworth found out; but the Duchess of Newcastle had more poetry in her than Lady Winchilsea. It has long been a 'fact,' to my view of the matter, that Joanna Baillie is the first female poet in all senses in England."

Well, we do not think so much of Joanna Baillie now; and Miss Eliza Cook has had her day, and Mrs. Hemans and L. E. L. are fading into the dark. But though Mrs. Browning wrote much that will not live, there remains, after all deductions, a certain body of work in her six volumes imperishable for its beauty and truth and strength, and entitling her to rank with the greatest of our English poets.

Not very much that is new is to be learnt from the letters as to the position of the poems; but that is because the information contained in them has already been drawn upon. Love for the classics and for Wordsworth seem to have been the earliest influences. On the latter point this extract from a letter in 1843 is interesting. It represents her classification of herself among the "blind admirers" of Wordsworth:

"His spirit has worked a good work, and has freed into the capacity of work other noble spirits. He took the initiative in a great poetic movement, and is not only to be praised for what he has done, but for what he has helped his age to do. For the rest, Byron has more passion and intensity, Shelley more fancy and music, Coleridge could see further into the unseen, and not one of those poets has insulted his own genius by the production of whole poems, such as I could name of Wordsworth's, the vulgarity of which is childish, and the childishness vulgar. Still the wings of his genius are wide enough to cast a shadow over its feet, and our gratitude should be stronger than our critical acumen. Yes, I will be a blind admirer of Wordsworth. I will shut my eyes and be blind. Better so, than see too well for the thankfulness which is his due from me."

"Apollo taught him under the laurel, while all the Muses looked through the boughs"—is a phrase she applies to Wordsworth elsewhere. And she enjoys telling the story of Wordsworth going to Court, and the young Queen being quite "fluttered" at seeing him:

"'She had not a word to say,' said Mrs. Jameson, who came to see me the other day and complained of the omission as 'unqueenly'; but I disagreed with her, and thought the being 'fluttered' the highest compliment. She told me that a short time ago the Queen confessed she never had read Wordsworth, on which a Maid of Honour observed, 'That is a pity, he would do your Majesty a great deal of good.'"

Inter alia we learn about the "Cry of the Children," that (in answer to a complaint against the rhythm) "the first stanza came into my head in a hurricane, and I was obliged to make the other stanzas like it—that is the whole mystery of the iniquity." "Lady Geraldine's Courtship" was hastily finished from a ballad "lying by" in 1844, in order to fill up the first of her two volumes of poems, then on the point of publication; the second volume being found by Mr. Moxon, the publisher, to be seventy pages longer than the first; "I did so by writing—i.e., composing, one hundred and forty lines last Saturday! I seemed to be in a dream all day! Long lines too—with fifteen syllables in each!" Miss Barrett also gives her friend, Mr. Boyd, this interesting explanation of the rhymes in "Wine of Cyprus," which include such curious specimens as silence and island, panther and saunter, Bion and undying, Nazianzen and glancing.

"I have a theory about double rhymes for which I shall be attacked by the critics, but which I could justify perhaps on high authority, or at least analogy. These volumes of mine have more double rhymes than any two books of English poems that ever to my knowledge were printed; I mean of English poems, not comic. Now of double rhymes in use, which are perfect rhymes, you are aware how few there are, and yet you are also aware of what an admirable effect in making a rhythm various and vigorous double rhyming is in English poetry. Therefore, I have used a certain license; and after much thoughtful study of the Elizabethan writers, have ventured it with the public. And do you tell me—you who object to the use of a different vowel in a double rhyme—why you rhyme (as everybody does, without blame from everybody) 'given' to 'heaven,' when you object to my rhyming 'remember' to 'chamber'? The analogy is all on my side, and I believe that the spirit of the English language is also."

Mrs. Browning's literary and political judgments, both on men and things, are not invariably unimpeachable. But they always have a strong personal interest. She was inclined, as is common with physically weak women, to worship strength and will. She owned to "an immoral sympathy with power." Possibly that accounts for her unbroken love for her father, who behaved like a brute to her, or, rather, as an ex-West Indian planter and slave-owner might have been expected to behave in anti-slavery fiction. At any rate, her belief in the Emperor Louis Napoleon inspires the greater half of the letters in the second volume; and her bitterness against England during the Italian crisis of 1859 is more a protest against inaction than anything else. It all reminds us very forcibly of the recent Phil-Hellenic outbursts. Apart from her worship of her husband, Mrs. Browning's other principal enthusiasms, as revealed in these letters, were for Tennyson and George Sand. Of Tennyson she wrote in 1843: "He is one of God's singers, whether he knows it or does not know it." And this is a delightful sketch (in 1855):

"One of the pleasantest things which has happened to us is the coming down on us of the Laureate, who, being in London for three or four days, spent two of them with us, dined with us, smoked with us, opened his heart to us (and the second bottle of port), and ended by reading 'Maud' through from end to end, and going away at half-past two in the morning. If I had had a heart to spare, he would certainly have won mine. He is captivating with his frankness, confidingness, and unexampled naïveté! Think of his stopping in 'Maud' every now and then—'There's a wonderful touch! That's very tender. How beautiful that is!' Yes, and it was wonderful, tender, beautiful, and he read exquisitely, in a voice like an organ, rather music than speech."

By the way, Mrs. Browning's own choice for the laureateship on Wordsworth's death was not Tennyson, who "could wait," but Leigh Hunt. She thought the office must in any case be kept up, "for Spenser's sake."

With George Sand—of whom she wrote, in 1845, "if Madame Dudevant is not the first female genius of any country or age, I really do not know who is"—Mrs. Browning became personally acquainted when staying in Paris in 1852. Her descriptions of the great Frenchwoman are very vivid, but too long to quote. "I did not love her," she says, after the first meeting, "but I felt the burning soul through all that quietness, and was not disappointed in George Sand."

But, of course, one wants chiefly to hear what Mrs. Browning may have fresh to say about her husband. Most of the information, however, in these letters has already become public property. We have, indeed, for the first time the whole story of their romantic elopement and marriage, told in the long letter to Mrs. Martin (vol. i., pp. 286-297), but the essential facts are not new, though Mrs. Browning's own account is deeply moving and precious. What is more novel is our ability now to trace in the earlier letters her first allusions to the man whom afterwards she was to marry, and whom she knew so well in all but bodily presence for years before he insisted on her receiving him. Take this passage, for instance, from a letter of 1843, referring to an adverse criticism on the "Dramatic Lyrics," which charged Browning with taking pleasure in being enigmatical:

"There is truth on both sides, but it seems to me hard truth on Browning. I do assure you I never saw him in my life—do not know him even by correspondence—and yet, whether through fellow-feeling for Eleusinian mysteries, or whether through the more generous motive of appreciation of his powers, I am very sensitive to the thousand and one stripes with which the assembly of critics doth expound its vocation over him. The truth is, it is easier to find a more faultless writer than a poet of equal genius. Don't let us fall into the category of the sons of Noah. Noah was once drunk, indeed, but once he built the ark."

Her first letter from Browning, in 1845, excites this mention in a letter to Mrs. Marten: "I had a letter from Browning the poet last night, which threw me into ecstasies—Browning, the author of 'Paracelsus,' and king of the mystics." And later in the year she criticises his "Sphinxiness" as follows:

"The fault is certainly great, and the disadvantage scarcely calculable, it is so great. He cuts his language into bits, and one has to join them together, as young children do their dissected maps, in order to make any meaning at all, and to study hard before one can do it. . . . The consequence is that he is not read except in a peculiar circle very strait and narrow. He will not die, because the principle of life is in him, but he will not live the warm summer life which is permitted to many of very inferior faculties, because he does not come out into the sun."

A very large amount of space in these letters is devoted to chatter about "Penini," their boy's pet-name, and to spiritualism, in which Mrs. Browning, in spite of her husband, was a believer. There is not very much permanent public interest in either of these subjects; but they form signs of character, partly charming, partly pathetic, and, in any case, altogether human, and appealing to the common loves and weaknesses of mortality. Altogether, a fine and beautiful character, Elizabeth Barrett Browning, that "lyric love, half angel, and half bird":

"Boldest of hearts that ever braved the sun,
Took sanctuary within the holier blue,
And sang a kindred soul out to his face—
Yet human at the red-ripe of the heart."

Hers was an unutterably sad, unutterably happy life, and in both aspects it was felt all through to the very finger-tips. The letters, written without thought of publicity, give a curiously simple, affectionate, lovable picture of her rich personality.

FOR CHILDREN.

A Book of Verses for Children. Compiled by Edward Verrall Lucas. (Grant Richards.)

MR. LUCAS's collection is serious, humorous, ironical, and (for boys) heroic and prospective. The humour makes, perhaps, the most conspicuous part of this delightful volume—perhaps only because some instinct takes the reader to that section first; but all moods are well represented, and the variety is excellent. The character of the anthology is quite distinct. Poetry books compiled for children have been often made up from books not originally written for children; poetry written for the grown-up world has been searched for pieces that might be intelligible and interesting also to the child: Coventry Patmore's Child's Garland, Mr. Palgrave's Children's Treasury of Lyrical Poetry, Mr. Henley's Lyra Heroica, and the Poet's Walk (especially for boys) are a few of the well-known and well-loved examples of this kind of collection. On the other hand, there are poems addressed especially to childish readers, and treating of childish things, such as Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal volume, and the queer, queer little books of Elizabeth Turner and Anne and Jane Taylor, which have retained, it seems, an almost Goblin-like immortality of their own; at intervals they re-appear, to disconcert and to amuse; they are grotesque and grave. There is hardly a parent that will not thank Mr. Lucas for the opportunity of reading to the children of to-day the "Cautionary Tales" that his or her grand father took seriously when the nineteenth century was in frills. Stevenson, Dr. Watts, the Misses Taylor, "Lewis Carroll," and a hundred more were authors for children; Mr. Lucas is their anthologist, and it is from their books—books written for children and about children—that he chiefly gathers his pieces. There might even be the light shadow of a fault to be found in the fact that the examples of other books for children have rather led him to overstep the boundaries he seemed to have set himself, and to give a page or two to "Young Lochinvar," a song originally sung by a grown-up—indeed, a very well-grown—lady to an audience keenly alive to the fact that they were her contemporaries. In addition to this, there are a few grown-up sea-songs, poaching-songs, and poems of action and adventure; but these have generally some special point of attraction for the boy; and perhaps there is hardly anything in the volume which our pleasure in this individual and unique collection would wish away except "Lochinvar." Perhaps it was put in for the prospective interest of the girls; still, the book might have been content to lack it. So it might have been as well, let us add, without Mrs. Norton's "Arab Steed"—for a different reason. "Lochinvar" was a song for a grown-up audience, which children have been admitted to join; Mrs. Norton's poem was written for the grown-up, and they now reject it, and leave it for children. Mr. Lucas's collection is not precisely concerned with either. The querulousness of this single criticism may be taken as a sign of the success with which Mr. Lucas has defined and generally observed his own distinctive plan.

He has gone into the by-ways. From an audacious poem, dated 1500, we learn with astonishment that even at that remote day the Naughty Boy was respected, that a heart beat in sympathy with him in the ranks of the grown-up, and that his just aspirations even then were "voiced," as they say now. "I would my master were a hare," says the early poet in his behalf, "and I myself a jolly hunter." These are things we should not have guessed; in fact, it was only with the dull days of Anne and Jane Taylor that the Cautionary Tale became so implacable, and the naughty boy, the naughty girl, and the honestly and humanly adventurous girl did so "catch it." Elizabeth Turner and Anne and Jane Taylor did not, it need hardly be said, use any such phrase as that; retribution followed on their adventures of the young, with the most sententious propriety. See George and the Chimney-Sweep, False Alarms, Playing with Fire, and other Cautionary Tales. True, it may be said that the poetess is not to be charged with cruelty, the facts themselves being cruel, and the setting on fire of a little frisking child being the work of natural law and not of the Misses Taylor. That is true enough; and it is not by the stories told in their verses that we are so struck with astonishment—indeed, we should owe them thanks, in the name of humanity, for the cautions they administer, and doubtless, for the accidents those cautions have averted; it is not the incidents we protest against, but the indescribably glib manner of the telling. The rhymes of these ladies are particularly inexorable; and of their style—which makes one blink—this is a specimen:

"Maria had an aunt at Leeds,
For whom she worked a purse of beads;
'Twas neatly done, by all allowed,
And praise soon made her vain and proud.

"Her mother, willing to repress
This strong conceit of cleverness,
Said 'I will show you, if you please,
A honeycomb, the work of bees.

"Yes, look within the hive, and then
Examine well your purse again;
Compare your merits, and you will Admit the insects' greater skill."

Or take the lyric beginning, with a dreadful flow of anapests,

"Mamma, dear mamma," cried in haste Mary Anne,
As into the parlour she eagerly ran."

Is this the best way of introducing children to rhythmic literature? Opinions will vary; and they varied much and most emphatically when Lear took up the writing of verse for children in succession to Jane and Anne Taylor:

"The Pobble who has no toes,
Had once as many as we;
When they said, 'Some day you may lose them all,'

He replied, 'Fish fiddle-de-dee!'
And his Aunt Jobiska made him drink
Lavender water tinged with pink;
For she said, 'The world in general knows
There's nothing so good for a Pobble's toes.'

The Pobble swam fast and well,
And when boats or ships came near him,
He tinkledy-binkledy-winkled a bell,
So that all the world could hear him.
And all the sailors and admirals cried,
When they saw him nearing the further side,
'He has gone to fish for his Aunt Jobiska's
Runcible cat with crimson whiskers.'

An anthology that includes this and Cautionary Tales, and, having closed the adventures of Mary Anne in the parlour, follows those of the Pobble upon those unknown seas, is as comprehensive as heart could wish. By the way, how fine is the versification of Lear's verse just quoted! We are not sure that a child should be led, even in burlesque verse, to believe that Jobiska rhymes with whisker; but as to musical distribution of syllables, faultless accents, and unchecked movement, no child could have his ear tuned better than by Lear. For an equal perfection of rhythm we should have to search the verse of negroes.

Between the "Cautionary Tale" and the "Nonsense Verse" there is a middle way which—unlike middle ways in general in modern estimation—is golden indeed. In this is the work, it need hardly be said, of Robert Louis Stevenson—verse of which the sweet mock-commonplace is as much irony as a child can perfectly enjoy, while the fancy does not outrun the child's pleasure. It may be said that the enthusiasm for A Child's Garden of Verses is the parent's rather than the child's; and if so, why, then, the problem of choosing for children is one that is not to be solved. How is it that memory does not settle the question? Perhaps because children are really very diffident of any opinion of their own; we in our adult days are unable to take the definite attitude in retrospection which we did not take at the time. In our childish age we passively listened to much that was supposed to interest us, and never quite realised that it did not. Hence vague impressions in our remembrances. Mr. Lucas, then, has done wisely to take a great latitude of choice.

A division of his subjects contains poems of the Open Air, and instructs the child in the signs of the skies—for example, in the aspects of the moon by the poetic quatrain of Christina Rossetti:

"O Lady-moon your horns point to the East.
Shine—be increased!

O Lady-moon, your horns point to the West.
Wane—be at rest!

A Christmas group is particularly well chosen, rather from older song than from modern hollies and Christmas wishes. Birds,

Dogs, and Horses have their appropriate singers, so has a certain amount of natural and unnatural history. The literal child, who is not rare, has plenty to read, and need not blush for his taste. Take it for all in all, there could not be a better collection.

THE BLESSED REFORMATION.

The Church of England before the Reformation.
By Dyson Hague. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

THE two tempers represented by the terms Evangelical and Catholic are not necessarily exclusive one of the other. In its more sober moments each party comes near to a compromise. The Evangelical does, in fact, acquiesce in the bonds by which he is joined to others of a like faith with his own; to the representative of Whitaker's Almanack he confesses himself a member of the Established Church, a Baptist, a Wesleyan or a Congregationalist; and the Roman Catholic theologian is familiar with the distinction between the soul of the Church and its body. In the history of controversy, however, these concessions are frequently lost sight of, and the fight wages round the question whether "visible" or "invisible" is the epithet more appropriate to the Church as conceived in the mind of its Divine Founder.

These remarks are suggested by our pondering of The Church of England before the Reformation. The volume is introduced by Dr. Moule, of Ridley Hall, Cambridge. It needs not to be expressly pointed out to which of the above schools the author belongs, and the wonder is to find a clergyman of this way of thinking who can trouble himself about the subject of this essay. For it is obvious that the ecclesiastical continuity about which the conflict is loudest concerns neither him nor such as upon religious matters share his mind.

In this country there are to-day two associations of persons who, believing in the Divine institution of a visible church, protest that the communions to which they respectively belong are the lineal representatives of the church of Augustine and of Gregory. At Ebbesfleet, and elsewhere, they have of late republished their claims. On the spot where the Roman missionaries landed Anglican prelates in their scores have lately given their testimony. On the same historic ground the parish priest of St. Gregory's on the Coelian, styled also archbishop of Westminster, assisted by certain suffragans of his province, has solemnly celebrated the rites of the Roman Church. The Church of Arles, whence Augustine received his episcopal orders, sent greetings and representatives. Noble ecclesiastics wearing the sacred purple fell orientally upon each other's neck, and before the eyes of an admiring laity exchanged fraternal kisses. And the purpose of it all has been to convince a sceptical and indifferent world (which has to attend to strikes, tariffs, the new wrinkles in Venus, and the outbreak on the Indian frontier) that the one and not the other is the true and proper representative of that shadowy figure. Now what has the ex-dean of Wycliffe College, Toronto, to do with all this? To be frank, not very much. And yet what he has to repeat was worth repeating, if only he could have observed due measure in his repetition. Incidentally, too, his work is marred by over-indulgence in a kind of Scriptural vituperation that now and then becomes lyrical, by a desperate confusion of terms when his subject-matter makes a demand upon his slender acquaintance with Roman Catholic theology, and by the defects of an argumentative method that is almost pathetic in its combination of muddle-headedness and transparent good faith. It is for these reasons that his violent declamation against the enormities of the sacerdotal or sacramental system suggests a trouncing with a feather; while his serious references to the rubrics of the Book of Common Prayer and certain passages in the Thirty-nine Articles of Religion make the nineteenth-century reader rub his eyes and wonder whether he has lighted upon a hitherto unknown writer of the century of Parker and Jewel. A consideration, however, of the literary style will effectually reassure him.

It will be obvious that to a writer of Mr. Hague's school and temperament, to one who in compiling what purports to be a history is careful to assert in every other paragraph that he allows no appeal but to Holy Scripture, and who in every one of his 389 pages gives an example, more or less striking, of a method and spirit altogether alien from the historical, the issue of his inquiries is profoundly insignificant. He gives away freely to the Popish enemy all that the more scientific defenders of the Church of England have sought laboriously to win in the last fifty years. In vain has it been attempted to minimise the effect of Augustine's mission, in vain to show his comparative independence of the Pope who sent him. It is to no purpose that Freeman, Bright, Stubbs, and many another have thrown a lurid light upon the assertions here and there of a spirit of rebellion on the part of the English clergy and people between the eleventh and the fifteenth century. All this is thrown away upon the former dean of Wycliffe College, Toronto. With a light-heartedness that will surprise friend and enemy alike, he concedes the utmost that Lingard or Dom Aidan Gasquet can assert as to the intimacy of the union of the Ecclesia Anglicana with the Holy Roman Church, the absolute character of its dependence upon the Apostolic See, the perfect identity of doctrine and discipline that was established. For the continuity which he would set up is of so evasive a character that a gap extending over centuries cannot affect it, and no change in liturgical forms and professions of faith can constitute a breach.

And if only the character of his hypothetical continuity were a trifle more palpable, it would be a serviceable substitute for that doctrinal and organic continuity of an independent national church which the Bishop of London, for example, champions. For the protests and acts of insubordination to which reference has been made were usually traceable to motives of self-interest which, however justifiable, make no more for the hypothesis they are called upon to buttress than for the dignity of history. It is unhappily true that some of the pontiffs who sat in the Chair of Peter, from the days of Hildebrand till, as a consequence of the great revolt against their authority, the nature of their jurisdiction had been minimised and their powers delimited, have used the prestige which was accorded them in so generous a measure rather for the enrichment of their own coffers than for the good of the Christian Church. Under the heads of annates, Peter's pence, reservations, expectantiae, commendae, and a dozen others, vast sums crossed sea and land to the Roman exchequer. It is probable that the record of these extortions would vex the soul of none more than of a modern Roman Catholic, who, as an Englishman and a son of the Church, lies under a double sense of injury. Again, as the most prudent and thrifty class of the community, and therefore the wealthiest—as the most peaceable, and therefore the most open to attack—the clergy offered an unailing source of revenue to their royal master. Against his exactions their only appeal was to the Throne of the Fisherman, and when the Holy Father compelled them to pay for his good offices, the only resource was the sheltering wing of the sovereign who fleeced them at home. But, as it is well pointed out by Mr. Hague, this root of the final rebellion against the Papacy should be distinguished from the revolt against the system of theology which he calls Popery.

Popery is primitive Christianity plus developments or accretions. All the difference between Papist and Protestant lies in the choice of the word. And of the whole body of sacramental doctrine which in the Middle Ages was deemed essential to true religion, the most prominent feature was the dogma which by an anachronism, anticipating the final definition of Trent, we may call transubstantiation. A correlative of this was the teaching that in the service of the Mass the sacrifice of Calvary was perpetually continued (not repeated, as our author recklessly reiterates); and by way of a practical corollary there had grown up in the ascetic atmosphere of the age a sense that the minister called by Heaven to so sacred a service should abstain from marriage. A Protestant may further conceive that this regulation of clerical celibacy, to whatever extent in certain times and in the case of individuals it may have been irregularly mitigated, would tend to stiffen in the conviction of their official dignity those who were bound by it, and to drive them to seek in the exaltation of their order some compensation for the enforced severity of their lives. However that may be, the doctrine of the Mass and of the Real Presence and the law of clerical celibacy were felt by that harbinger of the Reformation, the Rev. John Wycliffe, to stand together. "He was," writes Mr. Hague in the language appropriate to Wycliffe College, "the first of all Catholic Churchmen to discern the falsity of Rome's doctrinal position, and to boldly proclaim the truth as it is in Jesus." It is impossible to read without a smile Mr. Hague's account of his hero's argument against the doctrine of transubstantiation: "A man who studied the Gospels and read the Epistles of the New Testament . . . could not long hold the Roman teaching. . . . The two were irreconcilable." There is a short way to deal with the argument from Holy Scripture. Equally clear and convincing is the Canadian professor's version of Wycliffe's metaphysical refutation:

"It is utterly unphilosophical and unreasonable to say that the piece of bread can look the same, and weigh the same, and taste the same, and smell the same, and yet not be bread at all, but something else than bread. The thing is impossible."

Mr. Hague probably means that it is unthinkable. If he had any familiar acquaintance with the distinctions of scholastic philosophy, of which he gives us no ground for suspecting him, he might find himself called upon to modify this opinion.

From Wycliffe's time onwards these two streams of tendency were running side by side and increasing in volume—the national spirit of protest against the dominion and exactions of the Papacy; the revolt of reason against that system of Catholic dogma and practice which, for convenience sake, we may here style Popery. The statutes of Provisors and Præmunire mark the progress of the one; the Act of Supremacy crowned it. The other brought within the reach of the vulgar the vernacular Bible, evolved the Book of Common Prayer from the Breviary and Missal, formulated the Thirty-nine Articles, and culminated in the Act of Uniformity. The settlement thus effected has endured three hundred years, and has spread with the Anglo-Saxon race. Also by a process of fission it has brought into the world innumerable offspring. But what shall be the end of it, no man may even plausibly conjecture.

SKETCHES AND STORIES.

Certain Personal Matters. By H. G. Wells. (Lawrence & Bullen.)

An Attic in Bohemia. By E. H. Lacon Watson. (Elkin Matthews.)

Within Sound of Great Tom: Stories of Modern Oxford. (B. H. Blackwell.)

Chronicles of the Parish of Taxwood. By J. R. Macduff, D.D. (Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Happy Exile. Edited by H. D. Lowry. With Six Etchings by E. Philip Pimlott. (John Lane.)

Odd Stories. By Frances Forbes-Robertson. (Constable.)

MR. H. G. WELLS is a writer pre-eminently gifted with humour and imagination, and these qualities always make him a pleasant man to read. His new volume, Certain Personal Matters, is a collection of short articles and sketches contributed to various newspapers. Unlike most fugitive writings of this kind, they rather gain than otherwise by being collected into a volume. In too many cases the kind of journalistic facility which enables a man to turn out amusing sketches for an evening paper is fatal to the production of more ambitious work, while the sketches themselves, though agreeable enough in the columns of a newspaper, are too disconnected and too unsubstantial, to make a satisfactory book. Mr. Wells's sketches are of a different order, and though they cannot, of course, rank with the Wonderful Visit, The Invisible Man, and the rest of his more elaborate efforts, no one can reasonably regret that he should have thought it worth while to republish them in volume form. Many of them show extraordinary cleverness in handling trifling themes, and even in their most extravagant moments they present us with delightful surprises in the way of good sense and good humour. "The Trouble of Life" is a charming piece of inverted Philosophy, full of ironical shrewdness and humour. "In a Literary Household" deals with an old theme, but we have rarely seen it turned to better account. Altogether, Certain Personal Matters is a very pleasant book, which will be read with pleasure by all who like a droll and fanciful treatment of the commonplace things of life.

An Attic in Bohemia, Mr. Lacon Watson's new book, is a volume of sketches not unlike Mr. Wells's. Here we have something of the same humorous presentment of commonplace things, the same fancy and imagination, the same kindly good-humoured view of life. Mr. Watson's work is, perhaps, more graceful than Mr. Wells's, but the humour is quieter. His philosophy betrays an occasional tinge of sadness, and though his laughter is never bitter it is occasionally dashed with pathos. There is a touch of Mr. Barrie about him, not the Mr. Barrie of Thru the Keyhole and The Little Minister, but the Mr. Barrie of My Lady Nicotine. There is a certain continuity in the sketches contained in the book, and Mr. Watson has touched in the various characters which reappear in it with considerable felicity. His "Bohemia" is a very delightful place, a Bohemia which lives in one of the old Inns with a hydraulic engineer and a journalist for neighbours, whose wants are served by a laundress with an appreciation of the ridiculous, a Bohemia which lies late abed and scorns domesticity. This Bohemia is a land that has been a good deal exploited from time to time by writers of all sorts and descriptions, and there is nothing very new to be said about it, but Mr. Watson contrives to invest it with just that touch of "charm" which makes even trivial things interesting. An Attic in Bohemia is an excellent book to amuse an idle hour, and deserves to be read.

It is a curious fact, and one which has often, no doubt, been remarked, that no good work of fiction is ever produced about the two Universities. Possibly their interests are so special and peculiar to themselves, so removed from the struggle for existence, the strifes and ambitions, and the general give and take of ordinary life, that it is not possible to make a book out of them. Mr. Benson's novel, The Babe, B.A., is, perhaps, the best attempt that has been made of late, and, no doubt for that reason, the Babe had a success which its intrinsic merits did not altogether deserve. Within Sound of Great Tom is an unsuccessful attempt in the same direction, and the result, we are bound to say, is a dull book. It is a collection of stories purporting to deal with Oxford and Oxford life. All the familiar figures are in it—the married fellow, the unpopular dean, the athletic undergraduate, and the rest. A bonfire is lit, bumps are made in the "Eights," and a junior fellow is "screwed up." The result, unhappily, does not do justice to these materials—or else the materials themselves are not particularly exhilarating in fiction, though not unamusing in actual life. The "adorable dreamer whose heart has been so romantic," as Matthew Arnold called Oxford, still waits for the novelist who can faithfully paint her.

Dr. Macduff's Chronicles of the Parish of Taxwood, we are told in an "Editor's Note," are a republication of The Parish of Taxwood, which appeared many years ago. "They contain the record, and reflect the lights and shadows, of Scottish parochial life in a bygone generation." Perhaps we have had too many books "reflecting the lights and shadows of Scottish parochial life" of late years, and are somewhat weary of the subject. Suffice it that Dr. Macduff's book will not, we imagine, be very interesting to Southrons, though it may be popular north of the Tweed.

The distinctive note of Mr. Lowry's new volume of sketches is his passionate love of the country. Every page is instinct with the joy of rustic sights and sounds, the fresh green grasses of springtime and the azure summer sea. The particular county of his idolatry is, of course, Cornwall, the delectable Duchy beloved of Mr. Quiller-Couch, and he describes its people and the scenes in which they move with wholehearted sympathy and often with rare felicity of expression. Sometimes, indeed, this expression of the yearning of one compelled to live in London for the distant moorlands of the West Country is almost painful in its intensity, like the despairing cry of the prisoner in his cell for the free light and air which he can imagine but may not reach. Mr. Lowry has a good deal of the poet in his composition, and his feeling for Nature and his keen appreciation of her in all her moods evokes an answering thrill in the heart of the reader as only a poet's can. His style will perhaps be criticised by some as artificial and mannered, and it may be admitted that he belongs to the Stevenson school in his careful choice of phrase, his occasional hints of archaism, and his fastidious avoidance of what is hackneyed or obvious in language. Indeed, the last of the sketches—by no means the worst in the volume—called "New Year's Eve," is very near akin to Stevenson in matter and manner. This, however, does not mean that Mr. Lowry is a mere imitator. On the contrary, his note is quite individual and distinctive even when his style is most reminiscent of another, and his point of view is essentially his own. There are many delightful passages of description in this volume, many charming touches of character, with just a sufficiency of incident give coherence to the various sketches which it contains. Most of them appeared originally in the columns of one or other of the weekly reviews or in the Pall Mall Gazette, and Mr. E. Philip Pimlott has provided six charming etchings to illustrate the text. Any jaded Londoner who wants a breath of country air and cannot leave town would do well to read Mr. Lowry's book. We have rarely come across a more refreshing volume.

Miss Forbes-Robertson writes with evident care, and there is a certain bright daintiness about her style that is distinctly pleasing; but surely the subject-matter again and again fails to reward the pains lavished on it. Nor does one learn for the first time that what sparkles in the ephemeral journal will not always endure the dignities of a book and the proximity of its like. The two stories that please us most are "St. Aphilon's Dome" and "Eric of Tolquhon." The Fathers of St. Aphilon's, a lazy, greedy lot, built a great dome to the church of their patron saint out of the offerings of the faithful. A storm blew down the dome, and once more the Fathers extorted the money to replace it from the reluctant purses of the poor they neglected. But the work moved slowly, for day after day lead or copper was stolen from the roof, and the spoiler escaped. At last a rumour got abroad that the metal was stripped off at night by one who wore the habit of the order. Perturbed, the Fathers set a watch.

"Three of us will go—we will take our bedsteads. The one on watch shall wake the others."

"So the four-posted bedsteads were duly hoisted, and the three divines tucked in their respective eiderdowns."

"Towards midnight they awoke at the sound of hammering, and possessed suddenly by fear, waited awhile before peeping over the bedclothes to the place from whence the sound came. When they did, however, a strange sight rose before their eyes, and each would have thought he was dreaming, but that the others were likewise enthralled, staring at the spectacle before them. There indeed laboured a priest of the Order, but a halo radiated about his head, and as he turned they recognised the countenance of the blessed St. Aphilon, their founder and patron saint. He was tearing down the sheets of newly-laid copper, and placing them on a barrow. Near him stood, in wondrous robes of azure, like the heavens of the early morning, Mary, Regina Pauperum. 'And will it be St. Aphilon's own?' echoed the sound of a little voice into one of the humbled priests' ears. What was his own he might give to his poor: what he gave to his poor he gave to his Master."

"Eric of Tolquhon" is likewise an allegory, very simply and tenderly written. It shows Miss Forbes-Robertson, we think, at her best; and for another like it we would gladly exchange half-a-dozen of her cleverer and more commonplace stories.

A TUSCAN TRAGEDY.

Sogno d'un Mattino di Primavera. By Gabriele d'Annunzio. (Roma: Modes & Mendel.)

SIGNOR D'ANNUNZIO is known as one of the foremost of living Italian authors, a lyrical poet, the writer of a richly coloured and musical prose, and to some extent the founder of a school. This Dream of a Spring Morning is a little dramatic sketch in five scenes, reprinted from a new review, the Italia. It can hardly be called a drama, for there is no action, and the issue is left undecided.

The scene is in the loggia of an old Tuscan villa, with a garden and wood beyond. In the villa live two noble sisters, Donna Isabella and Donna Beatrice. Isabella's lover was stabbed to death in her arms, and had ebb'd out his life while close locked in her embrace. Since then she has been mad, haunted by the terror of that night, seeing and feeling blood everywhere, around her and upon her, in the redness of the rose, in the brilliance of a scarlet insect, and in the berries of the wood through which she wanders clothed in green as the Spring. Beatrice, her devoted sister, who, together with an old servant and a doctor, watches over her, is like a slighter sketch of Anatolia in Le Vergini delle Rocce; while a lighter element is afforded by the love-idyll of Simonetta and the gardener, Panfilo, whose improvised song floats in at intervals from the wood. Into "this cloister inhabited by madness and sorrow" enters Virginio, the brother of the murdered man. He, too, had secretly loved Isabella, and now comes, ardent in his immense love, in the vague dream that on this spring morning it may be possible to somehow bring her back to life. The situation is further complicated by the evident love of Beatrice for Virginio.

The experiment fails, the dream of the spring morning passes away. When at length la demente recognises Virginio, all the horror falls once more upon her. In a paroxysm of agony she lives over again the whole of that terrible night, until strength is exhausted, and she is left feebly smiling over the wreath she has made for Beatrice. The whole of this last scene is written with intense tragic power and genuine dramatic imagination.

Coleridge has said: "In every attempt at representing madness throughout the whole range of dramatic literature, with the single exception of Lear, it is mere lightheadedness." But here, too, there is surely "the brooding of the one anguish, an eddy without progression." Nevertheless, the naked tragedy is so covered over with flowers that their aroma clouds the senses and suggests the existence of some allegorical meaning beneath the surface, as was partly the case with the Vergini delle Rocce: "Una finzione che significherà cose grandi." The lilies of the valley ring silvery bells in the air; one red rose has escaped the vigilance of the gardener and blossomed a tradimento among the white roses which alone may be suffered to meet Donna Isabella's eyes; the poppies must be anticipated by mowing the meadow, for their advent is so rapid that they break out suddenly in the grass like fire: "Easi scoppiano subitamente nell'erba come fuochi impetuosi." This little play, while affording an exquisite example of d'Annunzio's style, resembles his last romance, the Vergini delle Rocce, in being entirely free from the studied obscenity of the Piacere and Trionfo della Morte.

BRIEFER MENTION.

Australian Fairy Tales. By Atha Westbury. Illustrated by A. J. Johnson. (Ward, Lock & Co.)

A FAIRY tale needs no justification save that it be a good one. It is not improved, for instance, by the suggestion of allegory; on the contrary, it was a growing consciousness of its ethical significance that first dulled the glamour of The Pilgrim's Progress. The merit of the tale lies precisely in its power to win an imaginative credence of incidents discredited by experience, or even inconsistent with the laws of thought. The style most apt to favour this end is shown by experience to be simple; and if at times we forego the demand for simplicity, we ask at least for homogeneity: that it should not waver between the magniloquence of the halfpenny evening newspaper and the baldness of a child's first reading-book. Also good heed should be taken lest by any flagrant offence against the laws of syntax a stumbling-block should be laid for the feet of the little ones.

Of these elementary requirements there is not in this collection of stories—so far, at least, as we have had the patience to examine it—one which even begins to meet with fulfilment; nor of the faults to which we have alluded is there any with which Miss (?) Atha Westbury's pages are not crowded. Her stories are ethical, or, rather, pseudo-ethical; the fancy is conventional and quite uncontagious; the style combines the pretentious verbosity of journalese with reckless grammatical inaccuracy. Thus:

"Roland's spirit quailed within him at the thought. In the dim twilight he saw the boat had entered an enormous cavern where a dense wall of black rock, or rather boulders, were piled in wild disorder one above the other, and terminating in a flat roof of the same description."

Of the illustrations, the worst—and the best—that can be said is, that they conspire with the printer's art to produce an expectation that a study of the text must disappoint.

The Savage Club Papers. Edited by J. E. Muddock. Art Editor, Herbert Johnson. (Hutchinson.)

SAID the members of the Savage Club one evening: "Let us play at making a book." "And I," quoth Mr. Muddock, "shall be editor and write a modest preface." So all the members went home and searched their drawers for contributions with which to furnish it forth. And Mr. Arthur Morrison sent in "One More Unfortunate," which, though very slight and quite without distinction, is the best item in the contents; and Mr. Coulson Kernahan sent "Dogged," a Jeromesque fantasy, which Mr. J. F. Sullivan has illustrated with a certain humour; and the editor furnished "A Terrible Bandit," a story based upon the familiar situation in which two honest men suspect each the other for a thief. Mr.

Walter Rowley sent an old Fifth Form essay on "Shakespearean Ballads and Songs"; and Mr. Henty forwarded a tale of conventional heroism. Three members have revelled in reminiscences of Royalty. Naval and military Savages have taken the opportunity to practise journalism and fight their battles over again in print; and Mr. Edward Draper has contributed a rather amusing hypothesis to the Gunpowder Plot controversy, which we respectfully commend to the consideration of Prof. Gardiner and of Father Gerard, S.J. Of the art contributions, which upon the whole reach a higher level than the literature, M. Paul Renouard's sketch of Sir Henry Irving is quite clever; indeed, it is worth all the rest. One of Oliver Pague's illustrations of the doggerel entitled "A Warning to Dramatists" shows a sense of character. There is humour and drawing in Mr. W. Ralston's illustration of "The Disappointed Centenarian" infirmly swinging his clubs and surrounded by the instruments of the hygienic cult. And the picture of "A Frolicsome Savage," upon p. 25, has amused us very much. It must be confessed that the volume is, upon the whole, a little disappointing, more particularly when measured by the hope expressed in the preface, that it will "meet with a warm welcome wherever the English language is spoken and the Club known—that is, practically, the wide world over."

The Tenth Island. By Beckles Willson. With an Introduction by the Right Hon. Sir William Whiteway, K.C.M.G., and some Remarks on Newfoundland and the Navy by Lord Charles Beresford, C.B. (Grant Richards.)

MR. BECKLES WILLSON has done his work very well. The volume is written in a spirited journalese, and if it fails to stir up in the public heart an interest in Newfoundland—the Cinderella of the colonies, who, somewhat lean and ragged as yet, "sits patiently in her corner of a hemisphere"—then to stir up an interest is not within the power of merely terrestrial paper and print. It stirred us also to a restlessness that subsided only upon the timely recollection that we were neither versed in the art of cod-fishing nor patient of the hardships that beset the hunter of "swiles"; that we were not furnished with plant for the working of asbestos, nickel, iron, lead, or gold; that we were without practical experience as railway contractors or agriculturists. But, as matters stand for the moment, the quickest road to fortune would seem to run by way of French naturalisation and the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, ceded, in a fit of sleepy magnanimity, by a British Government to the French, and held by the latter with a tenacity of prideful sentiment that sticks at no sacrifice to secure prosperity for this remnant of the French empire in the New World. St. Pierre is the thorn in Cinderella's side. As a convenient centre of the smuggling interest it robs her of a large proportion of her revenue; by the aid of a wild system of bounties it undersells her fishermen in the open market; in virtue of concession after concession its handful of inhabitants occupy a coastline of over five hundred miles, and so aggressively and so pertinaciously do they press their fishing rights as, in fact, to occupy the better half of the island. Of the inhabitants of Newfoundland Mr. Napier speaks as a hardy, simple, and intensely parochial-minded race, loyal to the core, primitive in their lives, and using a hybrid dialect of Scoto-Irish.

"THE VOYAGE OF BRAN."—Vol. II.: The Celtic Doctrine of Re-birth. By Alfred Nutt. (Grimm Library: David Nutt.)

THE first volume of this important folk-lore study, published a year or two ago, contained the text and a translation of the "Voyage of Bran" by Prof. Kuno Meyer, and an elaborate essay by Mr. Nutt upon the Irish conception of the "Happy Other-world." In the second instalment Mr. Nutt approaches the second mythical conception contained in the legend—that of the "Re-incarnation of Finn." After a careful discussion of this myth and of various Celtic parallels, he attempts to combine the results of his two lines of research in some speculations as to the nature of the primitive stratum of belief to which the legend bears evidence, and the way in which this stratum was modified—first, by the natural development of society; and, secondly, by the intrusive force of Christianity. The conclusions arrived at are further enforced by comparison with the mythology of that Aryan people which Mr. Nutt believes to have most affinities with the Celts—the Greeks—and also by comparison with the living fairy belief of the modern Irish. Mr. Nutt deals with much highly speculative matter, through which only a specialist could with safety follow him. But, if you think him at times a little rash in his inferences, he is always ingenious and frequently convincing. Whether the main structure of his theory meets with ultimate acceptance or not, the incidental discussions, in which the book is so rich, will certainly long remain of the utmost value to every student of folk-lore.

The Love Affairs of Some Famous Men. By the Author of "How to be Happy though Married." (T. Fisher Unwin.)

THE author of this budget prints on his title-page these words of Lord Beaconsfield: "The world has always been fond of personal details respecting men who have been celebrated." That is frank, and not less so is the prefatory remark: "Shelley's amours, for instance, are known to many who have never read even his 'Ode to the Skylark.'" The question, "Should Authors Marry?" is considered in one chapter, and a delicious title is "The Love Affairs of Prose Writers, Continued." We like the story of Mrs. Scott on which our glance falls. Jeffrey dined with the Scotts on the very day that he had "slated" "Marmion." Mrs. Scott was all politeness until Jeffrey left, when she fired this shot at him: "Well, good night, Mr. Jeffrey, dey tell me you have abused Scott in de Review, and I hope Mr. Constable has paid you very well for writing it."

Hawthorne's First Diary. Edited by Samuel T. Pickard. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

WE have rarely seen a more flagrant piece of unnecessary bookmaking than confronts us here. The volume consists of 115 pages, of which the extracts from the journal occupy fewer than fifty. The rest is Mr. Pickard, who offers us dull facts about the boy Hawthorne's associates, and a mass of totally superfluous information. When we add that the diary itself is incomplete, that its genuineness is doubted, and that Mr. Julian Hawthorne declined to "inflict it on the reader" in his Life of his father, we have said enough.

My Fourth Tour in Western Australia. By Albert F. Calvert. (W. Heinemann.)

"It is not without considerable misgivings that I venture," says the author, "to place before the public another volume upon Western Australia." "My hesitation," he adds, "in the present instance arises not from fear of arousing dormant hostilities, but solely out of consideration for my friends." When we say that Mr. Calvert's book weighs 5lbs. 2oz., his reluctance will be understood. The volume contributes nothing to literature.

Old Samoa. By the Rev. John B. Stair. (R. T. S.)

THE full title is longer—Old Samoa; or, Flotsam and Jetsam from the Pacific Ocean—and there is an introduction by the Bishop of Ballarat. Mr. Stair's researches among the customs and myths of Samoa were made in pre-Stevensonian days. Few amateur ethnologists are more engaging than he.

Guide to South Africa. (Sampson Low.)

THIS hand-book has an interest for the adventurous Englishman, for it annually affords a very complete view, in a compressed form, of the history, topography, commercial conditions, and opportunities for settling and for sport in South Africa. It is a book which may well bring home to untravelled persons the magnitude and complexity of our possessions and interests in that part of the world.

NEW EDITIONS.

Mansfield Park. By Jane Austen. (Macmillan & Co.)

WITH Mansfield Park Messrs. Macmillan's reprints of Jane Austen's works (saving only two fragments, of which Messrs. Bentley hold the copyright) are complete. Five out of the six novels have been illustrated by Mr. Hugh Thomson, whose drawings are found in the volume before us. They are delightful little pen-pictures with not an unclean line in them all, and they will recommend the novels to many. But we do not think that those who are sealed of the tribe of Jane Austen want her stories illustrated. Who that knows Ann Elliot can accept any presentment of her, however well conceived? Jane Austen's art cannot be aided.

Newton Forster. By Capt. Marryat. (Macmillan & Co.)

MR. DAVID HANNAY's knowledge of Capt. Marryat and his books is encyclopaedic.

He now edits Newton Forster, one of the least read of Marryat's books. This story appeared in 1832, and, says Mr. Hannay, "belongs to his first period of freedom on shore, and it must be acknowledged to be none the better on that account." Indeed, Marryat told his reader flippantly in his preface: "You may understand that I continue to write, as Tony Lumpkin says, not to please my good-natured friends, but because I can't bear to disappoint myself." Writing in this mood Capt. Marryat produced a book which added nothing to his fame. Posterity generously reprints it, but with the warning: "The reader must skip freely." Mr. E. J. Sullivan illustrates the book well.

"TEMPLE CLASSICS."—The Critic. (J. M. Dent & Co.)

MESSRS. DENT's series goes rippling on, and now we have Sheridan's Critic, with an introduction by Mr. George A. Aitken. "There is the usual story of Sheridan's procrastination," says Mr. Aitken. "Two days before the play was to be produced the last scene was unfinished, and it was only by inveigling Sheridan into the green-room, where there was a fire, wine and supper, stationery, and the incomplete MS., and then locking him in, that he was brought to finish the work."

Selections from the Works of De Quincey (Simpkin Marshall.)

DE QUINCEY is an author who may properly be presented in extracts. No one wants all that he wrote; many people want a little. In this "Selection," the choice of pieces is good, though we should have substituted the story of "The Avenger," complete, for a fragment of "The Spanish Military Nun." Among the other pieces are "Murder Considered as one of the Fine Arts" and "From the Confessions of an English Opium-Eater." By the way, the English of the unsigned introduction to this volume would have driven De Quincey, who had the sense of words, to take an abnormally large dose of his drug.

The Book of Common Prayer. With Historical Notes by Rev. Jas. Cornford, M.A.

A PRAYER BOOK, which is more suitable for home reading than for Church use, is issued by Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode. It is a Prayer Book and a history of the Prayer Book in one, the historical matter being supplied by the editor. Chronological tables and texts of Acts of Parliament, including the Act of Uniformity, are given.

NOVELS REDRESSED.

NEW editions, each in single-volume form, reach us of Mr. Marion Crawford's Casa Braccio (Macmillan & Co.), Mr. H. Seton Merriman's The Grey Lady (Smith, Elder & Co.), Mrs. Humphry Ward's Marcella (Smith, Elder & Co.), Mr. F. W. Robinson's Young Nim (Hurst & Blackett), M. Zola's L'Assommoir, which now figures in Mr. E. A. Vizetelly's new translation as The Dram-Shop (Chatto & Windus), and Surtees's Handley Cross, with Leech's illustrations, in two volumes (Lawrence & Bullen).

THE ACADEMY FICTION SUPPLEMENT.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1897.

THE NEWEST FICTION.

A GUIDE FOR NOVEL READERS.

WE repeat that novel readers cannot complain that their wants are overlooked. Twenty-four new works of fiction have come under our notice during the past week. They are catalogued below. May the authors of them meet with their deserts!

THE BETH BOOK.

BY SARAH GRAND.

To-day Mme. Sarah Grand breaks a four years' silence. Beth (Father liked Elizabeth—Mother preferred the diminutive—Mother won) was a woman of genius—at least, so the title-page says. She was also a handful, judging from a cursory glance through the many, many closely printed pages. The forepart of the book contains no fewer than three instalments of Great Thoughts—one is from Emerson, and this is the last sentence: "Women are the best index of the coming hour." How the heart of the author of The Beth Book must have glowed when that Great Thought met her. To end—"Beth was a fine instrument, sensitive to touch, and a woman with a wide range"—and so on. (Heinemann. 527 pp. 6s.)

CORLEONE.

BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

A rarity nowadays—a two-volume novel. Readers who remember Sant' Ilario and Saracinesca are bound, if they were interested in those stories, to read Corleone, for it is by way of being a sequel. Mr. Crawford's last novel touched divorce rather heavily: here he is his romantic self again and in Sicily. (Macmillan & Co. 336 and 341 pp. 12s.)

A FIERY ORDEAL.

BY "TASMA."

This is a story of an unhappy marriage, with a Tasmanian background, by the lady whose real name was Mme. Auguste Couvreur, and whose death on the 23rd ult. has been generally noticed. James Fenton, the drunken, feckless tenant of a little dairy farm at Tarooma, must meet a bill promptly or go under, and he has taken it into his head that only his wife can soften the heart of his creditor. Will she go? She does, and on the way meets by accident the money-lender's son, with whom she is instantly in sympathy. Tired of her husband and tired of Tarooma, Ruth Fenton is yet a loyal woman; and in her conflict and its issue lies the story. (Richard Bentley & Son. 350 pp. 6s.)

THE SINNER.

BY "RITA."

Those who like what is pleasant rather than what is probable will enjoy the opening chapters of this story. The patient and hospital nurse situation is worked again for all it is worth; and the rich uncle from Colorado arrives in the nick of time. In its later chapters the story becomes sensational and painful. Indeed, it concerns the poisoning by a doctor of his wife. Nellie Nugent, the pretty heroine, is his wife's nurse, and her observations of what goes on occupy many chapters. (Hutchinson & Co. 357 pp. 6s.)

THE MISSIONARY SHERIFF.

BY OCTAVE THANET.

Six short stories, with Sheriff Wickliff—"a plain man who tried to do his duty"—as the hero of each. He does a good deal more than his duty by Joe Paisley, a young scapegrace, whose gaoler he is. Wickliff believes there is "such a thing as clubbing a man half-way decent," and he means to return the young fellow to his mother so transformed that she shall never know that he has disgraced his record at the Sunday-school. Joe dies in the gaol, and in the arms of his mother, who is saved all knowledge of the truth by the Sheriff's noble lies and deceptions. (Harper & Brothers. 248 pp.)

THE THREE DISGRACES.

BY JUSTIN MCCARTHY.

After the title may be observed a little "Etc.," which will baulk readers of the expected long story by the too reticent author of Dear Lady Disdain and Miss Misanthrope. Compared with these studies in flippant femininity, what is A History of our own Times? The volume before us consists of six short stories—quiet, urbane, and softly frivolous. They are very slight, hardly more than an hour's reading. (Chatto & Windus. 250 pp. 3s. 6d.)

FOR LOVE OF A BEDOUIN MAID.

BY LE VOLEUR.

This story comes at the back of the Napoleon revival, of which, for English people, the most interesting development was "Madame Sans-Gêne." Once quit of the introduction, which tells the old story of the discovered MS., we plump direct upon the City of Paris in the year 1797, and the story breaks off just after Waterloo. It is full of movement and sensation—indeed, to serious historians of the period it may be rather too startling. The author's name suggests plagiarism; but we find none. There are pictures. (Hutchinson & Co. 444 pp. 6s.)

TALES FROM THE VELD.

BY ERNEST GLANVILLE.

Mr. Glanville has written in The Fossicker a romance of Mashonaland. Here, again, South Africa provides a background. "Old Abe" is a character—"one of those men who would walk ten miles to set a trap without a murmur, while he thought himself badly used if he were called upon to hoe a row in the mealie-field." Such men are born to talk and to exaggerate, and Abe does both consummately. His story of the baboon that lit the fire, plucked a fowl, and put it in the pot is typical, as also his yarn of the snake that poisoned a tree with its bite. The author professes to give, with due deductions for Abe's gift of imagination, a faithful picture of a tract of country rich in incidents of warfare and full of Kaffir folk-lore. (Chatto & Windus. 305 pp.)

STORIES AND PLAY STORIES.

BY VIOLET HUNT, AND OTHERS.

This volume contains about twenty short stories, reprinted from Chapman's Magazine. They do not call for other remark than that they are bright "society" or country-life stories by such writers as the Hon. Mrs. Arthur Henniker, Lady Ridley, Mr. Joseph Strange, and Mr. Bulkeley Cresswell. (Chapman & Hall. 304 pp. 6s.)

UNDER THE DRAGON THRONE.

BY L. T. MEADE AND
ROBERT K. DOUGLAS.

At a time when two Chinese plays are running in London, these stories should find readers. They sketch the lives of English men and women in Chinese treaty ports, and inland. The first, "Richard Maitland, Consul," is concerned with the strange adventures and perils which befell that gentleman at the inland port of Ch'angyang. The juxtaposition of English and Chinese characters is piquant. (Gardner, Darton & Co. 297 pp. 6s.)

JOHN ROYSTON.

BY W. G. WRIGHTSON.

This is history tickled into fiction. Mr. Wrightson is descended from an old Teesdale family, and in an introductory chapter he shows us to his old house, his old furniture, his bundle of wills and marriage settlements, and packets of letters reaching back into the times of the Civil War. It is to the Civil War that the story belongs, and Charles I., and Laud, and Strafford, and Montrose, and Vane, and Fairfax, are introduced. The story is but history as it affects the Roystons; but there is plenty of clever characterisation and dialogue, and the book is an interesting product of the North-country. (Newcastle-on-Tyne: Mawson, Swan & Morgan. 408 pp.)

THE BARN STORMERS.

By C. N. WILLIAMSON.

The title gives us the subject—strolling-players. The little company toured in America. The humours of their life are told with vivacity, and the central figure, Monica, has much charm. The sentimental part of the story is less persuasive: millionaires, however, even while one disbelieves in them, are always attractive, and there is a good but love-sick one here. The book is bright and brisk. (Hutchinson & Co. 354 pp. 6s.)

A SINLESS SINNER.

By MARY H. TENNYSON.

Miss Tennyson has written A Cruel Dilemma, and other stories. We hope they have less to do with cruelty and dilemmas than this one. We are introduced to a wretched family, in which the question of prolonging the life of one out of four children by sending the child to Dover breeds bitter disagreement between father and mother. The developments are such that we shudder to look through the story. We do not think that the poisoning of a little girl by her sister, even in a warped state of mind, is an incident which a writer, not being a genius, ought to approach. (John Macqueen. 396 pp.)

MADEMOISELLE BAYARD.

By JOHN AUDLEY.

An incredibly silly story of a lost diamond necklace. (The Roxburghe Press. 204 pp. 2s. 6d.)

IN YEARS OF TRANSITION.

By SAMUEL GORDON.

The story of Camille Clairmont, a young fellow starting life in Paris without a sou or a friend; with nothing but a brave, sound heart, that even the pickpockets among whom he fell, and the stone-breakers with whom he worked, could appreciate. The descriptions of low life in Paris are strong without being coarse; and the writing is excellent. The incident, for instance, of Camille's attempt to kill a calf for his second employer, a butcher, and his vanquishment when the animal eyed him, is not overdone by a word. (Bliss, Sands & Co. 364 pp. 6s.)

A LIMITED SUCCESS.

By SARAH PITT.

The story of a young Dissenting minister, the Rev. Oswald Trent, who is newly promoted to a rich chapel and is entering a more brilliant social circle, dragging the dead weight of a respectable but commonplace engagement. Kate Craven, the daughter of Craven, M.P., of Cotchester, is a very different style of young woman from Alice Chadwick, the daughter of Trent's former landlady at Millgate. The story lies in that difference. And, for relief, what better than Trent's sister, just widowed, and bringing home from the Antipodes a breezy wit and freedom of manner quite unsuitable in a minister's sister? In the end things get straightened out as much as they ever do in real life. (Cassell & Co. 332 pp. 6s.)

THE CARSTAIRS OF CASTLE CRAIG.

By HENRY CARMICHAEL.

This book belongs to the Archive School of fiction, as it might be called; that is to say, it is a story based on a suppositious diary or MS. This particular work is described as "A Chronicle, edited from the Notes of John Ffoulke Carstairs, Esq." The Carstairs were Irish, but Mr. Henry Carmichael dates his preface from Richmond, Va. The story pivots on a will. An irascible major lends it piquancy. (Sampson Low & Co. 351 pp. 6s.)

MARGARET FORSTER.

By GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

A preface by Mrs. Sala tells the story of this novel. It was written by way of relaxation after more uncongenial work during the day; and the author donned a lounge jacket of velvet, faced with smart moiré silk, in which to write it. People who like Mr. Sala's roundabout methods and hesitancy in coming to the point will like Margaret Forster, which is a worthy successor to The Seven Sons of Mammon, Quite Alone, and The Baddington Peerage. (T. Fisher Unwin. 367 pp. 6s.)

GEORGE STIRLING'S HERITAGE.

By MALCOLM STARK.

"A Story of Chequered Love" is the promising sub-title. All novels should, of course, be stories of chequered love. Also it is Scotch. "Oh, but love is bonnie," says some one. So it is. Some one else says, "Ah, it's no sic a bad world efter a'. When we think things are a' gaun wrang we are cheered by something that makes us think they're a' gaun richt." (Skeffington & Son. 316 pp. 6s.)

A KNIGHT OF THE NETS.

By AMELIA E. BARR.

A quiet, pathetic story of fisher folk in Fife, by the author of Jan Vedder's Wife. Mrs. Barr has laid the scene of some recent stories in America: she here returns to Scotland. (Hutchinson & Co. 314 pp. 6s.)

LIFE IN AFRIKANDERLAND.

By "Cios."

"Cios" hates England, and has learned English in order to be able to say so in this book, whereof part is fiction and part politics. Some would, no doubt, say it is all fiction. "Cios" says his account of the Raid is true in every particular, and the publishers say that the book will be useful. For ourselves, we cannot read a story with such chapter headings as "History à la Rhodes" and "The Folly of C. Leonard and His Clique." (Digby & Long. 274 pp. 3s. 6d.)

THE AMERICAN COUSINS.

By SARAH TYTLER.

This story bears the sub-title, "A Story of Shakespeare's Country." Two young men—George and Beville Sheldrake, Virginia planters, and descendants of English Sheldrakes—are in the Stratford-on-Avon country, where they visit the old English stem of the family. Genealogy and love—the old world and the new—mingle in the Sheldrake country mansion, and the end is as it should be. (Digby & Long. 343 pp. 6s.)

PASTE JEWELS.

By JOHN KENDRICK BANGS.

"Seven tales of domestic woe" is the description which the author offers, and "They also serve who also stand and wait," a quotation from a greater John than himself, is Mr. Bangs's motto; all of which implies that the subjects of the stories are domestic servants. Mr. Bangs has some reputation in America for mild humour. (Harper & Brothers. 202 pp. 2s.)

THE BLACK DISC.

By ALBERT LEE.

The frontispiece is significant. A Spanish nobleman and a lion are engaged in deadly combat in the background, while a Moorish maiden near by strikes an attitude of alarmed dismay. Underneath we read: "I plunged my sword into the lion's chest and reached his heart." The whole book is like this. (Digby & Long. 338 pp. 6s.)

THE NOVEL OF ADVENTURE.

Whoever loves English letters must bewail the steady degeneration which the novel of adventure has undergone in the last decade or so. In its beginning the romantic movement was a natural reaction against the long domination of the novel of character and manners which, after being carried to brilliant heights by a succession of great writers—Dickens, Thackeray, the Brontës, Mrs. Gaskell, George Eliot—became flat and debased in the commonplace hands of Anthony Trollope, whose success would not have been possible save for the taste and tradition established by his illustrious forerunners. He possessed the negative merit of making revolt inevitable. The publication of Treasure Island, and shortly afterwards of King Solomon's Mines, opened a new epoch. From the day of their success a large proportion of our young writers have turned their minds to the production of what they are pleased to term romance, though not one in fifty of them is able to infuse the true romantic element into his sequence of crime and battle. The public, a little surfeited with bread-and-butter literature—perhaps, too, a little wearied of the long peace, and beginning to feel the glamour that time casts over war—has developed an enormous appetite for records of blood and adventure. Of this the purveyors seem determined to take full advantage. Of course, the great master of their craft is Alexander Dumas, and him they study and toil at and imitate with an astonishing fidelity. It seems impossible for them even to get away from his time and country.

Here is Mr. Hooper carrying his scene of action to the court of Louis Quatorze just as if never a novel had been worked out of that mine before. We do not say he is worse than his neighbours; on the contrary, the Singer of Marly (Methuen & Co.) is decidedly above the average. But a glance at some of its more obvious defects will illustrate the pitfalls into which the writer of any similar story is likely to fall. And, first of all, it is evident that, despite certain readings, of which we gladly acknowledge the evidence, Mr. Hooper's ideas are second or third hand. He has gone to Mr. Stanley Weyman as Mr. Stanley Weyman went to Dumas, only as often happens he has not adapted with sufficient closeness. The motif of The Singer is that of Under the Red Robe. A ruffler in a tavern gets into trouble and disgrace tantamount to death, but extricates himself by engaging to perform a dastard's part to a woman. That was precisely the theme worked out in Mr. Weyman's story; but Mr. Weyman had skill enough to make his hero at the beginning a reckless, desperate gambler, scarcely himself cognisant of the little bit of good that was to develop and grow under the purifying influence of a woman's love. This is what Mr. Hooper has omitted; his hero is as heroic in the beginning as in the end, and thus the novel has no other interest save what is afforded by a series of improbable incidents. You may glance through it once as you glance through a list of cycling accidents in a morning paper, but no one reads twice an up-to-date novel of adventure.

Nor is it only in the main theme that the author is indebted to novelists. His secondary villain, a magnetising quack and astrologist, is a compound from other fiction. This is the more regrettable as history gives the period many individuals who might have suggested a really original character. Anthony Mesmer, it is true, was not yet born—the date of the story was 1697; but he and Heil and Gassner and Greatrakes (an Irishman born early in the seventeenth century) give us an idea of what the charlatan of the time was like. But Mr. Hooper appears to have gone to Scott's Henbane in the Fair Maid of Perth for a model, to Mr. Rider Haggard's Cleopatra for his hypnotism, and to the Gentleman in Black for at least one important scene. The charlatan's mysticism and his belief in the power of the will are altogether of later date.

We need scarcely proceed further with the dissection of this portion of the story. If so many novelists will persist in hunting the French court for material, it is obvious that they can live only by taking in one another's washing. But there is another defect, so characteristic of the school and so fatal to good work, that it demands some notice—this is the utter neglect of character-drawing in the recent novel of adventure. Yet it is by far the finest and most difficult part of a novelist's craft. If only puppets are used, a very poor inventive power is sufficient to produce any given number of brawls, accidents, duels, murders, seductions, and the like. But to achieve the great aim of imaginative work—that is to say, so to impose upon a reader that for him to open the pages of a novel is to enter a new world, and make the acquaintance of figures so real and life-like that he cannot believe they are other than actual men and women; for this there must be more than incident. To take what is perhaps the best of its class, it is not for the mere sword-play that we return and return again to Quentin Durward; it is because Quentin himself and his uncle, Louis and Burgundy, and the Wild Boar of Ardennes, are drawn so faithfully, and with such a perfect knowledge of human nature, that they are more real to us than the shadowy personages of grave history, and the clash of character against character and mind against mind is still more interesting than the best-conducted duel. Save for this broad and deep interest in humanity, the novel of adventure has no more command over attention than the newspaper account of a murder or a railway collision. Unfortunately, there is just now a huge uninstructed public that prefers a Sunday journal full of these horrors to the best literature, so that a series of crimes and accidents flung into the semblance of a story has always an audience to appeal to. It is a large field, and holds out a great temptation to those who will cater for it. But still education is progressing, and the grossest appetite may be nauseated; so that even if they disregard letters altogether, the new writers, as a mere matter of prudence and commercial wisdom, might consider whether it were not worth while to attempt something more difficult and deserving than the poor and ragged novel of adventure which is now the vogue. The pendulum of taste is for ever swinging. James Grant and G. P. R. James and Harrison Ainsworth, and hosts of names well known in their day, are rotting and mouldering in provincial libraries. They were forsaken for Mrs. Henry Wood and Anthony Trollope, and now a new bread-and-butter novelist is nearly due. Will it not be well to take warning?

We have travelled away from The Singer of Marly, but, in good sooth, it would scarcely have been fair to visit on one the sins of an entire class. At some future time we hope to take a batch of such novels, and by synoptical tables show that the same poor mechanism is common to all.

MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

EIGHTH THOUSAND.

ALFRED LORD TENNYSON: a Memoir

By HIS SON.

With Photogravure Portraits of Lord Tennyson, Lady Tennyson, &c.
Facsimiles of Portions of Poems.

And Illustrations after Pictures by G. F. Watts, R.A., Samuel Laurence, Mrs. Allingham, Richard Doyle, Biscombe Gardner, &c. 2 vols., medium 8vo, 36s. net.

TENNYSON'S POETICAL WORKS.

People's Edition, in 23 vols., cloth, in cloth case, 25s. net;
leather, in cloth cabinet, 37s. net.

Volume IV. now ready.

LIFE of NAPOLEON BONAPARTE.

By Professor W. M. SLOANE, Ph.D., L.H.D.

Illustrated. In 20 Parts at 4s. net each; or in 4 vols. at 24s. net each. Supplied only in Sets.
Also ready, Vols. I.-III., and Parts 1-14.

Subscriptions (sent through a bookseller) will be received at any time, and the volumes or parts delivered at such intervals as may be convenient to the subscriber.

HUGH THOMSON'S NEW VOLUME.

MANSFIELD PARK.

By JANE AUSTEN.

With 40 Illustrations by HUGH THOMSON, and an Introduction by AUSTIN DOBSON
Crown 8vo, cloth, uncut edges, 3s. 6d.; "Peacock" Edition, cloth elegant, 5s.
[ILLUSTRATED STANDARD NOVELS.]

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.

CORLEONE: a Tale of Sicily.

In 2 vols., globe 8vo, 12s.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.

Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 6s.

'CAPTAINS COURAGEOUS':

A Story of the Grand Banks.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Illustrated by I. W. Taber.

ATHENÆUM.—"Never in English prose has the sea in all its myriad aspects, with all its sounds and sights and odours, been reproduced with such subtle skill as in these pages."

NEW BOYS' BOOK BY THE HON. J. W. FORTESCUE.

THE STORY of a RED DEER. By the Hon.

J. W. FORTESCUE. Pott 4to, cloth extra, 4s. 6d.

NEW BOYS' BOOK BY JOHN BENNETT.

MASTER SKYLARK. A Story of Shakspeare's

Time. By JOHN BENNETT. With Illustrations by Reginald R. Birch. Extra crown 8vo, 6s.

Illustrated by ROSIE M. M. PITMAN.

UNDINE. By F. De La Motte Fouqué. With

63 Illustrations, Initials, Chapter Headings, and Tailpieces by ROSIE M. M. PITMAN
Extra crown 8vo, cloth elegant, 6s.

GLOBE.—"Much quaintness and variety of fancy is shown by the artist, who has entered thoroughly into the spirit of Fouqué's famous story."

Vols. I. and II. now ready.

THE EVERSLEY BIBLE. Arranged in Paragraphs, with an Introduction by J. W. MACKAIL, M.A. In 8 vols., to be published Monthly. Globe 8vo, 5s. each.

*. The Text is that of the Authorised Version.

Vol. I. GENESIS—NUMBERS.

Vol. II. DEUTERONOMY—II. SAMUEL.

NEW AND POPULAR EDITION OF MISS MARY KINGSLEY'S

TRAVELS in WEST AFRICA, CONGO FRAN-

CAIS, CORISCO, and CAMEROONS. By MARY H. KINGSLEY. Second Edition, Abridged. Extra crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

NEW AND CHEAPER EDITIONS.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE RALSTONS. By F. Marion Crawford.

ACADEMY.—"A book to be read, and read more than once."

CASA BRACCIO. By F. Marion Crawford.

GUARDIAN.—"A very powerful tragedy, and a finished work of art."

BY SIR ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S.

THE FOUNDERS of GEOLOGY. A Series of Lectures. By Sir ARCHIBALD GEIKIE, F.R.S., &c. Extra crown 8vo, 6s. net.

NEW BOOK BY SILVANUS P. THOMPSON, D.Sc.

LIGHT, VISIBLE and INVISIBLE. A Series of Lectures delivered at the Royal Institution of Great Britain at Christmas, 1896. By SILVANUS P. THOMPSON, D.Sc., F.R.S., &c. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. net.

Third Edition now ready.

EVIL and EVOLUTION. An Attempt to Turn

the Light of Modern Science on to the Ancient Mystery of Evil. By the AURORA of "THE SOCIAL HORIZON." Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. net.

CHURCH TIMES.—"There can be no question about the courage, or the keen logic and the lucid style of this fascinating treatment of a problem which is of pathetic interest to all of us."

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, ST. MARTIN'S STREET, LONDON, W.C.

HURST & BLACKETT'S LIST.

NEW STORY BY MISS DAVENPORT ADAMS. Illustrated by HARRY FURNISS.

Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, extra cloth, gilt edges, price 4s.

MISS SECRETARY ETHEL: A Story for Girls of To-day.

By ELLINOR DAVENPORT ADAMS, Author of "The Disagreeable Duke," "Little Miss Conceit," &c. Illustrated by Harry Furniss.

FAIRY TALES BY NETTA SYRETT. Illustrated by NELLIE SYRETT.

Ready shortly, in 1 vol., large 8vo, handsomely bound, price 5s.

THE GARDEN OF DELIGHT. By Netta Syrett, Author of "Nobody's Fault," &c. Illustrated by Nellie Syrett.

NEW NOVEL BY MR. F. W. ROBINSON.

SECOND EDITION now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

YOUNG NIN. By F. W. Robinson, Author of "Grand-mother's Money," &c.

SECOND EDITION out of print. THIRD EDITION now ready.

SUNSET. By Beatrice Whitby. In 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

"The world of novel readers will be pleased to see Miss Beatrice Whitby's name on the title-page of a new story. 'Sunset' will fully meet the expectations of her many admirers, while for those (if such there be) who may not know 'The Awakening of Mary Fenwick' and its companions it will form a very appetising introduction to those justly popular stories."—The Globe.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

THE AWAKENING OF MARY FENWICK. [Sixteenth Thousand.] PART OF THE PROPERTY. [Sixth Thousand.] IN THE SUNTIME OF HER YOUTH. [Sixth Thousand.] MARY FENWICK'S DAUGHTER. [Seventh Thousand.]

NEW WORK BY H. D. TRAILL.

Now ready, at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

THE NEW FICTION, and Other Essays on Literary Subjects. By H. D. TRAILL, Author of "The New Lucian," "The Life of Sir John Franklin," &c.

"In a volume of 'Essays on Literary Subjects' by Mr. Traill, we expect to find much sound, robust, and well-informed criticism, and great felicity of expression, and in the present volume the expectation is abundantly fulfilled."—Times, September 11.

"Mr. Traill's volume of criticism is ten times more entertaining to any one who cares about literature than ninety per cent. of moderately successful novels."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW WORK BY MRS. CUTHELL.

Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 3s. 6d.

IN CAMP and CANTONMENT. Stories of Foreign Service. By EDITH E. CUTHELL, Author of "Only a Guard-room Dog," "The Wee Widow's Cruise," &c.

"Mrs. Cuthell has evidently not lived in India to no purpose, and as she combines a keen judgment of character with a clear perception of a dramatic situation, she is to be congratulated on having displayed these qualities in a very entertaining volume."—Weekly Sun.

THE SHOWMAN'S DAUGHTER. By Scott Graham, Author of "The Golden Milestone," "The Sandoliff Mystery," &c. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The best creation in the story is Bessie Loader, a very plain heiress, whose hopeless love for handsome Marmaduke Luttrell lifts her far above the commonplace. The scene in which she tells the embarrassed object of her affections of her infatuation is handled with consummate skill."—St. James's Gazette.

WHERE the SURF BREAKS. By Mary F. A. Tench. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Reading this little book, you will often find yourself smiling with a lump in your throat, and you will not put it down until you have turned the last page."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"It is a long time since we have read sketches of Irish life which have entertained and delighted us as these of Miss Tench's have done."—Daily Chronicle.

"Sweet wholesome sentiment breathes throughout the volume, and in the scenic descriptions you can almost scent the leaping waves and feel the mountain breeze on your cheek."—Dundee Advertiser.

NEW NOVEL BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

Now ready at all Booksellers' and Libraries, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, price 6s.

SALTED with FIRE. By George Mac Donald, LL.D., Author of "Robert Falconer," "Sir Gibbie," &c.

"The book has the interest that attaches to all the author's works. Ordinary characters and ordinary dramas serve but to set forth the spiritual significance and the seriousness of life."—Daily News.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, price 5s.

DAVID ELGINBROD.
ROBERT FALCONER.

ALEC FORBES
SIR GIBBIE.

EDNA LYALL'S NOVELS.

Each in One Volume, crown 8vo, 6s.

TO RIGHT THE WRONG.
DONOVAN.
WE TWO.

IN THE GOLDEN DAYS.
KNIGHT ERRANT.
WON BY WAITING.

A HARDY NORSEMAN.

WORKS BY THE LATE MRS. OLIPHANT.

NEW and CHEAPER EDITION, uniformly bound in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, price HALF-A-CROWN. Now ready at all Booksellers'.

ADAM GRAEME.
LAIRD OF NORLAW.
AGNES.

LIFE OF IRVING.
A ROSE IN JUNE.
PHEBE JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

Messrs. C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED beg to announce an IMPORTANT BOOK which they will publish on November 10th. MEN WHO HAVE MADE THE EMPIRE.

By GEORGE GRIFFITH.

With 16 Full-Page Illustrations by Stanley L. Wood.

Demy 8vo, cloth gilt, gilt top, price 7s. 6d.

A Series of Twelve Life Pictures of the Men who have done most to build up the greatest Imperial Fabric that the sun has ever shone upon:—WILLIAM THE NORMAN—EDWARD OF THE LONG LEGS—FRANCIS DRAKE—OLIVER CROMWELL—WILLIAM OF ORANGE—JAMES COOK—LORD CLIVE—WARREN HASTINGS—NELSON—WELLINGTON—"CHINESE GORDON"—CECIL RHODES.

NEW AND POPULAR NOVELS.

THE RAID of the "DETRIMENTAL."

Being the true History of the Great Disappearance of 1862. Related by several of those implicated and others.

And now first set forth by the EARL OF DESART.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

"Cleverly written and replete with original interest.....unique, and entirely out of the common run of fiction."—Public Opinion.

"Of its brilliance there can be no doubt. The story is quite remarkable."—Dundee Advertiser.

"We can assure the reader that he will not have a dull moment during the perusal of this fantastic romance, nor will his curiosity as to the final fate of the 'Detrimental's' living cargo be satisfied before the last page."—Glasgow Daily Mail.

QUEEN OF THE JESTERS.

By MAX PEMBERTON.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with 8 Full-Page Illustrations, price 6s.

"This writer is seen at his best in 'Queen of the Jesters'.....The book is one to be enjoyed by every one who takes it up."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Max Pemberton has not hitherto given us so excellent a bit of work as his new collection of Stories, 'Queen of the Jesters'."—Sketch.

"Mlle. de Montesson is an altogether delightful, high-spirited young woman, and Mr. Pemberton 'sets out' her adventures with exhilarating briskness and crispness."—Daily Chronicle.

"Mr. Max Pemberton has done nothing better than this enjoyable volume."—Yorkshire Post.

THE INVISIBLE MAN.

By H. G. WELLS.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"This is a wonderful story; grotesque, indeed, as the title-page has it, but deepening as it goes from the farcical to the fearful and tragical. The Invisible Man has been happy in his biographer, if in nothing else."—Scotsman.

"I have not been so fascinated by a new book for many a day."—Mr. Clement K. Scott in the Bookman.

"Will greatly enhance the reputation of a very ingenious story-teller.....All the incidents, now grotesque, now tragic, spring naturally from the situation, and are related with unflagging dexterity. Most astonishing is the atmosphere of reality, of cold, hard facts, which gives the book the singular actuality that lingers in the mind. In this quality Mr. Wells has a signal advantage over his contemporaries who tell wondrous tales, and it is likely to carry him very far."—Illustrated London News.

THE SKIPPER'S WOOING.

By W. W. JACOBS.

Price 3s. 6d.

"It contains scenes which we shall not be able to recall without a smile for many weeks to come.....It is a good story well told and full of humour and drollery."—Daily Telegraph.

"Will induce many a hearty laugh.....The story is vigorous as befits its characters, but it is devoid of profanity or grossness."—Dundee Advertiser.

THE DUKE AND THE DAMSEL.

By RICHARD MARSH.

Crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

"Clever and amusing.....the situations, the characters, the literary handling, and the dramatic action are all smart, piquant, and intensely enjoyable."—Scotsman.

THE TYPEWRITER GIRL.

By OLIVE PRATT RAYNER.

Price 3s. 6d.

"There is not a dull page in the book, and it is one that is well suited to take a foremost place in the list of a firm which has only just undertaken the publishing of library books on a large scale."—Sunday Times.

"Clever, fresh, and original, this tale by an unknown writer ought to command an immediate success.....Must be considered one of the successes of the season, and lovers of smart and original writing will look out eagerly for further efforts from Mrs. Olive Pratt Rayner's witty and racy pen."—Sheffield Independent.

FORTUNE'S FOOTBALLS.

By G. B. BURGIN.

Price 3s. 6d.

"'Fortune's Footballs' is a clever story, agreeably told.....distinctly above the average, eminently readable, and competent to convince the most sensitive reader that he is being treated as an honest man by an author whose honest work speaks for itself in the sustained interest of every page."—Pall Mall Gazette.

London: C. ARTHUR PEARSON LIMITED, Henrietta Street, W.C.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1897.

No. 1331, New Series.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station . . .	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom . . .	0 15 3	0 7 8	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China, &c. . . . .	0 18 0	0 9 0	0 4 6

THE ACADEMY is published every Friday morning. Advertisements should reach the office not later than 4 p.m. on Thursday.

The EDITOR will make every effort to return rejected contributions, provided a stamped and addressed envelope is enclosed.

Occasional contributors are recommended to have their MS. type-written.

All business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., should be addressed to the PUBLISHER.

Offices: 43, Chancery Lane, W.C.

NOTES AND NEWS.

SOME of our contemporaries have accused Mrs. McClure, the translator of Prof. Maspero's Struggle of the Nations, of taking liberties with the original in the interests of orthodoxy. The Secretary of the S.P.C.K. has therefore sent to the Press a statement of the case, as to which the reviewer who dealt with the book in these columns writes: "Mr. McClure has hardly bettered his case by his 'True Statement.' In a letter to the Athenæum of the 9th January he said: 'Mrs. McClure . . . was throughout in communication with Professor Maspero, without whose consent she did not venture to qualify any expression in the text.' But it now appears from the 'Statement' that some of the alterations were made not only without Professor Maspero's consent, but without his knowledge, and that he complained of them as 'not corresponding to his thought.' I still think, however, that the alterations are entirely without importance, and that they could deceive no one as to Professor Maspero's real views."

MR. HENLEY's long expected anthology, English Lyrics, is at last published. It covers, we observe, five centuries, ranging from Chaucer to Poe, and some four hundred and odd pieces lie between its covers. The motto is from FitzGerald: the Omar Khayyam quatrain beginning "A book of Verses underneath the Bough." Among the surprises will be found many excerpts from the Old Testament.

MR. HENLEY's theory of the lyric is contained in his comment upon the late Mr. Palgrave's definition of a lyric as a poem which turns upon "some single thought, feeling, or situation." "I would rather say," adds Mr. Henley, "that unless 'thought,' and 'feeling,' and 'situation' are all single, and are all present, and so present that in the final result 'feeling' shall oblige us to forget the others, or at least to consider them as chiefly essential to its triumphing expression, that result is not a lyric." The preface is exceedingly interesting, but the type is pitifully small.

WE understand that Mr. Henley's essay on the genius of Robert Burns, which is printed at the end of the edition of the poet prepared by that critic and Mr. Henderson, will be issued separately in book form.

PARIS is much excited over Amitié Amoureuse and its supposed connexion with Maupassant. Hurried readers have stated emphatically that Philippe de Luz, the correspondent of Denise, is the novelist himself, although, had they looked more closely, they would have found good reasons for stating him not to be so. The result of this verdict has been the advertisement of the book as the "Love-Letters of Maupassant," and a vogue which it might not otherwise have attained, despite its cleverness. The truth—at any rate for English readers—is, however, now made clear by a letter to the Bookman from Mr. Benjamin Swift, who has the best authority for what he states; and whose story of the book is a curious corroboration of the theory of Mr. L. F. Austin, enunciated in the current Sketch. The author of Amitié Amoureuse, says Mr. Swift, is a lady known to him, and the work is pure fiction. This lady denies the rumour that many of Maupassant's phrases have been incorporated in Philippe's letters, which is a point that, had she not stated the case so firmly, a little study would make clear at once. So, for us, the matter ends.

MR. STOPFORD BROOKE, whose voice is now too seldom heard, contributes to Last Studies by the late Hubert Crackanthorpe the following beautiful elegiac stanzas:

"Hubert, who loved the country and the town,
Has left his friends; and England sees no more

The young slight figure musing on the down,
Nor France his quiet eyes, that o'er and o'er Travelled her landscape, shaping it well.

"His joys were there, but pity for mankind
Drew him where surging cities moved his soul:

He wrote of men and women, wrecked, and pined
With bitter sorrow; and the misery stole
Into his life till he bade life farewell.

"Pity he could not stay, for he was true,
Tender and chivalrous, and without spot;
Loving things great and good, and love like dew

Fell from his heart on those that loved him not;
But those who loved him knew that he loved well.

"Too rough his sea, too dark its angry tides!
Things of a day are we; shadows that move

The lands of shadow; but, where he abides,
Time is no more; and that great substance, Love,
Is shadowless. And yet, we grieve.
Farewell."

THE Kelmscott Press books were often in themselves lovely; but very rarely has a publisher, imitating the late Mr. Morris's conventions, succeeded in producing a thing of beauty. The latest example of decorative publishing is Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar, for which Mr. Walter Crane has designed pictures and borders, and which Messrs. Harper & Brothers issue. It strikes us as a piece of ill-considered book-making. The first essential of a book, whether decorative or not, is that it should be legible. The text's the thing. We defy anyone to read Spenser in Mr. Crane's edition without tiring, and possibly injuring, his eyes. The page is a bewildering mass of dazzling type and border, and this being the case the pictures are beside the mark.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER has passed through the press a small volume entitled Various Fragments. It will be issued by Messrs. Williams & Norgate as soon as the American edition is ready.

IN reply to rumours stating that the health of Count Tolstoi is in a seriously low condition, a correspondent of the Chronicle, who has authority for his remarks, states that, beyond suffering from a tumour in the cheek, the novelist is comparatively well. Count Tolstoi, it seems, is now engaged on a study of the true nature of art.

MARK TWAIN contributes to the Century a kindly tribute to the work of the late James Hammond Trumbull, the American scholar, who was his neighbour at Hartford. The following amusing story is told by the humorist in proof of Dr. Trumbull's erudition:

"I asked him a question once myself about twenty years ago. I remember it yet—vividly. His answer exhibited in a striking way his two specialities—the immensity of his learning, and the generous fashion in which he lavished that and his time and labour gratis upon the ignorant needy. I was summering somewhere away from home, and one day I had a new idea—a motif for a drama. I was enchanted with the felicity of the conception—I might say intoxicated with it. It seemed to me that no idea was ever so exquisite, so beautiful, so freighted with wonderful possibilities. I believed that when I should get it fittingly dressed out in the right dramatic clothes it would not only delight the world, but astonish it. Then came a stealthy, searching, disagreeable little chill: what if the idea was not new, after all? Trumbull would know. I wrote him some cold, calm, indifferent words out of a heart that was sweltering with anxiety, mentioning my idea, and asking him in a casual way if it had ever been used in a play. His answer covered six pages, written in his fine and graceful hand—six pages of titles of plays in which the idea had been used, the date of each piracy appended, also the country and language in which the felony had been committed. The theft of my idea had been consummated two hundred and sixty-eight times. The latest instance mentioned was English, and not yet three years old; the earliest had electrified China eight hundred years before Christ. Dr. Trumbull added in a foot-note that his list was not complete, since it furnished only the modern instances; but that if I wished it he would go back to early times. I do not remember the exact words I said about the early times in my answer, but it is not material; they indicated the absence of lust in that direction. I did not write the play."

THE American papers give a concise and not unkind nor over-smart description of Mr. Bryce, who is now visiting their country. He is described as of middle height and middle weight, with a good head and a sharp eye, and the bearing of a man who thinks more of his subject than of himself.

WHEN, it has been asked again and again, will Mr. Lang write his great book, his magnum opus? Why he should do so we have no notion, considering how diverting his occasional pieces are; but the question is familiar. In an article on bookselling in Chapman's Magazine, Mr. Lang himself offers the best answer: "Moi qui parle, I could no more live (comfortably) by writing new books than the booksellers can live by selling them. I have to sell fal-lals—articles, essays, miscellaneous hack-work—but I like that commerce of all things."

THE November number of the Genealogical Magazine—a particularly well-produced periodical, by the way—has some interesting contents. Mr. Andrew Lang contributes a letter on "Stuart Pretenders," with the characteristic opening sentence: "The 'Milne Boyd Stuarts,' claiming through a daughter of Charles Edward, are a new species to me." The descent of Lord Nelson from Edward III. is set forth in a genealogical tree.

